XX. OCCUPATION, BUSINESS, AND PRIVILEGE TAXES—1. Power to Impose—a. IN GENERAL—CONSTITUTIONAL LIMITATIONS.—The power to impose privilege and occupation taxes exists independently and concurrently in the state and federal government, subject to constitutional restrictions;⁷ in the state government, subject to the exclusive rights conferred on Congress to regulate interstate commerce;⁸ and in the federal government, subject to

4. Mead v. Gale, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 232. Here the tax had been voted and the warrant made out, but the vote was repealed, and at a later meeting the repealing vote was itself repealed. Held, that the whole proceeding must be construed as of the date of the last meeting.

5. Pierce v. Benjamin, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 356. In that case, the sale not realizing the full amount of the tax, the owner subsequently paid the residue to the collector, and required a receipt in full for the tax. This was held not to be a waiver of the right to bring the action. Damages were measured at the value of the goods when converted, less the amount applied in payment of the tax.

Whenever the subjects for which the power to regulate commerce is asserted, are national in their nature and admit the prohibition of any interference with internal regulations of the states.¹

These taxes are not taxes upon property,² and, consequently, are not subject to constitutional restrictions upon the power to tax property; such, for example, as that taxes shall be uniform and equal.³ Nor, under the general requirement that all taxation of one uniform system of regulation, they require exclusive legislation by Congress. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 232.

It is no objection to a state law requiring a license for the sale of an article, that letters patent have been granted for it. Webber v. Virginia, 103 U. S. 344. An ordinance requiring a license for the sale of a patented article is not an invasion of national authority, even though the peddler himself is a manufacturer and patentee of the article sold. *People v. A license under an act of Congress, will not give authority to carry on an occupation in a particular state where it is forbidden. McGuire v. Com., 3 Wall. (U. S.) 384. Such a tax is not affected by the limitation of a power of a parish to impose taxes on property. Walters v. Duke, 31 La. Ann. 668; Blanks v. Blastrop, 18 La. Ann. 534.

If the tax attaches to the property sold or thing sold, it is a property tax. Gould v. Atlanta, 55 Ga. 678.

A tax upon an occupation is not a tax upon property, although the amount and value of the stock in trade of the dealer is adopted as a standard, Corson v. State, 57 Md. 251; or upon the value of the property, *State v. Western Union Tel. The tax assessed on the amount of sales, not being a specific sum imposed on the sale of particular property without regard to its value, is not a property tax. But a tax of one dollar on the sale of every horse sold belonging to drovers, without regard to its value, is a property tax. Livingston v. Albany, 41 Ga. 21. See also *Kenny v. A license fee is a tax, within the meaning of a constitutional provision that taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying them. St. Louis v. Spiegel, 90 Mo. 587.

In Louisiana, the constitution requires that the license tax shall be the same upon all who are engaged in the particular profession or calling taxed, without reference to the ability, fortunes, or successes of those engaged in it. New Orleans v. Home Mut. Ins. Co., 23 La. Ann. 449; Municipality No. 2 v. Du Bois, 10 La. Ann. 56; Walters v. Duke, 31 La. Ann. 668; State v. Lathrop, 10 La. Ann. 398. The provision merely requires that a tax on each member of the same class shall be the same. It does not prevent dividing objects of taxation into classes and imposing different taxes on each class. New Orleans v. Kaufman, 29 La. Ann. 283; 29 Am. Rep. 328. A tax on all persons in a district keeping powder magazines with more than fifty pounds of powder therein, is unconstitutional, as others may follow the same occupation without obtaining a license. Police Jury v. Cochran, 20 La. Ann. 373.

The tax upon warehousemen which is measured by the number of warehouses employed, is held to be uniform and equal, Hodgson v. New Orleans, 21 La. Ann. 301; as is a tax upon keepers of billiard tables, the whole being assessed upon each and every table. Meriam v. New Orleans, 14 La. Ann. 318.

2. See INTERSTATE COMMERCE, vol. 11, p. 548; Holloway v. Police Jury, 16 La. Ann. 203; Marshalltown v. Blum, 58 Iowa 184; 43 Am. Rep. 115; St. Louis v. Spiegel, 90 Mo. 587; Albertson v. Wallace, 81 N. Car. 479; Nashville v. Althorp, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 554.

So a tax discriminating against persons, non-residents of a township, Marshalltown v. Blum, 58 Iowa 184; 43 Am. Rep. 115; or between merchants and manufacturers, residing without the limits of the state, and those residing in the city, Nashville v. Althorp, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 554; or against goods manufactured in other states sold by sample in favor of goods held within the state for sale, is null and void. Ex p. Thornton, 12 Fed. Rep. 538.

state itself, or of the political divisions within the same, or which creates a monopoly.¹

b. DELEGATION OF THE POWER.—In the absence of constitutional restrictions, the legislative power to tax occupations and privileges may be delegated to political subdivisions of the state, to be exercised within their corporate limits.²

The power does not exist in a municipal corporation, unless conferred by the legislature.³ And the power, when so conferred, must be exercised within the scope of the language used, which is not to be extended by construction, but which is to be construed strictly.⁴

A statute requiring a license from any person engaged in hiring laborers in the state, for employment beyond its limits, does not discriminate against non-residents, nor is it otherwise unconstitutional. Sheppard v. Sumter County, 59 Ga. 535.

1. In Logan v. Pyne, 43 Iowa 524, it was held that a city charter granting the right to "exercise and enjoy all rights, immunities, powers and privileges appertaining to a municipal corporation," and to "license, tax and regulate hackney carriages, omnibuses," etc., does not authorize the city authorities to grant to one person the sole and exclusive right to run omnibuses in the city.

Sheboygan*, 2 Black (U. S.) 510.

The municipality need not tax pursuits and occupations in the same manner as that adopted by the legislature in regard to state taxation. Nashville v. Althrop, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 554.

An express provision that the legislature may tax business, etc., does not preclude the legislature from delegating the power. Huck v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 86 Ill. 352; Wiggins v. Chicago, 68 Ill. 372.

In Texas, under the constitution of 1876, no municipal corporation has power to tax an occupation to an extent beyond one half the amount levied by the state. See Ex p. Gregory, 1 Tex. App. 753; Ex p. Slaren, 3 Tex. App. 662.

3. Fowle v. Alexandria, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 398; New Iberia v. Migue, 32 La. Ann. 923; Mays v. Cincinnati, 1 Ohio St. 268; Cincinnati v. Bryson, 15 Ohio 625; 45 Am. Dec. 593; Chicago v. Bartree, 100 Ill. 61; Bennett v. Birmingham, 31 Pa. St. 15; Baker v. State, 30 Fla. 41.

A city charter providing that the council may raise annually by taxes and assessments such sums of money as it shall deem necessary to defray expenses, in such manner as it shall deem expedient, has been held to authorize the city to impose a tax upon lawyers. Ould v. Richmond, 23 Gratt. (Va.) 464; 14 Am. Rep. 139. In Home Ins. Co. v. Augusta, 50 Ga. 530, the general power given to the city by its charter to make assessments upon the inhabitants, was held to authorize the imposition of taxes upon occupations, etc.

But in Latta v. Williams, 87 N. Car. 126, it was held that the power to levy and collect the taxes on all subjects of state taxation, not to exceed one dollar on the poll and thirty-three and one third cents on real estate and personal property, etc., did not confer upon the city, power to tax occupations.

County Taxes.—In the absence of statutory provision, counties have no power to levy privilege and occupation taxes similar to those provided for under state authority. Gibson County v. Pullman Southern Car Co., 42 Fed. Rep. 572.

4. Joyce v. East St. Louis, 77 Ill. 156; Latta v. Williams, 87 N. Car. 126; Kniper v. Louisville, 7 Bush (Ky.) 599; St. Louis v. Laughlin, 49 Mo.

Under the power to license, regulate, or restrain, a municipal corporation cannot impose taxes for purposes of revenue.¹

A municipality may tax the occupations of persons whose business is licensed by the state;² but while this is so, the municipality cannot require such persons to procure a license from it as a condition precedent to pursuing the occupation.³ Nor can a munic-

Authority to license, tax, etc., wagons and other vehicles, etc., and to "prescribe the weight of loads to be carried and the rates of carriage," has been held to be applicable only to such vehicles in respect of which it is proper and customary with municipal authorities to prescribe "rates of carriage." Joyce v. East St. Louis, 77 Ill. 156.

And authority to tax carts, etc., using the streets of a town, does not authorize the imposition of a tax on wagons owned by non-residents of the town not habitually using the streets. Bennett v. Birmingham, 31 Pa. St. 15.

1. Burlington v. Putnam Ins. Co., 31 Iowa 102; Burlington v. Bumgardner, 42 Iowa 673; Chicago v. Bartree, 100 Ill. 61; New York v. Second Ave. R. Co., 32 N. Y. 261; Collins v. Louisville, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 134; Cincinnati v. Bryson, 15 Ohio 625; 45 Am. Dec. 593; Mestayer v. Corrige, 38 La. Ann. 707. The words "to license" may imply the power to tax, when such is the manifest intention, but taken disconnected and alone, they will not generally confer that authority. St. Louis v. Boatmen's Ins. Co., 47 Mo. 150.

The power to tax tippling houses must be derived from the direct tax power conferred in the charter, and cannot be derived from the power to regulate and restrain them. Columbia v. Beasley, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 240.

In Essex County v. Barber, 7 N. J. L. 64, the power to license inns and taverns was held not to authorize the borough to tax inn-keepers and receive fees from them for their licenses.

Nor, on the other hand, does the power to tax confer authority to license; the objects attained by the exercise of the respective powers are not the same. Burlington v. Bumgardner, 42 Iowa 674.

The general power, however, to tax, restrain, and suppress, embraces the power to license. Mt. Carmel v. Wabash County, 50 Ill. 69. And the power to license may be authorized by the grant of the power to regulate. Chi- cago Packing, etc., Co. v. Chicago, 88 Ill. 221; 30 Am. Rep. 545.

In San Jose v. San Jose, etc., R. Co., 53 Cal. 475, it was said that where power is conferred on a municipality to license and regulate occupations, the whole charter and all general legislation of the state pertaining to the subject, must be consulted, in order to determine whether the power to license and regulate includes the power to tax such occupations for revenue purposes.

A city may be empowered to tax lottery offices, although licensed by the legislature, provided no bonus was given for the privilege. Wendover v. Lexington, 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 258.

The liability may be both to the state and to the city. State v. Traders' Bank, 41 La. Ann. 329. A county may levy a tax upon a license to brokers, granted by the state. State v. Spencer, 49 Mo. 342. An occupation may be subjected to the taxes imposed by the state, parish and corporation. Iberia v. Chiapella, 30 La. Ann. 1143.

A physician licensed by the authority of the state to practice his profession cannot be required by a municipal corporation to take out a license before he can practice in the city. Savannah v. Charlton, 36 Ga. 460. But he may be required to pay a tax upon the exercise of the privilege granted by the license. Home Ins. Co. v. Augusta, 50 Ga. 530.

Delegation of the Power to License.—It is held that where the corporate authorities are empowered to grant a particular license, the jurisdiction of the ipality to which the power has been delegated redelegate the power to its officers.¹

2. Taxable Subjects—What Usually Taxed—a. IN GENERAL.—Subject to constitutional restrictions, all occupations and callings may be subjected to taxation² in the discretion of the legislature, which may select some for this purpose, and exempt others.³ Such occupations as are taxed as privileges are those other than the ordinary and every-day employments of life, or such as for the exercise of which a franchise is required.⁴

Exemption from these taxes cannot be claimed on the ground that the property employed in the business or occupation is state over the subject is withdrawn to that extent. Floyd v. Eatonton, 14 Ga. 354. See also Cuthbert v. Conly, 32 Ga. 214; although the state is not thereby prevented from imposing a special tax thereon. Decker v. McGowan, 59 Ga. 805. Contra: But in Simpson v. Savage, 1 Mo. 359, the contrary seems to have been held; and an auctioneer, who had paid a license fee to the corporation, was compelled to obtain one from the state as well; and this view was adopted in Ex p. Liebenhauer, 14 Nev. 371.

The power conferred on the city council cannot be delegated to the mayor of the city by ordinance. Kinmundy v. Mahan, 72 Ill. 462.

But in Decorah v. Dunstan, 38 Iowa 96, an ordinance authorizing the mayor to fix the amount of the license was held to be valid. But see East St. Louis v. Wehrung, 50 Ill. 28, holding that a corporation is not warranted in delegating any discretionary authority to others.

A license may be required for selling in particular places, even though revenue, as well as local policy, may be one of the objects of the requisition. Mork v. Com., 6 Bush (Ky.) 397.

The legislature may impose a single tax upon a particular class of occupations and declare it to be in lieu of all other taxes, whatsoever. Vicksburg Bank v. Worrell, 67 Miss. 47.

But where the legislature has imposed a license tax upon persons pursuing a certain business, it cannot, in the absence of any valuable consideration, exempt any particular person or persons pursuing that calling, from the payment of such tax. New Orleans v. Louisiana Sav. Bank, 31 La. Ann. 637.

The question whether certain individuals fall within the class designated by the statute providing for the tax, is one of fact. Bohler v. Schneider, 49 Ga. 195; Decker v. McGowan, 59 Ga. 805.

In Tennessee, the exercise of "privileges," as that term is used in the constitution, is defined to be the exercise of an occupation or business which requires a license from some proper authority designated by a general law, and which is not open to all, or to any one, without such license. Columbia v. Guest, 3 Head (Tenn.) 414; Cate v. State, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 121; Jenkins v.

exempt,¹ or has been already taxed;² or that the person or corporation pursuing the occupation pays an income tax.³

Certain pursuits and privileges are expressly exempted by constitutional provisions in several of the states.⁴ An enumeration, however, of some as subjects of taxation, is not a prohibition upon the power of the legislature to tax others.⁵

The statutes imposing these taxes must be construed strictly;⁶

Ewin, 8 Heisk. (Tenn.) 456; State v. Crawford, 2 Head (Tenn.) 462; Pullman Southern Car Co. v. Nolan, 22 Fed. Rep. 276. The permission or license to retail goods is such a privilege, and subject to taxation, Mays v. Erwin, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 290; or the business of a wholesale grocer, under a license. French v. Baker, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 193.

Any avocation may be made a privilege by the legislature by the requirement of a license tax for its exercise. Mabry v. Tarver, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 94. Positive prohibition without license is not necessary. Dun v. Cullen, 13 Lea (Tenn.) 202. The license creating the privilege may be acquired by the payment of the privilege tax merely. State v. Schlier, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 281.

In Arkansas, under a provision authorizing the imposition of taxes on privileges, those occupations only were held subject to taxation which were recognized as privileges at common law. Washington v. State, 13 Ark. 752. But in Baker v. State, 44 Ark. 134, it was held that the general assembly was not restrained from levying a tax upon the franchise of a corporation. And see Straub v. Gordon, 27 Ark. 625.

A corporation, however, cannot create a privilege for the purpose of taxing it. Nashville v. Althrop, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 554. So, a city ordinance imposing a tax for keeping a livery stable, could not be sustained, the legislature not having made such an occupation a privilege. Columbia v. Guest, 3 Head (Tenn.) 413.

So a savings institution may be taxed, although its capital is invested in federal securities. Society for Savings v. Coite, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 594.

Police Regulations.—An exemption of a corporation from taxation, will not exempt it from license taxes imposed as reasonable police regulations. Frankford, etc., Pass. R. Co. v. Phila-

4. Constitutional Exemptions.—In the constitution of Texas, power is given to the general assembly to tax all persons pursuing any occupation, etc., provided that the term "occupation, shall not be construed as including pursuits either agricultural or mechanical." This proviso is held to exempt from occupation taxes, agricultural and mechanical occupations. Higgins v. Ricker, 47 Tex. 393.

In Ex p. Butin, 28 Tex. App. 304, it was held that a statute imposing an occupation tax upon persons or firms who peddle out cooking-stoves or ranges, does not conflict with the above provision.

In Louisiana, there is a similar exemption. Const. Art. 206. But under it, a master builder or contractor who employs assistants may be compelled to pay a license tax. The exemption is held to include those persons only who are engaged in the actual manual labor. See Theobalds v. Conner, 42 La. Ann. 787.

only such occupations or privileges as are described clearly can be taxed.¹ Where it is the occupation which is taxed, a single act or transaction is not such an engaging in it as will subject the person thus acting to the tax;² and one who acts for himself in his own private affairs is not subject to a tax imposed upon an occupation which consists of acts or transactions done for or on behalf of another.³

b. PARTICULAR PURSUITS—(1) Professional Occupations.—These taxes are imposed sometimes upon attorneys at law for the privilege of practising, even though they have obtained licenses to practise.⁴ So the practice of medicine has been subjected to

In Com. v. Campbell, 33 Pa. St. 380, it was held that an act requiring all merchants and dealers to take out an annual license, does not embrace manufacturers and mechanics, unless they keep a store or warehouse separate from the factory for the sale of their wares.

If a billiard table be kept as an occupation, such keeping may be taxed under a provision imposing taxes upon those pursuing any occupation, trade, or profession; but trade or profession imports a profitable pursuit, and if the table is kept for amusement and not for profit, it is not subject to taxation. The question as to the purpose for which the table was kept is one of fact for the jury. Tarde v. Benseman, 31 Tex. 277.

In New Orleans v. Clark, 15 La. Ann. 614, it was held that an ordinance imposing a certain tax on each printing office doing job work, does not apply exclusively to printing offices publishing a newspaper, and to job work conjunctively, but to any printing office doing such work.

Renting a single room for the purpose of dramatic exhibition, does not constitute carrying on a theatre business. Gillman v. State, 55 Ala. 248.

A traveling peddler may make a valid sale and delivery of goods without a license, when not engaged in the business of peddling. Brett v. Marston, 45 Me. 401.

The rule is different, where the imposition is on the performance of the thing or the transaction of the business and not the occupation. It is not necessary to establish that the defendant assume to act as a tavern keeper in order to recover a penalty for selling liquor without a license. Smith v. Adrian, 1 Mich. 495.

3. Joyce v. East St. Louis, 77 Ill. 156. By ordering sewing machines at the request of persons wishing to buy them, receiving them when sent in pursuance of the order, and delivering them to the purchaser, a merchant does not become a dealer in them or an agent to sell them, within the provisions of a law imposing a tax upon dealers and agents and persons engaged in selling sewing machines. Weaver v. State, 89 Ga. 639.

So a farmer purchasing stock to consume the products of his farm, though with the intention of selling it again, is not subject to the tax on cattle broken. U. S. v. Kenton, 2 Bond (U. S.) 97.

But one owning a cotton pickery cannot avoid the payment of a license fee imposed upon it on the ground that he did not use it except for the purpose of picking and cleaning his own cotton, which he had purchased to sell again; that in such case he is as much liable as they who use it for picking and cleaning cotton for other persons for a commission. State v. Lackland, 12 Mo. 279; Cohen v. Wright, 22 Cal. 293.

Such a tax is not subject to the objection that it is a poll tax. Egan v. Charles County Ct., 3 Har. & M. (Md.) 169.

The right to practise law in the state courts is not a privilege or immunity of a citizen of the United States, within the meaning of the Federal Constitution, and the power rests with the states to prescribe the qualifications for admission to the bar of its own courts. Bradwell v. Illinois, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 130.

A tax imposed upon certain enumerated occupations and "other employments" has been held to include the practice of law. State v. Waples, 12 La. Ann. 343.

Under a statute imposing a tax on any person, firm or company desiring to engage in any business or profession, it is held that each member of a firm practising law was subject to a tax. Jones v. Stallworth, 44 Ala. 657.

In Tennessee, it is held that the right to practise law is not subject to taxation. Lawyer's Tax Cases, 8 Heisk. (Tenn.) 565.

The power to delegate authority to municipalities to impose taxes on lawyers, is undoubted. Wilmington v. Macks, 86 N. Car. 88; Holland v. Isler, 77 N. Car. 1; Goldthwaite v. Montgomery, 50 Ala. 486; McCaskell v. State, 53 Ala. 510; Ex p. Montgomery, 64 Ala. 463.

The city council may require attorneys within the city to be placed in different classes for the purpose of taxation, and may delegate to a committee the power of assigning the attorneys of the city to the several classes; this being merely a ministerial act. Ould v. Richmond, 23 Gratt. (Va.) 464; 14 Am. Rep. 139.

"Professions" clearly comprehends lawyers. Lanier v. Macon, 59 Ga. 187. And the power to tax inhabitants who transact business, authorizes a tax on the business of lawyers. Savannah v. Hines, 53 Ga. 616. But in St. Louis v. Laughlin, 49 Mo. 559, where a city charter authorized the municipality to license certain enumerated occupations "and all other trades, avocations, or professions whatever," the power to license lawyers was denied upon the principle that where general words follow particular ones, they should be construed as applicable to the persons of the same general character or class, and the profession of law was not e jure dem generis.

1. Holland v. Isler, 77 N. Car. 1. But when licensed by the state, the city cannot require a physician, under a penalty, to take out a license, although it may tax the privilege granted by the state. Savannah v. Charlton, 36 Ga. 460.

2. In Miller v. Kirkpatrick, 29 Pa. St. 226, the term "profession," used in Pennsylvania Act of April 29th, 1844, was held to embrace the calling of a minister of the gospel; and in Union County v. James, 21 Pa. St. 525, a professor in college was held to be within the same act.

3. Com. v. Moore, 25 Gratt. (Va.) 951; Galveston County v. Gorham, 49 Tex. 279; Sacramento v. Crocker, 16 Cal. 119; Albertson v. Wallace, 81 N. Car. 479; State v. Cohen, 84 N. Car. 771.

A merchant is a person who deals in the selling of goods, wares and merchandise at a store, stand or place occupied for that purpose, and it is immaterial that he has, by his labor, changed the form of the goods sold. State v. Whittaker, 33 Mo. 457.

But one who manufactures and supplies goods on previous orders of his customers alone is not a merchant, even though he keeps on hand, but not business of manufacturers.¹ Numerous other callings subjected thereto are treated elsewhere in this work.²

(3) Banks, Bankers, etc.—Under the power to tax occupations, the business of a chartered bank or of bankers may be taxed;³ also the business of licensed brokers.⁴

A trustee to whom goods are assigned who merely sells them without replenishing the stock, need not procure a merchant's license. Ayrnett v. Edmundson, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 610.

A dealer, in the popular sense, is not one who buys to keep, or makes to sell, but one who buys to sell again. Norris v. Com., 27 Pa. St. 494. Farmers, selling the products of their farms, are not subject to the tax imposed on "dealers in goods, wares, merchandise, commodities or effects of whatsoever kind or nature." Barton v. Morris, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 360. But a miller or manufacturer of flour, who purchases grain, as well as raises it on his farm, and retails the flour at other places than his mill, is liable to such a tax. Berks County v. Bertolet, 13 Pa. St. 521.

A tax imposed on traders, describing their occupation as "buying and selling," is held to include only those who buy and sell the same article in the same condition as traders, and not to embrace butchers, State v. Yearby, 82 N. Car. 561; or the proprietors of a saw mill who buy timber, saw it and then sell it. State v. Chadbourne, 80 N. Car. 479; 30 Am. Rep. 94. As to butchers, the contrary is held in State v. Whitaker, 33 Mo. 457.

The business of a bank is not exempt because the bank is incorporated by the state. State v. Columbia, 6 S. Car. 1.

A bank which is in the hands of a receiver and prohibited from transacting business is not subject to the occupation tax, Com. v. Lancaster Sav. Bank, 123 Mass. 493; but is not exempt when remaining in the hands of its officers under temporary injunction.

Bankers licensed as such, who sold government securities in their own right, were not subject to the duties imposed on brokers. U. S. v. Fisk, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 445. But sales made by brokers on their own account, are subject to the duties imposed on their sales generally. U. S. v. Cutting, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 441.

A license fee and tax may be imposed on the business of shaving paper. Young v. Governor, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 147.

Exchange Broker.—The imposition of a tax upon the business of an exchange broker is not unconstitutional, although he be a dealer in foreign exchange exclusively. Nathan v. Louisiana, 8 How. (U. S.) 75.

Real Estate Brokers.—The occupation of a real estate broker is taxable as a privilege, Wiltse v. State, 8 Heisk. (Tenn.) 544, or under a general power

e. DOG TAXES.¹—The law recognizes property in dogs and may tax them as such.² But usually, these taxes are imposed as police regulations, in the form of license fees upon the owner or keeper, and, therefore, are not within constitutional requirements that taxes on property shall be according to value.³

3. How Imposed—a. MODE OF IMPOSING.—The power to tax occupations and privileges involves the right to determine the amount of the tax;⁴ and the authority to license carries with it the power to impose the terms and conditions upon which licenses shall be granted,⁵ and to select the mode in which the taxes

Dogs in cities may be classified, and the dogs of one class be licensed while others may be exempt from the tax. State v. Topeka, 36 Kan. 81.

An ordinance requiring the owner to procure a license for each dog owned within the city, is not in violation of a statute exempting or allowing for every citizen of the state two dogs free from taxation. Com. v. Markham, 7 Bush (Ky.) 486.

In Massachusetts, every owner or keeper of a dog is required to have him registered and licensed. See Com. v. Kelliher, 12 Allen (Mass.) 480. The license is valid in any part of the commonwealth and is transferrable with the dog, provided that certain requisites and formalities are complied with. And see Com. v. Brimbleom, 4 Allen (Mass.) 584; Com. v. Palmer, 134 Mass. 537. The owner is not liable for the penalty if he is not the keeper of the dog. Com. v. Canada, 107 Mass. 405. But the keeper, although not the owner, is liable. Jones v. Com., 15

Gray (Mass.) 193. The fact that a man applied for a license to keep a dog, is evidence that he was the owner or keeper. Com. v. Gorman, 16 Gray (Mass.) 601. As to the description necessary, see Com. v. Brahany, 123 Mass. 245.

Indictment.—An averment that defendant did keep a certain dog, without the dog being then and there licensed according to law, is a sufficient allegation that the dog was not licensed as the statute requires. It is not necessary to aver that the dog was not registered, numbered and described. Com. v. Thompson, 2 Allen (Mass.) 507.

Fund for Killed Sheep.—It is sometimes provided that the fund arising from the dog tax shall be applied to the claim for sheep killed by dogs. See Shelby Tp. v. Randles, 57 Ind. 390. A statute providing that the dog tax collected within a city or town shall be applied to the payment of losses suffered from the killing or wounding of sheep within the county or township, is not unconstitutional on the ground that it creates an advantage for one community as against another. Longyear v. Buck, 83 Mich. 237.

A requirement that an applicant for shall be levied.¹ The amount of the tax or license fee may be regulated by and estimated upon the income from the business taxed;² or by the value of the property used in its prosecution,³ or upon the amount of business done;⁴ or it may be arbitrarily fixed by the taxing power,⁵ subject only to the restriction that the burden must rest equally upon all of a class.⁶

A license fee imposed for the purpose of regulation, however, should be limited to the necessary expense of issuing it, and the a license must give a bond conditioned for the payment of all fines and costs assessed for any violation of the provisions of a license law, is constitutional and valid. Kane v. State, 78 Ind. 103.

It is no defense to a charge of failure to perform a condition of a license requiring the conspicuous posting of the peddler's name, residence, and number of his license upon his parcels or vehicle, that he has no vehicle and that the parcels which he sells are carried on his person. *Com. v. Interstate Commerce.—An occupation tax imposed on a telegraph company, which graduates the tax according to the business done, regardless of a distinction between business done wholly within the state and business done in part without the state, is free from the objection that it regulates or obstructs interstate commerce. *Western Union Tel. b. UPON WHOM IMPOSED.—Each member of a firm is not liable for the tax imposed upon the business transactions,³ unless the tax is personal, when the tax must be paid by everyone following the vocation.⁴ A person paying a tax on one business, who adds to his occupation another, even though a kindred business, may be liable to double taxation.⁵ But where the one business is a necessary or ordinary incident of the other, payment of the tax upon the principal business will suffice.⁶

In Johnson v. Philadelphia, 60 Pa. St. 445, it was held that the imposition of a reasonable charge for a license as a police regulation is valid, although its incidental operation augments the receipts into the treasury.

In St. Paul v. Colter, 12 Minn. 41; 90 Am. Rep. 278, it was held that proof of the amount of license fee reasonably necessary to regulate the business, is not admissible in a prosecution for violating an ordinance imposing a fee.

c. WHERE IMPOSED.—Occupation and privilege taxes may be said to be local rather than general,¹ and are not to be imposed on occupations or privileges carried on outside the limits of the taxing district.² An apparent exception may be said to exist in the case of licenses imposed under the police power; as, for example, for the regulation of the liquor traffic in immediate proximity to the territorial limits of the district or municipality.³

The fact that all the taxes required by law have been paid in another state or district, does not relieve a business from taxation in the place where it is carried on.⁴ A business is not taxable in two different districts, however, where it is managed and the principal part of its transactions is carried on in one, though some of its enterprises extend incidentally into the other.⁵

4. Collection.—(See also supra, this title, Collection).—Occupation and privilege taxes are imposed usually in the form of license fees, the payment of which may be made a condition precedent to the issue of the license,⁶ or the beginning of the exercise of the occupation or privilege.⁷

In Drexel v. Com., 46 Pa. St. 31, it was held that a statute imposing a tax upon brokers on account of their receipts from commissions, discounts, etc., and requiring them to make returns to the auditor general, imposes a duty upon them to keep such accounts as will exhibit their receipts, and a failure to keep such accounts and make return, is a sufficient ground for the imposition of the penalty imposed by the act. The penalty is incurred by each and every neglect. Com. v. Cooke, 50 Pa. St. 201.

Suits for penalties should be prosecuted in the name of the state, Aulanier v. Governor, 1 Tex. 653, unless it is otherwise provided by statute. See Higby v. Fishbourne, 5 Ill. 165; Wallack v. New York, 3 Hun (N. Y.) 84.

The process required in cases of suits for a penalty incurred by violating an ordinance, is sufficient, if it sets out the substance of the ordinance and the nature of the offense charged. Kip v. Patterson, 26 N. J. L. 298.

Burden of Proof.—The state should make out a prima facie case by showing everything necessary to make out the right to recover the tax. See Weaver v. State, 89 Ga. 639; State v. Hirsch, 45 Mo. 429; State v. Richardson, 45 Mo. 575. But in an action for a penalty for acting without a license, it is not necessary to establish the fact that the accused had no license. This

Where the amount of a tax is variable at the will of the proper municipal officers, it is not a matter of judicial knowledge; and an indictment or information for pursuing the business without the payment of the tax, should allege, and the proof establish, the amount which had been fixed. *Archer v. The failure to obtain a license for acts which were misdemeanors at common law, leaves the party as he would have been at common law—a public wrongdoer subject to indictment and punishment. People v. Raynes, 3 Cal. 366. Gaming debts are not legalized by legislative acts permitting gaming houses to be licensed. The license simply operates as a permission, and removes the misdemeanor at common law, but does not change the character of the contract. Carrier v. Brannan, 3 Cal. 328.

Forfeiture of Goods.—In Virginia, judgment for the forfeiture of the goods used may be given on presentment and information. Com. v. Collins, 9 Leigh (Va.) 666.

A statute requiring the forfeiture of goods carried for sale without a license, does not apply to goods forwarded from without the state, upon the order of a purchaser, though such order was procured through an agent of the sellers who was unlawfully traveling and offering goods for sale. Burbank v. McDuffee, 65 Me. 135.

Power in any tribunal, body, or officer to issue a license and require a tax to be paid, carries with it the right to receive payment, unless a different disposition of the fee is provided for.²

XXI. LOCAL ASSESSMENTS—1. Nature and Purpose—Distinguished from Taxation Generally.—Local or special assessments are levied by virtue of an exercise of the taxing power,³ but, in many respects, differ from general taxes levied for governmental or municipal purposes. They are a peculiar species of taxation, standing apart from the general burdens imposed for state and municipal purposes, and are governed by principles which do not apply generally.¹ They do not recur annually or at stated periods, but are imposed only as occasion arises;² and they can only be levied on real estate.³ Finally, while the improvement for which the special assessment is levied is public in its character, authorizing the levy of a tax, the property within the limited area over which the assessment is imposed, is specially benefited by it, and its value enhanced in excess of the general good, and therefore the property so benefited should be charged with its share of the expense in proportion to the special benefit which it derives, and not merely on an ad valorem basis, as in the case of a general tax.⁴

These differences have compelled the courts to recognize an important distinction between the terms "taxes" and "assessments," when used in constitutions, statutes, and covenants. These terms are regarded as distinct and as having a different meaning.⁵ Thus, where there is an exemption from "taxation," such exemption is limited to taxation for general governmental and municipal purposes, and does not extend to or include special assessments.⁶ Similarly, constitutional provisions that all taxes shall be equal and uniform apply only to general taxation and have no application to local assessments.⁷ An assessment is not a tax, within the meaning of a statute limiting the time within which the collection of taxes may be enforced.¹

A covenant that a vendor shall pay all "taxes" assessed against the property prior to the surrender of possession to the vendee, does not bind the vendor to pay a local assessment so levied,² and on the other hand, a condition in a lease that the lessee shall pay all "assessments," does not bind him to pay taxes levied for general purposes.³

2. Principle of the Imposition—Benefits.—One of the features distinguishing local assessments from general taxation, is that local assessments are imposed according to the benefit derived from the improvement, and not ad valorem. This principle of benefit equalling the assessment is the foundation of special assessments. If there be no special and peculiar benefit, the

But, if there are words in the covenant evincing an intent of the parties to extend the liability to such assessments, it is otherwise. Thus, a lessee has been held liable where the covenant was to pay "taxes and assessments," Codman v. Johnson, 104 Mass. 491; to pay "rates, taxes and duties," Curtis v. Pierce, 115 Mass. 186; to pay "taxes and duties," Blake v. Baker, 115 Mass. 188; to pay "all duties, taxes and assessments," etc., New York v. Cashman, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 96.

In Cassady v. Hammer, 62 Iowa 359, however, it was held that an agreement in a lease "to pay all taxes assessed . . . during the continuance of the lease," included special assessments for local improvements, such as for paving and curbing the adjacent street. The court said that the question presented arose upon the meaning of the word "taxes" as used in the lease; that the assessment was made under a statute, wherein an assessment was denominated a special tax; referred to the fact that, in its previous decisions, an assessment like that in question had been called a tax; cited Burlington, etc., R. Co. v. Spearman, 12 Iowa 112; Morrison v. Hershire, 32 Iowa 271, and Sioux City v. Independent School Dist., 55 Iowa 150; and said that the term "special tax," as denoting an assessment for a local improvement, had come into general use and was understood by every one, notwithstanding holdings that a statute providing for the exemption of a certain class of property from taxation did not exempt from assessment for local improvements, an exemption from taxation being an exception to be construed strictly. The court adverted to Love v. Howard, 6 R. I. 116; Municipality No. 2 v. Curell, 7 La. 203, cases where a lessee had agreed to pay special taxes, and where it was held that he was not liable for a special assessment, but said that in the former case the assessment was made under a statute enacted after the execution of the lease, and that in the latter case the agreement was to pay taxes annually levied, and that the parties must have had in mind annual or general taxes. As supporting this view of the question, the court cited Blake v. Baker, 115 Mass. 188, referred to in the preceding paragraph.

But in Pearson v. Zable, 78 Ky. 170, Cofer, J., said: "But it by no means follows that each piece of property within the bounds over which the assessment extends must in fact derive benefit from the improvement. The area over which the assessment extends constitutes for the occasion a tax district; whether the property within that district, considered as an entirety, will be benefited by the proposed improvement, is a question to be decided primarily by the legislature. And when that department, whether acting directly or through the local authorities, to which it may have delegated the power to determine when such improvements shall be made, directs an improvement to be made and the costs of making it to be assessed upon the adjacent property, there is a decision by the legislature that the property within the district will be benefited."

In Preston v. Rudd, 84 Ky. 150, Holt, J., said: "The question of assessment or apportionment cannot be governed by advantage or disadvantage to one person within the district. If so, public improvements could rarely be made. The legislature must necessarily look at the district as a whole, and upon this general view determine whether such benefits will accrue from the improvement as will authorize its cost to be imposed upon the adjacent property. Such assessments are made upon the assumption that a portion of the community are specially benefited by the improvement; the principle is that the territory is benefited; that it has a common interest, and that, governed by equitable rules, it must equally bear the burden. Necessarily, individual cases of hardship will arise; but it approaches equality as nearly as is practicable. It follows that a lot owner may be compelled to pay his proportion of the cost of an improvement, although in his particular case his property may not be benefited. This rule, however, cannot be so extended as to entirely take from the citizen his property. This would work, 'a manifest injustice.' It would be spoliation, and not taxation. Under the guise of benefit and taxation, he cannot be thus arbitrarily deprived of his property."

In U. S. v. Edmunds, 3 Mackey (D. C.) 142, it was held that the clause of an act of Congress providing for assessments "upon property adjoining and to be especially benefited," was a mere designation of the property liable to assessment, and not a limitation upon the power of apportionment.

If the owners of the adjacent property are compelled to contribute to the cost of the improvement, beyond the enhancement of the value of their own property, the exaction of such excess is a taking of private property for public use without just compensation.¹

In consonance with these principles it has also been held that, although a tax may be placed exclusively on the political subdivision of the state to whose benefit the tax will enure, yet the legislature cannot impose it upon any district smaller in extent than such political subdivision without imposing it upon the basis of the benefit to the property on which it is imposed.²

To sustain a special assessment, the special benefit must accrue to the land as real estate; and not to its owner merely as an individual.³ The special benefit which will justify an assessment must be immediate, and of such a character that it can be seen and traced; remote and contingent benefits are not sufficient and cannot be considered.⁴

3. Power to Make—a. STATUTES AND CITY ORDINANCES.—The levying of local assessments need not be exercised directly by the legislature, but may be delegated to municipal corporations.⁵ The power is usually exercised by means of such a delegation, and some courts have held that, as the power to levy local assessments is of municipal rather than state consequence, and as it is recognized as a power inherent in or at least necessary to the complete working of a municipal government, the legislature has no authority to order directly an improvement within a city and levy an assessment to pay for it, but can duly empower the city authorities to make the improvement and levy the assessment.¹

A delegation of authority to levy an assessment must, however, be distinctly and expressly made.² Consequently, it cannot be implied from a general grant of power to levy taxes for municipal purposes,³ or from a grant of authority to provide for the general improvement and regulation of streets and sidewalks, or from similar provisions.⁴ So, the power to lay a sidewalk cannot be inferred from a grant of authority to macadamize a street;⁵ authority to levy a special assessment to improve a turnpike does not authorize an assessment for the improvement of only a certain portion thereof;¹ and power to drain does not include the power to construct a levee.² But an express power to make an improvement necessarily implies the power to do everything that is required to carry such power into effect. Hence, an express power to construct sidewalks implies a right in the city to contract such obligations as are necessary to execute the power.³

Certain powers are further regarded as continuing. Thus, the power to improve implies the power to repair,⁴ and a power to pave implies a power to repair and repave when the condition of the street requires it.⁵ Unless the power conferred upon the municipal authorities to make an improvement, and to levy a special assessment therefor, is limited and controlled by statute, the grantees of the power are the sole and exclusive judges of the time, mode, and manner of making the improvement.⁶ But the local body to which the power to make the improvement and levy the assessment is delegated must itself exercise the power conferred upon it, and cannot in its turn delegate the power, so far as it is the exercise of legislative or judicial discretion, to other agencies.⁷ This limitation, however, does not apply to such matters as are merely ministerial in their nature, and relate only to the execution of the powers conferred upon the municipality.⁸

b. CONSTITUTIONALITY.—In the absence of a constitutional prohibition, a state legislature may delegate to municipalities the power to levy local assessments upon property specially benefited by public improvements within their borders. And when the amount of the assessment does not exceed the special benefit, it is a valid exercise of the taxing power of the state.¹ It is well settled that if provision is made for giving notice to the owners of property, and each proprietor has an opportunity at some stage of

But in Pennsylvania, it is held that where a street is once opened, paved, etc., it is assimilated with the rest of the city and made a part of it. All the peculiar benefits of the locality have been received and enjoyed, and the cost of repaving such street cannot be provided for by local assessments, but must be defrayed by general taxation. Hammett v. Philadelphia, 65 Pa. St. 146; Boyer v. Reading, 151 Pa. St. 185; Protestant Orphan Asylum's Appeal, 111 Pa. St. 135. And the same is true of the cost of reconstructing a sewer. Erie v. Russell, 148 Pa. St. 384.

Macadamizing is an original paving within the meaning of the rule, and the rule should be applied, even though the cost of the original paving was not assessed upon the abutting property. Harrisburg v. Segelbaum, 151 Pa. St. 172; Williamsport v. Beck, 128 Pa. St. 147. The same rule is applicable to the cost of widening the footway of a street already paved and in good condition. Wistar v. Philadelphia, 80 Pa. St. 505. But a worn-out sidewalk may be replaced at the expense of the the proceedings to be heard as to what proportion of the tax shall be assessed upon his land, there is no taking of property without due process of law.¹ Neither are such assessments obnoxious to provisions in state constitutions requiring that taxation shall be owners of abutting property. Smith v. Kingston, 120 Pa. St. 357.

The fact that sewers have been constructed on the front and rear of a city lot, and the owner has contributed his share of the cost thereof, will not exempt the lot from a further assessment to defray the expenses of constructing a sewer under a side street adjacent thereto. Michener v. Philadelphia, 118 Pa. St. 535.

In State v. Charleston, 12 Rich. (S. Car.) 702, it was held that the South Carolina act of 1850, authorizing the city council of Charleston, where a street has been widened by taking a strip of land off the lots on one side and adding it to the street, to assess the expense, or a portion thereof, upon the lot holders on the opposite side of the street, whose lands have not been taken for public use, is unconstitutional.

A statute is not unconstitutional because it authorizes assessments upon property not bordering on the street to be improved, if the property is near to and specially benefited by the improvement. Ray v. Jeffersonville, 90 Ind. 557; Little Rock v. Katzenstein, 52 Ark. 107; Guild v. Chicago, 82 Ill. 472; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. East St. Louis, 134 Ill. 656; Lansing v. Lincoln, 32 Neb. 457.

But in St. Louis v. Juppier (Mo. 1887), 8 West. Rep. 245, it was held that an assessment could not be levied on a lot which did not abut on the new alley, for the cost of opening which, the assessment was attempted to be levied.

And in State v. Reid (N. J. 1886), 5 Cent. Rep. 92, it was held that an assessment for constructing a sewer should not be made on property which did not abut on the street under which the sewer was constructed, unless such property was benefited by the flow of surface water therefrom.

An act authorizing the making of a road or avenue through an agricultural district, and providing for the payment of the cost thereof by local assessment on lands within different distances from the road, is unconstitutional as providing for local assessments for a general public benefit. Such a mode of apportioning taxation must be confined to thickly populated districts, such as cities and villages. In re Washington Avenue, 69 Pa. St. 352.

It has been held that a bridge crossing a stream at a public highway in a city, is a public, and not a local, improvement, and that the cost of its construction must be borne by the general public and not assessed upon adjacent property. In re Saw Mill Run Bridge, 85 Pa. St. 163. But see Guilder v. Otsego, 20 Minn. 74, and Maltby v. Tautges, 50 Minn. 248.

Eau Claire*, 81 Wis. 326; St. Paul v. Nickl, 42 Minn. 262.

In Meggett v. Eau Claire, 81 Wis. 326, it appeared that the city charter required the city clerk, after an improvement had been determined upon and the amount chargeable to each lot, had been ascertained by the city council, to issue to the occupant of each lot, a certificate stating the amount assessed and chargeable to such lot. And it was also provided that an estimate of the whole expense of the improvement, and the amount charged to each lot, should be made and filed in the office of the city clerk, for the inspection of those interested, before the work should be ordered to be done, and that notice should be given in the official paper of the city of the filing of such estimate and of the letting of the contract for the performance of the work. It was held that these proceedings, when taken together, constituted due process of law.

And in Matter of Amsterdam, 126 N. Y. 158, it appeared that the commissioners of assessment were required by the charter to file a report of their work, with the city clerk, and then a notice was to be published that such report was on file for the inspection of all persons interested, and that it would be presented at a specified time to the supreme court for confirmation, and that all persons desiring to object, might file their objections with the city clerk. On the day appointed, the court was to hear the parties on the report, and might confirm or annul it. It was held that these proceedings constituted due process of law, and afforded sufficient notice to those whose property did not abut on the street, as well as to the owners of abutting property; reversing on this point, 55 Hun (N. Y.) 270.

An act which confers upon drainage commissioners the power to levy local assessments, and provides a summary process for collecting the same, but provides no opportunity for the owners of land to be heard as to the validity of assessments, is unconstitutional as not affording due process of law. Hutson v. Woodbridge Protection Dist., 79 Cal. 90.

And it matters not that land-owners have actual knowledge of the proceedings, if no notice has been given. Scudder v. Jones (Ind. 1892), 32 N. E. Rep. 221.

But it has been held that a city charter, being the organic act of a municipality, is analogous to a state constitution, and is, therefore, not open to attack on constitutional grounds if it fails in terms to express either the necessity for notice or the time and manner of giving the same. But the assessment proceedings will be void if due notice is not given, and the owners of property are not afforded an opportunity to be heard. Paulsen v. Portland, 149 U. S. 38, approving Gilmore v. Hentig, 33 Kan. 156, and citing Cleveland v. Tripp, 13 R. I. 50; Davis v. Lynchburg, 84 Va. 861; Williams v. Detroit, 2 Mich. 560; Gatch v. Des Moines, 63 Iowa 718; *Baltimore, etc., R. But a special act of the legislature providing for the opening and grading of a particular street, and for the appointment of commissioners with full power to assess benefits, without a provision requiring notice to be given to the owners of the property upon which the assessments are to be made, is unconstitutional. Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 183. And the same is true of an act providing for assessments for water rates upon vacant lots, without notice to the owners thereof. Remsen v. Wheeler, 105 N. Y. 573. And when the duty of distribution of the expense of local improvements by assessments upon property in certain districts, is, by the legislature, devolved upon any board or officer, some provision for notice to property owners is essential to the validity of the assessment. McLaughlin v. Miller, 124 N. Y. 517. See also People v. Turner, 117 N. Y. 227; Ulman v. Baltimore, 72 Md. 587, overruling Baltimore v. Scharf, 56 Md. 50; *Baltimore v. And in Matter of Trustees of Union College, 129 N. Y. 308, it was held that the provisions of a city charter in reference to the apportionment and assessment of water rates upon lots, without provision for giving the owners or occupants notice or an opportunity to be heard, were unconstitutional and the assessments made therefor were void.

In Spencer v. Merchant, 100 N. Y. 585, it appeared that a special law for uniform and equal, and assessed upon property in proportion to its money value; such provisions apply only to taxation for purposes of revenue, where the taxpayer receives no special benefit not common to the public.¹

the opening and grading of a street had been declared unconstitutional on the ground that it provided for no notice to the property owners. Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 183. Some of the assessments, however, were paid, and the legislature passed another bill fixing the amount of unpaid taxes, and describing the property upon which assessments were to be made to pay the sum, and this without any notice to the owners of such property. But the bill did provide for a notice to the property owners of proceedings to determine the proportional amount each one should pay. It was held that this was sufficient to sustain the constitutionality of the law, and that the legislature had power to determine the aggregate amount of the tax, and to define the property upon which it should be assessed, without providing for notice to the owners thereof. This decision was affirmed in Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 345, Matthews and Harlan, JJ., dissenting on the ground that there is no distinction in principle between this case and Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 183, which they deemed to be correctly decided.

It has been held that, where the property owner has a right to a notice of sale before the sale of his land to pay an assessment thereon, and may thereupon appeal to the court for the correction of errors, such notice and opportunity to be heard are sufficient to sustain the constitutionality of the law. Yeomans v. Riddle, 84 Iowa 147, citing Allen v. Armstrong, 16 Iowa 508; Stewart v. Polk County, 30 Iowa 28. See also Nichols v. Bridgeport, 23 Conn. 189.

Personal notice is not necessary; notice by publication is sufficient. Lyman v. Plummer, 75 Iowa 353; Matter of Amsterdam, 126 N. Y. 158, distinguishing Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 184; Remsen v. Wheeler, 105 N. Y. 579; Spencer v. Merchant, 100 N. Y. 585; 125 U. S. 356; People v. Turner, 117 N. Y. 227. See also Paulsen v. Portland, 149 U. And where the only act necessary to ascertain the amount of an assessment upon the property is a plain mathematical calculation, and no discretion is left to the city council or other officers, no notice of the apportionment is necessary, especially as the amount assessed is a lien on the property only, and some sort of notice must be given before a sale thereof can be made. *Hagar v. Where the property owner may appeal to the courts and have all material questions reviewed, except the necessity for the improvement, it cannot be said that his property rights are affected without due process of law. State v. Stewart, 74 Wis. 620.

Illinois.—Chicago v. Larned, 34 Ill. 203, decided under the Illinois constitution of 1848, is the leading case holding that local assessments are subject to the rule of uniformity. This case was followed in Ottawa v. Spencer, 40 Ill. 211, and Chicago v. Baer, 41 Ill. 306. But the language of the constitution of 1848, which gave rise to these decisions, was omitted from the constitution of 1870, and the subsequent decisions of that court are in substantial conformity with the rule as stated in the text. Fagan v. Chicago, 84 Ill. 234; Bigelow v. Chicago, 90 Ill. 53; White v. People, 94 Ill. 604; Craw v. Tolono, 96 Ill. 255; Enos v. Springfield, 113 Ill. 65; Galesburg v. Searles, 114 Ill. 217; Watson v. Chicago, 115 Ill. 78; Sterling v. Galt, 117 Ill. 15; Murphy v. People, 120 Ill. 234; Springfield v. Green, 120 Ill. 269.

In this state a distinction is made between "special assessments," which are quasi public and are levied on all the property benefited, by some uniform rule; and "special taxation," which is strictly local and is levied only on contiguous property. In the former, the assessments may not in any case exceed the benefits, and the property owner is entitled to have the question of benefits submitted to a jury; whereas in the latter, the jury have nothing to do with the amount assessed. Sterling v. Galt, 117 Ill. 18; Enos v. Springfield, 113 Ill. 70; Springfield v. Green, 120 Ill. 269; Kuehnir v. Freeport, 143 Ill. 99; Davis v. Litchfield, 145 Ill. 326.

Minnesota.—In Minnesota, it was held in an early decision that this provision in the constitution precluded the levying of local assessments upon the basis of benefits, Stinson v. Smith, 8 Minn. 366; but the constitution was so amended in 1869 as to give the legislature complete discretion as to the basis upon which such assessments shall be levied. Guilder v. Otsego, 20 Minn. 74; Noonan v. Stillwater, 33 Minn. 198; State v. Hennepin County Dist. Ct., 33 Minn. 235; State v. Ramsey County Dist. Ct., 33 Minn. 295; Hennepin County v. Bartleson, 37 Minn. 343; Maltby v. Tautges, 50 Minn. 248.

And the legislature may authorize counties as well as municipal corporations to make such assessments. Dowlan v. Sibley County, 36 Minn. 430.

Wisconsin.—In Weeks v. Milwaukee, 10 Wis. 242, the court seemed to be in doubt as to whether or not local assessments were within the provision of the Wisconsin constitution concerning equal taxation; but subsequent decisions in that state have settled the rule as laid down in the text. Lumsden v. Cross, 10 Wis. 282; Bond v. Kenosha, 17 Wis. 284; Johnson v. Milwaukee, 40 Wis. 315; Dalrymple v. Milwaukee, 53

Neither do such assessments fall under the constitutional inhibition against taking private property for public use without just compensation,¹ although it has been held that, if the assessments are in excess of the benefits conferred, there is, pro tanto, an unconstitutional taking of private property.² So, also, there are many well-considered cases holding that statutes which authorize personal judgments against the owners of property assessed are obnoxious to the constitution, in that they authorize the taking of private property for which there is not necessarily any compensation given in return. If the land with its increased value is insuf-

Wis. 178; Warner v. Knox, 50 Wis. 434; Teegarden v. Racine, 56 Wis. 545; Meggett v. Eau Claire, 81 Wis. 326.

But assessments to pay subscriptions in aid of railroads are general taxes and are subject to the rule of uniformity. Hale v. Kenosha, 29 Wis. 599.

Arkansas.—In McGehee v. Mathis, 21 Ark. 40, it was held that the constitutional rule of uniformity did not apply to local assessments for benefits. This case was reversed on other grounds in 4 Wall. (U. S.) 143, and was overruled on this point in Peay v. Little Rock, 32 Ark. 31, in which the court adopted the rule laid down in Chicago v. Larned, 34 Ill. 276. See also Monticello v. Banks, 48 Ark. 251; Davis v. Gaines, 48 Ark. 382, holding that such assessments must be ad valorem and uniform.

Tennessee.—In Taylor v. Chandler, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 349, it was held that the rule of uniformity applied to all forms of taxation, including local assessments.

Alabama.—In Mobile v. Dargan, 45 Ala. 310, and Mobile v. Royal St. R. Co., 45 Ala. 322, it was held that the rule of uniformity included local assessments. But the soundness of these decisions was questioned in Irwin v. Mobile, 57 Ala. 6; and they were expressly overruled in Birmingham v. Klein, 89 Ala. 461.

Colorado.—In Colorado, it was formerly held that the rule of uniformity should be applied, except for such improvements as came clearly within the domain of the police power of the state. Palmer v. Way, 6 Colo. 106; Brown v. Denver, 7 Colo. 305; Keese v. Denver, 10 Colo. 112; Pueblo v. Robinson, 12 Colo. 593; Wilson v. Chilcott, 12 Colo. 600.

But in Denver v. Knowles, 17 Colo. 204, this distinction was entirely swept away and the court adopted the rule that the word "tax," as used in the constitution of the state, referred only to ordinary public taxes and not to assessments for local improvements in cities and towns.

Virginia.—Notwithstanding the well-considered cases of Norfolk v. Ellis, 26 Gratt. (Va.) 224; Richmond, etc., R. Co. v. Lynchburg, 81 Va. 473; Davis v. Lynchburg, 84 Va. 861, which are in line with the great weight of authority, Richardson, J., has said much in Norfolk v. Chamberlain, 89 Va. 196, which, if it does not unsettle the law in that state, may provoke further litigation on this point.

c. CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES.—Grants of power to make local assessments are strictly construed and must be strictly followed.²

4. Improvements for Which Made—a. STREETS—(See also STREETS AND SIDEWALKS, vol. 24, p. 1).—The most frequent improvements, from which such benefits result to the owners of property in the vicinity thereof as to render it assessable for the expenses incident thereto, are street improvements, such as opening, grading, paving, altering, widening, and the like. In opening a street it is necessary in the first place to secure the land for its location; this is done generally under the power of eminent domain, by virtue of which private property may be taken for public use, provided a just compensation in money be paid the owners,³ and, for the purpose of providing this compensation, the property owners benefited by such new street may be assessed.⁴ The owner himself of the land taken, when his remaining property, by reason of its vicinity to the street, is benefited, is liable to assessment, and when this is so, the benefit he receives is balanced

The standard fixed by statutory enactment must be that the assessment can be laid only upon the principle of exceptional benefits, and not in excess thereof; otherwise the statute is unconstitutional. *State v. against the damages he has sustained in the taking.¹ Where the street is already in existence, such general improvements as grading and paving, widening and otherwise altering it, are, as a rule, considered to be productive of such benefits to property owners, by enhancing the value of their property, as to render them liable to assessment.²

b. SIDEWALKS—(See also STREETS AND SIDEWALKS, vol. 24, p. 1).—It is a valid exercise of the police power of the state to require owners of urban property to construct sidewalks in front thereof, and to keep the same in proper repair and in a

But in Sutton v. Louisville, 5 Dana (Ky.) 28, it was held that an owner of private property cannot be required to pay in any direct mode for any benefit or advantage which may accrue to him from public improvements.

If the benefit which the owner of the land receives equals the value of the land taken, he cannot be said to have suffered any damages, and therefore is entitled to no compensation, Nichols v. Bridgeport, 23 Conn. 189; Trinity College v. Hartford, 32 Conn. 452; and if the benefits exceed the damages which he sustains by the taking, the balance of such benefits must be assessed upon his land. Holton v. Milwaukee, 31 Wis. 27. Compare Lowe v. Omaha, 33 Neb. 587. But see Benton v. Brookline, 151 Mass. 250, where it was held, under Massachusetts Pub. St. ch. 51, that any benefit which may be assessed as a betterment to the balance of land, a part of which is taken to widen a street, cannot be set off against damages for the part taken.

This rule applies to benefits shared by an estate in common with other estates in the neighborhood—such as are assessed under the "betterment acts." Dickenson v. Fitchburg, 13 Gray (Mass.) 546; Whitney v. Boston, 98 Mass. 312; Allen v. Charlestown, 109 Mass. 243; Upham v. Worcester, 113 Mass. 99; Godbold v. Chelsea, 111 Mass. 294; *Edmonds v. Boston, 116 Mass. 181; Bancroft v. Boston, 115 Mass. 377.

But direct and special benefits to an estate, as distinguished from those common to the neighborhood, may be set off against damages awarded to the owner. Chase v. Worcester, 108 Mass. 60; Allen v. Charlestown, 109 Mass. 243; Upham v. Worcester, 113 Mass. 97; Green v. Fall River, 113 Mass. 262; Dickenson v. Fitchburg, 13 Gray (Mass.) 546; *Whitney v. A provision in a city charter which requires the jury to offset the damages and benefits and report the balance without specifying the amount of either, is illegal and should be disregarded. Detroit v. Daly, 68 Mich. 503.

In Ohio, where the constitution guarantees to owners of land taken for the use of a street full compensation therefor "without deduction for benefit," it was held that, notwithstanding this provision, an owner of land taken might be assessed his proportion of the amount necessary to compensate him for his other land taken for such street. Cleveland v. Wick, 18 Ohio St. 304. See State v. West Hoboken, 51 N. J. L. 267.

But when a street railway company is required to keep certain portions of the pavement in repair, assessments may not be levied on abutting property safe condition; and in case of their failure to do so, when required, to authorize the city authorities to make the improvements at the expense of the property.¹ But the street includes the sidewalks, and the cost of their construction, as well as that of other street for the cost of repaving such portions of a street. Gilmore v. Utica, 55 Hun (N. Y.) 514.

In Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. East St. Louis, 134 Ill. 656, it was said that "the statute does not define what shall be considered a local improvement. That question is left solely to the determination of the city councils or village boards. Their decision as to the utility of an improvement upon streets and whether it is to be treated as a local improvement for the purpose of raising funds by special assessment to pay for it, is final, in the absence of fraud."

The fact that a railroad runs longitudinally over an avenue opposite to the lands of a person assessed, does not change the character of the avenue as a public street, the same having been dedicated to the public before the building of the railroad, and the city council may by ordinance direct and order the grading, gravelling, and curbing of such avenue in front of the owners on either side, at their expense. State v. Atlantic City, 34 N. J. L. 99.

Where a street to be improved lies partly on one side and partly on the other of the boundary between a city and an incorporated village, assessments for paving the same made by two corporations on their respective abutters uniform on the property within the jurisdiction of each, are valid. Scully v. Cincinnati, 1 Cinc. Super Ct. 183.

In New Jersey, it has been held that, even where land has been dedicated by the owners for a public street, they may be assessed for improvement thereon in the same way as other property holders whose property is in the vicinity of the street. State v. Dean, 23 N. J. L. 335. See Holmes v. Jersey City, 12 N. J. Eq. 299; State v. Hudson, 34 N. J. L. 25.

An agreement between commissioners appointed to open a street and an owner of land through which it passes, that neither damages nor benefits shall be assessed, has been held illegal as tending to render assessments against other property unequal and partial. St. Louis v. Meier, 77 Mo. 13.

provement has changed in character from agricultural to urban property. Philadelphia v. Sheridan, 148 Pa. St. 532.

But see Malchus v. Highlands, 4 Bush (Ky.) 547, where a local assessment according to acreage was sustained for the improvement of a road passing through a suburban district.

Where the improvement of a public street is ordered, to cause a partonly of such improvement to be made and levy an assessment therefor, is premature and unauthorized. *Cincinnati v. A demand on the property owner that he construct the sidewalk, and his refusal or neglect to do so are prerequisite to the acquisition of a lien upon his property for the cost of a sidewalk con-improvements, may be assessed on the property abutting on the street, on the basis of benefits or frontage.¹

c. SEWERS.—Another instance of the power to assess property for local improvements, is the construction in cities and towns of sewers and culverts, though they are in many cases provided for by other means, as by general taxation, or by regulations for public health, made under the police power.² That they are productive of such benefits, however, as to justify local assessments, has been held frequently,³ and it has been said that they are included in a general grant of power to improve and repair streets, structed by the city. Mt. Pleasant v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 138 Pa. St. 365.

And where no such demand is made, he should be allowed the difference between what the city charged and what it might have cost him to do the work. Philadelphia v. Meighan (Pa. 1894), 28 Atl. Rep. 304.

In Massachusetts, sewers are built in the first instance at the expense of the city, though a portion of the costs may afterwards be assessed upon the property owners. Bennett v. New Bed- ford, 110 Mass. 433; Dorey v. Boston, 146 Mass. 338.

When an assessment is levied upon adjacent property to pay the cost of constructing a sewer, it must be confined to the property benefited thereby; otherwise, it may be set aside by the court. State v. Elizabeth, 37 N. J. L. 330; Thomas v. Gain, 35 Mich. 155.

But this objection must be raised by a party aggrieved. One whose land is benefited may not contest the validity of the assessment on the ground that the property of another is assessed although not benefited. Johnson v. Duer, 115 Mo. 366. The existence of a private sewer is no defense to an assessment for a public one, either in whole or part. Sargent v. New Haven, 62 Conn. 510; St. Joseph v. Owen, 110 Mo. 445.

All the property benefited should be included in the assessment, otherwise its enforcement may be restrained. Kennedy v. Troy, 14 Hun (N. Y.) 308; State v. Union, 53 N. J. L. 67.

"In the case of sewers it is very common to provide that the cost shall in part be a general levy of the municipality, and in part be collected by special assessment. Perhaps more often than in the case of any other local improvement, it is just that such a division of the burden should be made. The lands on the line of a sewer do not usually receive all the special benefit." Cooley on Taxation (2d ed.), p. 619.

In Colorado, the building of sewers is to be held to fall within the domain of police regulation, and they are therefore properly built by local assessments. Keese v. Denver, 10 Colo. 112; Pueblo v. Robinson, 12 Colo. 593.

In Hungerford v. Hartford, 39 Conn. 279, it was held that a sewer might be constructed in part of a street of a size larger than was necessary for the accommodation of the land bordering on that part of the street, such size being adopted so as to allow a future extension through the whole street, and the entire cost assessed upon the land-owners on that part of the street through which the sewer was made.

In Massachusetts, the assessment by a city under Gen. Sts., ch. 48, § 4, of the benefit to an estate from which land is taken for the construction of a common sewer, includes such benefits only as are derived in common with the other estates drained thereby, and the peculiar benefit which is derived by the release of the owner's land from the maintenance of an old sewer for the convenience of the adjoining estates may be set off by the city in the assessment of the owner's damages for the taking of his land. French v. Lowell, 117 Mass. 363.

In State v. Jersey City, 30 N. J. L. 148, it was held that the water commissioners of Jersey City are authorized to execute the plan of sewerage adopted by them, with such changes or alterations as may be found convenient and necessary in the progress of the work. If the general plan contemplated the use of an old sewer, the commissioners, if they see fit, may abandon that part of the plan and construct a new sewer in the place of the old one. In this they are the sole judges, and having acted thereon, the court has no authority to review their decision.

It is no objection to an assessment for building a sewer, that the ground through which it is laid is not a regularly laid out street. If the commissioners lay it through private property and an assessment is made before an appraisal of the property, the assessment will not be invalid. State v. Jersey City, 29 N. J. L. 441.

Nor is it any objection that water mains have not yet been laid along the street, as even without them, the sewer would be of some benefit. Walker v. Aurora, 140 Ill. 402.

In Fort Scott v. Kaufman (Kan. 1890), 24 Pac. Rep. 64, it was held that under Kansas statutes 1889, p. 834, which provides that the cost of constructing sewers in cities of the second class shall be assessed against the lots contained in the district in which the same are situated, the cost of constructing a discharge sewer situated wholly outside the district could not be assessed against the lots and pieces of ground in the district, though it was constructed and used for the sole purpose of a discharge for lateral sewers in such district. But see State v. Union, 53 N. J. L. 67, where it appeared that the discharge sewer was in the district.

Where land under water is granted by the state, and such land being at the mouth of a sewer is filled in by the grantee, an extension of the sewer, thereby rendered necessary, amounts to a construction and cannot be classified as repairs, and must be paid for by an assessment upon the property benefited. Cleveland v. Yonkers (Supreme Ct.), 4 N. Y. Supp. 84.

Where a charter authorizes a city to construct sewers, and by assessments, to pay therefor upon the property benefited, an assessment cannot be levied to pay for diverting a stream from its natural course into the sewer as an independent enterprise. But if in the judgment of the municipal authorities, it is necessary for the proper drainage of the city that the stream be so diverted, and if the property relieved by the sewer of the waters of the stream, receive thereby greater benefits than the adjacent property, the assessment against it may be proportionately greater. Sherwood v. Duluth, 40 Minn. 22.

In England, the construction and repairing of sewers is done at the expense of the property benefited. Soady v. Wilson, 3 Ad. & El. 248; 30 E. C. L. 89; Rex v. Tower Hamlets, 9 B. & C. 517; 17 E. C. L. 433; Hammersmith Bridge Co. v. Overseers, L. R., 6 Q. B. 230. See Emmerson v. Saltmarshe, 7 Ad. & El. 266; 34 E. C. L. 90; *Nether-ton v. The fact that property is benefited is not alone sufficient to warrant an assessment. There should also be an occupier of the property. Neave v. Weather, 3 G. & D. 221; 3 Q. B. 984; 43 E. C. L. 1067; Tracey v. Taylor, 3 Q. B. 966; 43 E. C. L. 1059; 3 G. & D. 14.

Double Taxation.—Where the maintenance of a sewerage system is paid for by special taxation, an assessment for on the ground that their construction is necessary and proper in keeping the streets in good condition.¹

d. DRAINS.—Where large tracts of land are rendered useless to the owners thereof by reason of stagnant water thereon, the construction of drains to carry off such water is generally provided for by special assessments, since the reclamation of the land and the protection of the public health is a public purpose sufficient to justify the levy of a tax, and the special benefits which accrue to the owners authorize this mode of assessment.²

the construction of a particular sewer, upon lands especially benefited thereby, does not constitute double taxation. McChesney v. Hyde Park (Ill. 1891), 28 N. E. Rep. 1102.

Pumping Works Connected with System of Sewerage.—In Drexel v. Lake, 127 Ill. 54, it was held that the charter of the Town of Lake providing that the trustees may construct and maintain drains and sewers at the expense of the real estate benefited thereby, authorizes the trustees to provide by a special assessment for a system by which the sewerage of a portion of the town is conducted to a central reservoir, and thence by a pump into a main drain, it appearing that the topography of the country will not permit of draining by gravitation. In such case, the pumping works are part of the general system of sewerage, and, although the property in the district drained directly by the main sewer without the assistance of the pumping works is not benefited by such pumping works itself, yet the sewers and pumping works do not constitute distinct improvements, but the expense of both may be provided for by one assessment.

The whole cost of a discharge sewer should not be assessed upon abutting property. A portion of the cost should be assessed upon property abutting on lateral sewers, which is also benefited by the construction of the discharge sewer. State v. Union, 53 N. J. L. 67; State v. Elizabeth (N. J. 1893), 27 Atl. Rep. 801.

A sewer benefits adjacent property by drainage of surface water as well as by affording pipe connections, and a corner lot is liable to assessments for sewers on two streets. People v. Adams (B'klyn City Ct.), 18 N. Y. Supp. 443.

Assessments for Sewers in Another Town.—The property in one town cannot be specially assessed for an improvement in another and adjoining town. But where no suitable outlet for a sewer can be found in the town making the same, its extension a short distance into another town to a suitable outlet, is not a violation of the rule. Shreve v. Cicero, 129 Ill. 226. See also Maywood County v. Maywood, 140 Ill. 216; Callon v. Jacksonville (Ill. 1893), 35 N. E. Rep. 223.

The legislature has the constitutional power to compel local improvements, which, in its judgment, will promote the health of the people, and abate nuisances, and it may open canals for irrigating arid districts, and build levees for draining lands, and impose local

c. LEVEES AND DIKES.—The same public considerations which authorize the draining of swamps and marshes at the expense of the owners, warrant also the construction of dikes and levees to prevent the inundation of low lands, and the levying of assessments upon the land benefited, to pay the cost thereof.¹

assessments to pay for such works. Hagar v. Yolo County, 47 Cal. 222.

The draining of marshes and ponds for the promotion of public health, is regarded as a public object for the furtherance of which taxes may be assessed; but the draining of farms to render them more productive is not such an object, and a corporation organized for that purpose could not levy and collect a tax. Anderson v. Kerns Draining Co., 14 Ind. 199.

But reclaiming a district from inundation, or from a swampy condition, is such a public purpose as will warrant special assessments on the land benefited. Rutherford v. Maynes, 97 Pa. St. 78; Egyptian Levee Co. v. Hardin, 27 Mo. 495; Head v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co., 113 U. S. 9. And the same is true of irrigating arid lands. Turlock Irrigation Dist. v. Williams, 76 Cal. 360.

In Head v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co., 113 U. S. 9, Gray, J., said: "The statutes which have long existed in many states, authorizing the majority of owners in severalty of adjacent meadow or swamp lands, to have commissioners appointed to drain and improve the whole tract by cutting ditches or otherwise, and to assess and levy the amount of the expense upon all the proprietors in proportion to the benefits received, have been often upheld, independently of any effect upon the public health, as reasonable regulations for the general advantage of those who are treated for this purpose as owners of a common property."

The provision of Illinois const., art. 4, § 31, and of the statute of 1885 (Laws 1885, p. 77), that drainage districts shall be formed only for "agricultural or sanitary purposes," does not require that lands must be specially benefited for agricultural or sanitary purposes, before they may be assessed for drainage purposes; and special assessments may be levied upon other lands—e. g., highways—if they are benefited by the construction of the drains. Com'rs of Highways v. Drainage Com'rs, 127 Ill. 581; 28 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 333.

But in order to make a valid assessment for drainage, the public must be concerned. Thus, in People v. Saginaw County, 26 Mich. 22, it was held that even the owner of the land benefited cannot be taxed to improve a drain, unless public considerations are involved.

Under a grant of power to drain lands for public health, at the expense of those benefited, an assessment will not be sustained, the greater part of which was the filling in of lands. Matter of Van Buren, 79 N. Y. 384.

While such drains are of public utility, assessments for their construction are not enforced on the ground of public benefits. The right to impose such assessments is founded upon the benefits which the land assessed is supposed to receive from the drain. Heick v. Voight, 110 Ind. 284; Lipes v. Hand, 104 Ind. 503.

In Weeks v. Milwaukee, 10 Wis. 242, it appeared that the city had so constructed its streets as to cause surface water to accumulate on the plaintiff's lot and become a nuisance. Upon the plaintiff's refusal to abate the same, the city did it, and assessed the cost upon the lot. At the plaintiff's suit, the city was enjoined from enforcing the assessment, on the ground that it had no right to create a nuisance and tax the plaintiff for abating the same.

But in Watkins v. Milwaukee, 55 Wis. 335, it appeared that the city had caused a similar nuisance by raising the grade of a street without providing proper drainage, and, upon the refusal of the lot owner to abate it, did so itself by filling the lot, and assessed the cost upon the property. The court refused to enjoin the city from enforcing the assessment, on the ground that it did not appear in the complaint that the plaintiff had not been benefited to the amount of the assessment by raising the street and filling the lot.

f. PARKS.—Parks, open squares, and boulevards in cities, whether advantageous to the public for recreation, health, or business, are public improvements, for the cost of which local assessments may be levied upon property peculiarly benefited thereby.¹

g. WATER PIPES.—The expense of laying water pipes in streets is usually met by general taxation, or borne by private corporations organized for the purpose; but when the work is undertaken as a public enterprise, local assessments may be levied on the real property specially benefited thereby.²

In State v. Clinton, 26 La. Ann. 561, it is said that the construction of levees in Louisiana cannot be called a local work, but even should such work be local in its character, there is no prohibition against the General Assembly authorizing local improvements to be made, and providing for payment therefor either by general taxation or local assessments. See also State v. Maginnis, 26 La. Ann. 558; Levee Dist. v. Huber, 57 Cal. 41.

The grant of power to drain will not include power to construct a levee. Updike v. Wright, 81 Ill. 49.

In Boro v. Phillips County, 4 Dill. (U. S.) 216, Caldwell, J., said that the authority of the state to impose a special assessment for this purpose, on the lands benefited, is found in the police power.

U. S.*, 147 U. S. 282.

Property which can be used only for a purpose which precludes its being specially benefited by an adjoining park, should not be assessed; for example, property of a water company used only for a site for a reservoir, Owners of Ground v. Albany, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 377; and land used only for railway purposes. Matter of Central Park Com'rs, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 286.

But if railway property is specially benefited, it may be assessed for park and boulevard purposes. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. People, 120 Ill. 104.

An act of the legislature creating a park district of two or more towns, and enabling the corporate authorities thereof to issue bonds, levy local assessments, etc., for park purposes, is not invalid because it vests such corporate power in a board of park commissioners. When the act is adopted by a majority vote of the several towns included, such board becomes, for such purposes, the corporate authority of all, and may levy local assessments on the property benefited by the improvement. People v. Brislin, 80 Ill. 423; Dunham v. People, 96 Ill. 331; Cornell v. People, 107 Ill. 381.

Lands outside of the city limits may not be assessed for the establishment and maintenance of a city park. State v. Leffingwell, 54 Mo. 458; Matter of Prospect Park, 60 N. Y. 398.

And in State v. Leffingwell, 54 Mo. 458, it was further held that a lot owner has no proprietary interest or easement in a park on which his lot fronts, such as he has in an adjoining street, and that the doctrine which justifies local assessments upon adjoining property for benefits, has no application at all to public parks.

2. Water Pipes.—Allen v. Drew, 44 Vt. 174. In Allentown v. Henry, 73 Pa. St. 404, the court, by Mercur, J., said: "The tax is local, as it is imposed upon those dwelling houses only situate on the lines of the water pipes. The benefits are local, as the use of the water must necessarily be mostly restricted to the benefit of the property on those lines, both for domestic purposes and the extinguishment of fires. The effect of supplying those streets with water is to enhance the value of the dwelling houses thereon. The maintenance of the pipes, and the supplying of water, are necessarily a continuing expense, and this tax is evidently designed to defray those expenses." See Northern Liberties v. St. John's Church, 13 Pa. St. 104; Northern Liberties v. Swain, 13 Pa. St. 113; Jones v. Water Com'rs, 34 Mich. 273; Philadelphia v. McCalmont, 6 Phila. (Pa.) 543; Ricketts v. Hyde Park, 85 Ill. 110.

h. MISCELLANEOUS CASES.—In one state a tax levied only upon land for the purpose of constructing fences around a whole township is regarded as a local assessment, and made with reference to special benefits derived by the property from the expenditure.¹ So the sweeping and sprinkling of streets is classed among local improvements for which assessments may be levied.² Again, local assessments have been sustained which were made on all lands within a specified distance from a turnpike, to cover the expense of its construction.³ So, also, it has been held competent to provide by local assessments for the construction of a bridge in a city;⁴ and for the improvement of highways by both land and water;⁵ but not for the improvement of a city market.⁶ And it seems that the expense of lighting streets may be met by assessments on the property specially benefited, although this is usually done by general taxation.⁷

In Baker v. Gartside, 86 Pa. St. 498, it was held that the owner of a corner lot who had petitioned for the use of water, and paid for the pipe along the front of his property, could not be assessed for a pipe afterwards laid along the side of his lot.

A statute authorizing the assessment of arbitrary amounts upon vacant lots and upon lots with buildings thereon in which water is not taken, if the same are situated on streets in which water pipes are laid, is invalid, as authorizing special assessments without reference to benefits. *State v. And such tax may, under statutory authority, be collected by distress and sale of the personal property of those who should pay it. Hazzard v. Heacock, 39 Ind. 172.

But in Pennsylvania, it has been held that assessments for this purpose are unauthorized, and that the improvement of highways by local assessments should be confined to densely populated districts, such as cities and villages. In re Washington Avenue, 69 Pa. St. 352.

4. In Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. East St. Louis, 134 Ill. 656, it was held competent to provide for the construction of a viaduct over a railroad track and a creek, by local assessments. To the same effect are State v. Ramsey County Dist. Ct., 33 Minn. 295; State v. Ensign (Minn. 1893), 56 N. W. Rep. 41.

But in Bloomington v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 134 Ill. 451, it was held that the city council might not provide, by local assessments, for the construction of a railroad bridge across a street.

And in Re Saw Mill Run Bridge, 85 Pa. St. 163, it was held that the cost of a bridge which is part of the public highway within the city limits, might not be met by local assessments; and that such improvement was for the benefit of the general public, rather than of those whose lands were adjacent thereto.

5. Apportionment—a. IN GENERAL.—The power of levying taxes for assessments includes the power of apportioning them, and therefore the question as to how the expenses of local improvements shall be defrayed, whether wholly by funds of the general treasury, or partly thereby, and partly by the property owners in the vicinity of the improvement, or wholly by the latter, is, in the absence of constitutional restriction, one of legislative discretion.¹ If either of the last two modes is prescribed, it is essential to determine what property is so benefited by the improvement as to render it liable to assessment, and such property constitutes what is termed the taxing district. These districts may be fixed upon in the first place by the legislature of the state itself, or by the legislative body of a municipality, whose action in such case is conclusive;² and it is only in very rare instances, as where it clearly appears that the improvement confers no benefit upon the property in the district over and above the general benefit conferred on

In People v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 419, it is said: "It must be conceded that the power of taxation and of apportioning taxation, or of assigning to each individual his share of the burden, is vested exclusively in the legislature, unless this power is limited or restrained by some constitutional provision. The power of taxing and the power of apportioning taxation, are identical and inseparable. Taxes cannot be made without apportionment, and the power of apportionment is therefore unlimited, unless it is restrained as a part of the power of taxation."

In Louisiana, the owners of property benefited, are required to pay a portion of the cost of the improvements in front of their property, and the municipality to pay the residue. Municipality No. 2 v. Dunn, 10 La. Ann. 57. See also for other cases where a similar apportionment was held proper, Matter of Turfer, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 46; Chicago v. Larned, 34 Ill. 203; St. John v. East St. Louis, 50 Ill. 92.

Where a statute provides for the appointment of commissioners who shall fix the relative amount of the cost of an improvement, to be borne respectively by the municipality and the owners of property benefited, their action in that regard is conclusive. Walters v. Lake, 129 Ill. 23, citing Fagan v. Chicago, 84 Ill. 227; Bigelow v. Chicago, 90 Ill. 49; Sterling v. Galt, 117 Ill. 11.

Sewers.—As to apportionment of assessment in the case of sewers, Judge Cooley in his valuable work on Taxation (2d ed.), ch. 20, p. 619, says: "In the case of sewers, it is very common to provide that the cost shall in part be a general levy on the municipality, and in part be collected by special assessment. Perhaps more often than in the case of any other local improvement, it is just that such a division of the burden should be made. The lands on the line of the sewer do not usually receive all the special benefits, and therefore should not pay for all the cost, and when the district is extended to embrace other land, there is imminent danger of doing injustice by extending it too far."

Where an assessment for the expense of constructing a sewer, made upon the basis that the property benefited should pay one-half of such expense, was declared invalid by the city council, a subsequent assessment, on the basis that the property benefited should pay two-thirds of such expense, and exempting those who had fully paid their former assessment, is unequal and void. White v. Saginaw, 67 Mich. 33.

Rep. 198; Philadelphia v. Field, 58 Pa. St. 320; Teegarden v. Racine, 56 Wis. 545; Dickson v. Racine, 61 Wis. 545.

If the taxing district is fixed by the city council, the commissioners of assessment must assess all the property within such district, and must assess it by the same rule of apportionment. Ellwood v. Rochester, 122 N. Y. 229.

"When the determination of the lands to be benefited is intrusted to commissioners, the owners may be entitled to notice and hearing upon the question whether their lands are benefited, and how much. But the legislature has the power to determine, by the statute imposing the tax, what lands, which might be benefited by the improvement, are in fact benefited; and if it does so, its determination is conclusive upon the owners and the courts, and the owners have no right to be heard upon the question whether their lands are benefited or not, but only upon the validity of the assessment, and its apportionment among the different parcels of the class which the legislature has conclusively determined to be benefited. In determining what lands are benefited by the improvement, the legislature may avail itself of such information as it deems sufficient, either through investigations by its committees, or by adopting as its own, the estimates or conclusions of others, whether those estimates or conclusions previously had or had not any legal sanction." Gray, J., in Merchant v. Spencer, 125 U. S. 345, aff'g 100 N. Y. 505.

Construction of Statutes—Assessment to Center of Block.—In Parker v. Atchison, 48 Kan. 574, it was held that in assessing the cost of paving and curbing a street, the assessments must be made on all the lots to the center of the block on either side of said street, the distance to be improved. See also Blair v. Atchison, 40 Kan. 353; Ottawa v. Burney, 10 Kan. 270.

It is not necessary that a lot should abut upon the street to be paved and curbed, in order to make it subject to taxation for such improvements, when it is provided by statute that the cost of the improvement shall be assessed upon all property to the center of the block on either side of the street. It is sufficient that the lot lies in that half of the block next to the street paved and curbed. Olsson v. Topeka, 42 Kan. 709.

For other cases upholding assessments upon property abutting on the street improved, see Ray v. Jeffersonville, 90 Ind. 567; Little Rock v. Katzenstein, 52 Ark. 107; Guild v. Chicago, 82 Ill. 472; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. East St. Louis, 134 Ill. 556; Lansing v. Lincoln, 32 Neb. 457. But in St. Louis v. Juppier (Mo. 1887), 8 West. Rep. 245, such an assessment was declared invalid.

Assessment of Unplatted Lands.—Under the Indiana Acts 1885, p. 207, relating to the improvement of streets and alleys, the power to assess to a distance of one hundred and fifty feet back from the line of the improvement can be exercised only where there is a tract of unplatted land extending back that distance. The lands included in a public highway, on which the unplatted tract abuts, cannot be assessed for the improvement, neither can the highway be crossed, and tracts of land lying beyond it be assessed for such improvement. Frankfort v. State, 128 Ind. 438.

A city charter providing that the cost of street improvements shall be assessed upon the lots and parcels of land having a frontage upon the improved street, ratable according to the valuation of each, allows assessments only in such parts of the city as have been platted into lots and parcels extending back a uniform distance from the street. Howell v. Tacoma, 3 Wash. 711.

Where land within the limits of a municipal corporation is increased in value by the construction of a sewer, it is subject to a special assessment to defray the cost thereof, although it is not divided into lots or blocks, and is used merely for farming purposes. Leitch v. La Grange, 138 Ill. 291.

It is apparent that in an assessment by frontage to pay for a street improvement, the assessment district where the abutting lots are all subdivided and numbered, consists of the lots so abutting on the improvement; and, if unplatted land as well as subdivided and numbered lots abut upon the street, then such lots, and the front of such unplatted land to the usual depth of the lots, constitute the assessment district, the community at large, or in cases of gross inequality, that the courts will interfere.¹ In the exercise of this discretion, it seems and no assessment or charge can be made on lots or lands outside of or beyond the limits of the district thus defined. Griswold v. Pelton, 34 Ohio St. 482; Cooper v. Nevin (Ky. 1890), 13 S. W. Rep. 841.

Power Conferred Upon Municipal Bodies.—"The whole subject of taxing districts belongs to the legislature; so much is unquestionable. The authority may be exercised directly, or, in the case of local taxes, it may be left to local boards or bodies." Cooley on Taxation (2d ed.), ch. 20, p. 640; Hoyt v. East Saginaw, 19 Mich. 39; Davies v. Saginaw, 87 Mich. 439; Teegarden v. Racine, 56 Wis. 545; Meggett v. Eau Claire, 81 Wis. 326; Piper's Appeal, 32 Cal. 530; Rogers v. St. Paul, 22 Minn. 494; Grimmell v. Des Moines, 57 Iowa 144; State v. Board of Public Works, 27 Minn. 442; Carpenter v. St. Paul, 23 Minn. 232; Kansas City v. Baird, 98 Mo. 215.

A charter which authorizes a city to grade and improve streets whenever the council "may deem such improvements necessary for the public interest," part of the cost of such improvement being borne by the property owners, vests in the council the legislative power to determine whether an improvement will be for the public interest, and also to determine whether it will be of such benefit to property fronting on the street as will justify the imposition of part of the expense on the owners of such property. Adams v. Fisher, 75 Tex. 657.

An order that the expense shall be assessed upon real estate abutting or adjoining a street to be excavated, graded, and paved, is not a sufficient designation of a taxing district, when the street extends a considerable distance on either side of the portion to be improved. Whitney v. Hudson, 69 Mich. 189.

The charter of a city provided that for street paving purposes "the lots fronting on the street shall constitute one local assessment district, unless the common council shall subdivide it." It was held that if a resolution of the council declaring that such lots shall constitute one district was necessary at all, it was not fatally defective in not excepting the cost of paving the intersections of the streets from the purposes of the assessment, since the charter also provided that that should be done by the city. Beniteau v. Detroit, 41 Mich. 116.

The action of a city council in including property in an improvement district, is conclusive of the fact that it is adjoining the locality to be affected, except when attacked for fraud or demonstrable mistake. Little Rock v. Katzenstein, 52 Ark. 107.

Time of Fixing District.—In Eyeraman v. Blackley, 78 Mo. 145, it was held that there is nothing in the charter of the city of St. Louis, which makes it necessary that an assessment district shall be established by ordinance before the board of public improvements can recommend, or the municipal assembly can pass, an ordinance for the construction of a sewer in the city.

1. "This unlimited power to tax necessarily involves the right to designate the property upon which it is to be levied; in other words, to apportion the tax, and except in cases where the proceeding is merely colorable and it is really and substantially an exercise of the right of eminent domain, the judicial tribunals cannot interfere with the legislative discretion, however erroneous it may be." People v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 420.

"The power of taxation implies apportionment. And when the legislature have exercised the right, and made the apportionment, a court should not assume to declare it void, unless the invasion of private right was flagrant and its demonstration clear." Redfield, J., in Allen v. Drew, 44 Vt. 174.

The extent of the assessment district must depend upon the facts of each case; but where, in any case, it is made clearly to appear that through fraud or mistake property is improperly included or excluded, the court may interfere to vacate or set aside an assessment. State v. Ramsey County Dist. Court, 33 Minn. 295.

The action of the legislature, or its duly authorized instrumentalities, in imposing special assessments for local improvements, will not be disturbed by the courts, unless it clearly appears that authority was wanting, or that the prescribed method of assessment contravenes some constitutional principle. The legislature is the primary judge of that several districts may be made for a single work,¹ and in some instances more than one street has been embraced in one district for the purpose of a special assessment.²

In the second place the district, instead of being defined by legislative authority, may be defined by certain local officers, to whom the power is delegated upon some principle indicated by the statute under which they act, usually that of benefits, in which the validity of the assessment. Raleigh v. Peace, 110 N. Car. 32.

Benefit to the owner of the real estate assessed, so far as necessary to be passed upon, as well as the necessity or reasonableness of the improvement, being for the determination of the legislature, is concluded by the act authorizing the assessment, and will not be inquired into by the courts, unless in extraordinary cases presenting a manifest abuse of legislative authority. Such assessments, not being an exercise of the right of eminent domain, do not fall within the constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public purposes without just and adequate compensation. Speer v. Athens, 85 Ga. 49.

Thus, where the city council provides in an ordinance for the paving of a street in a particular district, and imposes a special assessment for that purpose upon the district, and the paving appears from the ordinance to be for the general benefit of the city, and not for the benefit of the particular district, such assessment will be vacated by the court. Baltimore v. Hughes, 1 Gill & J. (Md.) 480; Burns v. Baltimore, 48 Md. 198; In re Washington Avenue, 69 Pa. St. 352.

Again, in Thomas v. Gain, 35 Mich. 155, it was held that, although the legislature has the authority to prescribe the rule for apportioning benefits in levying assessments, the rule adopted must at least be one which it is legally possible may be just and equal as between the parties assessed. Therefore, an assessment levied according to the superficial area of the lots, without regard to actual or probable benefits, or whether such lots are contiguous or not, whether directly benefited or not, or whether city or out lots, was declared unconstitutional and void by the court.

But this may not be done unless the city charter authorizes it. Arnold v. Cambridge, 106 Mass. 352; Mayall v. St. Paul, 30 Minn. 294. See also Rex v. Tower Hamlets, 9 B. & C. 517; 17 E. C. L. 433.

But while there may be objection to an improvement of two streets under one proceeding, and payment therefor by one assessment, a sewer which runs along more than one street and does not branch or separate is but one work and can be built and paid for under one proceeding and by one assessment. Grimmell v. Des Moines, 57 Iowa 144. See Burlington v. Quick, 47 Iowa 222; Kendig v. Knight, 60 Iowa 29.

The right to deal with a public improvement as a whole in making assessments, is determined by its unity, and not simply by the fact that the street through which it extends is called at different points by different names. A resolution declaring the necessity of grading a particular street may properly include branches thereof which surround a space that lies across the way, but which really constitute a part of the thoroughfare. Cuming v. Grand Rapids, 46 Mich. 150.

In Stoddard v. Johnson, 75 Ind. 20, it was held that while the Indiana Act of 1877, section 12, does not authorize the including of more than one improvement in a single petition, still it does not forbid a petition for an improvement, whether it be a single or continuous line or a line with branches, so long as all parts are connected.

Under the provision of the charter of St. Paul, the work of grading, filling, case their determination, in the absence of fraud or mistake, is conclusive.¹ But while this principle of benefits underlies all local assessments, it is not always so expressed in the statute, and in many cases the principle by which the limits of the district are to be ascertained, is indicated by such terms as property "contiguous" or "adjacent" to, "in the vicinity" of, or "adjoining" the proposed improvement, under the assumption, it is presumed, that property falling under such description will be necessarily benefited by the improvement.²

When the question whether the cost of an improvement is to be borne by the property owners has been settled, and the

and bridging on a public street, and also the grading of other streets in connection therewith, may be so connected as to be properly carried on in common, and be prosecuted as one entire improvement, for which a local assessment may be made by the board of public works on property specially benefited thereby. State v. Ramsey County Dist. Ct., 33 Minn. 295.

St. Paul*, 23 Minn. 232; State v. Board of Public Works, 27 Minn. 442; State v. Ramsey County Dist. Ct., 29 Minn. 65.

Where the widening of a street is sought to be made in sections instead of for its entire length, the commissioners appointed to assess the benefits of a particular section may properly confine their assessments of benefits to lots situated upon that part of the street embraced in such particular section of the proposed improvement, and their action in this respect is conclusive as to the limits of the property to be specially benefited. Bigelow v. Chicago, 90 Ill. 49.

Review on Certiorari.—The determination by the assessors as to whether particular property has been benefited by a public improvement cannot be reviewed upon certiorari, except for errors of law. People v. Gilon, 126 N. Y. 147, reversing 58 Hun (N. Y.) 76.

So, objections that the area of assessment is too small, and that the assessors acted on an erroneous principle in making the assessment, are not tenable. These are matters of judgment and are not subject to review by the courts.

Matter of Cruger, 84 N. Y. 619; Matter of Eager, 46 N. Y. 109; Matter of Church Street, 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 455.

And the same is true of the question as to whether or not the property assessed has been benefited. People v. Brooklyn, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 166.

But though considerable discretion must be given to municipal authorities, to fix a taxing district against which the cost of a local improvement shall be assessed, they cannot so exercise such discretion as to confine the taxing district within such small limits as practically to assess the whole cost of the improvement upon one or two persons. Detroit v. Daly, 68 Mich. 503.

Commissioners appointed to assess the benefits to be derived from the improvement of a proposed street, will have no power to assess any part of the benefits upon the ground intended for the street. Leman v. Lake View, 131 Ill. 388.

2. A special assessment may be made upon property benefited by an improvement, whether it is abutting and contiguous to the improvement or not. The question in every case is, Will the property assessed be specially benefited by the proposed improvement? Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. East St. Louis, 134 Ill. 656; McCormick v. Omaha (Neb. 1893), 56 N. W. Rep. 626.

The word "contiguous," as used in statutes and municipal charters in reference to property to be assessed, is used in its popular sense, and means in actual or close contact, touching, adjacent, or near. If the improvement is of a street or sidewalk, the contiguous property is such as abuts upon the street or sidewalk, or is bounded by the street. Adams County v. Quincy, 130 Ill. 579.

Property Adjoining the Locality to be Affected.—"Property adjoining the locality to be affected," is any property adjoining or near the improvement, which is physically affected, or the value of which is commercially affected, directly by the improvement, to a degree in excess of the effect upon the property in the city generally. Little Rock v. Katzenstein, 52 Ark. 107.

Lots facing a public square were assessed for paving an avenue which approaches from the southwest, stops at the southwest corner, and begins again at the northeast corner. If the south line of the avenue were extended through the square, it would touch the block in which the lots are situate at the northwest corner only. It was held that the lots do not adjoin the avenue within the act of Congress of February, 1871, providing for assessments for improving a street on the property adjoining. Johnson v. District of Columbia, 6 Mackey (D. C.) 21.

An act providing for the widening of an avenue and directing the expenses to be assessed upon the adjoining property, only authorizes an assessment upon property contiguous to and abutting on the avenue. Matter of Ward, 52 N. Y. 395, citing Holmes v. Carley, 31 N. Y. 289; Rex v. Hodge, 1 M. & M. 371; Peeverly v. People, 3 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y.) 59.

Where a charter authorizes assessments for the improvement of an alley, upon lands adjacent to or abutting such alley, or which may be specially benefited by the improvement, and a lot so abutting has been divided so that part of it does not abut on the alley, such part is liable to an assessment in proportion to the benefits received. Lansing v. Lincoln, 32 Neb. 457. But the contrary was held in St. Louis v. Juppiet (Mo. 1887), 8 West. Rep. 245.

Property in the Vicinity of Improvement.—The term "vicinity," as used in the Pennsylvania Act of April, 1840, authorizing the extension of a street in the city of Pittsburg and an apportionment of the amount of damage occasioned thereby upon lots in the vicinity of the extension which are benefited, does not denote any particular definite distance from the extension of the street. Extension of Hancock St., 18 Pa. St. 26.

The terms "local" or "vicinity," as used in connection with assessment proceedings, indicate no definite limits, but are usually understood to extend to real property sufficiently near, and so related to the improvement as to be found specially benefited in addition to the general benefits accruing to other property as reported by the proper assessors. State v. Ramsey County Dist. Ct., 33 Minn. 295. In this case it was further held that whether a public improvement can be deemed local in its character, does not depend upon its extent or cost, though these elements ought to be considered; but must depend upon the determination of the city council and board of public works, to whose judgment the matter is committed by the legislature to be determined largely as a question of fact. If it be found that property in the vicinity of the improvement, so situated and related to it as to receive special benefits in the enhancement of its value beyond that of property generally, the improvement may, for the purpose of a special assessment, be deemed local, though the property in the city or ward is also generally benefited.

Property Fronting on the Highway.—In Kendig v. Knight, 60 Iowa 29, it was held that where provision is made for a tax to be assessed upon the land "fronting on the highway" to be improved, only such land can be included as fronts on that part of the highway to be improved. But in Diggins v. Brown, 76 Cal. 318, it was held that the whole length of the district ordered to be improved is subject to assessment, and not simply such property as fronts the portion of the street where the work is done, subject to the provision requiring the cost of work done on one side of a street to be assessed on the property on that side.

A lot is not fronting on a street where it is separated from it by a narrow strip of land. Philadelphia v. Eastwick, 35 Pa. St. 75. But an owner cannot free his land from liability by conveying a narrow strip fronting on the street. State v. North Bergen, 37 N. J. L. 402. See Fass v. Sheehawer, 60 Wis. 525; St. Louis v. Meier, 77 Mo. 13.

Street Intersections.—The expense of improving squares formed at street crossings may be assessed upon the property fronting on the street undergoing improvement. Creighton v. Scott, 14 Ohio St. 438; Motz v. Detroit, 18 Mich. 495; Wolf v. Keokuk, 48 Iowa 132; Schenley v. Com., 36 Pa. St. 29; Matter of Delaware, etc., Canal Co. (Albany County Ct.), 8 N. Y. Supp. 352; Matter of Eager, 46 N. Y. 100; State v. Elizabeth, 30 N. J. L. 365;

district containing the property to be assessed has been defined, the question arises how the assessment is to be apportioned upon the property in the district. As in the case of general taxation, the burden is distributed upon some general rule of equality, so a local assessment should, as nearly as practicable, be imposed equally upon all standing in like relation.¹ And to do this several methods have been employed; viz., according to actual benefits, or according to some "definite standard fixed upon by the legislature itself, and which is applied to estates by a measurement of length, quantity, or value," as frontage, superficial area, etc., the selection of any one of which is entirely within the discretion of the legislature.²

b. BY BENEFITS.—What seems to be the most equitable and just method of attaining this uniformity and equality in the apportionment of local assessments is that by which each piece of property, after being viewed by assessors or commissioners, or other officers appointed for the purpose, is assessed according to the benefits which, in their judgment, such property will receive from the improvement.³

1. Allen v. Drew, 44 Vt. 174; Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 190.

The constitutional requirement of equality in taxation is applicable with respect to legislation authorizing assessments for local improvement, and limits the power of the legislature; but the legislature may exercise its discretion, within prescribed limitations, in framing enactments as to the manner in which assessments shall be levied so as to secure equality of apportionment. State v. Hennepin County Dist. Ct., 33 Minn. 235.

An assessment for improving streets is a tax, and, therefore, must be levied with equality and uniformity. But if it be so levied under a system which apportions it with reference to the number of feet fronting on the improvement, or by any other standard which will approximate equality and uniformity, it is not void. Whiting v. Quackenbush, 54 Cal. 306. See People v. Lynch, 51 Cal. 15; Jaeger v. Burr, 36 Ohio St. 164; Northern Ind. R. Co. v. Connelly, 10 Ohio St. 160; Chicago v. Larned, 34 Ill. 203.

"These local assessments are a species of taxation, and while the principle underlying them is somewhat different from that upon which general taxation for revenue is based, still it is the money of the citizen that the public demands; and whether in those cases the assessment is made on frontage, valuation benefits, or by acres, the burden should be equally borne by all upon whom it is imposed." White v. Saginaw, 67 Mich. 41.

2. It rests within the discretion of the legislature to say upon what principle the assessment on lots fronting on a street to pay for improvements to such street shall be apportioned among the lots. Emery v. San Francisco Gas Co., 28 Cal. 346; King v. Portland, 2 Oregon 146; People v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 419; People v. Lawrence, 41 N. Y. 140; Broadway Baptist Church v. McAtee, 8 Bush (Ky.) 508; Daily v. Swope, 47 Miss. 367; People v. Nearing, 27 N. Y. 308.

It has been held that a statute delegating the power to make local assessments should prescribe a rule for their apportionment; otherwise the statute is unconstitutional and confers no authority to make such assessments at all. Barnes v. Dyer, 56 Vt. 469; State v. Hudson County, 37 N. J. L. 12; State v. Newark, 37 N. J. L. 415; State v. New Brunswick, 38 N. J. L. 190.

In St. John v. East St. Louis, 50 Ill. 92, it was said: "Where an ordinance requires the entire cost of an improvement to be put upon the property fronting thereon, or which directs that such improvements shall be made at the expense of the owners or holders of the real estate benefited, without regard to the actual benefit conferred upon it by the improvement, such ordinance is in violation of the constitutional rule of equality of taxation. The correct rule is to assess each lot for the special benefits it will derive from the improvement, and the residue of the cost should be paid by uniform and equal taxation." See Lee v. Ruggles, 62 Ill. 427.

In Peoria v. Kidder, 26 Ill. 358, Walker, J., said: "Where an improvement of this character is made, the adjacent real estate is thereby enhanced in value, unless it be portions through or over which the street passes, which may sustain injury for which the owners must be compensated. There can, it seems to us, be no more just and reasonable mode of making this compensation than that which the legislature has adopted by assessing it upon those who have received the direct benefit from the improvement in the enhanced value of their real estate over and above any injury they may thereby sustain. And to ascertain and fix the amount that each person deriving benefit by the improvement shall contribute to compensate for the loss sustained by those who are injured, a disinterested tribunal is required to appoint competent and disinterested persons, who, under oath, ascertain and report both the amount of the injury sustained and the benefit derived by each person."

Where the statute providing for the opening of a street in a city declares that to pay the damage of expenses incurred thereby, an assessment shall be levied on the lots benefited "according to the enhanced value of the respective parcels of land as fixed in a report of the board of public works," the assessment must be limited to the increase in value of each lot, caused by the improvement. People v. Austin, 47 Cal. 353.

If it is proposed to assess the whole cost of an improvement on the property benefited, where this rule is in vogue, the record should show that such cost does not exceed the benefits

c. ACCORDING TO FRONTAGE.—By this method of apportionment each lot is assessed according to the ratio which its frontage bears to the whole frontage of property benefited by the improvement, and, under some circumstances, as where all lots on a certain street are of the same character and have the same depth, it seems that no method employed could be more reasonable, but in many instances undoubted hardships will arise.¹

to the whole property included in the taxing district. Adams v. Bay City, 78 Mich. 211, citing Warren v. Grand Haven, 30 Mich. 24, 30; White v. Saginaw, 67 Mich. 40. To the same effect is Passaic v. State, 37 N. J. L. 538.

But a legislative determination of benefits and the property to be assessed is usually regarded as final. See supra, this title, Apportionment—In General.

English Rule.—In England, assessments have generally been laid in proportion to benefits received, estimated according to the yearly value of the lands within the district. Rooke's Case, 5 Rep. 100; *Masters v. Assessments against abutting lots according to frontage, for a street improvement, are not rendered void for inequality by the mere fact that the lands assessed differ somewhat in depth and value, nor because in a compactly

In one state a species of frontage assessment has been upheld by which the entire expense of work opposite a lot is assessed upon such lot alone without any apportionment whatever,¹ but the weight of authority is against such an arbitrary system; and in other jurisdictions it is sustained only in the case of sidewalk improvements, which are made as a rule under the police power.²

built part of the city, there are vacant lots upon the street, which do not receive so much benefit from the improvement as those lots in actual use. Beaumont v. Wilkesbarre, 142 Pa. St. 108.

Under the Pennsylvania acts relating to the grading and paving of streets in the city of Allegheny, a lot owner on an avenue opposite a public common is liable for the costs of grading and paving the whole of the street in front of his lot, and not the half of its width only. McGonigle v. Allegheny, 44 Pa. St. 118.

Under a charter authorizing assessors to assess the expense of a street improvement upon the property which they shall deem more immediately benefited by the improvement, which borders on, or touches the street, an assessment according to the number of feet front owned by each individual is within their discretion. O'Reilly v. Kingston, 114 N. Y. 439. So in Raleigh v. Peace, 110 N. Car. 32; 37 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 360, it was held that though the charter of a city is silent as to the method of apportioning the cost of street improvements on abutting property owners, yet, where a statute provides that the aldermen may cause necessary improvements to be made, and "apportion them equally among the inhabitants by assessments," the city, authorized by its charter to charge abutting owners with the cost of improvements, may apportion them according to the front-foot rule.

Narrow Strip of Land Fronting on Street.—A lot consisting of a long, narrow strip, with a front of several hundred feet upon the street and only 31 feet deep at one end and narrowing to the other, is subject to assessment according to the front-foot rule for the cost of improving the street, although the amount of the assessment is greater than the value of the lot. Harrisburg v. McCormick, 129 Pa. St. 213. See Terry v. Hartford, 39 Conn. 286.

And where the assessment is made by the front-foot rule, evidence tending to show that the result is unequal and unfair on the basis of other rules of assessment is wholly immaterial. Green v. Springfield, 130 Ill. 515.

Corner Lots.—A corner lot fronts on two streets and may be assessed for improvements on both. Des Moines v. Dorr, 31 Iowa 89; Wolf v. Keokuk, 48 Iowa 129; People v. Adams (B'klyn City Ct.), 18 N. Y. Supp. 443; Sands v. Richmond, 31 Gratt. (Va.) 571; Allen v. Krenning, 23 Mo. App. 561; Springfield v. Green, 120 Ill. 269; Wilbur v. Springfield, 123 Ill. 400.

In State v. Passaic, 42 N. J. L. 524, an assessment according to the front-foot rule was set aside, it appearing that the plaintiff's property was assessed one-third of the entire expense of a sidewalk, while he had himself done nearly all the work in front of his own premises.

And where the statute authorizing such assessments directs that they be made according to the quantity of land benefited and the benefits received, the front-foot rule will not be sustained. Clapp v. Hartford, 35 Conn. 77.

Rural Lands.—The frontage rule is sustained in cities and large towns, on the ground that it is a reasonably accurate method of ascertaining benefits; but, when applied to rural lots or farm lands, it is too unfair and extortionate to be sustained. Seely v. Pittsburgh, 82 Pa. St. 360; Kaiser v. Weise, 85 Pa. St. 366; Craig v. Philadelphia, 89 Pa. St. 265; Philadelphia v. Rule, 93 Pa. St. 15; Scranton v. Pennsylvania Coal Co., 105 Pa. St. 445; Cleveland v. Tripp, 13 R. I. 61.

The question as to whether the lands attempted to be assessed are rural or urban, depends upon the conditions existing at the time the improvement is made, not at the time when the ordinance authorizing it was enacted. Keith v. Philadelphia, 126 Pa. St. 575.

1. In Warren v. Henly, 31 Iowa 31, the court admitted, however, that the reasoning of the case was not sustained by the authority at hand. See also Muscatine v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. (Iowa, 1893), 55 N. W. Rep. 100.

2. Williams v. Detroit, 2 Mich. 560;

d. ACCORDING TO AREA.—The practice of basing assessments upon real estate according to its superficial area or to the number of acres it contains, is confined chiefly to cases of levee and drainage assessments,¹ though the principle has been applied occasionally to street improvements in cities and towns, as a reasonable standard of apportionment.²

e. ACCORDING TO VALUE.—Another method of apportionment is to assess against each lot benefited by an improvement a sum which bears the same ratio to the whole amount to be assessed that the value of such lot bears to the aggregate value of all the property to be assessed.³ In employing this method of apportionment it is proper to exclude from the valuation of the property the worth of any improvements that may be on it.⁴

"It is now almost universally denied that an owner can be compelled to pay the whole cost of the improvement of the street in front of his lot. In such case his tax would neither be increased nor diminished by the assessment upon his neighbors, and each particular lot would arbitrarily be made a taxing district, and charged with the whole expenditure thereon." 6. Property Assessable—a. IN GENERAL.—The principle upon which depends the right to levy local assessments is that of benefits received; accordingly the statutes generally provide for assessing all property to be benefited by the improvement contemplated, without regard to its ownership, whether of individuals or private corporations, or to the purpose or use for which it is held, or to which it is devoted; the ordinary rule relating to exemption from taxation generally not being applicable to local assessments.¹ Such property must be real and not personal;² and where the legislature by special enactment, or by the terms of a city charter, designates particularly the property to be assessed, only such property is liable, the municipal authorities having no jurisdiction to assess any other, in pursuance of the general rule that statutes in regard to local assessments must be strictly construed.³

b. PUBLIC PROPERTY.—As a rule, public property used for governmental purposes is not subject to assessment for local improvements unless made so by statute, either expressly, or by necessary implication.⁴

The assessment upon an estate for the construction of a sewer by a city, is to be made according to the value of the land exclusive of buildings; and, in determining the amount of such assessment, the relative benefit which each estate on the line of the sewer may receive is immaterial. Snow v. Fitchburg, 136 Mass. 183.

1. See supra, this title, Principle of the Imposition; Atlanta v. First Presbyterian Church, 86 Ga. 730.

As to the rule that exemption of property of churches, cemeteries, charitable institutions, and the like, from taxation, generally does not include local assessments, see supra, this title, Exemptions.

In Maryland, it has been held that the legislature has the constitutional power to authorize benefits to be assessed and levied by the mayor and city council, upon property adjacent to, as well as within, the limits of a city. Brooks v. Baltimore, 48 Md. 265.

In Wright v. Boston, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 233, it was held that vacant lots on a street in which a common sewer has been laid in pursuance of the by-laws of the city, are properly assessed for their proportion of the cost thereof, as well as lots that are built upon.

An incorporated company who owns a lot in the vicinity of a public improvement, are not liable to assessments for benefit, if, by the terms of the grant whereby the lot is held, it can be appropriated only to a specific purpose, which by possibility cannot be rendered more advantageous by the opening of a street in its neighborhood; but the company may be assessed for benefit to adjoining grounds not thus restricted. Owners of Ground v. Albany, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 375.

2. See infra, this title, Personal Liability.

3. Balf v. Lammers, 109 Ind. 347.

Thus, where a statute authorizes cities to levy an assessment upon ground abutting on the improvement, to a distance of fifty feet back from the front line, no more can be affected. Niklaus v. Conkling, 118 Ind. 289. See supra, this title, Construction of Statutes.

4. Public Property.—Worcester County v. Worcester, 116 Mass. 193; State v. Hartford, 50 Conn. 89; State v. Hotaling, 44 N. J. L. 347; Peck County Sav. Bank v. State, 69 Iowa 24; Abercrombie v. Ely, 60 Mo. 23; Clinton v. Henry County, 115 Mo. 557.

In People v. Austin, 47 Cal. 353, an assessment was attacked because certain lots belonging to the United States, the state of California, and the city of San Francisco, respectively, were within the assessment district, but not assessed. It was held that the objection was untenable.

In Hassan v. Rochester, 67 N. Y. 528, it was held that the city was authorized by statute to assess the property of the state, and, having failed to do so, the enforcement of an assessment

c. PROPERTY OF RAILROADS.—As a rule, real estate owned by railroad companies and used as sites for stations and for other like purposes, is assessable for local improvements, since it generally receives direct benefits from such improvements.¹ But whether the roadbed or right of way may be assessed depends upon whether it will be especially benefited by the improvement, considering always the purposes for which such property is, or may was enjoined at the suit of other property owners.

In Illinois, the court puts the exemption of the property of counties, cities, etc., from taxation, in the same class with statutory exemptions, and denies in either case the applicability of the rule to local assessments. Thus, it has been held that a county courthouse is not exempt from local assessments, unless expressly made so by statute. McLean County v. Bloomington, 103 Ill. 209; Adams County v. Quincy, 130 Ill. 566.

So the real estate of a city should be assessed. Scammon v. Chicago, 42 Ill. 192. But it may not be advertised and sold like the property of individuals. The amount of the assessment should be paid out of the general fund. Taylor v. People, 66 Ill. 322.

The property of the United States used for a custom-house and post office, may not be assessed. Fagan v. Chicago, 84 Ill. 227.

As to whether such property as public-school buildings, public hospitals, etc., are used for governmental purposes within the meaning of the rule, there is a conflict of authority. It has been held that public-school property is exempt from such assessments. Hartford v. West Middle Dist., 45 Conn. 462; Toledo v. Board of Education, 48 Ohio St. 83; Board of Improvements v. School Dist. (Ark. 1892), 19 S. W. Rep. 969; Abercrombie v. Ely, 60 Mo. 23, where it appeared that the title to the schoolhouse was in the state board of education.

So congressional township lands for the use of public schools may not be assessed for the construction of public drains or ditches. Edgerton v. Huntington School Tp., 126 Ind. 261; People v. School Trustees, 118 Ill. 52. But in St. Louis Public Schools v. St. Louis, 26 Mo. 468; Sioux City v. Independent School Dist., 55 Iowa 150, it was held that school property is subject to assessment.

In Baltimore County v. Maryland Hospital, 62 Md. 127, it was held that the property on which the state hospital for the insane was situated was exempt from local assessments.

But in Cook County v. Chicago, 103 Ill. 646, it was held that a county hospital was not exempt.

A public park owned by a city should bear a pro rata assessment for public improvements. Matter of Church St., 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 455; Scammon v. Chicago, 42 Ill. 192.

1. Railroad Property.—Mt. Pleasant v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 138 Pa. St. 365; Burlington, etc., R. Co. v. Spearman, 12 Iowa 112; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Chicago (Ill. 1891), 27 N. E. Rep. 926; State v. Newark, 27 N. J. L. 185; Ludlow v. Cincinnati Southern R. Co., 78 Ky. 357.

Such property may be assessed for park or boulevard purposes. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. People, 120 Ill. 104.

In assessing the depot grounds of a company, which are by statute exempt from taxation, it is improper to consider the probable increase of business in consequence of increased facilities of access to the depot. Such an assessment would be a tax on the business of the company, in violation of the exemption. State v. Jersey City, 36 N. J. L. 56.

But all real property of a railroad company, of a character to be benefited by local improvements, is subject to assessments therefor. And such assessments are not in violation of a statutory exemption from taxation, when they are made on a basis of benefits to the property for the purposes for which it is used. State v. Jersey City, 42 N. J. L. 97.

In New York, etc., R. Co. v. New Haven, 42 Conn. 279, it was held that a railroad company in front of whose passenger station and along whose track a street had been paved by the city, was not liable to be assessed for the expense, either on the ground that access to the station was made more easy, or because of the increased value of the land occupied by the railroad for building or other business purposes.

lawfully be used. And upon the determination of the question of benefits, the authorities are not in harmony.¹

But land owned by a railroad company in fee, with no restriction upon its use, and which is occupied only as a place for running off and leaving freight cars, but which is well situated for mechanical and manufacturing purposes, is liable to a city assessment for public improvements. New York, etc., R. Co. v. New Britain, 49 Conn. 40.

1. To the effect that a roadbed is liable to assessments for local improvements, see Northern Ind. R. Co. v. Connelly, 10 Ohio St. 164; Chicago v. Barr, 41 Ill. 306; Peru, etc., R. Co. v. Hanna, 68 Ind. 562; Kuehner v. Freeport, 143 Ill. 92; New York, etc., R. Co. v. Dunkirk, 65 Hun (N. Y.) 494.

In New Jersey, this is true whether the company owns the roadbed in fee, or has only an easement therein. State v. Elizabeth, 37 N. J. L. 330; State v. Jersey City, 42 N. J. L. 97; State v. Passaic, 54 N. J. L. 340.

But where an assessment for local improvements is made upon the railroad company itself, and not upon its roadbed, it is a violation of a statutory exemption from taxation. State v. Newark, 27 N. J. L. 185.

A mere license to run trains over the tracks of another company, is not such an interest in the right of way as will render the licensee liable to local assessments thereon. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. East St. Louis, 134 Ill. 656.

Where the railroad crosses a street, the right of way may be assessed on both sides of the street, for the cost of improving the same. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Mattoon, 141 Ill. 32; Northern Ind. R. Co. v. Connelly, 10 Ohio St. 159. But it may not thus be compelled to bear the whole expense of building a new bridge across a street which is widened for public convenience. Bloomington v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 134 Ill. 451.

In assessing the benefits to a right of way, regard should be had to all the purposes for which the property may lawfully be used, and to those purposes only. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Chicago, 141 Ill. 509.

Drainage Assessments.—The right of way of a railroad company may be assessed for the benefits conferred upon it by the draining of a district through which the track runs. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. East Lake Drainage Dist., 129 Ill. 417.

But in Pennsylvania, it is held that, as a matter of law, such property is not benefited by the improvement of the street. Allegheny City v. Western Pa. R. Co., 138 Pa. St. 375. And it matters not that the company owns the roadbed in fee. Junction R. Co. v. Philadelphia, 88 Pa. St. 424; Philadelphia v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 33 Pa. St. 41. See also New York, etc., R. Co. v. New Haven, 42 Conn. 279; Bridgeport v. New York, etc., R. Co., 36 Conn. 255; Matter of Public Park Com'rs, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 304; Muscantine v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. (Iowa, 1893), 55 N. W. Rep. 100.

Where an act of the legislature authorizes assessments only upon contiguous property abutting on the street to be improved, a roadbed in such street does not abut upon the street and may not be assessed. South Park Com'rs v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 107 Ill. 105; O'Reilly v. Kingston, 114 N. Y. 439; Koons v. Lucas, 52 Iowa 177.

In England, it has been held that, where the railroad line runs through a deep cutting, over which the street runs upon a bridge, the company is not liable, as the owner of abutting property, to assessments for the improvement of the street. London, etc., R. Co. v. St. Giles, L. R., 4 Exch. Div. 239. But where a railroad crosses a street above grade upon buttresses, and a small space of ground remains around each buttress on either side of the highway, this is subject to assessment for the improvement of the highway as abutting land. Higgins v. Harding, L. R., 8 Q. B. 7. Where a railway runs alongside of a street, but in a cutting, and is separated from it by a stone wall, it is held to be abutting property and liable to assessment for improvement of the highway. London, etc., R. Co. v. St. Pancras, 17 L. T. N. S. 654. A railroad, crossing a street by a deep cutting, over which the street is carried by a bridge, has been held not to be an abutting owner so as to be liable to an assessment for paving the street. Great Eastern R. Co. v. Hackney Board of Works, 8 App. Cas. 687; 13 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 404, reversing 9 Q. B. D. 412.

It has been held that street railways may be assessed for paving streets upon which their tracks are laid. Appeal of North Beach, etc., R. Co., 32 Cal. 499; New Haven v. Fairhaven, etc., R. Co., 38 Conn. 422.

In Mobile v. Royal St. R. Co., 45 Ala. 322, an assessment against a street railway was held void as in violation of the provision of the state constitution requiring uniformity of taxation. But this case was overruled in Birmingham v. Klein, 89 Ala. 461.

A failure to assess a portion of the cost of a street improvement upon a street railway, the tracks of which run over the street improved, is not erroneous, in the absence of evidence that the real estate of the company is peculiarly benefited. Benefits to the franchise should not be considered. State v. Duryea, 45 N. J. L. 258; Davis v. Newark, 54 N. J. L. 144.

Where a street railway company is required to pave and keep in repair the portion of the street on which its tracks are laid, and after notice fails to do so, and permits the public authorities, without objection, to make the improvement, it will be estopped to contest an assessment laid upon its roadbed for its proportionate amount of the expense, and the same may be recovered in an action of assumpsit. New Haven v. Fairhaven, etc., R. Co., 38 Conn. 422; Schmidt v. Market St., etc., R. Co., 90 Cal. 37; District of Columbia v. Washington, etc., R. Co., 1 Mackey (D. C.) 361; Columbus v. Street R. Co., 45 Ohio St. 98.

But in such case it has been held that if the city does not rely upon the railway company's contract to pave and repair the street, but proceeds under its charter power to make an assessment upon the road, such assessment must be made in accordance with the benefits conferred. The actual cost of the work is not conclusive, in such proceedings, of the amount to be assessed. Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Ansonia, 61 Conn. 76. But if the charter of the company so provides, the cost of the work may be collected in the manner provided for the collection of other street assessments. Schmidt v. Market St., etc., R. Co., 90 Cal. 37.

A street railway company which is required to pave and keep in repair that part of the street which it uses, is not liable to special assessments for improving the rest of the street. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Chicago (Ill. 1891), 27 N. E. Rep. 926; Parmelee v. Chicago, 60 Ill. 267; Chicago v. Sheldon, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 50.

But the obligation to pave and keep in repair, does not extend to a repaving with new and more costly material. And a failure to assess a street railway for such repaving, will not invalidate an assessment upon abutting property for the cost thereof. Baltimore v. Scharf, 54 Md. 499.

And a charter which authorizes the common council of a city to require street railway companies to repave the portions of the street occupied by their roads, is merely directory, and gives the owners of private property no vested right or claim de jure to compel a company to repave or bear the expense of repaving any portion of the street, when it is not required to do so, by the city council. Gilmore v. Utica, 121 N. Y. 561; 131 N. Y. 26.

In People v. Gilon, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 76, it appeared that the board of assessors of the city of New York failed to assess a street railway for the paving between the tracks, and reported that there was no special benefit to the road. Upon certiorari, the supreme court reversed the proceedings, holding that as a matter of law the road was benefited. This decision was in turn reversed by the court of appeals, where it was held that the question of benefits was one of fact to be determined by the board of assessors, whose decision might not be disturbed on certiorari. People v. Gilon, 126 N. Y. 147, reversing 58 Hun (N. Y.) 76; People v. Gilon, 126 N. Y. 640, reversing 58 Hun (N. Y.) 603.

In Minnesota, it has been held that under the charter of a railroad company, which exempts its property from all assessments and taxes whatever by the state, or by any county, town, village, or other municipal authority, the property held by it for purposes of its road is not subject to assessment for local improvements. First Division St. Paul, etc., R. Co. v. St. Paul, 21 Minn. 526; St. Paul v. St. Paul, etc., R. Co., 23 Minn. 469.

And it has there been held that the track of a street railway company in a public street, is not real estate within the meaning of a statute conferring the right to levy local assessments upon real estate, and is, therefore, not assessable for the expense of paving a street. State v. Ramsey County Dist. Ct., 31 Minn. 354.

But the correctness of this decision must rest on the peculiar wording of the statute under construction. In New Haven v. Fairhaven, etc., R. Co., 38 Conn. 430, the court said: "The

d. AGRICULTURAL LANDS IN CITIES.—Unplatted suburban lands which, although within the city limits, are vacant or are used only for agricultural or other like purposes, may be assessed for any special benefits which they receive from a city improvement;¹ but rules of apportionment which are just and proper in the densely populated portions of the city may result in great hardship in suburban districts, and it has been held that statutes authorizing apportionments of assessments upon such property by the front-foot rule, are unconstitutional and void.²

7. Assessment Proceedings—a. COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTORY PROVISIONS.—These proceedings differ so widely in the several states, and even in the same state under various charters, that it would be impracticable to attempt more than a statement of the general principles. One of these is that there must be a strict compliance with the provisions of the statute authorizing the assessment. While a reasonable compliance with those regulations designed to secure order, system, and dispatch in proceedings is sufficient, a strict compliance with provisions intended to protect the property owner and to prevent a sacrifice of his property is considered a condition precedent to a valid assessment.³

defendant's property consists in part of rails, sleepers, ties, and spikes, so laid into and attached to the soil in the street where the improvement was made as to become a part of the realty. That property so situated is real estate, has been repeatedly decided. Providence Gas Co. v. Thurber, 2 R. I. 21; Chicago v. Baer, 41 Ill. 306; Appeal of North Beach, etc., R. La Grange, 138 Ill. 291; but farm lands nearly three miles from the improvement, and drained only by surface drainage, may not be assessed for the construction of a city sewer, where no provision is made for the drainage of surface water therefrom into such sewer. Edwards v. Chicago, 140 Ill. 440.

Under a charter authorizing assessments upon lots and parcels of land having a frontage upon an improved street, it has been held that only land which has been platted into parcels extending back a uniform distance from the street may be assessed under the frontage rule. *Howell v. b. DETERMINATION OF NECESSITY.—A usual and important provision of municipal charters and legislative enactments in regard to local assessments is that, before the authorities enter upon the making of improvements, for the expense of which private property is to be assessed, the necessity therefor must be considered and determined by them in their official capacity, and the evidence preserved by proper records.¹ It is not generally requisite that the city ordinance or resolution must state that the improvement is necessary, as such ordinance or resolution, having been enacted by the officers whose duty it is to determine the necessity, is in itself deemed a sufficient declaration of the fact,² but if the statute expressly requires that the council shall declare its determination that the necessity exists, then such declaration

In Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Edgerton, 125 Ind. 455, it is held that a statute, providing that when municipalities shall deem it necessary to make a street improvement, the council or trustees shall declare by resolution the necessity therefor and give two weeks' publication, telling the time and place where the property owners can object, does not require two separate resolutions, one declaring the necessity for the improvement, and a second for the construction of the improvement, after a hearing of the property owners. The statute is substantially complied with by a notice to the property owners after the passage of the resolution.

In Minnesota, it is held that the legislature may direct local improvements of a public nature, to be made, and the expense thereof to be levied upon the particular tax district interested, without any intermediate proceedings to determine the necessity therefor. Guilder v. Otsego, 20 Minn. 74; Hennepin County v. Bartleson, 37 Minn. 343.

An order of the mayor and aldermen of the city of Boston, directing a main drain to be laid, upon a petition setting forth that the safety and convenience of the city require such drain, is a sufficient adjudication of the ne-of the grounds on which it proceeds must be made before it can order the improvement.¹

c. PETITION OF PROPERTY OWNERS.—In some cases, statutes conferring the power to make local improvements permit the city council to proceed by the unanimous vote, or by the vote of a designated majority, without the consent of the property owners, or to proceed simply by a majority vote, upon the petition of the owners of a certain proportion of the property assessable for the proposed improvement.² Frequently, however, the power to act is made entirely dependent upon such petition. And where this cessity therefor under the city by-laws. Wright v. Boston, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 233.

The necessity for a local improvement, and the assessment of property owners according to the benefits conferred, are implied, whenever such an improvement is undertaken, and the statute or ordinance relative thereto need not state that the contemplated improvement is necessary, or that the benefits are conferred. Raleigh v. Peace, 110 N. Car. 32; 32 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 360.

The provision of the Revised Stat. of Ohio, § 2304, that before any improvement is ordered, a resolution declaring its necessity must be passed by the council, is held to apply only to improvements by construction, and not to the appropriation of land for widening a street. Longworth v. Cincinnati, 21 Wkly. Law Bull. 100.

Sufficiency of Resolution Declaring Necessity.—A resolution adopted and published, declaring it necessary to grade, or otherwise improve a public street, must specifically designate the work declared necessary to be done, and the owners of property abutting upon such street will be liable only for the cost of such improvements as are specifically designated in the resolution so adopted and published in the official paper. Mason v. Sioux City (S. Dak. 1892), 51 N. W. Rep. 770.

The declaration of the necessity for a public improvement does not necessarily involve the enumeration of its details, but, although general in its character, covers the doing of whatever is necessary in the course of an improvement of the character designated. Davies v. Saginaw, 87 Mich. 439.

Validity of Statute.—A statute which confers upon drainage commissioners the power to decide, after hearing the parties, whether the public health and welfare will be promoted by the intended work, is not invalid, although no right of appeal from the decision of the commissioners as to the necessity of the improvement, is provided, the legislature being vested with power to determine the necessity of the improvement, or to delegate the exercise of that power to officers or corporations. State v. Stewart, 74 Wis. 620.

The board of town trustees being authorized to make assessments for street improvements on a petition of two-thirds of the owners of adjoining lots, or without a petition, by a two-thirds vote of the board, the fact that there was an insufficient petition will not avoid assessments made by a two-thirds vote. McEneney v. Sullivan, 125 Ind. 407.

Under a statute authorizing local improvements to be made upon the petition of property holders, or by a unanimous vote of the council, where it is averred that the ordinance was passed by a unanimous vote, it is not necessary to allege that there was a petition therefor. Wren v. Indianapolis, 96 Ind. 206.

In Indianapolis v. Mansur, 15 Ind. 112, a petition for the improvement of a certain street in the city of Indianapolis was presented to the common council, and the work ordered to be done, two-thirds of the members voting affirmatively. In defending against an assessment, a lot owner alleged that as the proceedings were commenced by a petition from property holders, and a sufficient number of them had not joined in the petition to meet the requirements of the statute, a two-thirds vote of the common council would not make that valid which would otherwise have been invalid. But the court held that two-thirds of the council having voted for the ordinance, it was binding, although the proceedings on the petition may not have conformed to the provisions of the statute. See also Lafayette v. Fowler, 34 Ind. 140.

In making an assessment for an improvement which includes two classes of work, for only one of which a petition is necessary, the record should show that the petition was signed by the requisite number of property owners affected by that part of the work for which such petition is necessary. Lathrop v. Buffalo, 3 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 30.

In Holland v. Baltimore, 11 Md. 186, the city was authorized to pave streets when the proprietors of the majority of the feet of ground fronting on any street, should apply in writing therefor. Supposing that a majority of the proprietors had united in the application, but which afterwards turned out not to be true, in consequence of one of the signers not being, in law, a proprietor the city paved a certain street, and, among others, paved in front of the plaintiff's lot, he not having signed the application. After the work had been done, the city sought to enforce the collection of the amount. Plaintiff applied for an injunction to restrain the sale of his lot to pay the assessment. The court of appeals held: First, that if the requisite majority of owners did not apply, the whole proceeding was null and void; second, that a non-assenting owner might (notwithstanding he did not apply for the writ until after the work was done) have an injunction to prevent the sale of his property to pay the unauthorized assessment.

Under a charter requiring local improvements to be petitioned for by a majority of those whose names appear upon the assessment roll, it is competent for the owners of a part of the land benefited, to petition for the improvement, and consent that the whole expense be assessed on their lands. Baldwin v. Oswego, 1 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 62.

Where it appeared that two or more blocks on each side of a street in San Francisco, had been graded, and that the work of further grading upon the same street had been recommended by the superintendent of streets, and the resolution of intention of the supervisors to do the work had been duly passed and published, it was not necessary that there should be a petition by the land-owners. Spaulding v. Wesson, 84 Cal. 141.

When a charter requires a petition to be signed by persons owning at least one-third of the property to be assessed, before an ordinance providing for a local improvement can be passed, and two petitions were presented, each asking for a main sewer, and one asking for branch sewers also, it was held that as the petitions were united in asking for the construction of the main sewer, a valid ordinance providing therefor could be passed. Works v. Lockport, 28 Hun (N. Y.) 9.

In Fass v. Sheehawer, 60 Wis. 525, it was held that where a petition by residents on a street, is required as a condition precedent to imposing a tax upon

The petition, where it is prescribed by statute, must comply fully with all requirements as to form, number of petitioners,¹ etc., and the fact that it has been made must be proved in the man-property abutting on the line of the street, for improving it, if there are no residents thereon, the same purpose is answered by a petition from the community at large, for whose manifest advantage the improvement would be.

Estoppel.—Where the owner of land which has already been dedicated by him for public use as a street, has united with others in a petition for its adoption as such, he will not be allowed to question the validity of an ordinance levying an assessment for the purpose of operating it. State v. Hudson, 34 N. J. L. 25; Johnson v. Allen, 62 Ind. 57; Burlington v. Gilbert, 31 Iowa 356; 7 Am. Rep. 143; Motz v. Detroit, 18 Mich. 495. See contra, Petition of Sharp, 56 N. Y. 257.

In Quinn v. Paterson, 27 N. J. L. 35, it was held that a petition to city authorities, to curb and pave a street, will not estop a petitioner from showing, in an action of trespass, that such curbing and paving was done outside of the boundaries of the street.

While petitioners to the city council will be estopped in equity to deny the power to grant their petition, yet they will not be estopped to object that the proceedings upon their petition have been conducted in disregard of the law. Steckett v. East Saginaw, 22 Mich. 103. See McLauren v. Grand Forks, 6 Dakota 397; Howell v. Tacoma (Wash. 1892), 29 Pac. Rep. 447.

Persons who have signed a petition for the construction of a drain, who have given a release for the right of way, and who have assented to all the proceedings in laying out, establishing, and constructing the drain, cannot question the validity of the commissioner's proceedings for that purpose. But where the commissioner has failed to give the statutory notices of the time and place of letting contracts, and of the time when the assessment of benefits would be made, such parties are not, by their acts, estopped from objecting to the validity of the assessment, because of failure to give such notice. Cook v. Covert, 71 Mich. 249.

1. Petition.—A petition is sufficiently definite which states the termini of a sewer, its connections, the mode of finishing the lateral sewers, and which asks that the whole may be done according to the general plan of sewerage, a general plan having been previously adopted by the city. State v. Jersey City, 30 N. J. L. 148.

Where, under a statute providing for the construction of a gravel road, a petition states that it is for a gravel road, that is a sufficient description of the kind of improvement prayed for; no other specification being required until the board of commissioners come to order the improvement to be made. Stoddard v. Johnson, 75 Ind. 20.

A petition for the establishment of a ditch, which, after describing certain lands belonging to the petitioner, which would be benefited by drainage, recites that such drainage "cannot, however, be accomplished in the best and cheapest manner without affecting the lands of others," and which avers that the petitioner "believes that such drainage can be best had and effected by a ditch commencing," etc., is sufficient compliance with the requirements of an act which provides that such petition shall state, generally, the method by which it is believed the proposed drainage can be accomplished in the cheapest and best manner. Heick v. Voight, 110 Ind. 279.

A petition by property owners, which asks for the improvement of "Oak street, between Willow and Schofield streets, being a distance of one square," is sufficient to warrant an ordinance or resolution for the improvement of "that portion of Oak street, and sidewalks thereto, lying between Schofield and Willow streets." Wiles v. Hoss, 114 Ind. 371.

A petition for the grading and paving of a street, is valid, though it does not contain a request for grading and paving the intersections. Wahlgreen v. Kansas City, 42 Kan. 243.

There is no substantial difference between the absence of a petition, and a petition lacking the substantial averments required by statute. Turrill v. Grattan, 52 Cal. 97.

Number of Petitioners.—The majority of owners is construed to be the owner or owners of a majority of running feet of property fronting on the street, or portion of the street, to be paved. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Gogreve, 41 La. Ann. 251.

In a municipal corporation, three-fourths in interest, represented by the feet front of the owners of property abutting upon a street, petitioned for the improvement of the street by paving the same with wood and stone. Two petitions were presented to the city government; one, signed by a majority in such interest of the petitioning owners, asked, that the street should be "paved with eight feet of stone on each side, and twenty-four feet of wood between the stone;" and one, signed by a minority in such interest of the petitioning owners, asked, that the street should be "paved with not less than thirty-two feet of wood center, treated with the Thilmany process, and balance stone." The street was paved with stone and wood treated with the designated process, but not in the proportions of material asked by the minority petition. It was held that three-fourths in interest of the owners of property abutting upon the street, petitioned for the improvement. Wamelink v. Cleveland, 40 Ohio St. 381.

Where the statute required that two-thirds of the property holders, representing two-thirds of the whole number of feet on each side of the street, should petition for the improvement, but the statute was amended so that a majority of the owners were empowered to petition, it was held that the amendment went directly to the number of petitioners, and did not effect the provision touching the number of feet. Kyle v. Malin, 8 Ind. 34.

Alteration of Petition.—In Graves v. Otis, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 466, it was held that if, after some signatures have been obtained, an alteration of the petition is made, it avoids the proceedings if the requisite majority do not sign after the making of the alteration.

Signature by Agent.—Where a statute required the written consent of the owners of a majority of the lots fronting on the street to be improved, and the commissioners offered, in evidence, a paper purporting to be such consent, some of the signatures to which appeared to be affixed by agents, and there was no proof of the genuineness of most of the signatures, nor of the authority of those assuming to be agents, it was held that the paper was not, in itself, proof of the required consent, as against the objectors who had not signed, though it had been accepted and acted on by the commissioners. Thorn v. West Chicago Park Com'rs, 130 Ill. 594.

So where one name to a petition was signed "per H., Atty.," and it appeared that the attorney had not seen his principal, but acted under a written power of attorney which was not proved, and which was received from a third person, it was held that such name could not be counted. State v. Bayonne, 54 N. J. L. 293.

Majority of Owners—Who May Sign.—In Auditor Gen'l v. Fisher, 84 Mich. 128, it was held that the determination of a township board, that a majority of the owners of property abutting upon a street have signed a petition for the grading of such street, is not conclusive; and that, in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, the question may be investigated in a collateral proceeding. In the same case it was held that, under a statute providing for "a petition of a majority of the property owners," where one petition was laid upon the table, and a new one presented for the same improvement, the names appearing upon the first, but not upon the second, could not be counted towards making up the necessary majority of the property holders. Also, that the administrator of an estate, lands of which are assessable for improvements to a street, cannot sign a petition as one of the property holders; and that where husband and wife hold land as joint tenants, the husband's signature alone, to such petition, will not entitle him to be counted towards the requisite majority. See McEneney v. Sullivan, 125 Ind. 407.

In Holland v. Baltimore, 11 Md. 186, it was held that the lessee for ninety-nine years, or for ninety-nine years renewable for ever, and not the owner of the fee, is the owner or "proprietor" to assent to the paving of unpaved streets.

Under a statute providing for a petition by a majority of "property owners" within the district, neither a stockholder of a company having property therein, nor an administrator of an estate, part of the property of which is in such district, are such property holders as may sign the petition to make up a majority. Rector v. Board of Improvement, 50 Ark. 116. See Mulligan v. Smith, 59 Cal. 206.

An alderman who was one of the petitioners, may vote for the improvement. Steckert v. East Saginaw, 22 Mich. 104.

In California, it is provided by statute that, on petition to the mayor, by the owners of a majority in frontage "as ner called for, or, if the statute is silent as to the proof, by competent common-law evidence.¹

d. ORDINANCES, RESOLUTIONS, ETC.—(1) Necessity of.—Where a city charter expressly requires the proceedings to be founded upon an ordinance, proceedings attempted to be authorized by resolution are invalid.² But if the charter is silent on the subject, a resolution will be sufficient.³ Some action of the council, whether by ordinance or resolution, is the foundation of the proceedings and is indispensable.⁴

(2) Enactment.—The ordinance, order, or resolution, as the said owners are or shall be named in the last preceding annual assessment roll for the state, city and county taxes," the board shall proceed. It was held that the signatures to the petition, of persons other than those to whom the property was assessed on the last preceding assessment roll, could not be counted in order to make up the owners of a majority of the frontage. Kahn v. San Francisco, 79 Cal. 388.

1. In Litchfield v. Vernon, 41 N. Y. 129, it was further held, that neither the application of the common council to the court, for the appointment of commissioners, nor the affidavit of the mayor accompanying such application, is evidence that a majority of the land-owners petitioned the council. See also Sharp v. Speir, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 76; Matter of Kiernan, 62 N. Y. 457.

Burden of Proving Assent by Property Owners.—In such cases, the written consent of the requisite number of property owners being a jurisdictional matter, the burden of proving its proper execution is upon those who seek to enforce the assessment. Thorn v. West Chicago Park Com'rs, 130 Ill. 594. See Henderson v. Baltimore, 8 Md. 352; Dashiell v. Baltimore, 45 Md. 615.

In the absence of a provision for notice to the property owners, and a hearing on the sufficiency of the petition, neither the certificate of the mayor that the petition is sufficient, nor the judgment of the county court confirming the report of the board of public works, is conclusive of such sufficiency. Mulligan v. Smith, 59 Cal. 206; Kahn v. San Francisco, 79 Cal. 388.

But where the statute provides for publication of notice, and a hearing on the sufficiency of the petition, at the instance of any interested party aggrieved, the petition will be presumed to be sufficient, since the authorities must pass on the question in an orderly way before proceeding with the work. Spaulding

v. North San Francisco, etc., R. Assoc., 87 Cal. 40.

The common council have a right to believe that every property owner petitioning for the improvement, does so in good faith, and not under a contract by which he is to be relieved of the whole, or any part, of his share of the cost of the improvement. Any agreement or combination among parties petitioning, by which a few individuals desirous of causing the improvement to be made, procure the signature of others to the petition, by paying or agreeing to pay a consideration therefor, is a fraud on the law, and contrary to public policy. Maguire v. Smock, 42 Ind. 1.

An act authorizing the streets of a city to be improved, which provides that the council shall have full power to improve in such way as it may deem proper, does not dispense with the necessity of the passage of a resolution and its publication, before an improvement can be made. *Oakland Pav. A statute authorizing cities to make local improvements by special assessment, or otherwise, "as they shall by ordinance prescribe," must be strictly followed, and the city cannot first make an improvement without an ordinance, and afterwards levy a special assessment to pay for it. Carlyle v. Clinton County, 140 Ill. 512; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Huehn, 59 Fed. Rep. 335.

An ordinance was held to be unnecessary, where the statute fully provided for the improvement, and the proceedings conformed to the statute, except in regard to the time within which they were directed to be instituted. Stevenson v. New York, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 51.

By the charter, the members of the common council of Bridgeport have power to make a valid assessment for benefits accruing from the pavement of a street; and the vote of the council to adopt the apportionment recommended by a committee, although such report may be nothing more than an expression of opinion by individuals without authority, constitutes an order or decree fixing the amount assessed; whether that which went before was valid or void, is of no moment. The assessment came into existence by virtue of the creative power of the vote adopting the apportionment. Bartram v. Bridgeport, 55 Conn. 122.

The common council of a city is authorized to change the grade of the streets, avenues, and alleys, subject to the provisions of the law; but such change of grade, materially enhancing the cost of grading such street, avenue, or alley, cannot be made after the resolution declaring the necessity for grading the street, avenue, or alley, has been adopted and published, the time for filing a protest by property holders has expired, and the contract for grading executed, without adopting a new resolution and publishing the same, etc., as provided by law. Mason v. Sioux Falls (S. Dak. 1892), 51 N. W. Rep. 770.

Although one part of an ordinance for street improvements may be void under the statute, the other portion directing the work to be done, and contract to be let, may be sustained. State v. Portage, 12 Wis. 562.

In Delphi v. Evans, 36 Ind. 90, it was said that an improvement of this character must be made under an ordinance, a motion, or a resolution, but whatever mode may be adopted, it must comply with the requirements of the charter. It must be in writing, and where there is a petition for the improvement, it must be passed by a vote of the majority of the council, or by a two-thirds vote where there is no petition. The order made must be entered of record, together with the vote on its passage showing that it was adopted by the requisite vote. See Wain v. Philadelphia, 99 Pa. St. 330.

A single entry by the clerk upon the records of the city council, that ordinances for the improvement of several streets, naming them, were passed, does not show that all were voted upon at one time, but the presumption is that they were voted upon separately, as required by the charter. Nevin v. Roach, 86 Ky. 492.

Where a city charter provided that the yeas and nays should be called and published, whenever the vote of the common council was taken on any proposed improvement involving a tax or assessment, the provision was held to be directory only; the essential requisite being the determination of the corporation, and not the mere form of expressing it. Striker v. Kelly, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 9. See contra, Steckert v. East Saginaw, 22 Mich. 104; Reynolds v. Schweinkuss, 1 Cinc. Super. Ct. 215; Rich v. Chicago, 59 Ill. 286.

It is no objection to the validity of an assessment, that the ordinance levying it did not receive from the city council two several readings, as required by the rules of the city council. Holt v. Somerville, 127 Mass. 408.

In Jones v. Boston, 104 Mass. 461, it was held that the omission of the board of aldermen to allege in the order altering a street, that such alteration was made under the statute authorizing it, is no ground for quashing the proceedings on certiorari, as not being conducted under that statute, if the order was passed while it was in force, and the record shows that they intended to, and did, proceed in conformity therewith.

Statute Requiring Two-thirds Vote for Resolution.—Resolutions instructing the assessor to prepare the roll and report a local assessment to the common council, and accepting the roll and declaring it the tax roll, and directing the necessary warrant for the collection of the assessment to be affixed to the roll, are resolutions ordering taxes and assessments within the meaning of a provision in a charter requiring a two-thirds vote to pass resolutions of that nature; and in such case, if the common council has adopted no rule regulating the practice upon motions for reconsideration, it will require a two-thirds vote of the council to reconsider such action. Whitney v. Hudson, 69 Mich. 189.

Where simply a majority vote is required, a majority of a legal quorum is sufficient. Rushville, etc., Gas Co. v. Rushville, 121 Ind. 206.

Where a statute provided that an improvement might be made upon a petition of the majority of the property holders, or upon a two-thirds vote of the common council, without such petition, the transcript must show affirmatively that the improvement was ordered by a two-thirds vote of all the members of the council, in case no petition is presented. Moberry v. Jeffersonville, 38 Ind. 198.

But where a charter provides that the ordinance "shall be passed with the unanimous consent of the mayor and councilmen in council," it was held that an ordinance purporting to be passed by the mayor and councilmen, will be presumed to have been passed in the mode prescribed by charter. Lexington v. Headley, 5 Bush (Ky.) 508. See also Covington v. Casey, 3 Bush (Ky.) 698.

Notice.—Where a charter provides that public notice shall be given of the introduction of all ordinances for improvements to streets, an ordinance introduced without notice is void, and will be set aside; and the notice must state correctly the substance of the proposed ordinance. State v. Long Branch Com'rs, 54 N. J. L. 484.

Signature.—In order for such a resolution or order to be of any effect, it must be signed by the mayor or other presiding officer of the council. Waln v. Philadelphia, 99 Pa. St. 330; Kinsella v. Auburn (Supreme Ct.), 7 N. Y. Supp. 317. But under California Act, 1862, section 3, it is held that the mayor is not bound to sign a resolution of the board of supervisors declaring their intention to improve a public street. Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 240; Hendrick v. Crowley, 31 Cal. 471; Beaudry v. Valdez, 32 Cal. 269; Cochran v. Collins, 29 Cal. 129. See State v. Jersey City, 30 N. J. L. 148; Blanchard v. Bissell, 11 Ohio St. 96; Martindale v. Palmer, 52 Ind. 411.

Under the charter of the city of South St. Paul, resolutions of the common council, in proceeding to assess real estate for street improvements, if not approved and signed by the mayor, and it not appearing that they were ever presented to him, are of no effect. His approval cannot be attested in any other way than by his signature. State v. Dakota County Dist. Ct., 41 Minn. 518.

In Twiss v. Port Huron, 63 Mich. 528, it appeared that the city charter provided that the resolutions of the city council should be submitted to the mayor for his approval, before going into effect. An assessment for public improvements was undertaken in accordance with the provisions of a resolution which was not so submitted, and it was held that it was invalid and could not be enforced. See Creighton v. Manson, 27 Cal. 613.

Where a resolution providing for an improvement was passed, and publication made as required by statute, but at the time of publication the resolution had been approved by the mayor's clerk, and not by the mayor, and the plaintiff, a taxpayer, had actual notice of the publication, and it also appeared that after the roll was completed, it was delivered to the city clerk, who published the required notice that it was on file in his office, it was held that while the mayor could not delegate his authority to sign the resolution, yet publication before approval of the resolution was an irregularity, which the

(3) Requisites as to Form and Sufficiency.—The ordinance, resolution, or order must be in writing,¹ and must, in positive and appropriate terms, declare that the improvement shall be made.² It must specify the nature, character, and plan of the proposed improvement in such a way as to give at least a general direction as to the letting of the work and execution of the contract contemplated by such order,³ and must, it seems, fix the amount to plaintiff had waived by failing to file objections with the city clerk. Lyth v. Buffalo, 48 Hun (N. Y.) 175.

Recording.—In the absence of a charter provision requiring it, it is not necessary that an ordinance for a street improvement, or the contract and apportionment made pursuant thereto, should be spread in full upon the records of the city council. Nevin v. Roach, 86 Ky. 492.

Rescission of Ordinance.—Under a charter which provides that, whenever an assessment shall be invalid by reason of any irregularity, the council may order a new assessment, a majority of the council has the power to rescind the ordinance or resolution ordering the assessment, nor is this power affected by the fact that a greater number of the council voted for the resolution than to rescind it. Townsend v. Manistee, 88 Mich. 408.

1. Delphi v. Evans, 36 Ind. 90; Powder's Appeal, 29 Mich. 504.

2. In Dougherty v. Hitchcock, 35 Cal. 512; Merrill v. Abbott, 62 Ind. 549, it was held that resolutions "that, in the opinion of this council, the present condition of Main street from," etc., "to," etc., is not only a public nuisance, but detrimental to the interests of the city, and "that the city engineer be and is hereby instructed to advertise for bids for grading and graveling the said Main street from," etc., "to," etc., "including sidewalks; said work to be done at the several property holders' expense on the line of said work; bids to be read at our next regular meeting," do not constitute a proper order for the improvement of such street.

So in Mason v. Sioux Falls (S. Dak. 1892), 51 N. W. Rep. 770, it was held that the cost of curbing a certain avenue, contracted for by the city under the following resolutions: "Resolved, that it is necessary that Prairie avenue, between Fourth and Twelfth streets, in said city of Sioux Falls, be graded and worked to the established grade," cannot be imposed upon the property abutting upon said improvement. The cost of the grading, however, if it can be ascertained, independently of the curbing, may be enforced against the abutting property.

Construction of Ordinance.—If an ordinance providing for the opening or improving of a street, declares in terms that the improvement is for the general public benefit or convenience, without anything more, the presumption is that the ordinance was made with exclusive reference to the general public convenience, and with no reference whatever to local benefits, and, therefore, the costs of the improvement are to be borne exclusively by the public treasury. Burns v. Baltimore, 48 Md. 198. But if the ordinance is silent upon the subject of the interests or benefits to be subserved, the presumption is that it contemplated local benefits as well as the general public convenience, and, therefore, the owners of adjoining property must be assessed for the expense. Baltimore v. Hanson, 61 Md. 462; Baltimore v. Johns Hopkins Hospital, 56 Md. 1. See Moale v. Baltimore, 61 Md. 224.

3. Merrill v. Abbott, 62 Ind. 549; Hays v. Vincennes, 82 Ind. 178; Smith v. Duncan, 77 Ind. 92; Woods v. Chicago, 135 Ill. 582; Jacksonville R. Co. v. Jacksonville, 114 Ill. 562; Sterling v. Galt, 117 Ill. 11; Brady v. King, 53 Cal. 44; Haegele v. Mallinckrodt, 46 Mo. 577; St. John v. East St. Louis, 136 Ill. 207; Hyde Park v. Spencer, 118 Ill. 446; Kankakee v. Potter, 119 Ill. 324; Ogden v. Lake View, 121 Ill. 422; Levy v. Chicago, 113 Ill. 650. See Bufts v. Rochester, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 598.

A resolution of intention to have a street macadamized, gives no authority to include in the contract a provision for rock gutter ways. Partridge v. Lucas (Cal. 1893), 33 Pac. Rep. 1082.

An ordinance which provides for the construction of a box drain two miles long, but which makes no provisions for any opening except at the ends, and which does not in any way designate the territory to be drained, does not comply with a statute which requires that ordinances for improvement, to be paid for by local assessments, shall specify the "nature, character, locality, and description" of such improvement. Hyde Park v. Carton, 132 Ill. 100.

An ordinance for paving a street, which provides that "the brick to be used in said pavements shall be of the best quality," that the roadbed be excavated ten inches, the space filled with five inches of gravel, and the remaining five inches with paving brick, placed upon the gravel after it has been well packed, sufficiently describes the nature and character of the paving. Kimble v. Peoria, 140 Ill. 157.

An ordinance for the construction of a sewer, which names three several curves between two given points without giving the radius, as, for instance, after naming a point, saying "thence curve until it intersects with a point" named, where the curves are for very short distances and adapted to the purposes of the sewer, and can be properly located only in one way from the whole ordinance taken together, is not void for uncertainty. Hyde Park v. Borden, 94 Ill. 26.

Under a statute which provides that an ordinance for a local improvement shall describe the improvement, either by setting forth the description in the ordinance itself, or by referring to maps, plats, plans, profiles, or specifications on file in the office of the proper clerk, a reference in a village ordinance to the plan on file in the office of the village clerk, is sufficient. Steele v. River Forest, 141 Ill. 302. See Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. East St. Louis, 134 Ill. 656.

It is sufficient if the resolution refers by number to certain ordinances, for the manner of performing the work. It need not recite the provisions of the ordinances. Williams v. Bisagno (Cal. 1893), 34 Pac. Rep. 640.

Where it was objected that the common council did not declare their determination to pave the street with stone, it was held that this determination was sufficiently declared by the order directing the contract to have it so paved. Williams v. Detroit, 2 Mich. 560.

Under an ordinance which provides for the improvement of certain streets and alleys, and directs the levy and collection of a special tax upon property "in proportion to the frontage thereof upon the streets or parts of streets" ordered to be paved, and omits the word "alleys," the property owners cannot complain if only the expense of paving the streets upon which the lots abutted, was assessed against them, and there was no assessment for paving the alley. Wilbur v. Springfield, 123 Ill. 395.

Location of Man-holes.—An ordinance which provides for the construction of a sewer "with necessary man-holes," but which does not specify the location of the man-holes, is not invalid under a statute which requires that ordinances providing for local improvements to be paid by special assessment, must set forth the nature, character, locality, and description of such improvement. Springfield v. Sale, 127 Ill. 359; Springfield v. Mathus, 124 Ill. 88; 22 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 347.

An ordinance which directed an improvement to be made by establishing a system of drainage by means of sewers, well and pumping works, provided that the man-holes mentioned therein should be "furnished with iron covers, of the size and weight of those now in use on the man-holes in the sewer in Garfield Boulevard from South Park avenue to State street;" that certain boilers and arches should be "furnished with a cast-iron boiler front, of a pattern similar to the one now in use at the Hyde Park water-works;" that upon certain beds of concrete described in the ordinance "brick masonry, of suitable shape to support the pumping engines herein provided for" shall be constructed; and that "said sewers extending along the line of Sixty-third street shall be provided with house connection slants, of four inches internal diameter, opposite every lot fronting said Sixty-third street, on both sides of said street." It was held that the ordinance sufficiently specified the nature, character, locality, and description of the proposed improvement as required by statute, and that it was not necessary that it should specify the size, weight, and other details of the man-hole covers, the dimensions, pattern, and weight of the cast iron boiler fronts, and the exact number of the house connection slants. Pearce v. Hyde Park, 126 Ill. 287.

Fixing Grade.—It is the duty of a city council to fix the grade of a street proposed to be made, and to specify the improvements to be made. If the council fails to do this, a person whose property it is proposed to tax for such improvement, may allege such failure in his answer, which will present a valid be raised by special assessment.¹ The location of the improvement must be definitely set out, and an ordinance which declares only that a street shall be improved "where necessary" is not sufficient;² nor can more than one improvement be included in a single resolution or ordinance.³ The resolution or ordinance

1. Sterling v. Galt, 117 Ill. 11.

A municipal ordinance which fixes the tax to be levied for carrying out a local improvement, viz.: the total cost of the improvement, not including the cost of paving street intersections and the right of way of railroad companies; and provides for its assessment upon the abutting property in proportion to the frontage, sufficiently fixes the amount to be raised by special taxation. Green v. Springfield, 130 Ill. 515.

But where an ordinance provides that the entire cost of an improvement, except street and alley intersections, shall be raised by special tax levied upon contiguous property, and that the cost of the improvement of the street and alley intersections shall be paid by general taxation, it is not necessary that the ordinance shall state the amounts to be raised by special tax and by general taxation, since the data by which the several amounts may be fixed is sufficiently given. Kimble v. Peoria, 140 Ill. 157. See Sterling v. Galt, 117 Ill. 11.

In Hosmer v. Hunt Drainage Dist., 135 Ill. 51, it was held that an order approving an estimate of the amount needed for a certain improvement, and directing the commissioners to assess the benefits of such improvement, does not compel the commissioners to assess the amount named in the estimate, regardless of the benefits received.

2. People v. Ladd, 47 Cal. 603; Randolph v. Gawley, 47 Cal. 458; Richardson v. Heydenfeldt, 46 Cal. 68; People v. Clark, 47 Cal. 456.

A resolution sufficiently locates the work to be done if it declares that the street will be graded and macadamized from one designated point to another. Emery v. San Francisco Gas Co., 28 Cal. 346.

A resolution describing the work to be done, is not rendered uncertain by the provision excepting "that portion (of the street) required by law to be kept in order by the railroad company." Whiting v. Townsend, 57 Cal. 515. See Wilder v. Cincinnati, 26 Ohio St. 284.

In State v. Newark, 48 N. J. L. 101, it appeared that money was raised by general taxation of the property of the city, for the repaving of streets, but the ordinance providing therefor did not definitely describe the improvements to be made, although it stated that property benefited by the proposed improvements should be assessed. It was held that the property owners could not defeat the assessment on account of such irregularity, as it occurred in the proceedings for levying the general tax, and the objection came too late when the property owners had permitted the money thus raised to be expended for their benefit.

3. Dyer v. Chase, 52 Cal. 440; Himmelmenn v. Satterlee, 50 Cal. 68. See Beaudry v. Valdez, 32 Cal. 270; Mendenhall v. Clugish, 84 Ind. 94; Dickinson v. Worcester, 138 Mass. 555; People v. Yonkers, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 266; Adams County v. Quincy, 130 Ill. 566.

But an ordinance for laying a water-pipe to commence on one street, and, after some distance, to proceed by a right angle along another street, is not void as providing for two improvements. Ricketts v. Hyde Park, 85 Ill. 110.

Nor is an ordinance invalid by reason of the fact that it directs the paving of several streets, one of which is wider than the others. Adams County v. Quincy, 130 Ill. 566; State v. Ramsey County Dist. Ct., 47 Minn. 406.

So a resolution of the board of supervisors, declaring an intention to improve a street, may include a declaration to grade and macadamize. Emery v. San Francisco Gas Co., 28 Cal. 346.

A street may be improved for a greater distance than one square or block, under one order. LaFayette v. Fowler, 34 Ind. 140.

Where a charter provided that the "cost of grading any street shall be charged as a special tax on all property on both sides of the street graded," and the contract for grading a certain street provided that the earth taken from that street was to be deposited on another street, until a certain portion thereof was brought to grade, it was held that the contract and tax bills

however, need not enter into all the minor details of the improvement contemplated,¹ and to leave such details to other agencies of the municipality is not in violation of the rule that the common council or other local body on whom the power is conferred shall not delegate its authority.²

were void, as the performance of the contract would bring both streets to grade, at the expense of one. Kansas City Grading Co. v. Holden, 32 Mo. App. 490.

In State v. Hudson, 29 N. J. L. 104, it appeared that several ordinances had been passed for the improvement of different parts of a certain avenue, in response to as many petitions of property owners. Without any new petition, the council repealed these ordinances, and passed one ordinance for the regulation and improvement of the whole avenue, and it was held that the general ordinance was valid, and authorized the improvements which it provided for.

An ordinance for the paving of several streets and alleys, and parts of streets, with the same materials and in the same way, is not obnoxious to the objection that it embraces more than one improvement, even though there may be a difference of a few feet in the width of some of the streets, and the cost of paving certain railway tracks is excluded. Fagan v. Chicago, 84 Ill. 228.

1. Taber v. Grafmiller, 109 Ind. 206; Taber v. Ferguson, 109 Ind. 227; Sheehan v. Gleeson, 46 Mo. 100; Pearce v. Hyde Park, 126 Ill. 287; People v. Clark, 47 Cal. 456; Himmelmänn v. McCreery, 51 Cal. 562; Andrews v. Chicago, 57 Ill. 239.

Although the statute authorizing a municipality to make improvements by special assessment, requires an ordinance to be passed specifying the nature, locality, and description of the improvement, the ordinance need not specify the width of the street to be paved. Adams County v. Quincy, 130 Ill. 566; Woods v. Chicago, 135 Ill. 582.

A resolution passed by the board of supervisors, declaring their intention to improve a street, need not contain the complete plan and specifications of the proposed improvement. The resolution need not describe the work with any more exactness than it is described in the law itself. Harney v. Heller, 47 Cal. 15.

In Galbreath v. Newton, 30 Mo. App. 380, it was held under the charter of the city of Sedalia, which empowers the mayor and aldermen "to grade, pave, macadamize, or otherwise improve" a street, by ordinance only, that it was not necessary for the ordinance to provide for the mode, material, or character of the work, and that it was sufficient if specifications were in the hands of the city engineer, and adopted as part of the ordinance.

Illegal Assessment by Calling a "Sewer" a "Street."—A city council has not the power, by calling, in its ordinance, a "sewer" a "street," to construct the one under the pretense of repairing the other, so as to lay a burden of taxation which should have been borne by the public at large, upon a few adjacent property holders. Clay v. Grand Rapids, 60 Mich. 451.

Variance Between Resolution and Contract.—A resolution declaring an intention to improve a street in San Francisco, is not vitiated because it states an intention to grade and macadamize between two certain streets, while the contract, executed under the resolution, calls for grading and macadamizing that portion of the street except where done. Emery v. San Francisco Gas Co., 28 Cal. 345.

Where the specifications for paving a street with granite, called for blocks ranging from seven to eight inches in depth, and the ordinance providing for the work called for eight-inch blocks, it was held that the variance between the contract and the ordinance, did not invalidate tax bills issued in payment for work done under the contract. Cole v. Skrainka, 105 Mo. 303.

Where it is not shown that injury resulted to the property owners, by reason of a variance between the resolution and contract, an assessment will not be set aside. Voght v. Buffalo, 133 N. Y. 463.

2. Taber v. New Bedford, 135 Mass. 162; State v. New Brunswick, 30 N. J. L. 395; St. Joseph v. Owen, 110 Mo. 445. See supra, this title, Local Assessments—Power to Make.

Thus, the fact that an ordinance for the construction of a carriage-way in a street, merely defines the width of the way, and leaves it to the engineer to locate the way, will not enable the owners of abutting property to escape the burden for the cost of the improvement, although the engineer may not have located the way in the center of the street, so as to leave equal spaces on either side of the carriage-way for sidewalks, the property owner not being entitled, as a matter of right, to have a certain space assigned him for making a sidewalk. Nevin v. Roach, 86 Ky. 492.

In Cuming v. Grand Rapids, 46 Mich. 150, it was held that a resolution of a common council, declaring the necessity of a street improvement, is not invalidated by including "the necessary bridges, etc.," without specifying what is necessary, especially if it does not appear that anything is necessary beyond the improvement of the street. The resolution does not delegate authority to decide upon the necessity, as details may afterwards be settled by the council.

A general ordinance provided that whenever a majority of the property holders, in any locality, should present a petition to the council asking for a street improvement, to be paid for by local assessment, it should be granted, and the mayor should be authorized to publish an order that such improvement should be made within sixty days. It also provided that the order of the mayor "shall specify briefly, but plainly, the time of the improvement ordered, the locality to which it is limited," etc. It was held that in authorizing publication of such an order, it was not necessary that the council should prescribe the dimensions of the improvement, nor the material of which it should be made, as that duty is to be performed by the mayor. Main v. Fort Smith, 49 Ark. 480.

An ordinance directing the paving of a street, at a specified cost, but leaving to subordinates the measurement of the work done, and the apportionment of the cost among the adjoining property holders, is not a delegation of legislative authority. Walker v. District of Columbia, 6 Mackey (D. C.) 352; Burlington v. Quick, 47 Iowa 222.

An ordinance provided for paving the street, and required the pavement to be what is known as Bloomington Brick Pavement, and the foundation thereof to be laid of cinders and gravel, or other materials equally suitable, at least six inches deep; it was held that the ordinance was not obnoxious to the objection of uncertainty as to the materials to be used for the foundation. Nor was such an ordinance rendered invalid by a provision which required all the work done, and the materials used, to be subject to the approval of the city engineer, and in accordance with the plans and specifications to be furnished by the council, as such provision does not give him power to determine the kind of materials to be used, but only the right to see that those required are used, and that the work is done as directed by the ordinance. Jacksonville R. Co. v. Jacksonville, 114 Ill. 562.

An ordinance which provided that a street shall be "improved by graveling in street, brick sidewalks and paved gutters," according to specifications to be prepared by the city engineer, is not void for uncertainty, but is sufficient to authorize the letting of a contract for work. Ross v. Stackhouse, 114 Ind. 200.

But in Smith v. Duncan, 77 Ind. 92, it was held that an order which does not specify of what wood paving blocks should be made, how they shall be laid, and under what grade, but leaves this and similar matters to the city engineer, is insufficient, and will not warrant a precept for the enforcement of an assessment. Such delegation of the city council to the engineer is not permissible.

A resolution must be published in the paper designated by the council

c. NOTICE—(1) Necessity.—As has been seen, in those cases where the determination of the amounts to be assessed upon the several properties is a matter of judgment and discretion, a local assessment made and apportioned without notice to the owners of property affected is open to the serious constitutional objection of depriving the owners of their property without due process of law;¹ and in such cases it is held that notice of some sort is essential to the validity of an assessment, independently of any requirement therefor in the city charter.² In cases, however, where the only act necessary to ascertain the amount of an assessment upon property is a plain mathematical calculation, as where the apportionment is made by the front-foot rule or according to for that purpose. Petition of Astor, 50 N. Y. 363; Matter of Douglass, 46 N. Y. 42; Matter of Conway, 62 N. Y. 504.

In California, Sundays may be included in the ten days required for the publication of the resolution of intention. Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 241; Miles v. McDermott, 31 Cal. 271.

Where the resolution directed publication for ten days from and after a particular date, and the publication was not in fact commenced until two days after the time fixed in the resolution, and was then made for the legal period of ten days, it was held to be a substantial compliance with the law. Chambers v. Satterlee, 40 Cal. 497.

In New York, it has been held that a single publication of a resolution authorizing a local improvement, two days before its adoption, is a sufficient compliance with the provision of a charter providing for at least two days' notice by publication. Matter of Bassford, 50 N. Y. 509.

An ordinance, res ipsa, though it may have no binding effect until after publication, is a different thing from its publication, and the court cannot infer that it was properly published because it was passed. Napa v. Easterby, 61 Cal. 509.

An allegation in the complaint, that, after the resolution of intention had been passed by the board of trustees for the grading and graveling of two blocks upon the same street, the street commissioners "caused to be conspicuously posted along said contemplated work, more than three notices of resolution, at less than three hundred feet in distance apart," shows a sufficient compliance with the statute in regard to the posting of the notices; and the fact that the work included a street crossing, does not render it necessary that notice be also posted in front of each quarter block liable to be assessed. Miller v. Mayo, 88 Cal. 568.

In Elkhart v. Wickwire, 121 Ind. 331, it was held that the fact that ordinances for the construction of a sewer were never published, does not relieve a property owner from liability on the assessment, as the statute for the incorporation of cities in Indiana, makes no provision for the publication of any but penal ordinances.

Portland*, 149 U. S. 38.

In Scott v. Toledo, 36 Fed. Rep. 385, it was held that notice of the adoption of the preliminary resolution declaring the necessity for an improvement, is not sufficient to warrant a local assessment therefor without further notice, unless the collection thereof is required to be area, and no discretion is left to the officers, it has been held that a notice is not essential to the validity of the assessment and levy;¹ but in all cases the property owner must have notice, either actual or constructive, and an opportunity to be heard, before the lien is foreclosed and his property taken to pay the assessment.²

(2) Requisites.—The time and manner of giving notice are matters of legislative discretion, and it has been held accordingly enforced by legal proceedings, in which all defenses as to its validity and amount may be raised.

In Beaumont v. Wilkes-Barre, 142 Pa. St. 198, it appeared that lot owners had notice of the proposition to improve the street, and an opportunity to appear before the council and be heard, but they had no notice of the subsequent proceedings to measure, value, map, and schedule the properties liable to assessment. It was held that such notice was sufficient, as the validity of the apportionment might be tested on the trial of the scire facias for the collection of the assessment. Citing Pittsburg v. Coursin, 74 Pa. St. 400; White v. McKeesport, 101 Pa. St. 394.

In Chamberlain v. Cleveland, 34 Ohio St. 551, it was held that where property owners have notice that an assessment has been made, and is on file in the office of the clerk, for the inspection and examination of persons interested therein, they have their opportunity to be heard, and, from this point, are bound to take notice of the proceedings, which must be regarded as pending. See also Works v. Lockport, 28 Hun (N. Y.) 9.

Where a property owner not only petitions for an improvement, but also agrees to pay his own assessment and any deficiency there may be after assessing the property of others, he thereby waives his right to notice, and an opportunity to be heard before the assessments are levied. Murdock v. Cincinnati, 44 Fed. Rep. 726.

In Gillette v. Denver, 21 Fed. Rep. 822, Brewer, J., said: "Now in this case, the tax is levied by the area; no question of value; no matter of judgment; a mere mathematical calculation; and of what earthly profit could it be for a taxpayer to have notice of that calculation? He can make it himself. He cannot correct by testimony the judgment of anybody; it is as exact and settled as anything can be. In the proceedings to assess this tax and to do the work, there are three steps: First, there is the making of the contract for the building of the sewer; second, there is the building of the sewer, the performance of the work; and third, the mere mathematical calculation, the apportionment of the cost. As to the latter, no notice can be required because notice would be of no avail."

that the legislature may dispense with personal notice and may provide for notice by publication only.¹

As a general rule, the form of notice, and the time and manner of its service, are prescribed by statute, and such provisions must be strictly complied with in all essential particulars.² The notice should be a reasonable one, and should be of such certainty as

An immaterial departure from the statute, in giving notice, will not be fatal. Matter of Lowden, 89 N. Y. 548.

Where personal service is required, it must in all cases, be made. Wilson v.

Trenton, 53 N. J. L. 645; Simmons v. Gardiner, 6 R. I. 225; Green v. Cincinnati, 7 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 233; McGee v. Avondale, 7 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 246.

And where the statute requires notice, without prescribing the method of service, personal notice is presumed and should be given. Sedalia v. Gallie, 49 Mo. App. 392.

A requirement that the notice be served personally, or left at the residence of the landowner, is not complied with by leaving it on the table in his business office. Mills v. Detroit, 95 Mich. 422.

If the notice of the time and place of assessing benefits is published for the period required by statute, it is immaterial that two days intervened between the expiration of such period and the time of hearing. Fairchild v. St. Paul, 46 Minn. 540.

Where notice is required to be published for two successive weeks, it is sufficient to make two publications thereof one week apart in a weekly newspaper. Ricketts v. Hyde Park, 85 Ill. 110.

And where the notice was required to be published three times for three successive weeks, it was held that publications made on Friday and Saturday of the first week, each day of the next week, and on Monday and Tuesday of the third week, constituted a substantial compliance with the statute, notwithstanding three full weeks had not expired. Andrews v. People, 84 Ill. 28.

Where the first publication of the assessment roll was made on the same day that the resolution ordering it was approved by the mayor, but before it was approved, it was held that the publication was valid, following the general rule that fractions of a day are not regarded in law. Pooley v. Buffalo, 122 N. Y. 592.

A requirement that the notice be published for five successive days in the official city paper, is not violated by the omission of the publication from the Sunday edition of the paper. Voght v. Buffalo, 133 N. Y. 463. But there must to inform the owners of property of the real character of the improvement intended and whether they will be affected thereby.¹ And this rule applies also where the statute is silent on the subject.²

(3) Purpose of Notice—Right to be Heard.—The purpose of the notice is to afford the property owners an opportunity to present whatever objections they may have to the levy of the assessment, and to be heard thereon,³ at some time before it becomes final, by a tribunal clothed with authority to hear such objections, be the required number of days' notice exclusive of Sunday. Sewall v. St. Paul, 20 Minn. 511.

And it has been held that where notice is required to be published for a specified number of days consecutively, Sunday should not be included. Scammon v. Chicago, 40 Ill. 146; Jenks v. Chicago, 48 Ill. 296.

But in Clapton v. Taylor, 49 Mo. App. 47, it was held to be immaterial that the last day of publication was on Sunday.

The common council should choose the paper in which to publish the notice. Powers' Appeal, 29 Mich. 504.

But in the absence of a requirement to the contrary, a paper printed in the English language must be selected. Cincinnati v. Bickett, 26 Ohio St. 49.

Proof of Notice.—Where an affidavit states that notice has been given to property owners as required, it need not set out the names of those to whom notice was sent. Linck v. Litchfield, 141 Ill. 469.

A certificate of publication which states that notice has been published five times in a daily newspaper, and gives the dates of the first and last publications, is insufficient to show compliance with a statute which required the notice to be published on five successive days, since two or more of the publications may have been made on the same day in different editions of the paper. Evans v. People, 139 Ill. 552. But it is necessary that the date of the last publication be given. Brown v. Chicago, 62 Ill. 106; Butler v. Chicago, 56 Ill. 341; Beygeh v. Chicago, 65 Ill. 189.

A certificate of publication should be given by the person who was publisher of the paper at the time the publication was made. Armstrong v. Chicago, 61 Ill. 352.

It is not necessary, however, that all matters of detail be stated in the notice with technical precision. Baltimore v. Bouldin, 23 Md. 328.

The notice, in the case of the construction of a sewer, need not state its depth beneath the surface of the street. People v. Rochester, 5 Lans. (N. Y.) 11.

A statute which provides for a hearing on notice to all parties interested, before the court to which the commissioners are to report, cannot be declared void, on the ground that such parties were not in the first instance given a hearing before such commissioners. Wilson v. State, 42 N. J. L. 612.

It was objected to the validity of a special assessment that those assessed had no opportunity to be heard. It appeared that the charter provided that after the assessment roll should be completed, the board of assessors should give notice of that fact, and that it should remain in their office twelve days for which may be the board of commissioners or assessors themselves, or some court or board of review.¹ In some states it is provided that, after notice, a remonstrance or protest may be filed by a specified proportion of the property owners to be assessed, the effect of which will be to prevent the council from proceeding with the assessment until the parties filing it are heard.² Such inspection. Where the requisite notice was given and the plaintiff, through his counsel, appeared before the board, it was held that he had had a sufficient opportunity to be heard. Beecher v. Detroit, 92 Mich. 268.

Where the assessment is to be made by the rule of benefits, it is ground for an avoidance thereof, if the taxing district is defined before the hearing. State v. Otis (Minn. 1893), 55 N. W. Rep. 143.

Where commissioners, after making their estimate and assessment, are required to give notice of the time and place when and where parties can be heard, and after a hearing, to complete their report, they exceed their jurisdiction, if they give a notice requiring all objections presented to be in writing. Merritt v. Port Chester, 71 N. Y. 309; Hopkins v. Mason, 42 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 115.

And where a charter directs that persons interested shall be heard before the council, it is an excess of authority for the council to limit the right to objections made in writing. State v. Jersey City, 25 N. J. L. 309.

But property owners may waive this objection by a failure to appear and object, or by voluntarily submitting their objections in writing. State v. Jersey City, 28 N. J. L. 500.

The council may not devolve the duty of hearing objections upon the clerk. State v. Jersey City, 25 N. J. L. 309.

But under an Indiana statute, it has been held that a notice to file objections with the clerk is sufficient. Quill v. Indianapolis, 124 Ind. 292.

1. The time for hearing objections depends upon the statute, and may be fixed after all the proceedings are had and the assessment is ready for confirmation, or there may be several opportunities to be heard at various stages of the proceedings. State v. Jersey City, 27 N. J. L. 536; Wilson v. State, 42 N. J. L. 612. Thus, where the act provides that when execution is issued for the amount of the assessment, the property owner may file an affidavit denying the whole or any part thereof, which affidavit is made returnable to the superior court, the issue thereon to be tried as in case of illegality, and that at such hearing he may show fraud or mistake, error or excess in the amount of the execution, want of authority to support the assessment, or failure to comply with the provisions of the statute and the ordinance in pursuance thereof, such property owner is not thereby deprived of his property without due process of law. Speer v. Athens, 85 Ga. 49. See St. Louis v. Richeson, 76 Mo. 470.

Where the council fixes a time for hearing objections, and does not meet at the time fixed, the assessment cannot be enforced. Nashville v. Weiser, 54 Ill. 245.

2. Remonstrance or Protest.—In Burnett v. Sacramento, 12 Cal. 76, it was held that the California statute only inhibits the council from proceeding with the improvement in case of protest, and it is competent for them to pass an ordinance in advance of the time, provided they do not try to enforce it.

The provision of the New York Laws 1882, § 990, ch. 410, requiring the discontinuance of proceedings for a street opening, when, upon a hearing to confirm the report of the commissioners, a majority of the persons interested appear and object to further proceedings, does not apply to proceedings for the opening of streets of the first class. Matter of Board of Street Opening, 133 N. Y. 436.

Where it is made the duty of the board of supervisors to pass upon a remonstrance, one who fails to join in such remonstrance is concluded by their decision, and may not attack it by way of defense to proceedings to collect an assessment against his property. Spaulding v. North San Francisco, etc., Assoc., 87 Cal. 40.

Parties who do not remonstrate may not claim the benefit of a remonstrance by others. Harney v. Heller, 47 Cal. 15.

If the board orders the work to be done without passing directly upon the remonstrance, it is practically a passing protest must be filed within the time fixed by law, and must be signed by the requisite number.¹

1. Burnett v. Sacramento, 12 Cal. 70.

The question whether the signers constitute a majority of the owners affected by the improvement, is one of fact to be determined by the trustees. Betts v. Williamsburgh, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 255.

The jurisdiction of the city to proceed with the work, will not be restored by a subsequent withdrawal of names of property holders reducing the number of signers below that required. State v. Jersey City, 44 N. J. L. 626; Jersey City Brewing Co. v. Jersey City, 42 N. J. L. 575.

The protest provided for by the Kansas act relating to cities of the first class, to be available must be of "two-thirds of the owners of the property resident in the city liable to taxation" for the street improvements, and not merely of "two-thirds of the property owners liable for the tax to be paid for said street improvements," without regard to residence. Marshall v. Leavenworth, 44 Kan. 459.

A remonstrance against proceedings of assessment for a local improvement, will not be regarded, if signatures necessary to make out the majority are not made by the parties whose names are used, and are not duly authenticated. Matter of Tompkins Square, 17 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 324, note.

Where it was provided by statute that where the owners of the greater part of the property remonstrate against an improvement, the unanimous approval of all the members of the board of public improvements is required to adopt the contemplated improvement, and that if a majority of such property owners fail to remonstrate, the improvement can be adopted by a majority vote of the board, it was held that a finding by the board that a remonstrance was not signed by a majority of property owners is not conclusive. And it was further held that the remonstrance need not be signed by any property owner in person, but that the signature of his authorized agent is sufficient.

Fruin-Bambrick Constr. Co. v. Geist, 37 Mo. App. 509.

2. Waiver of Notice.—Quick v. River Forest, 130 Ill. 323; Waters v. Lake, 129 Ill. 23; Murphy v. Peoria, 119 Ill. 509; State v. Jersey City, 26 N. J. L. 444; State v. Jersey City, 41 N. J. L. 489; Walker v. Aurora, 140 Ill. 402.

Where the board of public works of the city of St. Paul makes an assessment of benefits and damages to property resulting from a change of grade of a street, finding the benefits greater than the damages, and the property owner voluntarily pays the balance or difference collectible from him, he thereby acquiesces in the assessment, and waives the omission to publish the notices of the completion and confirmation of the assessment, and cannot interpose such omission as an objection to an assessment subsequently made against his property for grading the street in accordance with the changed grade. State v. Ramsey County Dist. Ct., 40 Minn. 5.

Property owners who had actual notice of a proposition to pave a street, and who have objected to the assessment therefor on other grounds, are estopped from asserting, in a suit brought by them for an injunction, that the formal notice served upon them was too remote in point of time. Beaumont v. Wilkes-Barre, 142 Pa. St. 198.

Where an ordinance provided for a local assessment, but required no notice in pursuance of the statute under which it was passed, it was held that, however fatal the objection as to the manner of notice might have been, if properly taken and acted upon, it could not be allowed to prevail after considerable delay, under circumstances rendering it probable that the parties were aware of the inception and progress of the work, and especially after the improvement had been completed and paid for by the city. State v. Paterson, 36 N. J. L. 159.

A taxpayer, by appearing in court, and resisting the entering of a judgment against his property, will not be deemed to have waived his right to object that he has been afforded no proper

f. THE ASSESSMENT—(1) Time of Assessment.—Whether the assessment should be made before or after the completion of the work, is a matter of legislative discretion. In some cases, an estimate and assessment may be made before the work is begun, in order to provide funds for carrying it on;¹ in others, the city is authorized to make the improvement at its own expense, and, after it is done, to assess the cost thereof on the lands benefited.² Again, it may be left to the discretion of the municipal authorities to adopt one or the other of the foregoing plans.³

opportunity to be heard respecting the fairness of the assessment. He may urge the want of such opportunity, as a reason why the judgment should not be entered. Nashville v. Weiser, 54 Ill. 245.

1. The Assessment.—Henderson v. Baltimore, 8 Md. 352; Scovill v. Cleveland, 1 Ohio St. 126; Thomason v. Rugles, 69 Cal. 465; Oakland Pav. Co. v. Hilton, 69 Cal. 479; Kingman v. Metropolitan Sewerage Com'rs, 153 Mass. 566.

In Goodrich v. Omaha, 10 Neb. 98, it was held that damages paid to property owners, by reason of a change of the established grade of a street, could not be reimbursed to the city by means of a special assessment on abutting property, as it would be useless to pay out money in one proceeding, only to recover it back in another form, from the persons to whom it was paid. See also Folz v. Cincinnati, 2 Handy (Ohio) 261; Freeman v. Hunter, 7 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 117; Davis v. Newark, 54 N. J. L. 595, where it is said that the adjudication that the property is damaged, concludes both parties while it stands.

But an award of damages for the taking of a portion of a piece of land, is no bar to a subsequent assessment against the remainder, for benefits. School Furniture Co. v. Grand Rapids, 92 Mich. 564.

Where more has been collected than is necessary to meet the expense of the improvement, the surplus should be refunded to the owners of property assessed, in the proportion of the amounts paid by them respectively; and, if it is not so repaid, assumpsit will lie to recover the same. Thayer v. Grand Rapids, 82 Mich. 298.

2. Lincoln v. Worcester, 122 Mass. 119; Prince v. Boston, 111 Mass. 230; Jones v. Boston, 104 Mass. 465; Chase v. Springfield, 119 Mass. 563; Sheehan v. Owen, 82 Mo. 458; Bradley v. West Duluth, 45 Minn. 41; Elkhart v. Wickwire, 121 Ind. 331.

But in such cases, it is not necessary that the sidewalks be laid before making the assessment for laying out and grading a street. Whiting v. Boston, 106 Mass. 89.

Neither is the mere want of railings or barriers for the protection and safety of the public, such a lack of completion as will prevent an assessment. Chase v. Springfield, 119 Mass. 563.

Where a period of limitation is prescribed by the legislature, within which assessments are to be made, assessing boards must act within such period or not at all. Hitchcock v. Springfield, 121 Mass. 382. But where no period of limitation is prescribed, it is within the discretion of assessment boards when assessments shall be made. Fairbanks v. Fitchburg, 132 Mass. 48; Himmelman v. Coffran, 36 Cal. 411; Matter of Brown, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 103; Bradley v. Greenwich Board of Works, 3 Q. B. Div. 384.

Nevertheless, it is proper to make the assessments promptly, upon the completion of the work. Boston v. Shaw, 1 Met. (Mass.) 136; Wright v. Boston, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 233; Fairbanks v. Fitchburg, 132 Mass. 48.

There is no reason why an assessment may not be made for work already done in good faith by the corporate authority. Ricketts v. Hyde Park, 85 Ill. 112; Creote v. Chicago, 56 Ill. 423; Goodrich v. Minonk, 62 Ill. 121; Howell v. Buffalo, 37 N. Y. 267.

But a city has no right to include in an assessment for one improvement, the cost of another made three years before, for which no assessment was made. Brown v. Fitchburg, 128 Mass. 282.

Neither may an assessment be made for work which has been done by private individuals on their own responsibility. Pease v. Chicago, 21 Ill. 500; Peck v. Chicago, 22 Ill. 578.

3. Manice v. New York, 8 N. Y. 120; Matter of Roberts, 81 N. Y. 62; Doughty v. Hope, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 249.

It has been held that an assessment should not be made until the city acquires title to or an easement in the land upon which the improvement is to be made.¹ But, on the other hand, it has been held that the assessment may be made in advance of the acquisition of such title or easement.² And there is no reason, in the nature of things, why the condemnation and assessment proceedings should not occur at the same time.³

(2) Plans and Estimates of Expenses—(a) In General—By Whom Made.—It is sometimes made a condition precedent to the levying of a local assessment that a plan and an estimate of the cost of the proposed work be made and filed for the inspection of the parties interested.⁴ The question as to who shall do this depends on statutory provisions which devolve the duty on various municipal officers, in some cases on certain boards, such as a board of public works or street commissioners, and sometimes on a single officer, as the city engineer or surveyor.⁵

1. Baltimore v. Hook, 62 Md. 371; Matter of Rhinelander, 68 N. Y. 105; People v. Haines, 49 N. Y. 587; Leavenworth v. Laing, 6 Kan. 274.

2. Holmes v. Hyde Park, 121 Ill. 128; Hyde Park v. Borden, 94 Ill. 26; Hunenberg v. Hyde Park, 130 Ill. 156; Leeman v. Lake View, 131 Ill. 388; Maywood County v. Maywood, 140 Ill. 216.

3. And the same commissioners who assessed the damages in one proceeding may be authorized to assess the benefits in another. McKusick v. Stillwater, 44 Minn. 372; State v. Passaic, 41 N. J. L. 90.

4. Plans and Estimates.—Workman v. Chicago, 61 Ill. 463; Gilmore v. Hentig, 33 Kan. 156; Kelly v. Cleveland, 34 Ohio St. 468; Frosh v. Galveston, 73 Tex. 401; Olson v. Topeka (Kan. 1889), 21 Pac. Rep. 219. See State v. Passaic, 44 N. J. L. 580; Thomason v. Ruggles, 69 Cal. 465.

Where a city charter provided that whenever the commissioners shall determine to make any public improvement, they shall cause an estimate of the expense to be made and filed with the comptroller, for the inspection of the parties interested, the omission to make and file such estimate was held to vitiate the assessment. Weller v. St. Paul, 5 Minn. 95; Myrick v. La Crosse, 17 Wis. 442. See Nash v. St. Paul, 8 Minn. 172, where it is said that the want of such an estimate might result in the setting aside of the particular assessment, if objected to on that ground, but would not vitiate the contract for the performance of the work.

The estimate of an examiner, which gives only the probable cost of the improvement, without giving the details, is insufficient. Friedenwald v. Shipley, 74 Md. 220. So where the engineer's estimate consisted only of two items, giving the amount of surface to be "paved with stone," and the amount to be "paved with asphaltum," such estimate was held to be insufficient. Erie v. Brady (Pa. 1892), 24 Atl. Rep. 641.

Plans and Specifications.—Where the making and filing of plans and specifications of work to be done are conditions precedent to the power of commissioners to advertise for proposals and award contracts, the due filing of full specifications of the work will not render such contracts and assessments for the improvements valid, if the plans have not been made and filed as required by the statute. Kneeland v. Milwaukee, 18 Wis. 411; Wells v. Burnham, 20 Wis. 112. See also State v. St. Louis, 56 Mo. 277; Gilmore v. Utica, 131 N. Y. 26. But see Becker v. McCloud, 4 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 305.

An assessment will not be vitiated by the fact that the specifications require work not mentioned in the resolution of intention, if such additional work is not mentioned in the contract, and it does not appear that it was done, or that any charge was made for it. Oakland Pav. Co. v. Ries, 52 Cal. 270.

5. Thus, in Illinois, a town charter required that the amount to be assessed for public improvements as special benefits upon property, should be determined by the board of trustees. Crawford v. People, 82 Ill. 557.

(b) What To Be Included.—The estimate properly includes only the fair and reasonable cost necessary to complete the whole work.¹ If a street is to be opened, the money required to compensate the owners of the land taken for the opening is a necessary item of the costs.² The estimate may also include amongst the incidental expenses that of engineering and surveying,³ except when this is done by an official employed regularly by the city at a fixed salary;⁴ also the cost of such printing and advertising as are necessary to the carrying on of the work;⁵ the salary of a superin-

In Kansas, the city engineer of a city of the first class must make a detailed estimate of the expenses. Olson v. Topeka (Kan. 1889), 21 Pac. Rep. 219.

It is sufficient if the board of public works adopts, approves, and reports to the council an estimate made by the city surveyor. Cuming v. Grand Rapids, 46 Mich. 150.

1. What Included.—The cost of grading a street preparatory to paving it, may be included in the assessment; also the cost of grading that part of the street embraced in the sidewalks, which was necessary for the proper laying and protection of the curbing and guttering included in the work of paving. Dashiell v. Baltimore, 45 Md. 615.

In estimating the expense of a proposed improvement under the municipal code of Ohio, the expense of building a wall necessary for the protection of the street, which is built partly on the street, and partly on adjoining property, may be included in the estimate. And so of the cost of lateral and cross drain pipes which are necessary to make the improvement in the proper manner. Longworth v. Cincinnati, 34 Ohio St. 101.

The expenses incurred by a gas company in removing and relaying its pipes, such removal, etc., being necessitated by reason of grading the street in which they were laid, cannot be included in the expense of such grading. The gas company is not exempted from the risk of their location, and may be required to make, at their own cost, such changes as public convenience or security require. Matter of Deering, 93 N. Y. 361.

In estimating the cost of an improvement, it is proper to measure together such continuous work as, from its nature, can be estimated together, and not to take into consideration any outlying fragmentary piece of work, the cost of which, from its nature, cannot be equalized with the continuous work; but such piece of work should form the basis of a separate estimate. Kemper v. King, 11 Mo. App. 116.

Where, in making a street improvement, it was necessary to construct a stone and brick culvert, as well as earthwork, and each piece of work was let and done separately by different contractors, the culvert being first completed, accepted, and paid for, it was held, that in making up the estimate of the cost of both pieces of work, the expense of repairs to the culvert, made after it was accepted, could not be included. Spangler v. Cleveland, 35 Ohio St. 469.

The cost and expenses of a former commission, whose report has been set aside, but a part of whose work has been adopted by a second commission, may be included. Matter of Central Park Com'rs, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 282.

Cost of Work Exceeding Estimate.—The fact that the cost of the work upon a road improvement exceeds the estimate, does not render the assessment to pay for such improvement invalid as to the amount of the estimates. Loesnitz v. Seelinger, 127 Ind. 422.

2. Westwood v. Dater, 23 Wkly. Law Bull. 291. See supra, this title, Streets.

tendent, if the services of one are needed;¹ the fees of the commissioners and other like officers;² and the reasonable costs of collecting the assessments, including proper attorneys' fees, where a suit has to be brought.³ And when a municipality is authorized to borrow money to make improvements, interest on money so borrowed and used may be included in the amount of the assessment.⁴

(3) Determination of Benefits—(a) Commissioners, Assessors, etc.—Their Appointment, Qualifications, and Oath.—The legislature may itself designate the officers who shall determine the extent of the special benefits and assess the same,⁵ or the appointment of assessors and commissioners of assessment may be delegated to the city council,⁶ or to a court of justice.⁷ Whatever the method of Commissioners appointed by the court to assess special taxes for street improvements, are officers of the court, and not employes of the city, and their fees are part of the cost of levying and collecting the assessment, and are properly included therein. Kimble v. Peoria, 140 Ill. 157.

In Reclamation Dist. No. 108 v. Hagar, 4 Fed. Rep. 366, it was held that the fact that the statute made it the duty of district attorneys to prosecute such actions, did not prevent the employment of other counsel in proper cases, and the inclusion of their fees in the expenses of collection.

In Northern Liberties v. St. John's Church, 13 Pa. St. 104, it was said that costs of collection followed the judgment as a matter of course; but a commission of ten per cent. was not authorized.

In Spangler v. Cleveland, 35 Ohio St. 469, it was held error to add to the cost of an improvement, an estimated percentage, to pay for collecting an assessment based thereon. See Jonas v. Cincinnati, 18 Ohio 318; Bucknall v. Story, 36 Cal. 67.

The passage of an ordinance declaring the necessity for an improvement, and a determination to make the same, is a prerequisite to the appointment of assessors by the council. Scranton v. Barnes (Pa. 1892), 23 Atl. Rep. 777.

Unless expressly authorized to do so, the common council may not establish a permanent board of commissioners. The commissioners must be appointed for each specific case. State v. Hudson, 29 N. J. L. 104.

Removal.—In State v. Passaic, 42 N. J. L. 524, it was held that the common council had no power to remove commissioners whom they had appointed, although they might fill vacancies resulting from other causes.

But in People v. New York, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 43, the court decided, with some hesitation, that a general power of appointment implies a power of removal.

appointment may be, the apportionment must be made by officers regularly appointed for that purpose as directed by statute.¹ As a rule, these officers should be freeholders residing in the municipality,² and should have no interest in the result of the proceedings.³ They are usually required to take an oath before a proper officer, faithfully and fairly to discharge their duties as prescribed Holyoke*, 146 Mass. 298.

Where an assessment is directed to be made by one of the assessors of the city, it is no objection that it was made and reported by two of such assessors. Gardner's Appeal, 41 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 255.

It is competent for the legislature to provide that assessments be made by a jury, or by drainage commissioners, when the court so directs. Hosmer v. Hunt Drainage Dist., 135 Ill. 51.

Where the apportionment is made according to area, being a mere mathematical calculation, the fact that it is not made by the city assessor, as required by statute, has been held to be simply an irregularity which can in no way prejudice the taxpayer, and should not defeat the assessment. *Keese v. A trustee and director of a corporation, whose property is assessed, is not disinterested. Longley v. Hudson, 4 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 355.

Where there is no defined assessment district, and the excess of damages over benefits in a street improvement must be assessed upon the whole city, it is not practicable to appoint disinterested freeholders resident in the city, and an act so providing cannot be carried into effect, as every property owner in the city necessarily has a direct interest in so charging the benefits as to avoid reaching his own freehold. Montgomery Ave. Case, 54 Cal. 579; Powers' Appeal, 29 Mich. 511.

The affidavit of a witness that he has examined the abstract books, and that one of the commissioners appears to be the owner of some of the property assessed, is not competent evidence of interest. Shreve v. Cicero, 129 Ill. 236.

The fact that park commissioners who are incorporated by act of the legislature, and empowered to make estimates and assessments, own property in the town, does not disqualify them. They are made, by law, the tribunal for the purpose, and the law appointing them qualifies them. People v. Brislin, 80 Ill. 433. See also State v. Rutherford (N. J. 1893), 27 Atl. Rep. 172.

The section of the New York Code Civ. Proc., which provides that a judge shall not sit in the case if related by consanguinity or affinity to any of the parties, within the sixth degree, refers to judges, justices, and other persons by law, and an omission of this requirement may invalidate their proceedings.¹

(b) Duties of Commissioners in Assessing Benefits.—The officers appointed to make an assessment must pursue strictly the rules for the governance of their proceedings, whether prescribed by statute or city ordinance.² They should act as a body, and all members of the board should participate in the proceedings,³ although it has been held that the action of a majority is sufficient if all members are notified.⁴ They should assess the benefits by the rule of apportionment prescribed by law.⁵ And where the rule of actual benefits is prescribed, they should view all the property in the assess-holding court eo nomine, and has no application to assessors. O'Reilly v. Kingston, 114 N. Y. 450.

The fact that a commissioner is an employé of the agents of the owners of some of the property assessed, is not a disqualification. Pearce v. Hyde Park, 126 Ill. 287.

Neither will the fact that one of the commissioners is a member of the city council, and that part of the property assessed belongs to the city, invalidate the assessment. Matter of Twenty-sixth Street, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 203.

Where the charter of a town provides that commissioners of assessment may be sworn before the town clerk, commissioners appointed under the general law, as well as those appointed under the charter, may be sworn before such clerk. Shreve v. Cicero, 129 Ill. 226.

If the form of the oath is substantially correct, it is sufficient. State v. Jersey City, 24 N. J. L. 662.

Where the commissioners are required to take an oath "faithfully and fully to discharge their duties," an oath taken by each one to perform the duties "to the best of his ability," is not sufficient. Merritt v. Port Chester, 71 N. Y. 309.

An act requiring viewers to be sworn to perform their duties "impartially and according to the best of their judgment," is not substantially complied with, when they are sworn only "to the faithful discharge of their duties." In re Cambria St., 75 Pa. St. 357.

If the commissioners take the proper oath, the fact that it was administered before the ordinance authorizing the assessment became a law, will not vitiate their proceedings. Gurnee v. Chicago, 40 Ill. 165.

2. The report of the commissioners must show on its face a compliance with all legal rules, the observance of which is necessary to a valid assessment. State v. New Brunswick, 38 N. J. L. 190.

If the assessment is not made in conformity with the ordinance authorizing it, it is illegal and void, and a subsequent confirmation of it by the common council, will not cure the illegality. Hassan v. Rochester, 67 N. Y. 528; Matter of Turfler, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 46.

Galt*, 117 Ill. 11; Johnson v. Milwaukee, 40 Wis. 315; Watkins v. Zwietusch, 47 Wis. 513.

When it is required by statute that property be assessed according to benefits, it is not sufficient to make the assessment by the frontage rule, in the absence of a finding that the special ment district, and, exercising sound judgment and discretion, should determine fairly and impartially the benefits conferred,¹ taking into consideration the condition of the land, its distance from the improvement, the use for which it is or may be employed, and such other circumstances as will tend to render the improvement of more or less benefit to the premises.² The assessment is frequently made without reference to the state of the title; the only inquiry being into the amount of benefits conferred upon the property.³ But there are cases in which other interests besides the ownership of the fee have been held liable to assessments for such benefits, and where this is the rule, the commissioners should take into consideration the amount of benefits conferred upon each separate interest in the property.⁴

benefits are in that proportion. State v. Hudson, 29 N. J. L. 104; State v. Jersey City, 38 N. J. L. 410; Springfield v. Sale, 127 Ill. 359.

But it is not necessarily erroneous in such cases, to make the apportionment by the frontage rule, if, in the judgment of the commissioners, the lots are benefited in that proportion. Springfield v. Sale, 127 Ill. 359; O'Reilly v. Kingston, 114 N. Y. 448, citing Matter of Cruger, 84 N. Y. 619; Matter of Eager, 46 N. Y. 100. See also State v. Ruth-erford (N. J. 1893), 27 Atl. Rep. 172.

So, also, an apportionment according to area may be a correct measure of the special benefits, but the commissioners should so find, if they make the apportionment on that basis. State v. New Brunswick, 38 N. J. L. 195.

Commissioners should assess all the property in the assessment district, and assess it by the same rule of apportionment, unless it is otherwise provided by law. Elwood v. Rochester, 122 N. Y. 229; Hassan v. Rochester, 65 N. Y. 516; 67 N. Y. 528.

The owner of an estate in dower may be assessed. Whyte v. Nashville, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 364. So also the owner of an estate pur autre vie. Remsen v. Wheeler, 121 N. Y. 685.

Where the assessment was made against the owner of the fee, and the owners of a term which had forty-seven years to run, were not assessed, it was held that the assessment was unjust and a palpable violation of the law. Newark v. State, 34 N. J. L. 523.

Where there are separate and distinct interests in the same land, there should be a separate assessment against each of the owners, for the benefit ac-

Each lot or parcel of land should be assessed separately;¹ and all property in the assessment district which is legally liable to local assessments should be assessed; otherwise the assessment will be invalid.²

The Missouri cases above cited hold that an assessment in gross may not be made on a number of lots, even when they all belong to the same person, but there are cases in other jurisdictions in which it is held that this may properly be done. State v. Jersey City, 24 N. J. L. 662; Matter of Anderson, 39 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 184; DeKoven v. Lake View, 129 Ill. 399.

Commissioners have no right to subdivide parcels of land which have not been subdivided by the owners, Cram v. Chicago (Ill. 1892), 139 Ill. 265; and they may not do this when a portion of a lot lies outside of the lines which they have agreed upon as the limit of the district of special benefits. They should make the assessment on the whole lot. State v. Essex Public Road Board, 51 N. J. L. 166.

In order to overthrow an assessment, upon this ground, it must be made to appear that the property omitted was legally liable to assessment. Matter of Churchill, 82 N. Y. 288; Matter of Voorhis, 3 Hun (N. Y.) 212; O'Reilley v. Kingston, 114 N. Y. 440; Jones v. Boston, 104 Mass. 466.

The commissioners have no right to enter into an agreement with the landowners that they shall not be assessed for benefits, on condition that they consent to the opening of a street through their lands, and an omission to assess lands in pursuance of such agreement, renders the assessment invalid. St. Louis v. Meier, 77 Mo. 13.

But it has been held that where property is assessed for the exact amount for which it is liable, under the estimate, the owner cannot resist payment of the assessment on the ground of an omission to assess other property for the amount for which it is liable. Balfe v. Bell, 40 Ind. 337.

To vitiate the assessment, it should be made to appear that substantial injustice was done. Thus, where two small pieces of property were omitted, but it did not appear to what extent they were benefited, the court refused to disturb the assessment, applying the maxim de minimis non curat lex. Gilbert v. New Haven, 39 Conn. 467.

So, where a small amount of property was omitted, the court refused an injunction to restrain the collection of the assessment, in the absence of a showing that the plaintiff would have to pay more than would have been his proportion had it not been for the exemption. Page v. St. Louis, 20 Mo. 136.

While the omission of property may be fatal to the assessment, it will not of itself warrant an injunction restraining the performance of the work. Hoke v. Perdue, 62 Cal. 545.

3. They should make a written report, and affix their signatures. State v.

statement of all the matters required by law to be reported, showing on its face whether or not the proceedings of the commissioners were regular.¹ Where such a report is duly made and the proceedings appear to be regular, and the property assessed is legally subject to assessment, it is prima facie evidence of the validity of the proceedings, which may be rebutted only by clear and convincing proof of fraud, mistake, or fatal error therein.²

In order to the validity and regularity of an assessment, each lot or parcel of land should be described with such certainty that it may be readily identified.³ And it is generally required that the correct name of the owner shall be given if known,⁴ and if not

Where the report omitted to state, as required by law, that the apportionment and assessment "are contained and stated" in the column designated "assessment for construction," it was held that the omission was fatal to the assessment. Stebbins v. Kay, 123 N. Y. 31.

Where the report sets out, in a substantial way, all the matters required, it is immaterial that it does not follow the language of the statute in terms. Matter of Roberts, 81 N. Y. 62.

Where the statute provides that the assessment roll shall show damages as well as benefits, and that a balance shall be struck and carried forward on the roll, a failure to do so will render the assessment invalid. Chicago v. Wright, 32 Ill. 192.

But in Moale v. Baltimore, 61 Md. 224, it was held that such an assessment was good, where it did not appear that the property had been divided.

g. CONFIRMATION OF REPORT AND ASSESSMENT.—It is generally required that the report of the commissioners or assessors shall, upon notice to the parties concerned, be confirmed by a tribunal designated by statute,—usually a court of justice.² The report of the commissioners as to matters properly submitted to their determination is viewed with even greater favor than the verdict of a jury,³ and will not be set aside or sent back for correction, unless it be shown that there has been fraud or mistake, or some error in the principle upon which the commissioners proceeded.⁴

And in New Orleans v. Ferguson, 28 La. Ann. 240, it was held that the only reason for giving the name of the owner, was more fully to describe the property, and an assessment was upheld which was made in the name of the owner after her decease.

In Hamilton v. Fond du Lac, 25 Wis. 490, it was held that an assessment against a person for a number of lots, part of which were owned by his wife, was void.

Community property may be assessed to the husband alone. Elma v. Carney, 4 Wash. 418.

But where the statute is silent on the subject, it has been held that it is immaterial who is described as owner, if the property is otherwise properly described. Kendig v. Knight, 60 Iowa 33. See also Matter of John & Cherry Sts., 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 659.

If there are doubts as to the ownership of property, it may be assessed to owners unknown. Himmelmänn v. Steiner, 38 Cal. 175; Himmelmänn v. Hoadley, 44 Cal. 213.

Sometimes, the duty of confirming the report is devolved upon the common council. White v. Saginaw, 67 Mich. 33; Granger v. Buffalo, 6 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y., Buffalo Super. Ct.) 238. In such event, the council may ratify, reject, or return the report to the commissioners. But if a report which has been returned to the commissioners is again submitted without modification, it may not be confirmed. Hegeman v. Passaic, 51 N. J. L. 544; State v. South Orange, 46 N. J. L. 317. Or the duty may be devolved upon some board constituted for the purpose. Matter of Deering, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 89; Matter of Lester, 21 Hun (N. Y.) 130; Matter of Roberts, 81 N. By voluntary appearance for the purpose of objecting to the confirmation of the report, a property owner waives any defect in the notice of application for confirmation. Walters v. Lake, 129 Ill. 23.

4. See cases cited in last preceding note.

Where the court is satisfied that the property assessed cannot be benefited to the extent of the amount assessed,

Objections to the report must be seasonably presented in order to be heard;¹ and upon the hearing of the application to confirm the report, the inquiry is confined to such matters as are cognizable by the commissioners.² As a rule, objections to the proceedings of the commissioners, which are not made in due time to be considered at the hearing of the application to confirm the report may be sent back for review until the objection is removed, or until the proceedings are discontinued. Matter of Albany St., 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 149.

The order confirming the report may be set aside for irregularity, fraud, or mistake. Matter of New York, 49 N. Y. 150, affirming 42 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 220.

There must be a clear showing that the report is unjust; otherwise, it will be confirmed. Matter of Public Park Com'rs, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 302; Matter of William & Anthony Sts., 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 678; Matter of Pearl St., 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 651; State v. Passaic, 51 N. J. L. 109; Fagan v. Chicago, 84 Ill. 228; State v. Ramsey County Dist. Ct., 47 Minn. 407; Powers v. Grand Rapids (Mich. 1894), 57 N. W. Rep. 250.

And the commissioners are not competent witnesses to impeach their own report. Quick v. River Forest, 130 Ill. 323.

Where the court is given power by the charter to revise, correct, amend, or confirm the report, it reviews and revises the assessment, and is not limited to the consideration of whether the board exercised their judgment, and whether there was fraud or demonstrable mistake in the assessment. State v. Ensign (Minn. 1893), 56 N. W. Rep. 1006.

1. The objections must be presented within the time, and in the manner, prescribed by statute, in order that they may be heard. Matter of 138th St., 60 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 290; Matter of Opening Eleventh Ave., 49 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 208; Matter of William & Anthony Sts., 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 678; Matter of New York, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 231.

But it has been held that an act providing that all objections to the confirmation of the report, shall be filed in writing at least three days before the time fixed for the hearing of the application for judgment, is directory, and that the court may in its discretion, for sufficient cause shown, permit objections to be filed at any time before the hearing. Thorn v. West Chicago Park Com'rs, 130 Ill. 594.

A lot owner, who has had due notice, and has failed to appear and make his objections as provided by statute, may not bring an action to declare the assessment void and enjoin its collection. Mietzsch v. Berkhout (Cal. 1893), 35 Pac. Rep. 321.

2. Leitch v. La Grange, 138 Ill. 291; Goodwillie v. Lake View, 137 Ill. 51; Gage v. Chicago, 146 Ill. 499; Wright v. Forrestal, 65 Wis. 351; Matter of Southern Boulevard, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 447; In re Frederick St., 155 Pa. St. 623.

Y. 307; Matter of Central Park Com'rs, 50 N. Y. 493; Dolan v. New York, 62 N. Y. 472; Astor v. New York, 62 N. Y. 580; Embury v. Connor, 3 N. Y. 511; Matter of Albany St., 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 149; Matter of Livingston St., 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 556.

On an application to confirm the report of the commissioners, the court will not review the determination of the local authorities as to the proportion of the cost of an improvement to be borne by the public, Leitch v. LaGrange, 138 Ill. 291; nor the motive of such authorities in ordering the improvement made. In re Frederick St., 155 Pa. St. 623. Nor will it hear the objection that one of the commissioners is personally interested; such objection should be made at the hearing of the application for their appointment. Matter of Southern Boulevard, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 447.

The commissioners of estimate and assessment have no authority to pass on constitutional questions, and the confirmation of their report is not final as to, and does not involve the constitutionality of, the act under which the proceedings are instituted. Matter of Public Parks Dept., 85 N. Y. 459; Matter of Lange, 85 N. Y. 307.

their report, will be deemed to have been waived.¹ The confirmation of the report by a tribunal of competent jurisdiction has the legal effect of a judgment, and is not subject to collateral attack upon matters which are properly cognizable in the confirmation proceedings.²

h. REASSESSMENT.—A municipal corporation may not make a reassessment without authority from the legislature,³ but it is competent for the legislature to delegate such power to the municipal authorities.⁴ And cities are, as a rule, authorized to make reassessments where, through a mistake in the preliminary estimate, the original assessment has proved insufficient to defray the expense of an improvement,⁵ or where the original assessment is invalid for some reason not going to the foundation of the authority to make it.⁶

i. LEGISLATIVE POWER TO VALIDATE VOID ASSESSMENTS.—In the absence of an express constitutional inhibition of such legislation, the legislature may, by retrospective enactment, cure an irregularity or want of authority in levying an assessment, if it has antecedent power to render the objectionable act or omission immaterial.¹ But it cannot so validate an assessment which is so fundamentally defective that it could not stand under the authority of prospective legislation.²

But where an error which goes to the foundation of the proceedings, appears on the face of the report, it will not be deemed to have been waived by a failure to make an objection to the confirmation of the report, before the common council. Chicago v. Wright, 32 Ill. 192.

Where an assessment which has become a lien on property is set aside, and a reassessment is made, the lien of the new assessment attaches as of the date of the original assessment. Cadmus v. Fagan, 47 N. J. L. 549.

Where the first assessment is void, the legislature may itself order a reassessment. Matter of Van Antwerp, 56 N. Y. 261; State v. Newark, 34 N. J. L. 236.

Where the former proceedings were void, as had under an unconstitutional law, it was held to be the duty of the commissioners, in making a reassessment under a remedial act, to determine the gross amount to be assessed on the basis of the value of the improvement, and not on that of the agreed price under the void contract. *Bingaman v. The legislature cannot authorize a second assessment, so long as the first one remains in force. State v. Essex Public Road Board, 51 N. J. L. 166.

But if the first assessment is partly void, a reassessment may be authorized, and it will entirely supersede the first one. Dyer v. Scalmanini, 69 Cal. 637.

A reassessment under a grant of authority from the legislature, is not a reopening of a judgment by which a former assessment was declared invalid, and proceedings thereunder restrained. Mills v. Charleton, 29 Wis. 400; Emporia v. Bates, 16 Kan. 495; State v. Newark, 34 N. J. L. 236.

If the thing which is omitted and which constitutes the defect, be of such a nature that the legislature might by prior statute have dispensed with it, or if something has been done, or done in a particular way which the legislature might have made immaterial, the omission or irregular act may be cured by a subsequent statute. *Cromwell v. 8. Collection of Assessments—a. DEMAND.—It is a reasonable condition precedent to the institution of proceedings to collect an assessment, that a demand of payment shall be made, in order that the property owners may have notice of the amounts assessed against them respectively, and may have an opportunity to pay the same without further expense.¹

b. PERSONAL LIABILITY.—The validity of statutes making local assessments liens upon the lands assessed is conceded by the authorities; but whether or not such assessments may be made personal charges upon the owners of the lands, is not well settled. There are many cases in which the validity of statutes creating such personal liability has been either expressly declared or tacitly recognized, although no such liability will be implied;²

the legislative authority therefore must be clearly expressed.¹ And there are cases in which such statutes have been declared unconstitutional on the ground that they authorize the taking of private property for public uses without just compensation.²

In jurisdictions where a personal liability exists, assumpsit will generally lie to collect assessments.³ In some jurisdictions collection may be made by distress and sale of personal property under a municipal warrant;⁴ but this remedy is cumulative, unless the statute in terms or by necessary implication abolishes assumpsit.⁵ The payment of local assessments may not be enforced by the imposition of fines and penalties by the municipality.⁶

c. LIEN ON PROPERTY—(1) In General.—Statutes delegating the power to make local assessments almost invariably make them liens upon the property assessed, or authorize the municipal authorities to do so by appropriate legislation. But, in the absence of legislative authority, no such lien can be created;¹ and when it is authorized, it exists and attaches only in accordance with such terms and conditions as are prescribed by the statute creating it.² The time at which the lien attaches is dependent upon the statute authorizing it, and there is no uniform rule in this regard.³ In many jurisdictions, such liens afford the only means of enforcing the payment of assessments.⁴ And where the property owners are made personally liable for the amounts assessed against them respectively, such amounts may nevertheless be made liens on their property.⁵ The lien may be created for the benefit of the contractor who performs the work, when he looks to the assessment for his pay.⁶

It is competent for the legislature, by prospective enactment, to give such liens precedence to prior mortgages and other incumbrances,⁷ but such precedence will not be implied when the statute gives a lien but is silent as to priorities.¹ Nor will it be construed to apply to mortgages or other incumbrances in favor of the state, unless such is plainly the intent of the legislature.²

(2) Enforcement.—Notwithstanding the existence of the lien, a municipal corporation may not without suit sell the land to pay the assessment, unless authority to do so is delegated by statute,³ and a delegation of power to sell land for the payment of general taxes does not confer authority to sell it to pay local assessments.⁴ Nor is such power to be inferred from a provision in the charter that collection shall be enforced as the city may, by ordinance, provide.⁵ But where a lien exists and there is no mode of collecting assessments provided by statute, the power to collect may be exercised by foreclosure proceedings in a court of equity.⁶ If the lot is owned by two or more persons, the decree of foreclosure should be against the interests of all;⁷ and if the assessment is upon several lots, a decree should state the amount of the lien upon each lot, and should order the sale of each, or of so much thereof as is necessary to satisfy the charge against it. It is error to charge one of the lots with the aggregate of the assessment.⁸ Proceedings to create and enforce such liens must be in strict accord with the statutory provisions on the subject, otherwise they will be invalid.⁹

ments are made and collected by them for their own benefit.¹ But it is frequently provided that the contractor shall look only to assessments on the property benefited for his compensation.² Where this method is adopted, it is customary to issue special tax bills against the property assessed and deliver them to the contractor in payment for the work. The contractor is in many cases authorized to collect such assessments by suit in his own name;³ in others, the action may be brought in the name of the city for the use of the contractor,⁴ and, under some charters, the action may be brought either in the name of the city or of any person to whom payment has been directed.⁵

1. See supra, this title, Time of Assessment.

2. In such cases, if the city authorities act in good faith, the contractor has no remedy against the city for a failure of the assessment or a deficiency therein, New Albany v. Toledo, 18 Ohio St. 447; but if, through the fault of the city, the contractor loses his remedy against the lot owners, the city will be liable to him, Kearney v. Covington, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 339; Leavenworth v. Mills, 6 Kan. 288; Morgan v. Dubuque, 28 Iowa 575; Beard v. Brooklyn, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 142; Newcomb v. Police Jury, 4 Rob. (La.) 233; O'Brien v. Selvage, 10 Bush (Ky.) 696. So, also, if it collects the assessments and misappropriates the proceeds, Chaffee v. Granger, 6 Mich. 651; Lansing v. VanGorder, 24 Mich. 456.

If the portion of the cost of an improvement which is assessed upon property, is in excess of the maximum which may, by law, be so assessed, the city will be liable to the contractor for such excess, Cincinnati v. Diekmeier, 31 Ohio St. 242; unless the contractor expressly agrees to look to the assessment for his compensation at his own risk. Welker v. Toledo, 18 Ohio St. 452; Creighton v. Toledo, 18 Ohio St. 447.

If the city has no authority to make assessments upon property, it will be liable to the contractor, Maier v. Chicago, 38 Ill. 266; Louisville v. Nevin, 10 Bush (Ky.) 549; 19 Am. Rep. 78; Craycraft v. Selvage, 10 Bush (Ky.) 696; or if the city exempts property which would otherwise be liable to assessment, it will be liable to the contractor for any deficiency arising by reason of such exemption. Chicago v. People, 56 Ill. 327.

Where, in such case, property is sold for the collection of delinquent assessments, and is bid in by the city, it does not thereby become liable to the contractor for the amount due on the tax bill, but holds the bill as a trustee for his benefit, and is liable only in case it should sell the tax bill or collect the amount due on it from the owner of the lot. Finney v. Oshkosh, 18 Wis. 209; Lovell v. St. Paul, 10 Minn. 290.

5. Burlington v. Quick, 47 Iowa 222;

Whatever may be the rule as to parties plaintiff in suits to collect such assessments, it is necessary to make all the owners of property against which it is sought to enforce a lien parties defendant, as the decree will not bind owners who are not in court.¹

e. PLEADINGS.—In proceedings to enforce an assessment, the assessment ordinance should be pleaded, together with all the preliminary matters necessary to render such ordinance valid.² All matters and acts made essential to the validity of the assessment by the legislature, should be alleged in the pleadings and proved if denied.³

f. EVIDENCE.—In proceedings to collect an assessment, the assessment roll introduced in evidence establishes a prima facie case for the plaintiff.⁴ So, also, the assessment warrant and diagram with an affidavit of demand and non-payment have been declared to constitute prima facie evidence of the plaintiff's right

When a lot owner dies after the passage of the resolution of intention to improve the street, it is not necessary to make his personal representatives parties defendant in an action brought to foreclose the lien of an assessment upon property belonging to the estate pending settlement thereof; the heirs and devisees are the only necessary parties. This is true, notwithstanding a statute directing the courts to take judicial notice of the ordinances of the city. Johnson v. Ferrell (Ky. 1886), 1 S. W. Rep. 412, 541. But it is sufficient to allege the substance of the ordinance and that it was duly passed. The fact that the ordinance was passed is not a conclusion of law. Heman v. Payne, 27 Mo. App. 481; Eyerman v. Payne, 28 Mo. App. 72; Johnson v. Ferrell (Ky. 1886), 1 S. W. Rep. 541.

The matter of pleading, in such cases, is a subject for legislative regulation.

Whiting v. Townsend, 57 Cal. 515; Richardson v. Tobin, 45 Cal. 30.

But it is doubtful if the legislature has power to dispense with the pleading of facts, the absence of which would render the assessment null and void. Louisville v. Cochran, 82 Ky. 15.

to recover.¹ Under some charters, special tax bills in regular form are made prima facie evidence of the liability of the property owners named therein.² The acceptance of the work by the municipal authorities as having been performed according to contract is, in the absence of proof of fraud, strong evidence of its completion and the manner in which it was done.³

g. DEFENSES.—It may be stated as a general proposition that a property owner should have an opportunity at some stage of the proceedings to make a defense, if he has one,⁴ and charters are so widely variant that no general rule can be stated as to defenses which are available in a suit to collect an assessment and those which must be made earlier, except that the defendant may in such suit interpose any valid defense which he has had no previous opportunity to make.⁵ It is, as a rule, no defense that the work was not done in accordance with the terms of the contract, if it has been accepted by the proper authorities,⁶ but it may be Lambert*, 14 Bush (Ky.) 24; Whitfield v. Hipple (Ky. 1889), 12 S. W. Rep. 50.

Where the contractor receives tax bills in payment for work, a substantial compliance with the contract is sufficient to warrant a recovery thereof, Pittsburgh v. McConnell, 130 Pa. St. 463; Erie v. Butler, 120 Pa. St. 374; Watson v. Philadelphia, 93 Pa. St. 111; Harrisburg v. Baptist, 156 Pa. St. 526; but where there is no pretense that all the work provided for in the contract has been done, a city cannot, by accepting a portion of it, bind lot owners to the payment of assessments therefor. Henderson v. Lambert, 14 Bush (Ky.) 24.

And where the work is not completed within the time specified, and the council refuses to extend the time, there can be no valid assessment made therefor, notwithstanding the contractor goes on and completes the job. Mappa v. Los Angeles, 61 Cal. 309.

But it has been held that where the work was imperfectly done, a property owner sued on a special tax bill is entitled to have his damage, on account of the imperfection, deducted from shown in defense that no valid contract was made.¹ If the contract is let for a price so grossly extravagant that it amounts to a fraud upon property owners, this may defeat the assessment.² If a portion of the work for which an assessment has been made was done by private individuals on their own responsibility, the assessment is liable to be defeated.³ And if an assessment is illegal in part, it is invalid as a whole, unless the illegal part can readily be separated from that which is legal.⁴ In one jurisdiction it is a good defense that the assessment was made for repairs and not for an original improvement.⁵ Local assessments being a species of taxation, a property owner has not, as a rule, the right to set off damages occasioned by the wrongful act of the contractor,⁶ although there are cases in which such right has been recognized.⁷ It is a fatal objection to an assessment that it is for the improvement of a street which has never been laid out or dedicated to the public.⁸

9. Remedies—a. APPEAL.—City charters usually provide that aggrieved property owners may appeal from the decisions of assessing officers to a court of justice, the city council, the board of public works, or some other body constituted a tribunal of review, and a failure to appeal in due time is a waiver of all objections which are reviewable on such appeal.⁹

the charge against him in such tax bill. Eyermann v. Zeppenfeld, 6 Mo. App. 581.

Where property is damaged, rather than benefited, by an improvement, it has been held that this may be shown in defense, as an assessment for such improvement would, under the circumstances, be fraudulent. Foss v. Chicago, 56 Ill. 354. But, on the other hand, it has been held that this is no defense in an action to collect the assessment. Keith v. Bingham, 100 Mo. 300.

A fraudulent side contract by the contractor with the owners of some of the lots to be assessed, is no defense in an action against other lot owners to collect the assessment. The contract should be attacked in a direct proceeding. Himmelmänn v. Hoadley, 44 Cal. 213; Nolan v. Reese, 32 Cal. 484.

b. CERTIORARI.—Assessment proceedings are of a judicial character, and, in the absence of a statutory substitute for such remedy, the record may be removed into a court of justice by the common-law writ of certiorari for the purpose of testing the validity of the assessment.¹

c. EQUITABLE RELIEF—(1) In General.—Where a property owner has just ground for relief, but has no adequate remedy at law, as where the matters complained of do not appear in the record of the proceedings, he may invoke the aid of a court of Bensinger v. District of Columbia, 6 Mackey (D. C.) 285.

In State v. Newark, 25 N. J. L. 404, the court said: "One of the defendants' counsel questioned the power of the court to review these proceedings upon certiorari, on the ground that they were legislative acts. I have no doubt of the power of the court. The practice is too well settled to be questioned. Some of the proceedings are clearly of a judicial character, whatever may be said of others; of this character, are the assessments for benefits, and their confirmation by the common council. This clearly gives jurisdiction, and the court may examine into the legality of such as are of a judicial character, and may also examine whether the previous proceedings, upon which these rest for support, are or not void; if void, the subsequent proceedings dependent upon them cannot be sustained; if not void, still the others may, for other causes, be illegal. If, for either cause, any person has been illegally assessed, he may come to this court for relief."

In Parks v. Boston, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 226; 19 Am. Dec. 322, the court said: "It has been contended, that certiorari will not lie to a court newly instituted and empowered to proceed by methods unknown to the common law; and a case from Siderfin was cited in support of this position. This is true as to writs of error, but not as to writs of certiorari. The law seems to be well settled, that certiorari may be awarded to remove the proceedings from any inferior court, whether it be of ancient or newly created jurisdiction; or whether it proceeds according to the course of the common law or not."

It is too late to review the preliminary proceedings upon certiorari, after the work has been fully completed. State v. Rutherford (N. J. 1890), 19 Atl. Rep. 972; State v. Jersey City (N. J. 1890), 19 Atl. Rep. 1096; State v. Paterson, 40 N. J. L. 244.

equity for relief against the assessment ;¹ unless some statutory form of relief is substituted for the equitable action.² But where the work has been done and the complaining party's property has been thereby benefited, the court may, as a condition precedent

In Lyon v. Alley, 130 U. S. 177, Lamar, J., said: "It may be proper to observe that in the present case the illegality does not appear wholly on the face of the record, but that it is shown in part by evidence outside. . . . We think, therefore, that the allegations of the bill and the facts proved in this case bring it fully within the equity jurisdiction of the court."

An equitable action may be maintained to vacate and set aside an assessment for illegal and fraudulent acts and practices of the city authorities or commissioners, which do not appear in the records. Deiderer v. Voorhies, 81 N. Y. 153; Strusburgh v. New York, 87 N. Y. 452.

But in such action, the complaint must set forth the facts which constitute the illegality or fraud, and not simply allege the conclusion that the expenses of the improvement have been so increased; otherwise it is bad on demurrer. Knapp v. Brooklyn, 97 N. Y. 520.

One who has an adequate remedy at law, or has had such a remedy and has slept on his rights until he has lost it, will not be granted equitable relief against an assessment. Peoria v. Kilder, 26 Ill. 351.

2. By an amendment to the charter of the city of New York, Laws of New York 1874, ch. 312, § 2, the right of an owner to maintain an equitable action to vacate assessments, or to remove the cloud thereby cast upon the title, was taken away, and it was provided that owners of property should thereafter be confined for their remedies in such cases, to the proceedings under the act thereby amended. Matter of Gantz, 85 N. Y. 539.

Proceedings may be maintained under this charter to vacate or reduce an assessment which is so levied as to be a fraud upon property owners. Matter of Livingston, 121 N. Y. 94. But the burden of proof is upon the petitioner. Every presumption is in favor of the validity of the assessment, Matter of Brady, 85 N. Y. 268, and the petitioner can have no relief beyond the amount of his legal injury. Thus, where he had voluntarily paid a portion of the assessment, it was held that it could be vacated only so far as it was a lien upon the petitioner's property. Matter of Hughes, 93 N. Y. 512.

The case of Strusburgh v. New York, 87 N. Y. 452, was an equitable action against the city of New York to set aside an assessment; but the assessment was not made under the charter of New York City, as the land assessed was situated in the late town of Morrisania, and the assessment proceedings which gave rise to the action were had in said town before it became a part of the city of New York.

The New York Act of 1862, ch. 63, § 43, made that portion of the charter of the city of New York which applies to frauds in assessments for local improvements, applicable also to the city of Brooklyn, and when, in 1874, the charter of the city of New York was so amended as to take away the equitable action to vacate assessments, it was contended that the amendment was applicable also to the charter of Brooklyn; but it was held that it applied only to the charter of the city of New York, and did not take away the owner's equitable remedy in the city of Brooklyn. Knapp v. Brooklyn, 97 N. Y. 520.

The charter of the city of Albany also provides a statutory remedy in place of an equitable one. Matter of Pennie, 108 N. Y. 369.

The charter of the city of St. Paul provides that the owners of property assessed, may, upon the city's application for judgment on the assessment warrant, present and have determined, any objection to the assessment going to granting relief, require him to do equity by paying the amount which is justly chargeable on his property.¹

(2) Injunction.—The equitable relief most frequently sought is injunction to restrain the enforcement and collection of assessments alleged to be illegal. Unless otherwise provided by statute, this form of relief may be granted where it will prevent a multiplicity of actions, or where the validity of the assessment must be established by evidence dehors the record.² But if the plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law, an injunction will not be granted.³

to its validity. Under this provision it is held that the property owner may not, when the city objects, maintain an equitable action to set aside an assessment and restrain its collection, but that such action may be maintained, and the validity of the assessment may be determined and the proper relief granted, if the city does not object to the matter's being presented to the court in that manner. Albrecht v. St. Paul, 47 Minn. 531, overruling Mayall v. St. Paul, 30 Minn. 294.

1. Meggett v. Eau Claire, 81 Wis. 326; Mills v. Carleton, 29 Wis. 400; Baker v. Omaha, 16 Neb. 269; Darst v. Griffin, 31 Neb. 668; Pittsburgh's Appeal, 118 Pa. St. 458.

But this will not be required, where the assessment is made upon a basis so false and unwarranted as to furnish no data from which a just proportion of the amount assessed can be ascertained. Howell v. Tacoma, 3 Wash. 711.

In such action, the complaint should allege an offer to pay the amount of the assessment justly chargeable to the property of the plaintiff. Meggett v. Eau Claire, 81 Wis. 326.

Invalid in Part.—Where an assessment is invalid in part only, the court will not quash or set aside the whole of it, if the invalid part can be separated from that which is valid. Elkhart v. Wickwire, 121 Ind. 331; Loesnitz v. Seelinger, 127 Ind. 422; Dyer v. Scalmanini, 69 Cal. 637; Kinsella v. Auburn, 7 N. Y. Supp. 634; 54 Hun (N. Y.) 634; Matter of Feust, 121 N. Y. 299, aff'd 8 N. Y. Supp. 420.

A refusal to vacate an assessment as to a particular lot, does not affect the rights of the owners of other lots. Matter of Rosenbaum, 119 N. Y. 24.

Wilkes-Barre, 142 Pa. St. 198; Lockwood v. St. Louis, 24 Mo. 20.

In Heywood v. Buffalo, 14 N. Y. 534, wherein a perpetual injunction against the enforcement of an assessment was sought, it was held that the court would not entertain a suit for such relief, unless such suit would prevent a multiplicity of actions or irreparable injury to the freehold, or unless the assessment was valid on the face of the proceedings and extrinsic facts were necessary to be proved in order to establish its invalidity or illegality. Accordingly, the complaint showing none of these grounds for relief, was held bad on demurrer. See also Guest v. Brooklyn, 69 N. Y. 506.

It should be alleged in the complaint, that the assessment is regular on its face. Clark v. Dunkirk, 12 Hun (N. Y.) 181.

Where the irregularities are apparent on the face of the proceedings, the aggrieved party has a remedy at law, and an injunction will not be granted. Haff v. Fuller, 45 Ohio St. 495.

Where the assessors have proceeded on a principle which is wrong in law, the collection of the assessment may be enjoined. Clark v. Dunkirk, 12 Hun (N. Y.) 181; aff'd 75 N. Y. 612.

But where they proceed upon a correct principle, an error of judgment on their part is no ground for an injunction; certiorari is the proper remedy. Hoffeld v. Buffalo, 130 N. Y. 387; Kennedy v. Troy, 77 N. Y. 494, reversing 14 Hun (N. Y.) 308.

In Nebraska, the courts are prohibited by statute from enjoining the collection of assessments, unless they are levied for an illegal or unauthorized purpose. Wilson v. Auburn, 27 Neb. 435.

3. Bloomington v. Blodgett, 24 Ill. App. 650; Haff v. Fuller, 45 Ohio St. 495; Strenna v. Montgomery, 86 Ala. 340; Touzalin v. Omaha, 25 Neb. 817.

An injunction will not be granted

(3) Action to Quiet Title.—Where the instrument or record alleged to be an incumbrance upon property is not void on its face, and it appears that the claimant would not develop the defects rendering the assessment invalid by proof which he would be obliged to produce if the title were litigated in an action at law, an aggrieved property owner may invoke the aid of a court of equity in a suit to quiet his title or to remove the cloud of the assessment lien therefrom.¹ But where the claimant's necessary proof would itself develop the infirmity of his claim, equity will not interfere.²

d. RECOVERY BACK.—One who has paid an apparently valid assessment upon his property, in ignorance of its invalidity, may, when such assessment has been vacated, recover the amount paid in an action as for money had and received.³ When the proceedings are regular upon their face they have the force of a judgment, and a payment of the assessment upon presentation and because the improvement was not made in accordance with the contract awarded. McEneney v. Sullivan, 125 Ind. 407; Dever v. Junction City, 45 Kan. 417.

Equity may also enjoin the enforcement of an illegal assessment, in order to prevent a cloud upon title, as such cloud may be prevented as well as removed. Touzalin v. Omaha, 25 Neb. 817; Hamilton v. Omaha, 25 Neb. 826; Tift v. Buffalo (Buff. Super. Ct.), 7 N. Y. Supp. 633.

It was so held, where the tax deed was by statute made presumptive evidence of the regularity of all proceedings prior to its execution, as the property owner would, after sale, be obliged to show the invalidity of the assessment by proof dehors the record. Marvin v. Town, 56 Hun (N. Y.) 510; Hanson v. Town (Supreme Ct.), 10 N. Y. Supp. 150.

And if, after the assessment is set aside, there be a reassessment of an amount less than the original assessment, the balance may be recovered, together with interest thereon from the date of payment. Jersey City v. O'Callaghan, 41 N. J. L. 349.

In New Jersey, an action will not lie to recover back the money paid, until the assessment is set aside. Elizabeth v. Hill, 39 N. J. L. 555; Davenport v. Elizabeth, 41 N. J. L. 362; Fuller v. Elizabeth, 42 N. J. L. 427; State v. Elizabeth, 51 N. J. L. 485.

But in New York, an action will lie to vacate an assessment, or a part thereof, and to recover the money paid, or so much thereof as was illegally assessed. Strusburgh v. New York, 87 N. Y. 452; Knapp v. Brooklyn, 97 N. Y. 520; Trimmer v. Rochester, 134 N. Y. 76; De Montsaunin v. New York, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 188.

It is not necessary that the assessment be first set aside. Bruecher v. Port Chester, 101 N. Y. 240; Horn v. New Lots, 83 N. Y. 100; 38 Am. Rep. 402.

The Statute of Limitations begins to run, not from the time the assessment is set aside, but from the time the money is paid. Trimmer v. Rochester, 134 N. Y. 67.

In an action to recover back an assessment, the order of the city council for the improvement cannot be im-demand is not voluntary, but is made under coercion of law.¹ But where an assessment is invalid on its face, or where the property owner has actual knowledge of its invalidity, a payment without duress is deemed voluntary and the money cannot be recovered back,² even though the payment be made under protest.³

e. ESTOPPEL.—Unless the proceedings under which an assessment is made are void, a property owner who stands by and sees the work in progress without making objections which are available to him is thereafter estopped to make them.⁴ So, also, one who petitions for the improvement may be estopped to contest the assessment of actual benefits upon his property;⁵ but if the proceedings are void, neither a failure to object nor a petition will work an estoppel.⁶

XXII. MUNICIPAL TAXATION—1. Its Nature.—Municipal taxation, here considered, consists in the imposition of taxes by municipalities and quasi municipalities for the purposes of defraying expenses and discharging obligations which they are authorized to assume or which are imposed upon them, other than for state peached for alleged defects in the notices preceding it; such defects can be reached only upon certiorari. Foley v. Haverhill, 144 Mass. 352.

3. Omaha v. Kountze, 25 Neb. 60; Newcomb v. Davenport (Iowa, 1892), 53 N. W. Rep. 232.

The legislature may, by general law, require that an assessment be paid under protest, where it is apparently legal, and provide for its recovery back if there is irregularity or error in the proceedings; but it may not require such payment of an assessment which is absolutely void. Touzalín v. Omaha, 25 Neb. 817.

135 Mass. 162; Hyde Park v. Borden, 94 Ill. 26.

There must be some sort of liability to pay an assessment before an estoppel can arise; consequently, when property attempted to be assessed, is outside of the assessment district, this may be shown, notwithstanding facts which might work an estoppel, if the property were within the district. Rector v. Board of Improvements, 50 Ark. 116.

And an owner's failure to object, while he has no right of action, will work no estoppel when his right of relief does arise. Sim v. Hurst, 44 Ind. 579.

The signatures of the requisite number of property owners being a jurisdictional matter, one who has signed a petition will not be estopped to show that the petition is insufficient for want of signatures. Petition of Sharp, 56 N. Y. 257.

purposes.¹ The system of taxation adopted by a municipality may differ from that of the state, either as to the rate or manner of imposition.² But a local departure from the general policy of the state in imposing taxes, will not be justified unless expressly authorized.³

2. Municipal and Corporate Purposes—a. IN GENERAL.—The purposes for which municipal taxes may be imposed are numerous.⁴ The exercise of the general grant of power to levy taxes must be for such purposes only as are municipal and corporate.⁵

Paterson, 27 N. J. L. 35; Petition of Sharp, 56 N. Y. 257.

1. Public taxes are distinguished from local municipal taxes, such as town, parish, district and village taxes, in Morgan v. Cree, 46 Vt. 773; 10 Am. Rep. 640.

A city may place a higher value upon property than that placed upon it by the state, but not an overvaluation. Fulgum v. Nashville, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 635.

In New York, state and county taxation forms a subject of the general provisions of the Revised Statutes relating to taxes, and municipal taxation is governed by these general rules only so far as the provisions of the law are either expressly or impliedly adopted by laws imposing municipal taxes. Troy v. Mutual Bank, 20 N. Y. 387.

In San Luis Obispo v. Pettit, 87 Cal. 499, it was held that the Municipal Corporation Act of 1883, p. 273, providing that an assessment, levy, and collection of city and town taxes shall conform to that of the state and county taxes, except as to the times therefor, did not prohibit the levy and collection at that time, but the selection of the time was left to the discretion of the council.

In Virginia, the power of the general assembly to authorize municipal corporations to levy taxes for their peculiar purposes, is not limited by art. 4, § 22 et seq., of the constitution of Virginia, which relates to taxation for purposes of state revenue. Gilkeson v. Frederick, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 577.

It is not essential to constitute a "city purpose," that the work shall be wholly within the city limits. A bridge connecting two cities is a city purpose for each. People v. Kelly, 76 N. Y. 489.

In Mead v. Acton, 139 Mass. 341, it was held that a town could not raise money by taxation to pay the expenses of a committee appointed by the town, to effect the passage of an act which was declared unconstitutional when enacted.

When a town in its corporate capacity is the owner of property, it may raise money by taxation, or appropriate its corporate funds for its preservation and protection. Van Sicklen v. Burlington, 27 Vt. 70.

The constitution of Illinois, art. 9, §§ 9, 10, provides that the corporate authorities of the municipal governments of the state may be invested with the power to assess and collect taxes for corporate purposes. See Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 62 Ill. 268; 14 Am. Rep. 99; Board of Trustees v. People, 63 Ill. 299; People v. Dupuyt, 71 Ill. 651; Johnson v. Campbell, 49 Ill. 317; Harward v. St. Clair, etc., Drainage Co., 51 Ill. 132; Gage v. Graham, 57 Ill. 144; People v. Chicago, 51 Ill. 17; 2 Am. Rep. 278;

Whether a tax is necessary for purposes embraced within the charter, is to be determined by the taxing power,¹ and the courts will not interfere unless the determination is clearly erroneous.²

b. TAXATION IN AID OF RAILROADS.—The power of municipalities to tax in aid of railroads has been discussed already in this work.³ The conditions upon which a tax is voted must be performed.⁴ But a departure from the original scheme of the work does not necessarily invalidate the tax.⁵ A departure, however, so radical as to amount to a complete change in the Wilson v. Salomon, 51 Ill. 37; Livingston County v. Darlington, 101 U. S. 407.

A corporate purpose, within the meaning of the constitution, is one necessary or proper to carry into effect the purpose of the corporate body. A tax by a school district, to aid a railroad, is not for a corporate purpose, People v. Trustees of Schools, 78 Ill. 136; nor is a tax imposed for the payment of a debt not incurred by the authority imposing it, and for which it is not responsible. Sleight v. People, 74 Ill. 47.

The levying of a tax, in pursuance of a general law of the state, for the purpose of building bridges, highways, etc., in which the people at large are interested, is not a tax for a corporate purpose within the meaning of the constitution. Will County v. People, 110 Ill. 511.

Taylor v. Thompson, 42 Ill. 9, defined a corporate purpose to mean "a tax to be expended in a manner which shall promote the general prosperity and welfare of the municipality which levies it." See also Middleton v. Aetna L. Ins. Co., 82 Ill. 562.

Taxes for the purpose of defraying election expenses are imposed for a corporate purpose. Wetherell v. Devine, 116 Ill. 631.

The erection of hotels, mercantile, manufacturing and trading houses are not such purposes as are contemplated in the constitution. Mather v. Ottawa, 114 Ill. 659.

The entertainment of official visitors is not a corporate purpose for which a tax may be levied. Law v. People, 87 Ill. 385.

The term "corporate purposes" should not be so strictly construed as to render null a self-imposed tax, merely because it might be questionable whether it would promote the corporate welfare. Taylor v. Thompson, 42 Ill. 9.

1. Hawkins v. Jonesboro, 63 Ga. 527;

Wheeler v. Plattsmouth, 7 Neb. 270; Anderson v. Mayfield (Ky. 1892), 19 S. W. Rep. 598.

2. People v. Kelly, 76 N. Y. 475. And see McCallie v. Chattanooga, 3 Head (Tenn.) 317.

A tax levied to pay the expenses of officers not named in the general law, will be presumed to be legal. Law v. People, 87 Ill. 385.

In Board of Com'rs of Public Schools v. Allegany County, 20 Md. 449, it was held that a power to levy all needful taxes, and discharge all claims authorized by law, confers authority to provide for any local object sanctioned by the legislature.

3. See supra, this title, Purposes of Taxation. See also MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, vol. 15, p. 1192; MUNICIPAL SECURITIES, vol. 15, p. 1204.

As to the power of the legislature to authorize such taxation, see Pine Grove Tp. v. Talcott, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 666; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Otoe County, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 667; Olcott v. Fond du Lac County, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 678; Rogers v. Burlington, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 654.

Insolvency of Road.—The insolvency of a railway company, or its inability to complete its road, does not affect the legality of a tax previously levied in its behalf. Wilson v. Hamilton County, 68 Ind. 508.

5. Shontz v. Evans, 40 Iowa 139; Muscantine West. R. Co. v. Horton, 38 Iowa 33; Jenkins v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 29 Iowa 255; First Nat. Bank v. Concord, 50 Vt. 257; Lynch v. Eastern, etc., R. Co., 57 Wis. 430.

A tax voted to aid in the construction of a railroad is collectible, although the road constructed be narrow gauge, unless it be shown that it is unable to do the business of the country through which it passes. Casady v. Lowry, original purpose will invalidate the tax, although no conditions were imposed.¹

The statute may declare a tax in aid of a railroad assignable.² A tax in aid of a railroad is not forfeited by a perpetual lease of the road made in good faith,³ or by a sale of all its property, rights, and franchises⁴ after the aid is voted. And, on the other hand, the obligation to perform the conditions imposed is as binding upon the transferee as upon the original grantee.⁵

c. SINKING FUND TAXES.—Power may be conferred on municipalities to provide a sinking fund for the payment of public loans, principal or interest.⁶ Under the power to tax for such a fund,

Even though a sale of a railroad amounts to a voluntary dissolution of the corporation, it would still be considered as surviving, to the extent of permitting its rights and obligations, growing out of a vote of a tax in aid of it, to be enforced. Muscatine West. R. Co. v. Horton, 38 Iowa 33.

In People v. Clayton, 88 Ill. 45, it was held that a condition that a subscription should not be paid until the company should run their first locomotive "over their projected line of road," contemplates the substantial completion of the road for the movement of trains, and that the running of the company's trains over the road of another company for the distance of several miles, under a terminable lease from such company, is not a compliance with the conditions; but that a purchase of such other road, or a perpetual lease of it, adopting it as a permanent part of the projected road, is sufficient. See also Iowa, etc., R. Co. v. Schenck, 50 Iowa 628.

4. Henry County v. Nicolay, 95 U. S. 619; Nugent v. Putnam County, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 241; Smith v. Clark County, 54 Mo. 58; Muscatine West R. Co. v. Horton, 38 Iowa 33; Parsons v. Childs, 36 Iowa 108; Merrill v. Marshall County, 74 Iowa 24; Lynch v. Eastern, etc., R. Co., 57 Wis. 430. And see Scotland County v. Thomas, 94 U. S. 682.

675, it was held that a tax voted by a township in aid of a railroad is forfeited by alienation of the road before its completion, and that the collection of the tax may be enjoined. See also Cantillon v. Dubuque, etc., R. Co. (Iowa, 1887), 35 N. W. Rep. 620.

Sale of Insolvent Road.—Mandamus does not lie in favor of a railway company which has purchased the stock of another insolvent company at foreclosure sale, to which the people of the township had voted aid, to compel the levy and collection of a tax for the purpose of paying to it the amount voted in the aid of the original company. Where an act providing for the creation of a sinking fund, also provided that the commissioners of the fund should report to the council the amount necessary to be raised, it was held that the council had no authority to levy the tax until the commissioners had made their report. St. Louis County v. Nettleton, 22 Minn. 356.

Property Subsequently Annexed.—Property which has been annexed to the city after the creation of the debt, may be taxed for this purpose. Stillz v. Indianapolis, 81 Ind. 582.

The constitution of Pennsylvania requires cities to impose annual taxes, when necessary for the purpose of paying their public debt. They are in addition to the usual taxes for city purposes; and, although limited, they may taxes may not be levied to pay a floating indebtedness.¹ The tax cannot be continued after the purpose for which it was authorized has been accomplished;² nor can the fund, when collected, be applied to any other purpose.³

3. Power to Impose—a. IN GENERAL.—While the power to tax belongs to the sovereign power of the state, it is not inherent in municipal corporations, towns or townships, counties, and other artificial districts and subdivisions, and can be exercised by them only when delegated by the legislature in plain and unmistakable terms,⁴ or when resulting by necessary implication from other Reservation of Special Tax.—In New York, it is provided that taxes assessed upon any railroad in a town, city, or village, which has issued bonds in aid of the construction of the road, are to be set apart as a sinking fund to be applied in payment of such bonds. *Clark v. In Cushing v. Newburyport, 10 Met. (Mass.) 508, it was held that municipal corporations are possessed of limited powers, and that they cannot vote and assess money upon the inhabitants for all purposes indiscriminately, but must be confined to the established powers of such organizations, as settled by positive enactment, or by well-defined and ancient usage.

The words "authority of law," when used with reference to the power of a municipality to tax, can refer only to an act of the legislature, the law-making power under the constitution, duly passed and approved. Reineman v. Covington, etc., R. Co., 7 Neb. 310.

So far as the power to tax exists in municipal corporations, it is by grant, and is called a franchise. O'Byrne v. Savannah, 41 Ga. 331.

Under constitutional provisions prohibiting local or special laws, the delegation to cities of legislative authority incident to municipal governments, can be made only by general law. Covington v. East St. Louis, 78 Ill. 548.

Cannot be Acquired by Prescription.—The exercise of a municipal authority by one town, over a portion of the territory of another, and the acquiescence of the latter for a period of more than twenty years, will not authorize the former to levy and collect taxes on persons dwelling in such territory. *Ham v. By the Illinois Act of 1883, power is conferred on cities not organized under the general law, but acting under special charters, to levy, in addition to the municipal taxes authorized by their charters, taxes for distinct objects named—as a sewer-fund tax and a water-fund tax—to be levied at the discretion of the legislative authority of the city. *Thatcher v. The legislature, in delegating its power to tax to municipalities, is not confined to particular existing municipalities, but may create others, or other kinds or classes of political subdivisions, and, when so created, may endow them with the faculties and attributes of pre-existing municipalities.³ Constitutional provisions conferring

The words "all necessary expenses," cannot be construed to enlarge a power to tax for specific purposes. Beaty v. Knowler, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 152.

An authority to towns to vote money for certain specified purposes and other necessary charges, is not intended to be an enumeration of objects and purposes for which towns may raise money, but a mere expression of a few prominent objects by way of instance, and a general reference to others extending to all other matters falling within their rights and duties. *Van Sicklen v. Nor will a grant of power to impose a special tax, confer authority to accomplish the same purpose by a general tax. Webster v. People, 98 Ill. 343.

Between the right to make special assessments for local improvements, and that of taxation for general corporate purposes, there is a clear distinction involving in their exercise essentially different powers and principles. One is not included in the other, nor can one be exercised any more than the other, without a grant of authority from the legislature. Fairfield v. Ratcliff, 20 Iowa 396.

In Illinois, the power to assess and collect taxes for corporate purposes, cannot be given to or exercised by a fractional portion of a municipality. Madison County v. People, 58 Ill. 456; People v. Canty, 55 Ill. 33.

In Spring v. Olney, 78 Ill. 101, it was held that an authority to incorporate cities, to levy taxes annually, to a certain extent, applies as well to cities incorporated under special charters as to those incorporated under general acts.

Power to erect water works, carries with it power to impose a tax to pay therefor. Taylor v. McFadden, 84 Iowa 262.

And the same may be said of the power to erect gas works; and the property of a gas company will be subject to such taxation, though the result may be disastrous to its business. Hamilton Gas Light, etc., Co. v. Hamilton, 37 Fed. Rep. 832.

Where the power of taxation is limited to seven mills on the dollar, a power of a city to raise more than that for the purpose of erecting hospitals, poor-houses, market-houses, etc., is not necessarily implied from a provision in the charter making it the duty of its officers to erect such buildings. Leavenworth v. Norton, 1 Kan. 405, approved in Burnes v. Atchison, 2 Kan. 454.

In Ridenour v. Saffin, 1 Handy (Ohio) 464, it was held that a constitutional provision directing the assembly to restrict the power of taxation of municipal corporations, presupposes its existence.

The power to pay debts or provide for their payment, to fund them and issue the necessary evidence thereof, exists in every corporation without any express authority in its charter. Galena v. Corwith, 48 Ill. 423; 95 Am. Dec. 557. And a town or its officers, duly authorized to settle a disputed claim against it, upon doing so in the exercise of good faith and sound discretion, may enforce a tax duly levied upon its citizens to raise money for its payment. *Vose v. The powers of a municipal corporation consist of those granted in express words, necessarily implied or necessarily incident to the powers expressly granted, and those absolutely essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation, not simply convenient, but indispensable. *Merriam v. c. LIMITATIONS ON POWER.—Constitutional provisions, both state and federal, limiting the rate of taxation, generally apply to municipal corporations,³ and a constitutional limitation upon the right to incur indebtedness, operates as a limit upon the right to

Where the municipality undertakes that which does not necessarily appertain to it, it must have express power to do so, but the power is implied where it undertakes to do that which is necessary. Williamsport v. Com., 84 Pa. St. 487; 24 Am. Rep. 208.

In Davey v. Galveston, 45 Tex. 201, it was held that an act authorizing the issue and sale of bonds for certain purposes, and a levy of a special tax to meet the same, is sufficient to authorize a tax to pay interest on the bonds.

But the right of a municipality to contract, and the validity of its contracts, is limited by the right to tax, and if, in a given case, no tax can lawfully be levied to pay a debt, the contract itself is void for want of authority to make it. Citizens' Sav., etc., Assoc. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 655; Hanson v. Vernon, 27 Iowa 28; 1 Am. Rep. 215; Allen v. Jay, 60 Me. 127; 11 Am. Rep. 185; Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 454; 15 Am. Dec. 39; *Sharpless v. In Kentucky Union R. Co. v. Bourbon County, 85 Ky. 98, it was held that no valid and enforceable subscription for stock can be made without power to levy and collect taxes to satisfy it.

An act authorizing the municipality to incur a debt for a special purpose, confers authority to levy taxes for the payment thereof in excess of the limit of taxation authorized by law for ordinary municipal purposes. Quincy v. Jackson, 113 U. S. 332.

In Louisiana, where bonds are issued as security for a debt, it is essential that the ordinance creating the debt shall provide the means of paying the principal and interest thereon. Knox v. Baton Rouge, 36 La. Ann. 427. And in Hamlin v. Meadville, 6 Neb. 227, it was held that where the question of issuing bonds to any railroad was submitted to the people of a county, but without accompanying the same by a proposition to levy a tax to meet

In ascertaining whether the cost of an improvement exceeds the limit, it is necessary to consider only what is required to be actually paid. And where damages and benefits have been assessed, the excess of damages over the benefits is all that should be considered in estimating the cost. Andrews v. People, 84 Ill. 28; *Wright v. The South Carolina Const., art. 9, § 9, making it the duty of the general assembly to provide for the incorporation and organization of cities and towns, and restricting their powers of taxation, does not require a municipal corporation to be limited to a certain rate of taxation, but only that the power be restricted as to the subjects and objects of the tax imposed. *State v. A general provision authorizing a municipality to create a debt upon compliance with certain formalities, but restraining it to a certain rate of taxation, and authorizing it to construct wharves, docks, piers, etc., the expense of which might far exceed the annual revenues of a municipality at the general rate of taxes, empowers it to create a debt for these undertakings only. Lafayette v. Cox, 5 Ind. 38.

A debt payable in the future, or upon a contingency, or the happening of some future event, is within a constitutional restriction upon the amount of municipal indebtedness, as well as a debt payable presently and absolutely, and it makes no difference whether the debt be for current expenses or for something else. Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill. 626.

In People v. Flagg, 12 Am. Law Reg. 80, it was held that constitutional provisions prohibiting the contracting of any debt by or in behalf of the state, unless authorized by a law submitted to the people, do not apply to the debts of cities or subordinate municipal divisions, but to those of the state itself.

power to tax, is a limitation upon the taxing officers only; it in no way controls the legislature, who may repeal the same, either expressly, or impliedly, by inconsistent legislation. Com. v. Allegheny County, 40 Pa. St. 348.

A tax assessed prior to the time when a limit upon the rate takes effect, but not finally passed until afterwards, is subject to the limit. Overall v. Reunzi, 67 Mo. 203; St. Joseph Board of Public Schools v. Patten, 62 Mo. 444.

But a municipal corporation may levy a higher rate of taxation than that laid by the state and county for the same year. Fulgum v. Nashville, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 635.

The Washington Act of March 9th, 1893, providing for the assessment and collection of taxes in certain municipal corporations, does not apply to the city of Port Townsend, that not being a classified city under the general law of the state, and there being nothing in the act showing an intention to include cities not provided for by such classification. Port Townsend v. Sheehan, 6 Wash. 220.

Under Wisconsin Rev. St., § 1240, no town which has less than five hundred inhabitants may levy a highway tax of more than $1,000 in one year, and no town having two or more congressional townships shall levy a tax, exclusive of the mill tax, of more than $2,000 in any one year. It was held that a town which was composed of two congressional townships, and had less than five hundred inhabitants, could not levy a highway tax of more than $1,000. C. N. Nelson Lumber Co. v. Loraine, 24 Fed. Rep. 456.

The power of a city of the second class to pay for electric lighting, water, and fire-department supplies, is within the limitation of the taxing power for general revenue purposes to ten mills on the dollar, by Kansas Gen. Sts., of 1889, par. 788, and does not extend to forty mills under par. 796, providing that the levy of city taxes for all general purposes, exclusive of school purposes, shall at no time exceed four per cent. of the taxable property, but giving no express power to tax. Stewart v. Kansas Town Co., 50 Kan. 553; Stewart v. Adams, 50 Kan. 568.

City taxes for general purposes only, are included within par. 796.

taxation in excess of such limitations, is void.¹ But a limitation, either constitutional or legislative, does not apply to taxes levied

Columbus Water Co. v. Columbus, 48 Kan. 99.

Unlimited Grant of Power Void.—When the legislature attempts to confer upon a municipal corporation an unrestricted power to levy taxes and raise money, aside and above what may be necessary and proper to support the local government, and for legitimate municipal purposes, such unlimited grant of power is void. Smith v. Fon du Lac, 10 Biss. (U. S.) 418; Foster v. Kenosha, 12 Wis. 618; Broadhead v. Milwaukee, 19 Wis. 624; 88 Am. Dec. 71.

Judicial Notice.—All legislative acts conferring or restricting the revenue powers of a municipality are, in their nature, public laws, whether so declared in terms or not, and courts are bound to take judicial notice of them in all proceedings affecting revenue matters. Binkert v. Jansen, 94 Ill. 283.

Does not Limit the Right to Contract.—In Emerson v. Blairsville, 2 Pittsb. (Pa.) 39, it was held that a limitation on the taxing power does not amount to a prohibition to contract debts. And when a municipal corporation exceeds the limits of its taxing power, the courts are powerless to control it in the absence of restraint in the law creating it. And, to the same effect, see Howard v. Oshkosh, 33 Wis. 309; Kinsey v. Pulaski County, 2 Dill. (U. S.) 253.

Enlargement of Authority.—The exercise by the legislature of its powers to limit taxation, does not prevent it from again exercising its power by enlarging the authority to tax. Blanding v. Burr, 13 Cal. 343. And see State v. Beaufort (S. Car. 1893), 17 S. E. Rep. 355. And a grant of authority by the legislature to county commissioners, to create a debt and provide for the payment thereof, is an enlargement of the power to tax to meet the demand, and an implied repeal of any conflicting statutory implication. Com. v. Allegheny County, 40 Pa. St. 349; Com. v. Pittsburgh, 34 Pa. St. 496; East St. Louis v. People, 124 Ill. 655.

But a general law requiring a city to make a return of taxes which it requires to be levied, to the clerk of the county, does not work a repeal of a provision in its charter prohibiting it from levying over a certain rate per cent. Edwards

School Furniture Co. v. Harvey, 45 Iowa 466.

In the absence of constitutional provision, if the legislature prescribes a limit to taxation, it must be observed, unless it is a total prohibition of all taxation; if it prescribes no limit, the right of the municipality is unlimited. Beck v. Allen, 58 Miss. 143.

Within the limitation of a maximum amount to be raised by taxation, the amount to be raised is a matter properly intrusted to the discretion of the committee or body authorized to raise it. Brown v. Hoadley, 12 Vt. 472.

If, at an annual meeting, a town has voted to raise so much money as to require the assessment of the full sum allowed by law to be assessed upon polls in any one year, a tax subsequently voted must be assessed only upon property. Freeland v. Hastings, 10 Allen (Mass.) 570.

The value of lands upon a tax list, upon which no valuation was placed, is admissible in evidence in an action upon orders of a school district, to establish that they were issued in excess of the constitutional limit of indebtedness. Wormley v. Carroll Dist. Tp., 45 Iowa 666.

The levy of a school tax of three per cent. is not shown to be illegal, when the law allows a tax of that amount for building purposes, if it is not shown in what district the property taxed is situated, or what rate was required to be levied in each district. Gage v. Bailey, 102 Ill. 11.

A levy which imposes a tax smaller than that which by law it might have imposed, is good. Hollister v. Bennett, 9 Ohio 83.

Where a limitation upon the rate of taxation does not apply, a municipality may levy, assess, and collect such taxes as are necessary to the accomplishment of a proper object. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Harrison County, 54 Tex. 119.

A statute conferring the power and duty to construct a public work according to a designated plan, with a separate clause authorizing the board charged with the duty to call on certain municipalities for such sums as they deem proper for the expense, providing the amount to be paid shall not exceed a specified sum, limits the amount of contribution by each, but does not limit the entire cost of the work. People v. Kelley, 5 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 383; 76 N. Y. 489.

Where a tax is levied, which might have been authorized by either of two statutes, but which would be excessive if levied under one of them, it will be presumed to have been levied under the other. Lima v. McBride, 34 Ohio St. 338.

A court will not assume, in the absence of any proof, that a tax voted would raise more money than was needed, so that there would be a balance to be applied to an unlawful debt. Greenbanks v. Boutwell, 43 Vt. 207.

In Alvord v. Collin, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 418, where one list of school taxes, and another of county taxes, is made, under a vote to raise a certain sum for the support of schools and another sum for contingent expenses, and on the first list, the sum assessed exceeded the sum voted for schools, but the aggregate of both was less than the amount authorized to be raised by taxation, the assessment was held valid.

There may be different rates of taxes for different taxes in the same year, provided the aggregate does not exceed the limit fixed by law. Benoist v. St. Louis, 19 Mo. 179.

Taxes levied for the support of the poor are to be regarded as current expenses of the county, within a statute limiting the amount which can be raised within any year for current expenses. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Wilhelm, 33 Kan. 206. And see Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Albright, 33 Kan. 211.

Increase of Maximum Rate.—Under the laws of some of the states, the maximum rate may be increased by a vote of the district upon which it is imposed, taken in a prescribed manner, and when the rate is so increased, the increased rate becomes the maximum limit. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Lamkin, 97 Mo. 496.

Cure of Excessive Levy.—Where a city levies a tax in excess of its power, it cannot be cured by directing the collector, after the warrant comes into his hands, to collect only a certain rate per cent., not in excess of the limit. Webster v. People, 98 Ill. 343.

Remission of Excess.—But in State v. McClurg, 27 N. J. L. 253, it was held that if taxes are assessed in excess of the limit, the assessment is not void in whole, but only as to the excess, which may be remitted. And to the same effect, see Chambers v. Myrick, 61 Miss. 459.

Error in Judgment of Officers Fixing the Rate.—A levy that produces an in payment of debts incurred prior to its adoption,¹ nor is a limit upon the power to tax for general purposes inconsistent with the grant of authority to impose taxation for special purposes in excess of the limit;² and the taxing power of a municipality is not exhausted amount greater than the sum authorized to be raised, is not invalid if the officers whose duty it is to make it, have fixed such a rate per cent. as in their judgment would produce the required amount. Union Trust Co. v. Weber, 96 Ill. 346; Edwards v. People, 88 Ill. 340; Faris v. Reynolds, 70 Ind. 359; Dwyer v. Hackworth, 57 Tex. 245; Scoville v. Cleveland, 1 Ohio St. 126; Chandler v. Bradish, 23 Vt. 416. And see O'Grady v. Barnhisel, 23 Cal. 287; Kelly v. Corson, 8 Wis. 182.

The probability of a delinquency is a matter which may fairly be considered in determining the amount of a levy. Marion County v. Harvey County, 26 Kan. 181; Smith v. Leavenworth County, 9 Kan. 296; People v. Cooper, 10 Ill. App. 384; Hyde Park v. Ingalls, 87 Ill. 11; People v. Wiltshire, 92 Ill. 260; Vose v. Frankfort, 64 Me. 229.

Penalties.—But interest on the tax due, and a penalty for delinquency, may be added over and above the limit. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Hartshorn, 30 Fed. Rep. 541. The penalty pertains to the remedy, and is no part of the tax when levied. Tobin v. Hartshorn, 69 Iowa 648.

If such indebtedness is not ascertained until after the limitation takes effect, and the trustees of the village refuse to pay, mandamus will lie to compel them. People v. Edgewater, 51 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 280.

A creditor is required to take notice of statutes prohibiting or limiting the exercise of the taxing power of a municipality to raise money for the payment of the debt. Rees v. Watertown, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 107.

A railroad company's charter having conferred on municipalities power to subscribe to its stock, and, by implication, power to levy taxes to meet the obligation, it was held that a subsequent general law limiting the rate of taxation, had no application. Peoria, etc., R. Co. v. People, 116 Ill. 401.

As a general rule, special taxes imposed to meet a special burden are held to be unaffected by restrictions upon the rate of general taxation, unless expressly placed within them. Nashville, etc., R. Co. v. Franklin County, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 707; 7 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 260; Peoria, etc., R. Co. v. People, 116 Ill. 401; Brodie v. McCabe, 33 Ark. 690; Rice v. Walker, 44 Iowa 458; Soens v. Co. v. Clay County, 13 Neb. 367; Reineman v. Covington, etc., R. Co., 7 Neb. 310; Clark v. Davenport, 14 Iowa 494; Beck v. Allen, 58 Miss. 143; Leavenworth v. Norton, 1 Kan. 405; Burnes v. Atchison, 2 Kan. 448; U. S. v. Burlington, 2 Am. Law Reg. N. S. 394. And many of the states have adopted restrictions upon the rate of taxation, with direct reference to special taxes. See Barlow v. Sumter County, 47 Ga. 639; Couper v. Rowe, 42 Ga. 229; Arnett v. Griffin, 60 Ga. 350; Waller v. Perkins, 52 Ga. 233;

by embracing in the general levy items as to which the limitation upon its power to tax does not apply.¹ Limitations on the taxing power are not to be enlarged by implication from general provisions conferring the power to contract, make improvements, erect usual and ordinary buildings, and incur liability.² Nor is any duty imposed upon a municipality, under a special authority to pay judgments, to levy a special tax in excess of the limit to pay a judgment against it for ordinary indebtedness;³ though where the judgment is founded upon a contract, the obligation of which such a restriction would impair, the rule has been held otherwise.⁴

d. WITHDRAWAL OR ALTERATION OF POWER.—The power of municipal corporations to levy taxes may be enlarged, abridged,

In Nashville, etc., R. Co. v. Franklin County, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 707, it was held that a statutory provision that the rate of taxation for county purposes should not exceed the rate of state taxation for the time being, prohibits the counties, after making a levy for general county purposes equal to the rate of state taxation, from making an additional levy for special purposes, unless specially authorized by law.

The power of a municipality to raise more than the amount limited by law for the erection of certain works, is not necessarily implied from a provision making it the duty of its officers to erect such works. Leavenworth v. Norton, 1 Kan. 405.

3. Carroll County v. U. S., 18 Wall. (U. S.) 71, distinguishing Butz v. Muscatine, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 575; Osborne County v. Blake, 25 Kan. 356; Arnold v. Hawkins, 95 Mo. 569; Witkowski v. Bradley, 35 La. Ann. 904.

In Rice v. Walker, 44 Iowa 458, under the Iowa code then in force, it was held, distinguishing Iowa R. Land Co. v. Sac County, 39 Iowa 126; Jeffries v. Lawrence, 42 Iowa 498, and Carroll County v. U. S., 18 Wall. (U. S.) 71, that a tax might be levied in excess of the limit to pay judgments against a city. And in Britton v. Platte City, 2 Dill. (U. S.) 1, it was held that the power and duty of a municipality to levy a special tax in payment of judgments, is not restricted by a provision in its charter authorizing it to levy, for ordinary municipal purposes, a general tax not exceeding a certain specified rate.

But a village which obtains a right to levy a higher rate, by reorganization under the general incorporation law, may raise money at such higher rate to pay a judgment upon a claim accruing before the reorganization. Carney v. Marseilles, 136 Ill. 401.

4. See Witkowski v. Bradley, 35 La. Ann. 904; Favrot v. East Baton Rouge, 34 La. Ann. 491. A party claiming a mandamus to compel the levy of a tax in excess of the limit, to pay his judgment, must allege and prove that it was founded upon a contract. State v. Police Jury, 32 La. Ann. 884.

In Iowa, the validity of negotiable bonds of a county, issued in satisfaction of judgments, in the hands of innocent holders for value, cannot be questioned by showing that the judgments were rendered upon warrants issued in excess of a constitutional limit upon the right to incur debts, and a tax levied to pay such bonds may be enforced. Sioux City, etc., R. Co. v. Osceola County, 52 Iowa 26; Sioux City, etc., R. Co. v. Osceola County, 45 Iowa 168.

Merger of Bond in Judgment.—The recovery of a judgment against a city, or entirely withdrawn at the pleasure of the legislature.¹ Withdrawal or alteration of the power, however, will not be presumed in the absence of a clear expression of the legislative intent;² and if it would operate an impairment of the obligation of con-on its bond, will not merge the indebtedness in the judgment so that it will lose its proper classification; the origin of the debt will fix its classification, which will remain, however numerous the changes it may undergo in form. East St. Louis v. Underwood, 105 Ill. 308.

There is no element of property, in the right of taxation, conferred upon municipal corporations. Williamson v. New Jersey, 130 U. S. 189. They can only raise money and apply it to a particular purpose by virtue of a delegated authority, and the same authority that grants the power may alter the law and direct it to a different object. St. Louis v. Shields, 52 Mo. 354.

The legislature may, by an act retrospective in terms, which takes effect before a municipal tax becomes due, annul it, and vest in another body the power to levy the tax for that year. State v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 9 Mo. App. 532. But it cannot entirely release the payment of taxes already levied. Dubuque v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 39 Iowa 56.

The Montana constitution, adopted at the time of its admission as a state, and the subsequent revenue law of 1891, did not repeal the prior ordinances of cities relating to the levy and collection of municipal taxes so as to invalidate all subsequent proceedings relating thereto, unless had under the general revenue law. Lockey v. Walker, 12 Mont. 577.

A statute providing for taking the vote of the people of certain counties in relation to a tax to be laid, confers a mere privilege upon the people, and when the right has not been exercised, it confers no rights which prevent the legislature from repealing the statute. Covington, etc., R. Co. v. Kenton County Ct., 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 144.

Taxes levied by a municipality before the repeal of its charter, other than such as were levied in obedience to special requirements of contracts entered into under the authority of law, and such as were levied under judicial direction for the payment of judgments recovered against the municipality, cannot be collected through the instrumentality of a court of chancery and at the instance of its creditors; the remedy is by appeal to the legislature, which alone can grant relief. Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 472.

Quasi Municipality.—The power of the legislature to abolish, at its discretion, school districts and other districts established by its authority for special municipal purposes, is undoubted. Whitney v. Stow, 111 Mass. 368; Blackstone v. Taft, 4 Gray (Mass.) 250; Weymouth, etc., Fire Dist. v. Norfolk County, 108 Mass. 142.

2. Orange, etc., R. Co. v. Alexandria, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 184. And see Kinney v. Zimbleman, 36 Tex. 554; Reclamation Dist. v. Goldman, 61 Cal. 205; New Orleans v. Hart, 14 La. Ann. 803; Doggett v. Walter, 15 Fla. 355.

In Fuller v. Heath, 89 Ill. 296, it was held that the adoption of a general incorporation law relating to cities, and the passage of a general school law, do not modify or impair any former special laws authorizing a city as a public agency to levy and collect taxes for school purposes.

Where the state constitution author-tracts entered into upon a pledge, either express or implied, that the taxing power should be exercised for their fulfillment, the law withdrawing the power is void.¹ Upon the dissolution of a izes the framing and adoption by a city, of such a charter for its own government, which the legislature cannot change or amend, the fact that a freeholder's charter was approved by the legislature by resolution, and not by bill, and is not, therefore, a law, will not deprive it of the power to levy and collect taxes, as the power of taxation is necessarily implied, being essential to municipal existence. Security Sav. Bank & T. Co. v. Hinton, 97 Cal. 214.

Where bonds have been issued under an authority providing for the levy of taxes for their protection, the holder thereof has a right to look to the taxing provision as a part of his security, and to demand at the proper time that it be exercised in his favor. The measure of that right is the constitutional limit of the power which the legislature could grant to the municipality when the contract was made. Brodie v. McCabe, 33 Ark. 690.

A creditor of a county cannot be compelled to accept another and essentially different mode of payment from that provided by his contract; that is to say, by the laws existing at the time he became a creditor of the county; and if there were funds in the treasury of the county applicable to such payment at the time he made demand therefor, which were raised under the law as it stood at the time of the contract, he has a right to be paid from these funds, and the legislature cannot deprive him of it without his consent. Rose v. Estudillo, 39 Cal. 270.

A municipality cannot, by its own

e. POWER TO IMPOSE SPECIAL TAXES.—When a work partakes of a public nature, and is thought to be of special local benefit to certain municipal subdivisions, they may be authorized by the state, in the absence of constitutional inhibition, to engage in or aid in its prosecution, and to levy special taxes to meet the obligations thereby incurred.² But special taxation is not authorized

Special taxation differs from general taxation, in that general taxation is imposed for the purpose of meeting the general and regularly recurring expenses of government, while special taxation is imposed for some special purpose, usually not governmental, but which is designed to indirectly affect the public welfare. *Treadway v. The state legislature, unless prohibited by constitutional provision, possesses the power to authorize a municipal corporation to aid a railroad company in constructing a railroad for the general benefit of the citizens of the municipality. Rogers v. Burlington, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 654.

Power to a municipality to make subscriptions to the stock of railway companies, issue bonds, and levy the requisite tax to pay them, providing that the bonds shall be in full payment of the subscription, provides for subscriptions payable in bonds to be ultimately discharged by the levy of a tax, and not for subscriptions to be paid in money, in the first instance, previously raised by taxation. *Prairie v. Power to Grant Aid in Territories.—In *Treadway v. 4. Compulsory Taxation — a. LEGISLATIVE COMPULSION. — As regards matters of general interest, and duties which municipalities owe to the state at large, the control of the latter is complete, and the legislature may, by mandatory act, compel the levy of a tax necessary to the performance of such public duties and functions as fall within the general scope and object of the municipal organization.² But as regards property rights and matters exclusively local, the action of the municipality is usually founded upon its

Upon the division of towns and school districts, the legislature has always exercised the power of making an equitable arrangement as to the common property and the common burdens, and unless taken away by constitutional provision, it is a power which must always exist. Where a township has issued bonds for the construction of a bridge, and, before they are paid, a portion of such township is detached, and together with other territory organized into a new township, it is the duty of the officers of the old township to levy all taxes for the payment of such bonds, whether they are to be levied on the property of the old township or that of the detached territory. Fender v. Neosho Falls Tp., 22 Kan. 305.

The organization of a township created by the division of the territory of another, is not complete until its officers have been elected and have entered upon the discharge of their duties, and until that time, it remains a part of the original township, and is subject to the payment of taxes legally levied thereon. The legislature may compel a county, against its will, to levy and collect a tax for the improvement of a river or harbor within its limits, and in which

b. JUDICIAL COMPULSION.—See MANDAMUS, vol. 14, p. 186.

5. Submission to Popular Vote—a. IN GENERAL.—The legislature may authorize local bodies to incur obligations and raise revenue without the approval of the taxpayers and voters generally;² but it is vitally interested, though the state at large and other counties may also derive benefit from the improvement. Kimball v. Mobile County, 3 Woods (U. S.) 555. And it may, by mandatory act, require the county commissioners of the county to levy a tax, and incur debts for the construction and maintenance of a bridge located within the limits of another county, where the purpose of the tax is not only public, but the object is at the same time local in its character, and of special and peculiar interest to the people to be taxed. Talbot County v. Queen Anne's County, 50 Md. 245. It may cause taxes to be imposed for the payment of the debts of a municipality, Dunnovan v. Green, 57 Ill. 63; Decker v. Hughes, 68 Ill. 33; and may compel such municipality to pay, out of the funds in its treasury or by taxation, a demand which in good conscience it ought to pay, though there be no legal liability to pay it. Sinton v. Ashbury, 41 Cal. 525; Union Tp. v. Rader, 39 N. J. L. 509.

But the power to decide whether a municipality is under a legal obligation to pay a claim, is a judicial one which must be exercised by the courts alone. State v. Tappan, 29 Wis. 664; 9 Am. Rep. 622.

The legislature has power to compel local improvements which, in its judgment, will promote the health of the people and advance the public good, and in the exercise of this power, it may abate nuisances, construct and repair highways, open canals for irrigating arid districts, and perform many other similar acts for the public good, all at the expense of those who are to be chiefly and more immediately benefited by the improvement. Hagar v. Yolo County, 47 Cal. 222; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist., 111 U. S. 701. And it may compel the payment of the police expenses. State v. St. Louis County Ct., 34 Mo. 546. And see Baltimore v. State, 15 Md. 376; People v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481.

But a municipality cannot be compelled to incur debts exceeding in amount the constitutional limit. People v. Chicago, 51 Ill. 19; 2 Am. Rep. 278.

In Darlington v. New York, 31 N. Y. 164; 88 Am. Dec. 248, it was held that a statute which will result in requiring contributions from the taxpayers of local communities, to make good losses of persons who have suffered for the acts of rioters, are constitutional and valid, and fall within the general scope of legislative authority. And in Wilkinson v. Cheatham, 43 Ga. 258, it was held that the legislature may compel a county to pay the damages resulting to the property owners of a town from the removal of the county site therefrom.

Rep. 622. And see Callam v. Saginaw, 50 Mich. 7.

In People v. Flagg, 46 N. Y. 401, however, it was held that wherever the legislature may authorize a town to incur a debt, it may direct it to be done.

The legislature cannot compel taxation for private purposes. State v. Foley, 30 Minn. 350.

And a mandatory act requiring a town to issue bonds and exchange the same for, or invest the proceeds of a sale thereof in, the stock of a railroad, is unconstitutional. People v. Batchelor, 53 N. Y. 128; 13 Am. Rep. 480.

a petition or a vote of the persons interested, is frequently required as a condition precedent thereto.¹ And such legislation is entirely competent, as the power to enact laws includes the right to determine and prescribe the conditions upon which they shall go into operation.² But the submission to the people of a mere plan or project of the law imposing a tax for their adoption or regulation, is an unconstitutional delegation of power to tax.³ The propositions most frequently submitted to popular vote are

In Minnesota, under the constitution, the legislature cannot authorize any person or class of persons other than the electors or officers chosen by the electors of the town, to determine what action the town will take in any particular case requiring local taxation. *Harrington v. Petition.—The names of the petitioners must be personally subscribed, Injunction to Restrain the Vote.—An injunction will not issue at the instance of the taxpayers of a municipality, to prevent the officers thereof from holding an election under legislative authority, to enable the citizens to vote to levy or not to levy a certain tax on themselves. *Roudanez v. Repeal.—The legislature may rescind the authority to levy a tax, by a repeal of the law authorizing a vote, although the vote has been taken. Covington, etc., R. Co. v. Kenton County Ct., 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 150.

3. Alcorn v. Hamer, 38 Miss. 652. The true distinction is between the delegation of power to make the law which necessarily involves the discretion as to what it shall be, and conferring the authority or discretion as to its execution to be exercised under and in pursuance of law. Lafayette, etc., R. Co. v. Geiger, 34 Ind. 185.

Where the law is unconstitutional, taxation cannot be sustained, even though the tax be voted by a majority of the taxpayers. Anderson v. Hill, 54 Mich. 477.

those in regard to aiding in the erection of public enterprises, such as railroads, etc.,¹ and for public school purposes.² In cases of public improvements, the operation of the law is generally conditional upon the petition of a specified proportion of the property owners to be affected thereby.³

b. NOTICE OF ELECTION.—When a vote for a tax for any purpose is to be taken, due notice or warning of the time, place, and purpose thereof must be given in the manner prescribed;⁴ and if a meeting held for an election be not legally called, the tax

That a law authorizing taxation for the purpose of establishing free schools, by the determination and vote of a majority of the voters of a school district, is constitutional, see Steward v. Jefferson, 3 Harr. (Del.) 335; Burgess v. Pue, 2 Gill (Md.) 11; Matteson v. Rosendale, 37 Wis. 254; Plumer v. Marathon County, 46 Wis. 163.

The erection of a schoolhouse, without a submission to a vote of the people, is not cured by a vote to defray the expenses, or by the acceptance and use of the building. School Directors v. Fogleman, 76 Ill. 189.

Pratt*, 59 Cal. 77; Bowen v. King, 34 Vt. 156; Sherwin v. Bugbee, 17 Vt. 337.

"To warn" means nothing more than to notify a meeting appointed by other authority. Stone v. School Dist., No. 4, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 592.

As a general rule, no special notice is required of a regular annual meeting, the time of the annual meeting being fixed by law; but where the subject is to be considered at a special meeting, a special notice must be given. See Smith v. Crittenden, 16 Mich. 152; Marchant v. Langworthy, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 646; Hodgkin v. Fry, 33 Ark. 716.

Two distinct taxes for two distinct village purposes, though both are authorized, cannot be combined in one notice and resolution, so as to compel voters to vote either for both or against both. North Tonawanda v. Western Transp. Co., 1 Buff. Super. Ct. (N. Y.) 371.

An application for calling a meeting of a school district, containing the purpose of the meeting, annexed to the warrant for calling the meeting, addressed to a person directed to warn the inhabitants of the district to meet for the purpose of acting on the articles named in such application, is a part of the warrant as effectually as if it were embodied in it. George v. Second School Dist., 6 Met. (Mass.) 497.

Notice of an election is necessary, although the statute authorizing it makes no express provision as to the notice. Mount Pike v. Pew, 51 Mo. 63; State v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 75 Mo. 529.

Posting Notices.—A statute requiring an officer to post notices, does not require him to do so in person. Phillips v. Albany, 28 Wis. 341. The posting of a warrant instead of a copy does not render the meeting illegal. Brewster v. Hyde, 7 N. H. 206. A requirement that notices of elections shall be posted in "three of the most public places of the town," means such public places in the judgment of the officer. Sauerhering v. Iron Bridge, etc., R. Co., 25 Wis. 447.

A jury may presume that a warrant for a town meeting, shown to have been properly posted, remained so during the time required by law after the voted is void.¹ No tax for any purpose other than that stated in the notice of the meeting can be legally voted.² But it has been held sufficient if the notice of the meeting or election enables those interested to understand its purpose.³

c. THE PROCEEDINGS.—Where no method is expressly prolapse of thirty years. Schoff v. Gould, 52 N. H. 512.

Return of Warrant.—It seems that it is not necessary that any return of the warrant by the officer to whom it is directed should state the manner of service; so a return that "he had warned the inhabitants of a town," is sufficient. Houghton v. Davenport, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 237. See also Saxton v. Nimms, 14 Mass. 320. "That he had warned the inhabitants by posting up copies," has also been held sufficient. Thayer v. Stearns, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 109. See also Briggs v. Murdock, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 305. But see Perry v. Dover, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 206. In Nelson v. Pierce, 6 N. H. 194, a certificate that a warrant for holding a meeting which had been duly posted more than fifteen days, was insufficient to show that the meeting was duly notified. See also Tuttle v. Cary, 7 Me. 426.

H. 194; Cardigan v. Page, 6 N. H. 182; Township Board v. Hastings, 52 Mich. 528; Pratt v. Swanton, 15 Vt. 147; Greenbanks v. Boutwell, 43 Vt. 206; In re Independent School Dist., 33 Pa. St. 297.

It is not essential to the validity of the proceedings of a school district to raise a tax at their annual meeting, that there should have been a request to the clerk to warn the meeting. Chandler v. Bradish, 23 Vt. 416.

In Greenbanks v. Boutwell, 43 Vt. 206, where the statute required the notice of the meeting to be given at least seven, and not exceeding twelve, days before the meeting, a tax voted at a meeting held under a warning giving more than twelve days' notice was held invalid.

In Lafayette, etc., R. Co. v. Geiger, 34 Ind. 185, it was held that an election was not rendered illegal by the fact that the place of voting was changed two days before such election, of which change no notice was given to the voter, there being no fraud and no evidence that any legal voter had been prevented from voting, and no illegal voter being thereby enabled to vote.

Liability of Trustees.—Where a district clerk, in giving notice of a special district meeting regularly called, misrepresents the objects of the meeting, to some of the taxable inhabitants who, in accordance thereof, omitted to attend, and a tax is voted, the trustees who caused the tax to be collected are not thereby to be rendered trespassers, unless they are parties to the fraud. Randall v. Smith, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 214.

2. Little v. Merrill, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 543; Thatcher v. People, 93 Ill. 240; State v. Greenleaf, 34 N. J. L. 441; Allen v. Burlington, 45 Vt. 202; Wyley v. Wilson, 44 Vt. 404; Atwood v. Lincoln, 44 Vt. 332; Drisko v. Columbia, 75 Me. 73.

When a meeting was warned to see whether the town should appropriate money in the treasury for an object, it was held that the question of laying a tax for that purpose could not be considered. Torrey v. Millbury, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 64.

In Holt's Appeal, 5 R. I. 603, it was held that notice of a special district meeting, stating the purpose to be the levying of a tax for the expenses of repairing a schoolhouse, would not warrant the levying of an additional tax for paying the insurance of the same.

A meeting warned to vote upon the question of raising money to meet the accruing expenses of the city government, and for school purposes for the ensuing year, cannot legally vote a tax for the purpose of erecting a high-school building. Allen v. Burlington, 45 Vt. 202.

3. South School Dist. v. Blakeslee, vided, the election must be conducted in the manner provided for general elections in the municipality where it is held.¹ Unless otherwise provided,² the majority required is that of the votes cast, and not of all the qualified voters.³

13 Conn. 234; Bartlett v. Kinsley, 15 Conn. 327.

A warning for a school meeting to decide whether the district shall have a school, and to provide for the expenses of the same, is sufficient to authorize a vote for a tax. Chandler v. Bradish, 23 Vt. 416.

A notice for a town meeting "to raise such sums of money as may be necessary to defray town charges for the ensuing year," is sufficient to authorize a vote to raise money for specific general purposes. Westhampton v. Searle, 127 Mass. 502. A meeting held in pursuance of a notice signed by one of the selectmen only "by order of the selectmen," was held to be unauthorized. Reynolds v. New Salem, 6 Met. (Mass.) 340.

A notice which is ambiguous will be construed to intend a tax which would be valid, rather than one which the law does not permit; and when a valid tax is voted upon such a notice, it may be lawfully collected. Bartemeyer v. Rohlf, 71 Iowa 582.

1. People v. Dutcher, 56 Ill. 144; Prairie v. Lloyd, 97 Ill. 180; Leavenworth, etc., R. Co. v. Platte County Ct., 42 Mo. 171; Phillips v. Albany, 28 Wis. 340.

A requirement that elections to authorize municipal subscriptions by towns shall be conducted as in case of annual elections, does not refer to town meetings, but to general elections. Prairie v. Lloyd, 97 Ill. 179.

Form of Ballot.—Where the question of raising a tax for a specific purpose is authorized to be submitted to the electors, without prescribing the form of the ballot to be used, it is necessary, in order to render the vote operative, that the ballot should show that the specific question contemplated by the act was passed upon. People v. Woodhull Tp., 14 Mich. 27.

Qualification of Voters.—Unless otherwise provided, those entitled to vote are those qualified to vote, at a general election. McKenzie v. Wooley, 39 La. Ann. 944.

Registration is a prerequisite to the right to vote, when voters are required to be registered. Hawkins v. Carroll County, 50 Miss. 735; McDowell v.

Massachusetts R., etc., Constr. Co., 96 N. Car. 515.

Opportunity to register must be given to all persons qualified to vote; failure to do so will vitiate the election, if the denial should materially effect the result. McDowell v. Massachusetts, etc., Constr. Co., 96 N. Car. 514.

2. The authority to levy the tax if two-thirds of the taxpayers shall vote therefor, precludes an implied assent to a tax by not voting at the election. Fort Worth v. Davis, 57 Tex. 225; San Antonio v. Jones, 28 Tex. 19.

Authority to levy a special tax, accompanied by a proviso that the levy shall not be made until a majority of the electors of the district to be affected shall vote at some regular election in favor of such levy, requires a majority of all the votes cast at regular elections, and not simply a majority of those voting for or against the levy. Enyart v. Hanover Tp., 25 Ohio St. 618; People v. Fort Edward, 70 N. Y. 28; Chestnutwood v. Hood, 68 Ill. 132.

In North Carolina, the constitution, § 7, art. 7, will not permit a tax for the support of public schools "unless by a majority of the qualified voters therein," and not by a majority of the votes cast. See Rigsbee v. Durham, 98 N. Car. 81.

3. Dunnovan v. Green, 57 Ill. 63; People v. Chapman, 66 Ill. 137; People v. Harp, 67 Ill. 63; Hawkins v. Carroll County, 50 Miss. 735; State v. Swift, 69 Ind. 531; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Davidson County, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 637; 62 Am. Dec. 424; Harrington v. Plainview, 27 Minn. 224; Reiger v. Beaufort, 70 N. Car. 319; Mobile Sav. Bank v. Oktibbehtia County, 22 Fed. Rep. 580; Carroll County v. Smith, 111 U. S. 556; St. Joseph Tp. v. Rogers, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 644; Cass County v. Johnston, 95 U. S. 360; Cass County v. Jordan, 95 U. S. 373.

Under the Missouri constitution, § 14, art. 11, inaction by the voters in failing to vote does not express assent, State v. Brassfield, 67 Mo. 331; and an act of the legislature permitting a subscription upon the vote of two-thirds of those who vote on the question merely is unconstitutional. Webb v. Lafay-

Fraud in the election, or undue influence brought to bear upon the voters, invalidates the tax voted.¹ But informalities or irregularities which cannot prejudice any substantial right will not affect the validity of the tax.² It is sufficient if the vote states in general terms the purpose and object for which the money is raised.³

ette County, 67 Mo. 353. But see State v. Renick, 37 Mo. 270.

In Louisiana, the constitution, § 209, requires only the majority of the legal votes cast at the election. See Duperier v. Viator, 35 La. Ann. 957.

In Arkansas, where a school meeting is not attended by a sufficient number of electors to hold an election, it is the duty of the trustees to lay their estimate before the county court for their action, upon which the county court is required to make the levy. Union County Ct. v. Robinson, 27 Ark. 116.

Proof of Vote.—Where it is required that the vote should be proved by affidavit in writing, the affidavit is not conclusive, but only prima facie evidence of the facts contained, unless otherwise provided by statute. Cagwin v. Hancock, 84 N. Y. 532.

1. People v. San Francisco, 27 Cal. 655; Bish v. Stout, 77 Ind. 255; State v. Lake City, 25 Minn. 404.

In Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Shea, 67 Iowa 728, a tax was held to be void on account of undue influence brought to bear upon the voters, by the offer to pay them for their certificates of taxes paid. A tax procured by representation that it was to be enforced only against non-resident taxpayers is void. Truesdell v. Green, 57 Iowa 215.

The burden is upon the taxpayer who resists the collection of a tax voted, to show that the election was void. School Dist. No. 88 v. Garvey, 80 Ky. 159.

A vote to levy a tax sufficient to keep schools open for a specified time, will not authorize the levy of a tax for the succeeding year or any future year. Wells v. Board of Education, 20 W. Va. 157.

2. Irwin v. Lowe, 89 Ind. 540; Milwaukee, etc., R. Co. v. Kossuth County, 41 Iowa 57; Benjamin v. Malaka Dist. Tp., 50 Iowa 648; Rose v. Hindman, 36 Iowa 160; School Dist. No. 88 v. Garvey, 80 Ky. 159; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Davidson County, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 637; Marshall v. Kerns, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 637; 62 Am. Dec. 424; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Harrison County, 54 Tex. 120; Henry v. Chester, 15 Vt. 460.

Time of Payment.—In Bartlett v. Kinsley, 15 Conn. 327, an omission in a vote to fix the time for the payment of a tax, was held not to render the tax invalid, as otherwise it was legally imposed and payable on demand within a reasonable time.

Attack on Validity of Proceedings.—When the result of the election has been canvassed and declared to be carried by the requisite vote, the result cannot be inquired into in a suit by a taxpayer seeking to enjoin the collection of the tax in the absence of proceedings to contest the election. Dwyer v. Hackworth, 57 Tex. 247. See also Edely v. Wilson, 43 Vt. 362. After the tax has been voted and levied, its validity cannot be assailed on the ground that a petition calling for the election was not signed by one-third of the resident taxpayers as required. Ryan v. Varga, 37 Iowa 78.

Whether a special tax has been directed by popular vote, is a question of fact for the jury. Dent v. Bryce, 16 S. Car. 1.

Waiver of Objections.—Where no objections are made to the person who acts as judge at an election at the time it is held, it is too late to raise any question afterwards. School Dist. No. 88 v. Garvey, 80 Ky. 159.

3. Specific Purpose Need not Be Stated in the Votes.—A vote to raise a certain sum is sufficiently definite to authorize the assessment of a tax. Taft v. Barrett, 58 N. H. 447.

In School District v. Merrills, 12 Conn. 437, where it appeared from the vote, that the tax was for "defraying the expenses of the district as reported by our committee and approved by a vote of the district," the tax was held to be lawful; it not being essential to its validity that the particular object be specified.

A vote of a town to raise money to defray town charges, will not authorize the assessment of a tax to be appropriated for the support of the ministry. Lisbon v. Bath, 21 N. H. 319.

A vote to raise all the law allows is sufficient, as it can be rendered certain by reference to the law. State v.

The vote must be certified by the proper officers to the board or persons authorized to act upon it, and unless this is done, the tax is illegal.¹

6. Subjects of Municipal Taxation—a. IN GENERAL.—A municipality, under a general power to levy taxes, may subject all property within its limits which is subject to taxation by the general laws of the state,² not only such as was taxable when the power

Sickles, 24 N. J. L. 125. The vote that a tax be raised to pay the expense of repairs, is sufficient, without the limitation as to the amount of a tax on the rate. Adams v. Hyde, 27 Vt. 221. A vote "to raise fifty cents on the dollar of the grant list to pay the bounty offered to soldiers," is sufficiently definite. Blodgett v. Holbrook, 39 Vt. 336. And see Halleck v. Boylston, 117 Mass. 469.

1. School Directors v. Fogleman, 76 Ill. 189; Weber v. Ohio, etc., R. Co., 108 Ill. 451; State v. Duryea, 40 N. J. L. 266; State v. Van Winkle, 25 N. J. L. 73; Hardcastle v. State, 27 N. J. L. 551; Dent v. Bryce, 16 S. Car. 1; Hodgkin v. Fry, 33 Ark. 716; Worthen v. Badgett, 32 Ark. 496; Cairo, etc., R. Co. v. Parks, 32 Ark. 131; Matteson v. Rosendale, 37 Wis. 254; Plumer v. Marathon County, 46 Wis. 163.

The certificate of a school-district tax which does not conform with the law confers no authority upon the officers to levy the tax. McIntyre v. White Creek, 43 Wis. 620; Arnold v. Juneau County, 43 Wis. 627; State v. Sullivan, 36 N. J. L. 89; State v. Padden, 44 N. J. L. 151; State v. Duryea, 40 N. J. L. 266. But in Smyth v. Titcomb, 31 Me. 272, it was held that where a school district legally votes to raise a sum of money, and the assessors of the town ascertain the fact, an assessment of the tax is rendered invalid by the omission of the district clerk to certify to the assessor the vote of the district.

The action of the trustees in calling and holding the meeting at which a tax was voted according to law, should appear in the certificate of the clerk to the assessor. State v. Harff, 38 N. J. L. 310.

Where the clerk was required to certify the rate per centum of a tax voted, a certificate that the election was held upon the appropriate day, and that a majority of the votes cast were in favor of the tax, was held sufficient. Shontz v. Evans, 40 Iowa 139.

It is held that the failure to return the certificate of the vote, within the time required, will not invalidate the tax voted. Moore v. Fessenbeck, 88 Ill. 422; Smith v. Crittenden, 16 Mich. 152.

In Michigan, the failure of the supervisors of a township to authorize a tax is held not invalid in an action of the township authorities in assessing a tax. Upton v. Kennedy, 36 Mich. 215; Robbins v. Barron, 33 Mich. 124.

In New York, it was held that the certificate of town auditors allowing accounts, regular on its face, is a sufficient authority for the board of supervisors to proceed and cause the amount certified to be levied on the town, and such a certificate precludes the supervisors from inquiring as to the merits of particular items allowed. People v. Queens County, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 195.

2. Augusta v. Augusta Nat. Bank, 47 Ga. 562; Frederick v. Augusta, 5 Ga. 561; Pearce v. Augusta, 37 Ga. 597; Maurin v. Smith, 25 La. Ann. 445; Anderson v. Mayfield (Ky. 1892), 19 S. W. Rep. 598; Stilz v. Indianapolis, 81 Ind. 582; Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Lafayette, 22 Ind. 262; St. Louis v. Russell, 9 Mo. 507; State v. Bremond, 38 Tex. 116.

The definition of the words "taxable property" when used in a grant of the power to tax, as "all property not excepted by law from taxation," was approved in Slat v. Charleston, 10 Rich. (S. Car.) 240; St. Phillip Church v. Charleston, 1 McMull. Eq. (S. Car.) 140; State v. Charleston, 5 Rich. (S. Car.) 564.

A city authorized to levy a tax upon the "taxpayers of the city taxable under the revenue laws of the state," must levy upon the same persons and property as prescribed by the revenue laws of the state. "Taxpayers of the city taxable under the revenue laws of the state" authorizing the levy of a tax, designates both the person and subject of taxation. Barrett v. Henderson, 4 Bush (Ky.) 255.

The products of mines are personal property and subject to taxation for municipal purposes as such. Virginia City v. Chollar-Potosi Gold, etc., Min. Co., 2 Nev. 86.

In Johnson v. Lexington, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 521, it was held that the power of taxation conferred upon the city of Lexington, extended only to property within the city, meaning visible property actually situated within the city, and not such property as had merely a legal constructive status.

In Baker v. Panola County, 30 Tex. 87, it was held that, under a statute authorizing counties to levy and collect taxes for county purposes upon all subjects of taxation on which a tax may be levied by the state, if the state law omits to enumerate any particular thing or pursuit in the subjects to be taxed, it is not a subject of taxation on which a tax may be levied by the state and, therefore, is not taxable by the county.

An act enlarging the basis of county taxation so as to comprehend all objects liable to taxation for state purposes, does not render the additional subjects liable to taxation for borough and township purposes. Blickensderfer v. School Directors, 20 Pa. St. 38.

A charter made taxable whatever property "the city council may designate." It was held a sufficient designation, where the council ordered the taxation of "any property of any kind subject to taxation under the laws of this commonwealth." Covington Gas-Light Co. v. Covington, 84 Ky. 94.

In Louisiana, police juries are vested with power to tax all property and persons within the limits of incorporated towns, unless the power be withheld or withdrawn by express legislative provision. Cook v. Dendinger, 38 La. Ann. 261; Benefield v. Hines, 13 La. Ann. 420; Maurin v. Smith, 25 La. Ann. 445.

Stock in Foreign Corporation.—A city may tax its citizens for stock owned by them in a foreign railroad company, although the state where the corporation is located has collected a tax thereon. Seward v. Rising Sun, 79 Ind. 351.

Land of Non-residents.—In Alexander v. Alexandria, 5 Cranch (U. S.) 1, it was held that the city of Alexandria had power to tax the lands of non-residents within its limits.

Deeds—Choses in Action.—In Johnson v. Lexington, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 521, it was held that the terms "personal property" and "personal estate," as used in the grant of power to tax, did not embrace deeds and other choses in action, but visible property only.

But the power to tax "all property not exempt from taxation under the general laws of the state," Trimble v. Mt. Sterling (Ky. 1890), 12 S. W. Rep. 1066, and "real, personal and mixed estate," embraces choses in action. Newport v. Ringo, 87 Ky. 635.

Promissory Notes.—In Bridges v. Griffin, 33 Ga. 113, the power to impose a tax upon every species of property within the limits of the city, did not authorize the levy of a tax upon notes and other evidences of debt against persons residing without the limits of the city.

Vessels.—A vessel is taxable at the place of its registration; that is, at its home port. Hays v. Pacific Mail Steamship Co., 17 How. (U. S.) 596; Morgan v. Parham, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 471; Pacific Mail S. S. Co. v. Com'rs of Taxes, 58 N. Y. 242; St. Louis v. Wiggins Ferry Co., 11 Wall. (U. S.) 423; Wheeling, etc., Transp. Co. v. Wheeling, 99 U. S. 273; Irvin v. Saville, 39 Mo. 460.

In Battle v. Mobile, 9 Ala. 234; 44 Am. Dec. 438, it was held that a boat registered in Mobile as a coasting vessel, was liable to be assessed and taxed in the city of Mobile, although the owner resided in Pennsylvania. So in Wilkey v. Pekin, 19 Ill. 160, it was held that a steamboat belonging to a resident of the city, but registered elsewhere, could not be taxed under the power to tax property "within the limits of the city." Battle v. Mobile, 9 Ala. 234; 44 Am. Dec. 438.

A ferry-boat is taxable at its home port. Newport v. Berry (Ky. 1892), 19 S. W. Rep. 238. But a municipality, under general power to tax property within the city, has not the power to tax ferry-boats belonging to non-residents whose relation to the city is merely that of contact. St. Louis v. Wiggins Ferry Co., 11 Wall. (U. S.) 423, reversing St. Louis v. Wiggins Ferry Co., 40 Mo. 580.

In New York, etc., R. Co. v. Haight, 30 N. J. L. 428, it was held that ferry-boats registered in New York and plying between Jersey City and New York, were not liable to be taxed in Jersey City.

was granted, but all made so by any general statute subsequently enacted.¹ Property which is taxable for one purpose must be held to be taxable for all purposes of general taxation;² and, as in the exercise of the power by the general government, it is never to be presumed that the right is abandoned or surrendered unless it clearly appears that such was the intention.³

b. PUBLIC PROPERTY.—The rules generally governing the exemption of public property apply to municipal taxation.⁴ Municipal property devoted to public purposes is not taxable by the corporation whose property it is, or by any other within whose limits it may be situated, unless expressly made so by statute.⁵

In New Albany v. Meekin, 3 Ind. 481; 56 Am. Dec. 522, it was held that the share of a part owner of a steamboat touching at the city of New Albany, was not liable to be taxed, although such part owner was a citizen of that place.

Bridges.—In St. Louis Bridge Co. v. East St. Louis, 121 Ill. 238, it was held that such portion of a bridge as is situated within the corporate limits of a city is subject to taxation for corporate purposes equally with all other property within its limits. In State v. Columbia, 27 S. Car. 127, so much of the bridge as covered the stream within the corporate limits was held taxable. See also Point Pleasant Bridge Co. v. Point Pleasant, 32 W. Va. 328; Fort Smith, etc., Bridge Co. v. Hawkins, 54 Ark. 509.

But in Louisville Bridge Co. v. Louisville, 81 Ky. 189, it was held not sufficient to authorize a municipal taxation that a bridge was built within the corporate limits of the city; the bridge not being within the range of municipal benefits.

In Henderson Bridge Co. v. Henderson (Ky. 1890), 14 S. W. Rep. 493, where a contract with the city which authorized a bridge company to construct its bridge across a river which was within the city limits, provided that it should not be construed as waiving the right to tax the property of the bridge company, it was held that the city acquired the right to tax the entire bridge.

Bonds—State and City.—The grant of power to a municipality to tax all property will not include the power to tax its own bonds. Macon v. Jones, 67 Ga. 489. See also Miller v. Wilson, 60 Ga. 505. In Augusta v. Dunbar, 50 Ga. 387, it was held that without express and explicit authority it will not be presumed that the state, under general words, granted the power to tax state bonds.

1. Buffalo v. Le Couteux, 15 N. Y. 453.

In Tackaberry v. Keokuk, 32 Iowa 155, it was held that any change in the general law in respect to the subject of taxation effects a corresponding change as regards the subject of taxation for municipal purposes, where the power in the city refers to the general laws of the state for the subjects of taxation.

2. Hale v. Kenosha, 29 Wis. 599.

3. Stein v. Mobile, 17 Ala. 234; Athens City Water Works Co. v. Athens, 74 Ga. 413; Plaisted v. Lincoln, 62 Me. 91. See also Providence Bank v. Billings, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 514; Louisville, etc., Canal Co. v. Com., 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 160; Brewster v. Hough, 10 N. H. 138.

In Georgia, the property of a railroad company, used in carrying on its usual and ordinary business, is not subject to taxation by municipal corporations. Atlanta v. Georgia Pac. R. Co., 74 Ga. 16; Albany v. Savannah, etc., R. Co., 71 Ga. 158; Houston v. Central R. Co., 72 Ga. 211; Savannah, etc., R. Co. v. Morton, 71 Ga. 24. As to the general power to tax railroads, see TAXATION (CORPORATE), vol. 25.

4. See supra, this title, Instrumentalities of Government; Exemptions. Such property exempt from state taxes cannot be subjected to taxation by municipalities. See O'Donnell v. Bailey, 24 Miss. 386.

Educational Institutions.—In Richmond County Academy v. Augusta (Ga. 1892), 17 S. E. Rep. 61, lands held by a public academy, though separate from the property of the academy proper, and used only as a means of income, were held exempt from municipal taxation.

5. People v. Austin, 47 Cal. 353;

And so county property is not, as a rule, subject to taxation by cities or towns within the county.¹

c. PROPERTY IN ADJACENT TERRITORY.—As a general rule a corporation cannot tax property situated outside of its corporate limits.² But the legislature sometimes authorizes the assessment for benefits of property adjacent to the city.³

d. AGRICULTURAL LANDS.—The question of the taxation of agricultural or rural lands situated within the corporate limits of a municipality has been discussed already.⁴

Low v. Lewis, 46 Cal. 549; Fall v. Marysville, 19 Cal. 391; Jersey City Water Com'rs v. Gaffney, 34 N. J. L. 131; State v. Hotelling, 44 N. J. L. 347.

In Galveston Wharf Co. v. Galveston, 63 Tex. 14, the city had such an interest in the property proposed to be taxed as made it exempt.

In West Hartford v. Water Com'rs, 44 Conn. 360, it was held that land in the city of West Hartford, purchased by water commissioners of Hartford for reservoir purposes, was not subject to taxation by the city of West Hartford. See also Rochester v. Rush, 80 N. Y. 302, reversing 15 Hun (N. Y.) 439. But see Chadwick v. Maginnes, 94 Pa. St. 117. And in People v. Brooklyn, 111 N. Y. 505, it was held that the franchise and landing of a ferry operated by the city of New York could not be taxed by the city of Brooklyn.

1. Piper v. Singer, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 354. It is exempt from all taxation, whether for public purposes or local improvements. Worcester County v. Worcester, 116 Mass. 193.

But in Cook County v. Chicago, 103 Ill. 646, it was held that where there was a constitutional provision that property of counties might be exempt from taxation by general law, there was an implication that such property was liable to taxation, and that, in the absence of any exemption law, a water tax could be assessed against county property by a city.

2. St. Charles v. Nolle, 51 Mo. 122; 11 Am. Rep. 440; Wells v. Weston, 22 Mo. 384; Corn v. Cameron, 19 Mo. App. 573; Johnson v. Lexington, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 521; Matter of Prospect Park, 60 N. Y. 398.

Where the boundary of a corporation was the low-water mark in a river, it was held that the city had no power to tax coal under a river beyond that mark. Gilchrist's Appeal, 109 Pa. St. 600.

In Stephens v. Boonville, 34 Mo. 323, it was held that notes in the hands of the administrator of a decedent who resided without the city at the time of his death, could not be taxed by the corporation, although they were actually kept within the city by the administrator.

But in Richmond County Academy v. Augusta (Ga. 1892), 17 S. E. Rep. 61, choses in action which were held by trustees as tenants in common, some of whom resided within and some without the limits of a municipal corporation, were taxable according to the proportion held by the trustees residing within the city.

A tax levied by a city on real estate not included within the city by any authority except an invalid ordinance, is illegal and void, and remains illegal, although the real estate upon which it was levied is afterwards made a part of the city by statute. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Maquilkin, 12 Kan. 301.

4. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, vol. 15, p. 1013. See also supra, this title, Local Assessments.

These recent cases may be added to those already cited, to the effect that such lands are subject to be taxed for all municipal purposes. See Hurla v. Kansas City, 46 Kan. 738; Mendenhall v. Burton, 42 Kan. 570; Davis v. Point Pleasant, 32 W. Va. 289; Maddrey v. Cox, 73 Tex. 538; Smith v. Saginaw, 81 Mich. 123; Cary v. Pekin, 88 Ill. 154; 30 Am. Rep. 543; Eifert v. Central Covington (Ky. 1891), 15 S. W. Rep. 180. Compare Smith v. Sherry, 50 Wis. 210.

In Utah, it was held that municipal taxation should be limited to the range of municipal benefits, and therefore the territorial legislature had no power to authorize the taxation of lands and their occupation located beyond the range of municipal benefits. Territory v. Daniels (Utah, 1889), 22 Pac. Rep. 159; Ellison v. Linford, 7 Utah 166.

e. DETACHED TERRITORY.—The remaining part of a corporation from which territory has been detached by annexation to another, or by the creation of a new corporation, remains subject to all the obligations previously incurred, and the detached portion is not subject to taxation therefor,¹ unless express provision is made by the legislature for a division of liabilities.²

f. EXEMPTIONS.—The requirement of equality and uniformity

In Cook v. Crandall, 7 Utah 344, the land proposed to be taxed was within the range of municipal benefits.

As to statutory exemptions of rural lands see Conklin v. Cambridge City, 58 Ind. 130; Baldwin v. Hastings, 83 Mich. 639; Smith v. Americus, 89 Ga. 810; Stilz v. Indianapolis, 81 Ind. 582; South Bend v. Cushing, 123 Ind. 290. The exemption was not allowed in State v. Brown, 53 N. J. L. 162.

In Perkins v. Burlington, 77 Iowa 553, an act providing that no lands within the extension should be taxed unless laid off into lots, was held not to apply to extensions made prior to the act.

In Simms v. Paris (Ky. 1886), 1 S. W. Rep. 543, a tract of land of fifteen acres, of which seven were used for pasture, one for garden, and the remainder for residence and stable, etc., was held not to be exclusively for farming purposes, under a law exempting such lands from taxation.

In Dickerson v. Franklin, 112 Ind. 178, an act providing that such lands should not be taxed at a higher percentage than that stated, was held not to refer to special assessments.

In Galesburg v. Hawkinson, 75 Ill. 152, it was held that, inasmuch as the corporate indebtedness is presumably incurred for the equal benefit of every part of the municipality, an act detaching a part of it is an injustice to the remaining taxpayers, unless attended with some corresponding benefit to the municipality.

In Devor v. M'Clintock, 9 W. & S. (Pa.) 80, it was held that where a new county is erected out of part of an old one, the old one may enforce the payment of taxes due before the separation; but where a sale is made for such taxes, and the county becomes the purchaser, it is bound to pay the taxes subsequently accruing to the new county, and the new county may collect them by a sale of the land, and the purchaser will have a title superior to that of the old county.

In Kansas, the taxation of detached territory to pay the bonded indebtedness of a county or township is authorized, where the bonds are both "authorized and issued" previous to the detachment. Chandler v. Reynolds, 19 Kan. 249; Ottawa County v. Nelson, 19 Kan. 234; 27 Am. Rep. 101; Sedgwick County v. Bunker, 16 Kan. 498; Marion County v. Harvey County, 26 Kan. 181; Morris County v. Hinckman, 31 Kan. 738; Hurt v. Hamilton, 25 Kan. 82.

Disputed Territory.—Where there is a dispute between two districts respecting their boundaries, each claiming the territory in question, if one permits the other to levy, collect, and receive the taxes thereon from year to year, and expend them in meeting the annual wants of the district, it is estopped from maintaining an action therefor as for money had and received. Rapids Dist. Tp. v. Clinton Dist. Tp., 27 Iowa 323.

in taxation refers generally to taxation by municipalities,¹ and, consequently, they cannot grant exemption from, or commutation of, taxes.² The power to tax does not imply the power to exempt from taxation, and when the power is given a city to tax all the property, it can exempt none, unless expressly authorized to do so.³

The state cannot confer upon the municipality the power to tax property which it has not the power itself to tax.⁴ That the state forbears to tax certain property or exempts it from general taxation, however, does not necessarily deprive the municipality of the right to tax it.⁵ And, on the other hand, taxation for

In Kittle v. Shervin, 11 Neb. 65, it was held that a municipal tax levied upon real estate and not upon personal property was unconstitutional. In Dyar v. Farmington, 70 Me. 575, it was held that a legislative act imposing a tax for general and public purposes upon the real estate of one part of the town only was void.

In Cartersville Water Works Co. v. Cartersville, 89 Ga. 689, it was held that a water company's property could not be exempted from municipal taxation by contract, gratuity, or commutation.

2. State v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 75 Mo. 208; Brewer Brick Co. v. Brewer, 62 Me. 62; 16 Am. Rep. 395; State v. Fyler, 48 Conn. 145; State v. Gracey, 11 Nev. 223; Mack v. Jones, 21 N. H. 393; Hayzlett v. Mt. Vernon, 33 Iowa 229.

In Wilson v. Sutter County, 47 Cal. 91, an order remitting taxes, although made pursuant to a legislative act, was held to be void, as repugnant to the requirement of uniformity and equality.

In Brewer Brick Co. v. Brewer, 62 Me. 62; 16 Am. Rep. 395, it was held that it is for the legislature to determine what property shall be subject to, and what shall be exempt from, taxation, and that it cannot constitutionally transfer to municipal corporations the power to determine upon what property it shall or shall not be imposed. See also Farnsworth Co. v. Lisbon, 62 Me. 451.

3. Gilman v. Sheboygan, 2 Black (U. S.) 510; People v. Campbell, 93 N. Y. 196; Whiting v. West Point, 88 Va. 905.

In Bowen v. Newell, 16 R. I. 238, it was held that where a town was authorized to grant to any person the right of laying water pipes, etc., and to exempt such pipes from taxation, the exemption from taxation of pipes already laid was not authorized.

In State v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 75 Mo. 209, a contract of the city of Hannibal with a railroad company to exempt its property from city taxation, was held invalid, the city having no right to make exemptions. See also St. Joseph v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 39 Mo. 476; Lexington v. Aull, 30 Mo. 480; and in Austin v. Austin Gas Co., 69 Tex. 180, the contract with defendant company to exempt its property, in consideration of benefits granted to the city, was held to be void upon the same ground. In New Orleans v. New Orleans Water Works Co., 36 La. Ann. 432, although the exemption from taxation of defendant's property was in consideration of defendant's obligation to supply free water to the city, the city's demand for taxes was sustained. But in Grant v. Davenport, 36 Iowa 396, an exemption of the property of a water-works company for a similar consideration was held not invalid. In Georgia, it was held that, under a general power to tax all property, a corporation might leave certain species of property untaxed. Athens v. Long, 54 Ga. 330; Waring v. Savannah, 60 Ga. 93.

4. Johnston v. Macon, 62 Ga. 645; O'Donnell v. Bailey, 24 Miss. 386. See also Kentucky Cent. R. Co. v. Pendleton (Ky. 1886), 2 S. W. Rep. 176; Nashville v. Thomas, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 600.

5. In Morgan v. Cree, 46 Vt. 773; 14 Am. Rep. 640, an exemption of the lands of a town from public taxes was held not to apply to municipal taxes, on the ground that the term "public taxes" referred only to taxes for public revenue as distinguished from municipal state purposes does not relieve the thing taxed from taxation for municipal purposes.¹

7. The Assessment.—Generally speaking, the rules governing assessments by municipalities may be said to be the same as those governing assessments generally.² The assessment must usually be made by an assessor chosen by the electors of the district or municipality to be taxed,³ though in some instances he must take the assessment for state purposes as a proper basis of valuation for local purposes.⁴

taxes. And see Hassan v. Rochester, 67 N. Y. 528.

So in Lexington v. Aull, 30 Mo. 480, where the payment by banks of a certain sum was by a charter act declared to be in full of all taxes to be paid to the state, a city was not prevented from taxing them.

In St. Joseph v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 39 Mo. 477, it was held that the exemption from state and county taxes of the stock of a railroad company by its charter, did not prevent the legislature from repealing the exemption or subjecting the corporation to municipal taxes.

State Banks.—In State Bank v. Madison, 3 Ind. 43, where the charter of a bank provided that it should be taxable only for state purposes, it was held that a city could not tax its capital stock nor any part of it for city purposes.

White*, 47 Cal. 616; Houghton v. Austin, 47 Cal. 646; People v. Stockton, etc., R. Co., 49 Cal. 421.

It has been held that an assessor elected for the city and county cannot make assessments for the city, the city and county being a different district from the city. People v. Hastings, 29 Cal. 449.

A county assessor cannot assess the property of a township for a tax levied on township property to raise a fund for township purposes. People v. Sargent, 44 Cal. 430. And see Smith v. Farrelly, 52 Cal. 77.

As a general rule, the selectmen or trustees of a village are alone authorized to assess taxes where no assessors are elected. Scammon v. Scammon, 28 N. H. 419; People v. Wood, 71 N. Y. 371.

In Hawkins v. Jonesboro, 63 Ga. 527, it was held that no tax upon property within the corporate limits of a municipality can be legally collected by the municipal authorities until after assessment by three citizens thereof who are freeholders. See also Reilly v. Lancaster, 39 Cal. 354.

Such assessors cannot assess property situated beyond the limits of their respective districts. People v. Placer-ville, etc., R. Co., 34 Cal. 656; People v. Stockton, etc., R. Co., 49 Cal. 415.

Where an assessment is required to be made in several towns, by the corporate authorities, an assessment made by the proper officers of each town, acting together through all the towns, is invalid, as the corporate authorities of one town have no jurisdiction to make or participate in the assessment of the property in another town. The assessment in each town should be made by its own authorities. Hundley v. Lincoln Park, 67 Ill. 559.

Who May be Appointed.—Where the power to appoint assessors is conferred upon the commissioners of a municipality, they cannot appoint any of their number to fill the office. Hawkins v. Jonesboro, 63 Ga. 527.

4. Police Jury v. Harris, 10 La. Ann. 676.

And in such case, even though the property be so situated as to render an original valuation necessary, it must follow that of the town or state as far as practicable. People v. Adams, 125 N. Y. 471.

8. The Collection.—The grant to a municipality of full power to tax, carries with it authority to use all means necessary to accomplish the object by the enforcement of collection.¹ An action at law against the owner of the property to enforce payment, will lie,² and this, notwithstanding the legislature may have provided a special remedy.³ The power to tax is usually deemed to include town assessors, was held to relate only to taxes to be raised for municipal purposes.

Under the Alabama statutes, there is no such thing as an assessment of property for county taxes. The assessment is for state taxation alone; but, after equalization of the assessment by the county board, the court of county commissioners levy a tax on the state assessment to provide for county expenses. State taxes are assessed; county taxes are only levied. Perry County v. Selma, etc., R. Co., 58 Ala. 546. And the rule is substantially the same under the North Carolina statutes. Covington v. Rockingham, 93 N. Car. 134.

In San Luis Obispo v. Pettit, 87 Cal. 499, a provision that a city council may adopt a system for the assessment, levy, and collection of taxes, which shall conform to the general laws of the state as nearly as circumstances will permit, "except as to the times for such assessment," was held not to forbid the council selecting the time fixed for other taxes, but to leave the selection of the time to their discretion.

1. Slack v. Ray, 26 La. Ann. 674.

Unless there is some constitutional restriction, the legislature may authorize the municipality to levy and collect retrospective taxes, and, for this purpose, to use the assessment roll of a previous year. Fairfield v. People, 94 Ill. 244; Cowgill v. Long, 15 Ill. 202.

The legislature may devolve the office and duties of tax collector on the incumbent of any elective office, but the law must precede the election of the officer, and his election must be by the qualified voters of the district. People v. Kelsey, 34 Cal. 470.

A municipal tax collector cannot collect the taxes for an adjoining town, and this even though it has, after his election and after the levy of the tax, been annexed to the city. Mason v. Johnson, 51 Cal. 612.

In State v. Heath, 20 La. Ann. 172; 96 Am. Dec. 390, a contract made by the mayor of New Orleans with the city attorney, for the collection of all bills for taxes assessed upon property as unknown, and all unsatisfied judgments in favor of the city for taxes, was held to violate no provisions of a city charter.

Where a city treasurer is alone empowered by law to enforce the collection of unpaid city taxes, any contract made by the city or its common council, with any person, for their collection, is ultra vires, and absolutely void. Fort Wayne v. Lehr, 88 Ind. 62.

Under the Illinois general incorporation law, municipal taxes are required to be certified to the proper officers of the county of which the municipality forms a part, for collection with state and county taxes, and are to be collected by the same officers by whom state and county taxes are collected. Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill. 626; Mix v. People, 106 Ill. 425.

A city cannot be vested with discretionary power to collect taxes, as provided by either of two laws which provided different officers and prescribed different methods for that purpose. People v. Cooper, 83 Ill. 585. In Illinois, taxes are levied generally upon a town, and all cities and villages situated in it, and it is the duty of the collector to pay to the treasurer of the town that portion of the taxes levied in the town, and to turn over to proper officers of the city or village that portion of the taxes levied upon them. Baird v. People, 83 Ill. 387; Suppiger v. People, 9 Ill. App. 290; Britten v. Clinton, 8 Ill. App. 164; People v. Wilson, 3 Ill. App. 368.

A bounty tax must be collected by the process and officer employed to collect the other taxes of the municipal division levying it. Hilbish v. Hower, 58 Pa. St. 93.

In Missouri, general words in a city charter are held not to be sufficient to give to the city the power to enforce a tax by fine or imprisonment, when the tax is levied not as a police regulation, but as a means of revenue, the municipality not having power to make the non-payment of a purely revenue tax a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment. *St. Louis v. of taxes, unless express authority to do so be granted by the legislature. Augusta v. Dunbar, 50 Ga. 387; Jefferson v. Whipple, 71 Mo. 519. And in Webster v. San Francisco, 1 Cal. 455, it was held that a penalty of one per cent. a day was exorbitant, and that the common council had no authority under the charter of the city to impose it.

Powers or privileges may be conferred, or duties enjoined, of such a character that a corporation would be required, and from which the corporation must be implied. If such powers or privileges cannot be enjoined, or if such duties cannot be performed without acting in a corporate capacity, a corporation, to that extent, is created by implication. People v. Reclamation Dist., 53 Cal. 346.

School districts are not strictly municipal corporations, but territorial divisions for the purposes of common schools exercising, within a prescribed sphere, many of the faculties of a corporation. Wharton v. School Directors, 42 Pa. St. 358.

6. SCHOOL DISTRICTS AND SCHOOL TAXES.—(1) In General.—Taxation for the establishment and maintenance of educational institutions is a legitimate exercise of the taxing power.² The power to tax for the maintenance of schools is within a general grant of power to tax for municipal purposes;³ but the authority to levy such taxes is usually expressly conferred upon political divisions of the state,⁴ and upon districts constituted as corporations

Corporate Authorities.—By the phrase "corporate authorities," as used in a constitutional limitation upon the power of the legislature to grant the right to tax to any other than "corporate authorities," is understood those officers who are directly elected by the people of the district sought to be taxed, or appointed in some mode to which they have assented. *Harward v. Where the people of a municipality have assented to the appointment of commissioners or other officers who are invested with the power to tax in a particular manner, a subsequent legislative enactment revoking the power of appointment, and changing it to a manner not assented to, is unconstitutional and void, and an officer appointed by the latter method will have no right or authority to exercise the duties of the office. Cornell v. People, 107 Ill. 372.

The legislature may authorize the town to raise money for an agricultural college to be established therein by the state. Merrick v. Amherst, 12 Allen (Mass.) 500.

In Nebraska, the law relating to public schools in cities of the first class, does not confer on the board of education power to levy taxes, but only to for school purposes.¹ But unless the power to tax is expressly conferred or necessarily implied, it cannot be exercised by such districts.²

In the absence of special provisions to the contrary, authority to impose taxes for school purposes, confers the power free of report to the city council the amount of taxes necessary for school purposes. State v. Omaha, 7 Neb. 267.

In Michigan, school authorities in union school districts may levy taxes upon the general public for the support of high schools, for the purpose of free instruction of children in other languages than English. Stuart v. School Dist. No. 1, 30 Mich. 69.

The fact that the proposition to organize a city into separate school districts had been defeated in an election was no legal obstacle to the subsequent organization in pursuance of a vote at a second election. Ewing v. Board of Education, 72 Mo. 436.

In Illinois, there is no constitutional limitation to "the power" of the legislature in the formation of school districts, or in prescribing who shall and who shall not be empowered with the levy and collection of school taxes. See Speight v. People, 87 Ill. 595.

In Tennessee, school districts cannot be invested with power to levy and collect taxes for school purposes. See Lipscomb v. Dean, 1 Lea (Tenn.) 546.

In New Hampshire, power is given, in the first instance, to school districts, to raise money by vote, to build or repair schoolhouses for the use of the district, and to locate the same, but upon their unreasonable neglect or refusal, the jurisdiction devolves on the selectmen of the town, who are bound to assess a sufficient tax on the district for that purpose. Blake v. Sturtevant, 12 N. H. 567.

In Texas, towns and cities have no power to levy taxes for school purposes other than that expressly authorized by the constitution. Fort Worth v. Davis, 57 Tex. 225; Willis v. Owen, 43 Tex. 41.

After a city assumes control of its free schools, its schoolhouses become public buildings, and the city can impose a tax of one-quarter of one per cent. for their erection. Dwyer v. Hackworth, 57 Tex. 246.

The discretion vested in the school directors to levy a tax, when once exercised in fixing the amount for any one year, cannot be revised nor set aside by their successors. Oliver v. Carsner, 39 Tex. 396.

In Alabama, an act giving the trustees of a school district, which is held to be a public and not a municipal corporation, authority to levy taxes, is violative of constitutional principles. Schultes v. Eberly, 82 Ala. 242.

Private Schools.—In People v. McAdams, 82 Ill. 356, it was held that the legislature could not constitute a private schoolhouse, erected under the provisions of a will, a district school, and provide for the election of trustees therein and invest them with the taxing power for the support of the school.

A new school district created by vote of a town uniting two old districts, has no authority to raise money by a tax to repay to one of the old districts the proportion of the value of a schoolhouse existing therein at the time of the union, for which the other old district would have been liable had it been built by the union district. Bacon v. Thirteenth School Dist., 97 Mass. 421.

In Maine, school districts are under no legal obligation to support schools, and have no power to raise money for that object; the law imposes this duty the control of the voters or taxpayers.¹ But it is usually provided that the levy of a school tax shall be submitted to a vote of the district.²

(2) The Assessment.—The mode of making the assessment for school taxes is usually expressly provided for.³ In some cases, it is made the duty of the county clerk to extend upon the assessment books the amount of a tax certified to him,⁴ and in others, this duty is imposed upon the officers of the district for which the tax is levied.⁵ Unless otherwise provided, a levy for school taxes may be upon all property subject to taxation generally.⁶ The

Implied Power.—The power to tax is implied in the law providing for the establishment of schools, and that for the purpose of supporting schools and other necessary expenses the trustees shall have the power and discharge the duties of school directors, etc. Fisher v. People, 84 Ill. 491. Authority to establish schools and levy taxes to defray expenses will warrant school commissioners in building the necessary schoolhouses and in levying sufficient taxes to pay therefor. Bull v. Read, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 78.

Where a school tax is required to be assessed annually previous to January 1st, it should be assessed on the list last completed, when no other is specified. Sprague v. Abbott, 58 Vt. 331.

3. In Massachusetts, a school-district tax is required to be assessed in the same manner as a town tax. Waldron v. Lee, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 323; Little v. Little, 131 Mass. 367; Rawson v. School Dist., 100 Mass. 134. A provision requiring the assessment of school taxes within thirty days after the clerk of the district shall certify to the assessors the sum voted to be raised, is only directory, and does not prohibit an assessment after the expiration of that period. Williams v. School Dist. No. 1, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 75; 32 Am. Dec. 243.

Notice of Assessment.—In Peckham v. Bicknell, 11 R. I. 596, it was held that the assessors must give proper notice of the assessment of a school tax, and must thereafter make the assessment upon their own judgment.

In Randall v. Smith, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 214, it was held that where trustees of a school district assess persons whose names are not contained in the last assessment roll of the town, or change the valuation of the property of any taxable inhabitant from that mentioned in the town assessment roll, it is their duty to give notice to parties interested before completing their assessment, but their omission to do so does not render them responsible as trespassers at the suit of persons whose property is seized for non-payment of the tax. See also Jewell v. Van Stenburgh, 58 N. Y. 85.

Assessors' Responsibility.—In Little v. Merrill, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 543, it was held that statutes exempting assessors from responsibility for the assessment of taxes on the inhabitants of any city, town, district, parish or religious society generally, applies to the assessment of taxes for school purposes.

Valuation.—In Richardson v. Sheldon, 1 Pinn. (Wis.) 624, it was held that authority to school trustees to assess a tax implies a power to make a valuation of the property for the purpose of levying the assessment.

School trustees in determining who are and who are not taxable within the provision of the statute, and in apportioning to each his share according to the value of his real and personal estate, act in a judicial capacity. *Randall v. St. 38; Henderson v. Gambert, 8 Bush (Ky.) 607; South Bend v. University of Notre Dame du Lac, 69 Ind. 344; nor does an exemption from taxation for state purposes. Conyghan School Dist.'s Appeal, 77 Pa. St. 265.

But in Kent v. Kentland, 62 Ind. 201, it was held that a statute authorizing a municipality to collect a tax for the payment of a debt contracted in the construction of a school building, upon the property of persons residing and having property outside of the municipal limits, who have sent their children to a school within the municipality in such school building, is constitutional.

2. Bates v. Eighth School Dist., 9 Gray (Mass.) 433.

Persons and property annexed to a school district of an adjoining town are subject to school taxes in the district to which they are annexed, and not elsewhere. Pickering v. Coleman, 53 N. H. 424.

A compliance with a requirement that the estates of non-resident owners shall be taxed in such districts as the assessors of the town determine, is a condition precedent to a valid assessment of a school tax, and if it is not complied with, any inhabitant of the district may avail himself of the defect. Rawson v. School Dist., 100 Mass. 134; Taft v. Wood, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 362. But a school tax is not rendered void by the omission of the assessor, through misinformation or error of judgment, to assign the real estate of one or more resident owners to any school district. George v. Second School Dist., 6 Met. (Mass.) 497.

The union of two school districts is such a redistricting of a town as makes it necessary for the assessors to make a new certificate, before the estate of a non-resident previously taxed in one of the old districts can be taxed in the new one, under the Massachusetts statute requiring such a certificate whenever a town is districted anew. *Bacon v. In Iowa, a board of directors of a school are alone authorized to fix the rates of taxation to be levied for teachers and contingent funds, and where

(3) Limitations and Restrictions.—Limitations of the amount of taxes which may be assessed for school purposes, may be fixed by statute;³ but restrictions upon the rate of taxes for state and county purposes, are held not to affect school-district taxes.⁴

(4) Collection and Distribution.—As to the collection of school taxes, see note.⁵ When the tax has been voted and collected, the

The board of supervisors of a county cannot levy a tax for the payment of a judgment against the schoolhouse fund of a district township, when the tax already levied for the use of that fund, equals the maximum rate allowed by law. Sterling School Furniture Co. v. Harvey, 45 Iowa 466; Iowa R. Land Co. v. Sac County, 39 Iowa 124.

If a contestant of a school tax desires to show that the levy was in excess of the amount authorized by law, he must show it by the levy itself. The record of the school board merely showing an estimate, is not admissible to defeat an application for judgment for the school taxes levied. English v. People, 96 Ill. 566.

c. HIGHWAY DISTRICTS AND STREET AND HIGHWAY TAXES—

(1) In General.—We have already seen that the establishment of streets, highways, bridges, etc., are public purposes for which a tax may be levied.³ The paramount and primary control, both of the highways in the state and the streets in its cities, is vested in the legislature,⁴ which may, subject to constitutional restrictions, delegate its control, together with the power to tax for their construction and maintenance, to its municipalities, or quasi corporations or districts created for that purpose;⁵ making it the duty

The fund when collected, is beyond the control of its officers, until its expenditure is authorized by a vote of the district. School Dist. No. 2 v. Stough, 4 Neb. 357.

Money raised to defray the expenses of carrying on a school cannot be applied by the trustees to the erection of schoolhouses. Lee v. School Dist. No. 1, 36 N. J. Eq. 381. And on the other hand, the building tax of a school district cannot be diverted to ordinary purposes. German Tp. School Dist. v. Sangston, 74 Pa. St. 454.

Disposition of Surplus.—If, after a portion of a tax voted has been paid, new and unforeseen circumstances render it unnecessary to use all collected, a town may properly vote to have the whole collected and refund the surplus to the taxpayers pro rata, or it may treat it as funds in the treasury to be used for other obligations. Bellows v. Weeks, 41 Vt. 590.

Appropriation of "Dog Tax."—Such an appropriation is held to be constitutional. Ex p. Cooper, 3 Tex. App. 489; 30 Am. Rep. 152. In Indiana, this fund must be appropriated among the schools of the township, and other funds appropriated for tuition. An injunction will lie to prevent the use of such a fund for the employment of a teacher in a single school district, or in advance of the general appointment for tuition for the year. *Maloy v. The construction of the roads of a town and the keeping of the same in repair, is one of the objects for which taxes are levied, and such a tax cannot be justly said to be for any other than a corporate purpose. O'Kane v. Treat, 25 Ill. 557.

In Michigan, the constitution places highways and roads under the control of the boards of supervisors, with certain legal restrictions. They are confined to state and territorial roads, and can raise money for no other roads, and must exercise their own judgment in expending such moneys as they may lawfully raise. Atty. Gen'l v. Bay County, 34 Mich. 46.

Highway districts are merely divisions of highways made from year to year, for the sake of convenience and system in keeping the roads in repair. They do not possess any of the attributes or functions of corporations. Kimball v. Russell, 56 N. H. 488.

Township highways and other local interests cannot be taken from the custody of proper local officers. Hubbard v. Springwell Tp., 25 Mich. 153.

In Illinois, commissioners of high-of each division to maintain its respective portion.¹ In marking ways are corporate bodies whose power and jurisdiction are limited territorially to their respective towns, but they are a part of the machinery of the county and state governments, and as such, under certain contingencies, are required to act in concert with the county authorities. Will County v. People, 110 Ill. 511.

In Nebraska, the construction of roads and bridges is required to be let to the lowest competent bidder, and it is the duty of county commissioners to adopt plans and specifications in advance of the letting, as a basis upon which bids may be received. People v. Buffalo County, 4 Neb. 150; Clark v. Dayton, 6 Neb. 192.

In State v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 101 Mo. 120, it was held that a road tax is a county tax, within the meaning of a corporate charter exempting a corporation from the payment of county taxes.

Where jurisdiction over roads, ferries, and bridges is conferred on boards of supervisors by constitutional provision, it is subject to legislative regulation as to the manner of its use, and must be exercised in conformity with the statute. Paxton v. Baum, 59 Miss. 531; Jefferson County v. Arrighi, 54 Miss. 668. But the jurisdiction of the boards of supervisors cannot be taken away. Jefferson County v. Arrighi, 54 Miss. 668.

Special commissioners named by statute to lay out state roads, are not county officers, though required, for purposes of record, to render an account of their proceedings to the board of supervisors. Alcona County v. White, 54 Mich. 503.

Exemption of Property in Cities.—The legislature cannot exempt property in cities from road taxes. It would be a violation of the rule requiring uniformity. Fletcher v. Oliver, 25 Ark. 289. If it commutes the tax for an equivalent burden borne by the cities and towns, or provides that the tax collected from property within such corporations shall be expended on the streets thereof, or declares that a similar and equal tax shall be collected and expended therein, the objection may be obviated. Gunnison County v. Owen, 7 Colo. 467.

The legislature of a state may compel a municipality to construct highways or other improvements for public purposes without the consent of the corporate authorities or a vote of its citizens, and it may direct it to levy a tax or to issue its bonds, to pay for such improvement. People v. Flagg, 46 N. Y. 401; 12 Am. Law Reg. 80.

It may authorize the construction of a state road by commissioners, and provide for the apportionment of the expense between the various townships through which it passes in the proportion that the length of road in the several townships bears to the entire length. Mahanoy Tp. v. Comry, 103 Pa. St. 362.

Taxes levied for road purposes include all taxes collected for the payment of damages arising from opening and laying out roads, the purchase of materials for constructing and repairing roads and bridges, etc., as well as that for making and repairing roads only. People v. Wilson, 3 Ill. App. 368. And see People v. Buffalo County, 4 Neb. 150.

In Jensen v. Polk County, 47 Wis. 298, it was held that the general rule and policy of the law of the state is to impose the burden of constructing and repairing highways upon the several towns through which they run, whether such roads are provided for by state, county, or town authorities; and an intent to the contrary must plainly appear in the act providing for the road.

Where a city is a part of a township which is a district for road purposes, the citizens of the city cannot escape the ratable share of the road tax of the district. But where the city is a district by itself, the citizens thereof cannot be compelled to work the roads of the town outside the city, nor pay taxes therefor. Cooper v. Ash, 76 Ill. 11.

In O'Kane v. Treat, 25 Ill. 557, it was held that a township has the right to out the districts the legislature need not follow existing lines,¹ and may decide whether the cost of opening streets and highways shall be borne by the contiguous property, by the city, or county at large, or in part by each;² and in order to equalize the burden may unite several districts and municipalities into one taxing district.³

impose a road tax upon all the inhabitants of the town, even though some of them also reside within an incorporated city.

A provision that certain towns shall never be compelled to support any part of certain roads or bridges without their consent, is not in the nature of a contract between the commonwealth and such towns that they shall be forever exempt from the burden of maintaining such roads and bridges. Brighton v. Wilkinson, 2 Allen (Mass.) 27.

In New York, certain moneys are furnished annually to each town for the maintenance and care of its roads and bridges, but the methods by which they are raised do not require the consent of the town, and are altogether independent of its volition. Beyond this, any contributions or obligations by the towns for the repair of roads and bridges can be attained only through their voluntary consent, given in open town meeting. People v. Ulster County, 93 N. Y. 397. And see Loomis v. Board of Town Auditors, 75 N. Y. 318; People v. Board of Town Auditors, 74 N. Y. 310; Barker v. Loomis, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 463.

Taxes assessed by a city for "roads and bridges" are highway taxes, and under Rev. Stats. Massachusetts, ch. 7, § 27, one-sixth thereof must be assessed on polls, although it makes the poll tax exceed one dollar and a half for each person, or the entire assessment will be void. Stone v. Bean, 15 Gray (Mass.) 42.

Apportionment of the Burden.—Where the legislature finds that the apportionment of the burden of providing a thoroughfare among several counties and towns requires a more full and exact investigation than a committee of its own body could make, it may properly institute an investigation of a judicial character, giving parties interested an opportunity to be heard by evidence and argument. Salem Turnpike, etc., Corp. v. Essex County, 100 Mass. 282.

1. Bowles v. State, 37 Ohio St. 35; People v. Lawrence, 41 N. Y. 141.

In Iowa, the power of township trustees to divide their township into road districts, extends only to so much of the township as is not embraced in a city, and their power to levy a tax is co-extensive with the same territory. Marks v. Woodbury County, 47 Iowa 452. And see Osborne v. Mecklenburgh County, 82 N. Car. 400.

2. Sinton v. Ashbury, 41 Cal. 525; People v. Whyler, 41 Cal. 354; Uhrig v. St. Louis, 44 Mo. 458; Garrett v. St. Louis, 25 Mo. 505; Hammett v. Philadelphia, 65 Pa. St. 146; 3 Am. Rep. 615.

Local assessments for benefits is the mode usually adopted to raise funds for the construction and maintenance of streets and other local improvements in cities, and the same principle has been sometimes applied to agricultural lands in defraying the expense of constructing roads. See supra, this title, Local Assessments—Improvements for Which Made.

In Maine, when a county road exists within the limits of an unincorporated township, the whole township is liable to be taxed to keep it in repair, notwithstanding the road is entirely within the western half of the township. King v. Aroostook County, 63 Me. 567.

Under the Illinois statute, where a city proceeds to raise money for the construction of a sidewalk by special taxation, instead of by assessments, the tax cannot be defeated merely because the sidewalk had not been built before the tax was sought to be collected. Mix v. People, 106 Ill. 425.

3. Carter v. Cambridge, etc., Bridge Proprietors, 104 Mass. 236; Com. v. Newburyport, 103 Mass. 129.

A district may be made to consist of an entire city, or only one of its wards or precincts; an entire county, or only one or two of its towns. Cooper v. Ash, 76 Ill. 11; Atty. Gen'l v. Cambridge, 16 Gray (Mass.) 247; Uhrig v. St. Louis, 44 Mo. 458; People v. Richmond County, 20 N. Y. 252.

County commissioners may be authorized to lay out a highway across a river separating two towns, and appor-

The commissioners of highways, or other proper road officers, are usually required to ascertain annually the sum necessary for roads and bridges for the ensuing year, and after levying a tax therefor,¹ make a return of the levy to the county clerk, or other proper officer, that he may extend it the same as other taxes for tion the expense of erecting and maintaining the bridge upon the towns in proportion to their valuations. Water-ville v. Kennebec County, 59 Me. 80.

Or the towns in which a bridge is situated may be relieved of the burden of maintaining it and the liability imposed upon the county. People v. Dutchess County, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 50.

Or the expense may be authorized to be borne in part by the county and in part by the town, Norwich v. Hampshire County, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 60; and the legislature may delegate to commissioners the authority to determine the share or amount of the whole expense of establishing a highway which should be paid by the town and by the county in which it is located. Hingham, etc., Bridge Corp. v. Norfolk County, 6 Allen (Mass.) 353; Boston Water Power Co. v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 23 Pick. (Mass.) 360.

Under the Illinois township organization law, the town meeting is also authorized to direct the raising of money for the maintenance and construction of roads and bridges. Thatcher v. People, 79 Ill. 597.

Where the county is required to contribute to a township one-half the expense of building a bridge, the township commissioners of highways do not levy the tax, but simply determine, in pursuance of the statute, when the contingencies have arisen requiring the county to contribute, and ascertain and report to the county authorities the cost of the structure, one-half of which the law requires them to pay; and in such case it is their duty to levy a tax to raise the required sum. Supervisors v. People, 110 Ill. 511. And without such action by the board of supervisors, the tax cannot be extended. Leachman v. Dougherty, 81 Ill. 324.

In Turpin v. Eagle Creek, etc., Road Co., 48 Ind. 45, it was held that where a county board has granted a petition for the assessment of benefits for the construction of a highway, it is the duty of the county auditor, without further notice, to notify the assessors to proceed and report their assessment.

In Ohio, etc., R. Co. v. People, 119 Ill. 207, it was held that highway commissioners of a county are required to give the number of acres, as well as the number of feet of railroad track contained in each road district, in ordering the levy of a tax, under the Illinois statute.

An order by the commissioners for an assessment need not name the assessors. When they are not named, they will be presumed to have been previously appointed by another order of the board, and they will be presumed to possess the required qualifications. Turpin v. Eagle Creek, etc., Road Co., 48 Ind. 45.

By the Massachusetts statute of 1871, all highway taxes are abolished, and the assessors of a town are not obliged to levy a separate highway tax.

Must Not Exceed the Limit.—A special highway tax exceeding the amount allowed by law and assessed for a highway not legally laid out, and without any showing in the township records that it has been voted, is void. Flint, etc., R. Co. v. Auditor Gen'l, 41 Mich. 635.

In Taft v. Barrett, 58 N. H. 447, it was held that an assessment for highway purposes of a sum exceeding the amount of taxes legally authorized, renders the assessment invalid as to the excess only.

In Illinois, commissioners of highways are limited to a certain amount in the levy of taxes, and also to what will be required to defray the costs of keeping the roads and bridges in repair for the year ensuing, and if an amount in addition to the limit is required, they must call upon the people to vote an additional amount, or for power to borrow money. Com'rs of Highways v. Newell, 80 Ill. 587.

In Ohio, taxes raised by general levy, for the improvement of streets, are included in the aggregate amount of taxes, as to which, municipalities are restricted. State v. Strader, 25 Ohio St. 527; State v. Humphreys, 25 Ohio St.

collection.¹ Constitutional provisions as to uniformity,² and requiring taxes to be levied by valuation, must be observed,³ though mere irregularities in the levy or return of a highway tax will not defeat its collection.⁴ Such taxes, when collected, become no part of the funds of the municipality collecting them,⁵ and can-

1. Com'rs of Highways v. Newell, 80 Ill. 587.

In Wabash, etc., R. Co. v. Binkert, 106 Ill. 298, it was held that a bridge tax provided for by the Illinois statutes, is required to be extended upon assessment for the current year; and that the sum is to be levied upon the assessment for the previous year; but the tax is to be extended on that of the current year. In Wisconsin, the assessment must be based upon the valuation of the preceding year. Hebard v. Ashland County, 55 Wis. 145.

Though the law directs town taxes to be extended in a separate column, the failure of the clerk to extend the road tax in a separate column will not vitiate the tax; nor will the failure of the town clerk to certify the levy to the county clerk within the time required by law. Thatcher v. People, 79 Ill. 597. And see Silsbee v. Stockle, 44 Mich. 561.

Authentication.—If not authenticated by the officer whose duty it is to return it, according to law, subsequent proceedings are invalidated. Hogleskamp v. Weeks, 37 Mich. 422.

The Ohio Road Improvement Act of 1867, does not make the owner of land assessed thereunder personally liable, and a personal action against him is not authorized by the act of 1875. Dreake v. Beasley, 26 Ohio St. 315.

2. Road taxes levied upon sections of land or otherwise, without regard to valuation, are unauthorized and void, under constitutional provisions requiring taxes to be levied by valuation. Covell v. Young, 11 Neb. 510; McCann v. Merriam, 11 Neb. 241; Dundy v. Richardson County, 8 Neb. 508.

Though in the absence of such provisions, levies without regard to valuation have been upheld. Burlington, etc., R. Co. v. York County, 7 Neb. 487; Burlington, etc., R. Co. v. Saunders County, 9 Neb. 507.

3. Fields v. Highland County, 36 Ohio St. 476. Taxes for road purposes, assessed upon real estate only, are repugnant to constitutional provisions requiring a uniform and equal rate of taxation on all property both real and personal. Bright v. McCullough, 27 Ind. 223.

McBride*, 34 Ohio St. 338; Arnold v. Juneau County, 43 Wis. 627.

A bridge and highway tax will not be presumed to be invalid for exceeding the percentage on the assessed valuation, if by proper action the amount levied might have been authorized. Stockle v. Silsbee, 41 Mich. 615.

In Massachusetts, a mere error or irregularity in the apportionment, by which a party is assessed more or less than his due proportion, does not avoid a levy or sale, and the injured party is left to his action against the town to recover back the excess. Westhampton v. Sparle, 127 Mass. 502; Cone v. Forest, 126 Mass. 97.

5. See Lima v. McBride, 34 Ohio St. 338. And when paid over by the county treasurer to the township clerk, cannot be recovered back from the county although illegally collected. Stone v. Woodbury County, 51 Iowa 522. And see Des Moines, etc., R. Co. v. Lowry, 51 Iowa 486; Butler v. Fayette County, 46 Iowa 326.

Though in Wisconsin, where an unauthorized road tax is assessed by town officers, money paid thereon under protest or in consequence of a levy or distress, may be recovered in an action against the town. Judd v. Fox Lake Tp., 28 Wis. 583.

Moneys raised by road tax as a special fund for the construction of state roads, are not county moneys, though placed in the hands of the county treasurer for safe keeping. Alcona County v. White, 54 Mich. 503.

In Illinois, road taxes collected by not be applied by the commissioners of highways to any other purpose than that for which they were levied.¹

(2) Road Labor.—Provision is usually made for keeping the roads in repair by means of road labor, each male inhabitant of the district, between certain ages, being required to work the roads for so many days, or pay a certain sum of money for each day he is absent.² Such provisions are considered in the nature

the officers of a town within a village, are required to be paid to the village treasurer, and that part of the tax which is derived from property outside the village is to be paid to commissioners of highways. McFarland v. People, 2 Ill. App. 615; Clinton v. Clintonia, 3 Ill. App. 36; Baird v. People, 83 Ill. 387; People v. Suppiger, 103 Ill. 434.

In Kimball v. Russell, 56 N. H. 488, it was held that selectmen have no authority to issue an extant against a highway surveyor for an unexpended balance of highway taxes on his list, for the reason that the district is not a legal person having power to make a contract.

1. Com'rs of Highways v. Newell, 80 Ill. 587.

While it is true in Nebraska, that the general road fund may be lawfully applied to the erection or maintenance of permanent culverts and bridges, the bridge fund raised from the five mills levy cannot be used in the general improvement of roads. Clark v. Dayton, 6 Neb. 192.

Appropriation Before Collection.—In Barnard v. Argyle, 20 Me. 296, it was held that under the Maine statutes, the assessors of plantations may draw orders on the highway commissioners to the extent of the fund, before it is actually received by the treasurer, where the fund applicable to highways is assessed and in process of collection, and that such order will be available to the holder against the plantation if not paid when demanded.³

2. Cooper v. Ash, 75 Ill. 11; Mee v. Paddock, 83 Ill. 494.

The assessment is made in the first instance as a labor tax, and if the party notified to furnish labor or materials, fails to appear, the sum assessed to him in labor is then put in his cash tax. Ingalls v. Auburn, 51 Me. 352.

But the return of the road surveyor showing who are delinquent, is a condition precedent to the authority of the assessors to make the assessment as a money tax. Hayford v. Belfast, 69 Me. 63; Patterson v. Creighton, 42 Me. 367.

And where the overseer of highways had not sworn to the return of highway labor which he has made to the supervisor, a tax deed, where the taxes for which the sale was made included highway taxes, was held void. Hogelskamp v. Weeks, 37 Mich. 422.

Where the surveyor has made a return of the delinquency, and the amount has been assessed in the next town tax, such assessment cannot be shown to be illegal by proof of payment to the surveyor, the remedy of the aggrieved party being an application to the assessors for an abatement where such proof would avail him, or a suit against the surveyor to recover for the injury occasioned by the false return. Treat v. Orono, 26 Me. 217.

The road and bridge tax, authorized by the Illinois statutes, is designed for the construction and repair of bridges and payment of damages by reason of the opening, altering, or laying out of new roads, and is distinct and separate from the tax for the maintenance and repair of highways, and must be paid in money, while the highway tax may be discharged in road labor. People v. Suppiger, 103 Ill. 434.

Chinese laborers engaged on public works within a road district, are not residents of such district so as to render them liable to perform road labor therein. On Yuen Hai v. Ross, 8 Sawyer (U. S.) 385.

Where a highway tax is returned by the surveyor as unpaid, an instruction by the selectmen to a subsequent surveyor to consider it as one then to be worked out, is without authority. Tufts v. Lexington, 72 Me. 516.

Notice of Time and Place.—The taxpayer must be given notice of the time when, and place where, he must appear and pay his highway tax in labor. Biss v. New Haven, 42 Wis. 605; Matteson v. Rosendale, 37 Wis. 254; Patterson v. Creighton, 42 Me. 367.

But if a money tax is assessed without a compliance with the statute of police regulations, and the money tax in which the labor is allowed to be commuted is in no sense a poll tax.¹

requiring such a notice to be given, the assessment is not thereby rendered void, but the surveyor may be subjected to an action for the damages thereby occasioned. Hayford v. Belfast, 69 Me. 63.

In case of non-resident owners whose land is assessed for road taxes, notice may be given by advertisement, and tenants of the land must be permitted to work out the tax if they desire to do so. Miller v. Gorman, 38 Pa. St. 309.

In Iowa, the fact that a taxpayer has not been notified to work out the part of his road tax allowed to be paid in labor, will not authorize the collection of the entire tax to be restrained. Sioux City, etc., R. Co. v. Osceola County, 45 Iowa 168.

In Osborne v. Mecklenburg County, 82 N. Car. 400, it was held that road taxes which may be discharged by labor are governed by the same rules which govern taxation of the labor itself.

Employment of Labor.—The statutes authorizing the surveyor of highways to allow taxpayers to work out their highway taxes, do not authorize them to employ labor on highways for pay. If the interests of the town require further expenditures, it is his duty to consult the selectmen, and they may authorize him to employ laborers to a certain amount. Ingalls v. Auburn, 51 Me. 352; Haskell v. Knox, 3 Me. 445; Moor v. Cornville, 13 Me. 293; Morrill v. Dixfield, 30 Me. 157; Field v. Towle, 34 Me. 405.

And where a town has duly authorized highway officers, the selectmen cannot bind it by a contract to pay for labor on highways, either in money or by an allowance upon the highway tax. Tufts v. Lexington, 72 Me. 516.

Exemptions.—Where there is no exemption to citizens not able-bodied, the fact that one upon whom the tax is imposed is not able-bodied, constitutes no defense to the imposition of the tax. Macomb v. Twaddle, 4 Ill. App. 254.

Road Labor in Cities.—Where complete jurisdiction is given a city in regard to the improvement of its streets, the general laws of the state in regard to roads and road labor in counties, ceases to be applicable as soon as the city has exercised its powers. Fax v.

Rockford, 38 Ill. 451; East Portland v. Multnomah County, 6 Oregon 63.

Inhabitants of towns and cities may be exempted from road labor outside of their corporate limits. Pleasant v. Kost, 29 Ill. 490; Fletcher v. Oliver, 25 Ark. 289.

1. State v. Halifax, 4 Dev. (N. Car.) 345; Sawyer v. Alton, 4 Ill. 127. An assessment for road labor is not a capitation tax, and therefore a constitutional provision exempting all persons over 60 years of age from the payment of a capitation tax, does not exempt them from an assessment for road labor. Fax v. Rockford, 38 Ill. 451.

It is neither a capitation tax, nor a tax within a constitutional provision making property the basis of taxation. Macomb v. Twaddle, 4 Ill. App. 254. And see Pleasant v. Kost, 29 Ill. 490, where Walker, J., said: "Nor is such an assessment a capitation tax, as that is a sum of money levied upon each poll. This rate, on the contrary, is a requisition for so many days' labor, which may be commuted in money. No doubt the number of days levied and the sum which may be received by commutation, must be uniform within the limits of the district or body imposing the same. This requisition for labor to repair roads is not a tax."

The word "taxes" means a contribution in money, not labor or personal service, and the performance of labor on highways is not the payment of a tax so as to give a legal settlement within the meaning of an act for the settlement and relief of the poor. Amenia v. Stanford, 6 Johns (N. Y.) 92; Starksboro v. Hinesburgh, 13 Vt. 215.

A city may commute the requisition on the people to work the streets by a commutation street tax of three dollars, and it will not conflict with a constitutional provision respecting poll taxes. Johnston v. Macon, 62 Ga. 645.

In Virginia, the statute (Va. Code 1887, §§ 980, 1010) designates the payment made in commutation of the labor as a fine, not as a tax.

In Hassett v. Walls, 9 Nev. 387, however, a road tax of four dollars annually, or two days' labor, imposed by the Nevada statute, was held to be a capitation or poll tax, and under their constitution, prescribing specifically what poll tax could be levied, unconstitutional,

LEVEE DISTRICTS AND TAXES.—The power to erect levees and collect taxes to defray the expense of their construction and maintenance, may be conferred upon commissioners or other officers elected or appointed for that purpose;¹ the expense being usually apportioned according to the benefits received.² Such taxes may be required to be levied and collected in the same manner and by the same officers as the ordinary taxes of the state, but when collected, like highway or drainage taxes, they should be set apart as a special fund which can be appropriated for no other purpose than that for which they were levied.³

the court disapproving the Illinois decisions and declining to follow them.

1. McGehee v. Mathis, 21 Ark. 40; Nugent v. Board of Levee Com'rs, 58 Miss. 197.

As to the power to levy taxes for the erection of levees, see supra, this title, Purposes of Taxation—What Purposes are Public.

Under the Illinois constitution, the general assembly possess no power to authorize the assessment and collection of taxes of special assessment for the construction of a levee to prevent the overflow of lands, unless the right of election in the matter be submitted to a vote of the persons affected thereby. Udike v. Wright, 81 Ill. 49.

Under the Mississippi statutes, levee commissioners are public officers, and boards of levee commissioners are public corporations created to administer a public trust, the scope of which is defined by the act of the legislature creating it. Nugent v. Levee Com'rs, 58 Miss. 197.

A grant of power to the levee inspectors to adjust the assessment and levy of the taxes, and to hear and decide all questions in relation thereto, does not make them a court. In the performance of their duties, they act as ministerial and not as judicial officers. McGehee v. Mathis, 21 Ark. 40.

Eminent Domain—Compensation for Land.—Due compensation must be made for private property taken or injured in the construction of the levee. Hollingsworth v. Tensas, 17 Fed. Rep. 109. But see Bass v. State, 34 La. Ann. 494.

In Daily v. Swope, 47 Miss. 367, it is said that levee taxes need not be assessed by the county assessor or collected by the sheriff as tax collector. The usual practice has been to provide other agencies.

In Williams v. Cammack, 27 Miss. 209; 61 Am. Dec. 508, it was held that the power to sell the land for the failure to pay a levee tax is but a means to an end legitimate and proper in itself; a mere incident to the power of taxation.

In State v. Maginnis, 26 La. Ann. 558, it was held that the legislature has the right to assess a tax and expend the money arising therefrom in the construction of levees in such a manner as they may deem beneficial; and no individual taxpayer has the right to resist the exercise of its discretionary power. The court, by Wyly, J., said: "The building of levees in Louisiana is a public enterprise or work which concerns directly at least half the people of the state, and incidentally the whole state. Of the propriety of constructing levees, the general assembly is the exclusive judge, because we find in the constitution no limitation upon the right of the people, through the general assembly, to exercise the power. They have the right to assess a tax and to expend the money arising therefrom."

I. INTRODUCTION.—(For the law applicable as well to the taxation of natural persons as to corporations, see TAXATION, vol. 25, p. 5.) Corporate interests may include four elements of taxable value, namely: franchises, capital stock in the hands of the corporation, corporate property, and shares of the capital stock in the hands of the shareholder.¹

1. Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U. S. 136; 29 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 205.

Taxes can be measured by reference to business done, income, indebtedness, dividends, and many other standards. From these standards, however, the four elements of taxable value mentioned, all being in the largest sense property, are to be distinguished as the sources from which are drawn all corporate taxes, in whatever way measured.

II. TAXATION OF THE CORPORATION—1. General Principles—a. TAXABILITY OF CORPORATIONS.—All private corporations,¹ unless by charter the state's right to tax has been expressly relinquished or curtailed,² are, barring constitutional prohibitions, taxable on their property and business.³

It is doubted whether the second and third element can be satisfactorily distinguished. See infra, this title, Capital Stock Tax.

1. Definition of Corporation.—See CORPORATIONS, vol. 4, p. 185; JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES, vol. 11, p. 1036. In People v. Wemple, 117 N. Y. 136; 29 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 610, the court held that the United States Express Company, organized by a number of individuals signing articles of agreement which described the concern as a "joint-stock company," which provided for continuance a certain number of years, for a capital stock divided into shares, represented by certificates or scrip, and assignable in the usual manner, which provided further that the business should be managed by a board of directors, that suits should be brought in the name of the president, that deeds should run to and be made by him, and that the death of members fewer than a majority in interest should not dissolve the company, is either a "corporation, joint-stock company, or association;" and that, as such, it is liable to taxation under a statute providing for the taxation of "every corporation, joint-stock company, or association whatever, now and hereafter incorporated or organized under any law of this state," inasmuch as the word "incorporated," as here used, is not to be taken in a technical or restricted meaning and confined to an association brought into being according to the formality of a statute, but as including any combination of individuals upon terms which embody or adopt as rules or regulations of business the enabling provisions of the statutes.

The Adams Express Company is a co-partnership, and not an incorporated company created by any franchise, and, although it is a quasi corporation as between its members, it is not within the meaning of the New York statute subjecting to taxation all moneyed or stock corporations deriving income or profit from their capital stock or otherwise. Hoey v. Coleman, 46 Fed. Rep. 221; 34 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 283.

A joint-stock company is not a corporation, but is a partnership, with some of the powers of a corporation. A joint-stock company, whose organization is based wholly on the mutual agreement between the members, and which is dependent in no respect upon the grant of authority from the state, having accepted no franchise or license, is not a corporation within the meaning of 1 Rev. St. New York, pt. 1, ch. 13, tit. 4, § 1, enacting that "all moneyed or stock corporations deriving an income or profit from their capital or otherwise, shall be liable to taxation on their capital." People v. Coleman, 133 N. Y. 279; 37 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 1. See also Bell v. Streeter, 1 Trans. App. (N. Y.) 6; People v. Coleman (Supreme Ct.), 5 N. Y. Supp. 394; aff'd at general term, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 624; Hoadley v. Essex County, 105 Mass. 519; Sandford v. New York, 15 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 172.

A state is not a "corporation" within the meaning of tax laws. State v. Atkins, 35 Ga. 315.

Municipal corporations created by the various states, are agencies of the state governments for the administration of local affairs, and Congress has no power to tax the revenues thereof. U. S. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 17 Wall. (U. S.) 322; Buffington v. Day, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 113.

2. If the charter provides a specific mode of taxation, this excludes all other modes. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Sabin, 26 Pa. St. 242.

3. Gordon v. Appeal Tax Court, 3 How. (U. S.) 147; Mississippi Mills v.

b. METHOD OF TAXING CORPORATIONS.—The method of taxing corporations, unless another method is provided by the state constitution or statute, or by the corporate charter, is the same as that of taxing natural persons,¹ the personalty, unless permanently located elsewhere,² being assessed at the corporation's residence,³ and the realty where it is situated.⁴ By the words "persons"⁵ and

R. Co. v. Pittsburgh*, 104 Pa. St. 502.

An exception to this doctrine is to be noted in the case of quasi public corporations, railroads, etc., in Pennsylvania and Massachusetts. See TAXATION—Exemptions—Railroads.

Toll-Road over Government Land Taxable.—Under United States R. S., section 2477, providing that "the right of way for the construction of highways over public lands not reserved to public uses, is hereby granted," it was held that where such right of way is accepted by a toll-road company, which constructs and maintains a toll-road on the public domain of the United States, such road, including road-bed and right of way, is "property" of such company within the meaning of tax laws, and is taxable in the county where located; and the fact that the county commissioners are empowered to regulate tolls over such roads, does not affect the right to tax the same. Estes Park Toll-Road Co. v. Edwards, 3 Colo. App. 74.

Property devised to a corporation is liable to a tax imposed by statute on "property of any decedent which passes "inhabitants,"¹ corporations are included in the provisions of tax laws which do not in their text indicate the contrary intent.

c. CLASSIFICATION FOR TAXATION.—Generally, separate and different statutory provisions are made for the taxation of natural persons and of corporations. This may be done, notwithstanding that corporations are "persons" within the meaning of the first section of the fourteenth amendment of the constitution of the United States, declaring that no state shall deprive any person within its jurisdiction of the equal protection of the laws. Farther, the constitutional rules as to uniformity do not prohibit the legislatures from placing certain specified corporations in one class, for which a uniform method of assessment is provided, and placing certain other specified corporations in another class, which latter class either may be exempted from the taxes imposed on the former or may be taxed under a different method of assessment.² to any person other than" specified relative. Miller v. Com., 27 Gratt. (Va.) 110.

1. Baldwin v. Ministerial Fund, 37 Me. 369.

2. The rules of taxation in this respect, were stated by Mr. Justice Bradley, in Railroad Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 232, as follows: "The provision in the fourteenth amendment, that no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws, was not intended to prevent a state from adjusting its system of taxation in all proper and reasonable ways. It may, if it chooses, exempt certain classes of property from any taxation at all, such as churches, libraries, and the property of charitable institutions. It may impose different specific taxes upon different trades and professions, and may vary the rates of excise upon various products; it may tax real estate and personal property in a different manner; it may tax visible property only, and not tax securities for payment of money; it may allow deductions for indebtedness, or not allow them. . . . It would, however, be impracticable and unwise to attempt to lay down any general rule or definition on the subject, that would include all cases. They must be decided as they arise. We think that we are safe in saying, that the fourteenth amendment was not intended to compel the state to adopt an iron rule of equal taxation. If that were its proper construction, it would not only supersede all those constitutional provisions and laws of some of the states, whose object is to secure equality of taxation, and which are usually accompanied with qualifications deemed material; but it would render nugatory those discriminations which the best interests of society require; which are necessary for the encouragement of needed and useful industries, and the discouragement of intemperance and vice; and which every state, in one form or another, deems it expedient to adopt."

In Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 142 U. S. 339, it was held that express companies having no tangible property of their own, constituted a class separate from companies owning their means of transportation, and that discrimination between the two classes was not unconstitutional.

The Pennsylvania Revenue Act of 1879, p. 112, § 4, taxed the capital stock of all corporations except foreign insurance companies, banks, and savings institutions. Act June 30th, 1885, p. 193, § 20, abolishes the taxes laid upon manufacturing corporations under the revenue laws, and repeals the laws so far as they apply to and affect manufacturing corporations; "provided, that the provisions of this act shall not apply to corporations engaged in the manufacture of malt, spirituous or vinous liquors, or in the manufacture of gas." It was held in Com. v. Germania Brewing Co. (Pa. 1891), 22 Atl. Rep. 240, that the latter act was not unconstitutional, as its effect was merely to make two classes of manufacturing companies, one of which it taxed, while it left the other untaxed.

The fact that some railroads, by the process of valuation, pay only upon the tangible property, while others pay also upon the excess of value of capital stock over the value of tangible property, does not render the tax void for want of uniformity, where no fraudulent intention is shown. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Siders, 88 Ill. 320.

In Sterling Gas Co. v. Higby, 134 Ill. 557; 32 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 348, it was held that Illinois Rev. St. 1889, ch. 120, § 3, which provides that the capital stock of certain classes of corporations shall be assessed by the state board of equalization, and of other corporations by the local assessors, is not in conflict with the provisions of the constitution which empowers the legislature to tax "persons or corporations owning or using franchises or privileges in such manner as it shall direct by general law, uniform as to the class upon which it operates."

The mere fact that railroad companies, as a class, are by law taxed more heavily than individuals, does not render the law invalid. Dubuque v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 39 Iowa 56. One class of companies may be subject to taxation, while another is exempt therefrom. Mississippi Mills v. Cook, 56 Miss. 40; Williams v. Rees, 9 Biss. (U. S.) 405.

It has been held that the property of railroad companies in unorganized counties, may be taxed; while the property of individuals in such counties is exempt from taxation. Francis v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 19 Kan. 303. See also Williams v. Rees, 2 Fed. Rep. 891.

Seemingly not in harmony with the preceding case, which represents the prevailing rule, are the following: In Exchange Bank v. Hines, 3 Ohio St. 1, it was held that a statute was unconstitutional, which provided that banks should be taxed upon the amount of their profits, after first deducting the amount of their liabilities, when such deduction of the amount of outstanding liabilities was not permitted in the case of individuals and other corporations.

In Mobile v. Stonewall Ins. Co., 53

Ala. 570, an act limiting the power of municipalities to impose taxation on banks and insurance companies, so that a tax could be levied only up to a certain fixed per cent. of the capital, was held unconstitutional, inasmuch as it exempted the corporation from a tax on its capital stock, as great as that imposed upon other property within the limits of the municipality.

In State v. Winnebago Lake, etc., Plank Road Co., 11 Wis. 35, a law imposing a special tax on plank road companies in lieu of all other taxation, was held unconstitutional, inasmuch as it provided a different rate and rule of taxation on the property of such companies from that imposed on the property of other companies and of individuals. This case has since been distinctly overruled in Kneeland v. Milwaukee, 15 Wis. 454.

In Franklin Ins. Co. v. State, 5 W. Va. 349, a law requiring insurance companies to pay three per cent. on all premiums collected by them in lieu of all other taxes, was held void as imposing a higher tax on such corporations than on others of a different character.

In Davenport v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 38 Iowa 633, it was held that an act absolutely relieving railroad property from taxation to which individual property is subjected, is invalid. And see Cummings v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 101 U. S. 153; Bureau Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 44 Ill. 229; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Boone Co., 44 Ill. 240.

Indeed, it would seem that the rule permitting different rates of taxation for different classes, has its basis in the principle of the excise tax; and that if a state excludes the principle of the excise tax from its revenue system, and seeks to tax only property, it must, under the rules of uniformity, impose the same rate on the property of all. As bearing on this, see the vigorous and convincing opinion of Mr. Justice Field in Santa Clara Co. v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 9 Sawy. (U. S.) 200; 13 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 182. See also Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Boone Co., 44 Ill. 240; State v. Cumberland, etc., R. Co., 40 Md. 22; Cheshire v. Berkshire Co., 118 Mass. 386; *Mobile v. Stonewall Ins. 1. Illinois Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 575; New Orleans v. Kaufman, 29

Different agencies may be employed by the state in the assessment and equalization of the taxes imposed upon the different classes.¹ If, however, the different agencies adopt different rules of assessment so as to produce different rates of taxation, a court of equity will, unless by express legislation the state has distinctly established different rates for the different classes, intervene in behalf of a constituent of the class upon which the heavier burden is imposed.²

d. CORPORATE RESIDENCE.—The residence of a corporation is, in revenue matters, in the state creating it and in the town wherein is its principal office or place of business. The principal office or place of business is where the governing power of the

1. State Boards of Equalization.—Thus, railroads may be assessed by state boards, while all other property is assessed by county officials; and again, different boards may be provided for banks, for railroads, for insurance companies, and the like. *Missouri River, etc., R. A statute which creates the governor, secretary of state, and auditor, a board of commissioners, and empowers them annually to examine a sworn schedule of railroad property which is required to be filed by persons or corporations owning or operating railroads, and to appraise the value of such property, and certify to the county assessor the value of the portion lying within the county which shall be listed and assessed by the assessor, is not unconstitutional because it employs a different instrumentality for the valuation and assessment of railroad property from that employed for the assessment of other property, although the constitution provides that the value of property assessed for taxation shall be ascertained in such manner as the general assembly shall direct, but shall be equal and uniform throughout the state. *St. Louis, etc., R. A company may move its principal office, to escape taxation. Pelton v. Transportation Co., 37 Ohio St. 450.

A corporation does not become a resident of a state, by being authorized to build a bridge across a river dividing the state creating the corporation and the former state. State v. Mutchler, 42 N. J. L. 461; 1 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 395.

A vessel owned by a corporation has for its home port, the corporation's residence, and is there taxable, although the corporation may have its office in another state. St. Louis v. Wiggins Ferry Co., 11 Wall. (U. S.) 431; Wheeling Transp. Co. v. Wheeling, 99 U. S. 273; 9 W. Va. 170; 27 Am. Rep. 552; Middletown Ferry Co. v. Middletown, 40 Conn. 65; Pelton v. Transportation Co., 37 Ohio St. 450.

Steamships belonging to a New York corporation, registered at New York, and employed in the transportation of passengers between New York and San Francisco, and San Francisco and Oregon, are not liable to assessment in California or San Francisco, but are taxable at their home port in New York. Hays v. Pacific Mail Steamship Co., 17 How. (U. S.) 596.

Under a statute providing for the taxation of lands in one county, to the owner, at his residence in another county of the same state, a corporation is taxable at its residence on lands in another county. Salem Iron Factory v. Danvers, 10 Mass. 514; Amesbury Nail Factory Co. v. Weed, 17 Mass. 53; Amesbury Woolen, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Amesbury, 17 Mass. 461; Goodell Mfg. Co. v. Trask, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 514.

2. State v. New York, etc., R. Co., 60 Conn. 326. Such an action must be regarded as warranted by usage, if not authorized by the statute. In this case the court said: "There is no way other than by a statute like the present one, in which the collection of any tax imposed by these statutes can be compelled, and in such a suit, any defendant may call into question the amount or the validity of the tax as a whole, or as to any part of it." And see generally, as to methods of collection, TAXATION, vol. 25, p. 5.

"A franchise is a right, privilege, or power of public concern, which ought not to be exercised by private individuals at their mere will and pleasure, but which should be reserved for public control and administration, either by the government directly, or by public agents, acting under such conditions and regulations as the government may

b. TAXABILITY OF FRANCHISES.—The franchises of a corporation are deemed to be property,¹ and, unless they are granted by impose in the public interest and for the public security." California v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 127 U. S. 40.

"No private person can establish a public highway, or a public ferry, or railroad, or charge tolls for the use of the same, without authority from the legislature, direct or derived. These are franchises. No private person can take another's property, even for a public use, without such authority which is the same as to say, that the right of eminent domain can be only exercised by virtue of a legislative grant. This is a franchise. No persons can make themselves a body corporate and politic without legislative authority. Corporate capacity is a franchise. The list might be continued indefinitely." California v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 127 U. S. 40.

"A franchise, in the wider sense, is a right conferred by government, of conducting an occupation either in a particular way, or accompanied with particular privileges." Edwin R. A. Seligman in 5 Political Science Quarterly 439.

"By the term 'corporate franchise or business,' as here used, we understand is meant . . . the right or privilege given by the state to two or more persons, of being a corporation, that is, of doing business in a corporate capacity, and not the privilege or franchise which, when incorporated, the company may exercise." Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 594; 29 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 575.

"Corporate franchises are legal estates vested in the corporation itself as soon as it is in esse. They are not mere naked powers granted to the corporation, but powers coupled with an interest which vests in the corporation upon possession of its franchises, and whatever may be thought of the corporations, it cannot be denied that the corporation itself has a legal interest in such franchises." Society for Sav. v. Coite, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 594. See also Pierce v. Emery, 32 N. H. 507, and argument of counsel preceding opinion in Spring Valley Water Works v. Schottler, 62 Cal. 69. In some states the franchises of a water company are not assessable separate and distinct from its other property. Fond du Lac Water Co. v. Fond du Lac (Wis.) 1892, 52 N. W. Rep. 439.

In West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 6 How. (U. S.) 529, the franchise of the corporation was held to be property, and, as such, liable to be condemned for public use under the right of eminent domain, upon due compensation being made. Daniels, J., who delivered the opinion of the court, said: "We are aware of nothing peculiar to a franchise which can class it higher, or render it more sacred than other property. A franchise is property and nothing more. . . . It is its character of property only, which imparts to it its value, and alone authorizes in individuals a right of action for invasion or disturbance of its enjoyment."

In Veazie Bank v. Fenno, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 533, the court, by Chase, C. J., said: "Franchises are property, often very valuable and productive property, and seem to be as properly objects of taxation as any other property."

In Wilmington, etc., R. Co. v. Reid, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 264, the statute of North Carolina, incorporating the railroad company, contained this clause: "And the property of said company, and the shares therein, shall be exempt from any public charge or tax whatever." It was held that this exempted from taxation, the franchise, as well as the other property, of the company. Davis, J., in delivering the opinact of Congress,¹ or exempted by contract,² are taxable, either as property or under the principle of the excise.³ If an excise is ion of the court, used this language: "Nothing is better settled than that the franchise of a private corporation, which, in its application to a railroad, is the privilege of running it and taking fare and freight, is property, and of the most valuable kind. It is true it is not the same sort of property as the rolling stock, road-bed, and depot grounds, but it is equally with them covered by the general term 'the property of the company,' and therefore equally within the protection of the charter."

Franchises are declared to be property, by the California constitution. San Jose Gas Co. v. January, 57 Cal. 614; Spring Valley Water Works v. Schottler, 62 Cal. 69. "It is clear, upon authority, that the franchise of a corporation is property, and as such, it may be a proper object of taxation." Porter v. Rockford, etc., R. Co., 76 Ill. 561.

2. When a certain sum or an annual charge is paid or contracted to be paid, as the consideration of the grant of a franchise, the contract is a limitation upon the taxing power, and no further tax can be imposed upon the franchise. Any tax is a substantial addition to the price paid for the use of the privilege. Gordon v. Appeal Tax Court, 3 How. (U. S.) 132 and note; Atty. Gen'l v. Bank of Charlotte, 4 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 287; Minot v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 2 Abb. (U. S.) 323; 18 Wall. (U. S.) 206; 7 Phila. (Pa.) 555; Baltimore v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 6 Gill (Md.) 288; 48 Am. Dec. 531; Farmers' Bank v. Com., 6 Bush (Ky.) 127.

However, if there was no consideration, an exempting clause may be repealed. Note to Gordon v. Appeal Tax Court, 3 How. (U. S.) 132; Hospital v. Philadelphia Co., 24 Pa. St. 229; Holly Springs Sav., etc., Co. v. Marshall Co., 52 Miss. 281; 24 Am. Rep. 668; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Loftin, 30 Ark. 693; Sandusky City Bank v. Wilbor, 7 Ohio St. 481.

The charter of a bank is a franchise, which is not taxable as such, if a price has been paid for it, which the legislature has accepted with the declaration, that is to be in lieu of all other taxation. Jefferson Branch Bank v. Skelly, 1 Black (U. S.) 436.

In Baltimore v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 6 Gill (Md.) 288; 48 Am. Dec. 531, it is held that a franchise, as property, is, whether paid for by a bonus or not, according to its value, liable to the general tax laid upon all property within the state under the act of 1841. The court, in its opinion by Dorsey, J., dissents from dicta to the contrary in Gordon v. Appeal Tax Court, 3 How. (U. S.) 133. See also Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. McLean Co., 17 Ill. 296.

"No corporation can claim immunity from taxation or from a license, because it paid a consideration for its charter or franchise, in the absence of a stipulation on the part of the state, or other taxing power, that the bonus was received in lieu of any further or future taxation." New Orleans v. Orleans R. Co., 42 La. Ann. 4; 21 Am. St. Rep. 365, aff'g New Orleans v. New Orleans City, etc., R. Co., 40 La. Ann. 587. "The charter of a corporation does not open to the state a new source of revenue. "Nothing can be more certain in legal decision than that the privileges and franchises of a private corporation . . . may be taxed by a state for the support of the state government. Authority to that effect resides in the state, independent of the federal gov-

In Minot v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 18 Wall. (U. S.) 206, Field, J., said: "The state may impose taxes upon the corporation as an entity existing under its laws, as well as upon the capital stock of the corporation or its separate corporate property. And the manner in which its value shall be assessed, and the rate of taxation, however arbitrary and capricious, are mere matters of legislative discretion."

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Atty. Gen'l, 125 U. S. 552, it was held that a telegraph company was liable in Massachusetts to an excise upon its capital, under Pub. St. Massachusetts, ch. 13, § 54, notwithstanding its acceptance of the grant of the United States, under Rev. St. United States, § 5263, of the right to use military or post roads. California v. Central Pac. R. Co., 127 U. S. 1; 33 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 451; Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 594; 29 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 575; Williams v. Rees, 2 Fed. Rep. 889.

In California, the statute provides that "all property" belonging to corporations, shall be assessed and taxed. California Pol. Code 1885, § 3608; San Jose Gas Co. v. January, 57 Cal. 614. In Spring Valley Water Works v. Schottler, 62 Cal. 69, it is held that the franchise of a water-works company should be valued for taxation.

In Connecticut, railroad corporations are required to pay a tax of one per cent. on the market value of their stock, bonds, and funded and floating debt, after deducting corporate bonds held in trust as a sinking fund. They are allowed a deduction for taxes paid on corporate realty, and no other tax is imposed on the franchise property or debts. Connecticut Gen. Stat. 1888, §§ 3919, 3920.

In Delaware, railway and steamboat companies may pay a part of their gross receipts in lieu of a tax of ten cents for each passenger. Delaware Code 1874, p. 31.

In Illinois, the franchise is assessed by the state board. Illinois Rev. Stat. 1879, ch. 120, § 3; Porter v. Rockford, etc., R. Co., 76 Ill. 561; Ottawa Glass Co. v. McCaleb, 81 Ill. 556; Pacific Hotel Co. v. Lieb, 83 Ill. 602; Union Trust Co. v. Weber, 96 Ill. 346; 3 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 583.

In Indiana, every franchise granted to any corporation shall be assessed as personal property. Indiana Tax Law 1891, § 25.

In Kentucky, the value of a franchise of any corporation, excepting railroads in existence or in process of construction, banks and turnpike companies, shall be taxable. Kentucky Pub. Acts 1891, p. 29.

In Louisiana, see New Orleans City Gas Light Co. v. Board of Assessors, 31 La. Ann. 477.

In Maryland, savings banks must pay a franchise tax on one-fourth of one per cent. on total deposits, in addition to tax on real property. Maryland Gen. Laws 1888, p. 1236; Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. State, 34 Md. 344; 21 Wall. (U. S.) 456.

In Massachusetts, all corporations except banks, are required to pay a franchise tax measured by the amount of capital stock. Massachusetts Pub. Stat. 1882, pp. 139, 140, 141. In this state, franchises have been held to be taxable under the constitutional provision for the taxation of "commodities." Portland Bank v. Apthorp, 12 Mass. 252; Atty. Gen'l v. Bay State Min. Co., 99 Mass. 148; 96 Am. Dec. 717; Com. v. Lancaster Sav. Bank, 123 Mass. 493; Gleason v. McKay, 134 Mass. 424.

In Nebraska, "every person and corporation shall pay a tax in proportion to the value of his, her, or its property franchises." Nebraska Constitution of 1875, art. 9, § 1.

In New Jersey, corporations pay franchise taxes proportional to gross receipts, premiums, or capital stock. Sup. to New Jersey Rev. 1886, p. 1016.

In New York, domestic corporations and foreign corporations doing business in the state, excepting savings banks and institutions for saving, life insurance and insurance companies, banks and foreign insurance companies, and mining and manufacturing companies doing business in the state, not including gas or trust companies, shall pay to the state by way of a tax on their business or franchise, an annual tax of a quarter of a mill on the par value of the stock for each one per cent. dividend declared during the year, if it be a six per cent. dividend or over. If less than six per cent., then the tax is a mill-and-a-half on the actual value of all the shares of stock. New York Laws 1881, ch. 542; supplemented by Laws 1882, ch. 151, and 1885, ch. 501. It has been held by the state courts that these statutes do not violate any provision of the constitution of the United States. People v. Horn Silver Min. Co., 105 N. Y. 76; 18 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 210; People v. Gold, etc., Tel. Co., 98 N. Y. 67; People v. Equitable Trust Co., 96 N. Y. 387. The Law of 1881 repeals § 3, Laws 1853, ch. 473, in so far as that enactment provides for the taxation of corporations for state purposes, People v. Gold, etc., Tel. Co., 98 N. Y. 68, aff'd 32 Hun (N. Y.) 494; but it does not operate to repeal Laws 1849, ch. 178, which exact license fees from insurance agents. Exempt Fireman's Fund v. Roome, 29 Hun (N. Y.) 391, 398. The tax is levied upon the franchise or privilege of being a corporation and doing business as such within the state, and not upon the property of the corporation. People v. Home Ins. Co., 92 N. Y. 328; 3 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 363. See also People v. Equitable Trust Co., 96 N. Y. 387. It is payable annually, not for the past, but for the future enjoyment of the franchise. People v. Albany Ins. Co., 92 N. Y. 458; 1 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 466. The whole capital of a foreign corporation, and not merely the capital employed within the state, is subject to the tax. People v. Horn Silver Min. Co., 105 N. Y. 76; 18 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 210; People v. Equitable Trust Co., 96 N. Y. 387.

The remedy conferred by the statute upon the state is not exclusive; and, accordingly, the receiver of the property of an insolvent corporation may be compelled to pay the tax out of the funds in his hands, by an order of the court, entered upon the application of the attorney general. Central Trust Co. v. New York City, etc., R. Co., 110 N. Y. 250, rev'd 47 Hun (N. Y.) 589; 35 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 9.

A corporation organized under the laws of another state, which has officers in New York, holds its annual meetings of directors there, declares and pays its dividends there, and whose produce is all sent there for disposal, does business within the state, within the meaning of the act, and is subject to taxation, although its mines should be in another state and the greater part of its business transacted there. But the provision of section 3, excepting from the operation of the statute, manufacturing or mining corporations carrying on manufacture, or mining ores within the state, applies only to manufacturing corporations carrying on manufacture within the state. Hence, a corporation which is engaged in mining outside of the state, which partially refines its ore before bringing it into the state, and delivers such partially refined metal to the United States assay office in New York city, is not a manufacturing corporation within the exception. People v. Horn Silver Min. Co., 105 N. Y. 76; 18 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 210; aff'd in 143 U. S. 305.

A company engaged in collecting, storing, and selling ice, is not a manufacturing corporation within the exception. People v. Knickerbocker Ice Co., 99 N. Y. 181; 9 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 418.

The provision of the statute, that corporations taxed under the act shall be exempt from other taxation for state purposes, except upon real estate, has reference only to general taxes levied for state purposes, and does not relieve a foreign corporation from the operation of New York Laws 1875, ch. 60, which imposes upon any corporation organized in another state, the same tax that such state imposes on New York corporations doing business within its limits. People v. Fire Assoc., 92 N. Y. 311; 1 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 1; 44 Am. Rep. 380. See also People v. Davenport, 91 N. Y. 574; 1 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 475; Monroe Sav. Bank v. Rochester, 37 N. Y. 365.

In Tennessee, the franchises and privileges granted to savings banks are taxable as personal property. Tennessee Acts 1889, p. 152.

In Vermont, all state taxes are raised by a tax on the property, business, or corporate franchises of railroad, insurance, guaranty, express, telegraph, telephone, steamboat, car and transportation, sleeping car, savings bank and trust companies, and other corporations. Acts 1882, Vermont Act, no. 1; Acts 1890, pp. 6, 15. Railroads, and steamboat and car transportation companies, may pay a per cent. of the gross laid, the only limitation upon the exercise of the power to tax is the discretion of the legislature.¹

c. MEASUREMENT OF FRANCHISE TAXES.²—Franchise taxes may be measured by dividends;³ by the amount of the capital stock;⁴ by the extent of the business transacted;⁵ by the net earnings;⁶ by the gross receipts;⁷ by the average amount of earnings in lieu of this tax. Acts 1890, Vermont, pp. 9, 11. None of these corporations is taxed locally, on property used in carrying on its business. Acts 1890, Vermont, p. 15.

Taxable for Benefits.—A franchise can be assessed for benefits from public improvements, only when the benefits are direct and immediate. Bridgeport v. New York, etc., R. Co., 36 Conn. 255; 4 Am. Rep. 63.

Lien for Franchise Tax.—A franchise tax is not a lien on any specific property of the corporation, except by express statutory provision, 2 Dillon Munic. Corp., § 821; Tompkins v. Little Rock, etc., R. Co., 18 Fed. Rep. 348; yet the state has a paramount right to collect it from the corporation's receiver, before he disposes of money in his hands. Central Trust Co. v. New York City, etc., R. Co., 110 N. Y. 250; 35 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 9. In Illinois, it is held that franchises are taxed as personal property, and as such, the tax thereon does not become a lien upon the real estate of the owner, until the collector charges it on the real estate. Belleville Nail Co. v. People, 98 Ill. 939; Cooper v. Corbin, 105 Ill. 231; 13 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 394.

This is true, because in those states having constitutional provisions requiring equality in the taxation of property, it is uniformly held that such provisions do not abridge or apply to the legislative power of indirect taxation by taxes on franchises, privileges, trades, and occupations. Cooley on Taxation 176, and cases there cited; State Board of Assessors v. Central R. Co., 48 N. J. L. 146; Standard Underground Cable Co. v. Atty. Gen'l, 46 N. J. Eq. 270; 19 Am. St. Rep. 394. See also Gleason v. McKay, 134 Mass. 424, holding that a franchise tax does not have to be proportional.

2. A franchise tax upon a corporation may be graduated or measured by an appraisal of the whole, or any portion, of the corporate property, without thereby making it a property tax. Possessing the power to impose a franchise tax to any amount it deems proper, the legislature may measure the amount by any standard it pleases. State v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 74 Me. 376.

3. New York Rev. St. 1890, p. 3011, § 335; People v. Albany Ins. Co., 92 N. Y. 458; 1 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 466; People v. Home Ins. Co., 92 N. Y. 328; 3 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 363; Phoenix Iron Co. v. Com., 59 Pa. St. 104. In this case it was held that a company paying such a tax, and none specifically on dividends, was liable under the general law of the state to a tax on net earnings. d. DISTINGUISHED FROM PROPERTY TAX.—Necessity for the difficult but important distinction between those taxes which are tantamount to franchise taxes and those which are tantamount to property taxes is frequent.⁸ No satisfactory rule for making the distinction has been established. The least unsatisfactory is that a tax according to a valuation is a tax on property, whereas a tax imposed according to nominal value or measured by some

a tax measured by gross receipts. State v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 48 Md. 49.

In Iowa, a tax on railroad companies of one per cent. on gross earnings, one half to be paid to the state and the other half apportioned among the municipalities, was sustained in Dubuque v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 47 Iowa 196, and was held applicable to unincorporated owners of roads. See also infra, this title, Income Tax—Gross Receipts.

8. "What is the real significance of the franchise tax? Why is it desirable that such a hard and fast line should be drawn between the property tax and the franchise tax? What is the meaning of the distinction? The answer is very plain. In the first place, according to the constitutions of several of the states, the taxes on property must be uniform. If, however, the corporation tax is held to be a franchise tax, then there is no necessity of such uniformity between the tax on individuals and that on corporations. Secondly, according to the principles of our property tax, deductions are allowed for certain classes of exempt or extra-territorial property. If the tax is a franchise tax, such exemptions cannot be claimed. Finally, if the tax is a franchise tax, many of the objections to double taxation would be removed, as we shall see in the succeeding essay. Every commonwealth imposing a franchise tax could, for instance, assess the entire capital of a corporation, although only a very small portion might be located or employed within the state. We can hence readily understand the persistence with which the corporations seek to uphold standard of mere calculation, as contrasted with valuation, fixed by the law itself, may be a franchise tax.¹ The distinction has had to be made chiefly in cases pertaining to the taxation of capital stock and of bank deposits. If the tax is found to be in effect a franchise tax, that is on the corporation as such and not on the corporation's property, it clearly cannot then be complained of on the ground that the property of the corporation is otherwise taxed or is non-taxable.²

the distinction, and to have the imposition declared not a franchise, but a property tax." Edwin A. R. Seligman, 5 Political Science Quarterly 442.

1. Com. v. Standard Oil Co., 101 Pa. St. 127. The difficulty has resulted largely, it is thought, from the confusion as to the meaning of "capital stock." See infra, this title, Definition of Capital Stock. "The usual and most certain test is whether the tax is upon the capital stock, eo nomine, without regard to its value; or at its assessed valuation in whatever it may be invested. If the former, it is a franchise tax; if the latter, a tax upon the property." State v. Stonewall Ins. Co., 89 Ala. 335. This case held that a tax on capital stock was a property, not a franchise tax, and the corporation was therefore entitled to deduct, as exempt, such portion of its capital stock as was invested in state bonds.

2. A leading case on the distinction between franchise and property taxes, is People v. Home Ins. Co., 92 N. Y. 328; 3 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 363, which has been approved in 134 U. S. 594; 29 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 575. The opinion of the United States Supreme Court has been interestingly criticised by Prof. Seligman in 5 Political Science Quarterly, 445. The statute in question was New York Laws, 1880, ch. 542, § 3, as amended by Laws 1881, ch. 361, which provided that the corporations subject to the provisions of the act should pay a tax upon corporate franchises or business, to be computed thus: "If the dividend or dividends made or declared by such corporation, joint-stock company or association during any year ending with the first day of November, amount to six, or more than six, per cent. upon the par value of the capital stock, then the tax to be at the rate of one-quarter mill upon the capital stock for each one per centum of dividends so made and declared." The court said: "We have before seen that the state legislature had an undoubted right, by virtue of its jurisdiction over corporations organized under its laws, to levy such tax upon their business and privileges, aside from all property taxation, as in its discretion it might deem just and proper in order to provide revenues for the state. Conceding this, the appellant claims that because the legislature has directed the amount of this tax to be arrived at in a particular way, i. e., by requiring payment of a percentage upon declared dividends, and because such computation may be based in part upon interest derivable from funds invested in United States bonds, such method necessarily invalidates the tax to the extent of dividends accrued from the capital so invested.

"We are unable to see why this precise proposition has not been determined adversely to the appellant, both by this court and by the Supreme Court of the United States. The question was substantially involved in Monroe Sav. Bank v. Rochester, 37 N. Y. 365. . . . In Society for Sav. v. Colte, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 594; Provident Inst. v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 611; Hamilton Co. v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 633, the point here involved was also decided." The opinion quoted the language of the United States Supreme Court in Provident Inst. v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 611. In that case, as in Hamilton Co. v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 632, Justices Chase, Grier and Miller dissented, holding the tax to be on property, and not on the franchise. In the Hamilton Company case, their position seems unanswerable, inasmuch as the value of the exempt bonds was necessarily included, with the value of the franchise, in the value of the capital stock. This inclusion was inevitable, because machinery was the only deducted personality.

The Pennsylvania cases, referred to in the opinion in People v. Home Ins. Co., 92 N. Y. 328; 3 Am. & Eng. Corp.

3. Capital Stock Tax—a. DEFINITION OF CAPITAL STOCK.—The phrase "capital stock," as used in revenue laws, means a unit comprising the whole or a part of the property of the cor-

Cas. 363, are approved in Com. v. Standard Oil Co., 101 Pa. St. 119 (cited with approval in Fox's Appeal, 112 Pa. St. 354; 14 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 356), where it was held that, under the application of the test, the tax laid by § 4, of the Pennsylvania Act of May 1st, 1868, P. L. 108, was a property, not a franchise, tax. The section is as follows: "The capital stock of all companies . . . incorporated by . . . this commonwealth, or . . . any other state, and lawfully doing business in this commonwealth, or that may be hereafter incorporated . . . shall be subject to and pay a tax into the treasury of the commonwealth annually, at the rate of one-half mill for each one per cent. of dividend made or declared . . . then three mills upon a valuation of the capital stock . . . made in accordance with the provision of the second section."

Among the few states that tax the deposits of savings banks, the decisions are almost uniform that the tax is a franchise tax on the corporation, and not a tax on the corporation's property. Connecticut, Maine, Maryland, and Massachusetts accept this view. State v. Central Sav. Bank, 67 Md. 290; Colte v. Society for Savings, 32 Conn. 173; aff'd in 6 Wall. (U. S.) 594; Com. v. Lancaster Sav. Bank, 123 Mass. 493; Jones v. Winship Sav. Bank, 66 Me. 242. New Hampshire has taken the contrary view. Bartlett v. Carter, 59 N. H. 105.

1. See CAPITAL, vol. 2, p. 727; STOCK, vol. 23, p. 586.

The following discrimination is from the note following State Bank of Virginia v. City of Richmond, 79 Va. 113; 11 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 644: "The phrase 'capital stock' or 'capital,' as used in revenue laws, has a meaning quite distinct from its technical meaning of 'the sum of all the rights and duties of its stockholders.' (Lowell, Transfer of Stock, p. 5.) In its strict technical sense the phrase stands for two intangible things: first, the right of the company to compel all stockholders to contribute to the corporate fund, and, second, the combined right of all the stockholders against the company to the profits of the corporation and to its property on dissolution. The phrase as employed in revenue laws seldom if ever has this meaning. It is generally, perhaps always, used to include the whole or a part of the property, assets, or estate of the corporation, taken collectively or as a unit. This use of the phrase 'capital stock,' or 'capital,' arose from confounding the funds collected from stockholders, or the property in which such funds were invested, with the obligation on the part of the stockholders to pay or contribute the funds. The phrase having been used to designate the property representing the capital when paid up, came to be used to include sometimes more and sometimes less than this property. . . . It is thought that this distinction of capital stock as a third kind of property, distinct from the franchise and other corporate property, is erroneous. Capital stock is a mere phrase used to designate as a unit or collectively more or less of the corporate property."

In People v. Coleman, 126 N. Y. 437, the court, by Finch, J., said: "Now, it is certain that the two things are neither identical nor equivalents. The capital stock of a company is one thing; that of the shareholders is another and a different thing. That of the company is simply its capital, existing in money or property, or both; while that of the shareholders is representative, not merely of that existing and tangible capital, but also of surplus, of dividend-earning power, of franchise and the good will of an established and prosperous business. The capital stock of the company is owned and held by the company in its corporate character; the capital stock of the shareholders they own and hold in different proportions as individuals. The one belongs to the corporation; the other to the corporators. The franchise of the company, which may be deemed its business opportunity and capacity, is the property of the corporation, but constitutes no part or element of its capital stock; while the same franchise does enter into and form part, and a very essential part, of the shareholder's capital stock. While the nominal or par value of the capital stock and of the share stock are the same, the actual value is often widely different. The capital stock of the company may be wholly in cash or in property, or both, which may be counted and valued. It may have in addition a surplus, consisting of some accumulated and reserved fund, or of undivided profits, or both; but that surplus is no part of the company's capital stock, and, therefore, is not itself capital stock. The capital cannot be divided and distributed; the surplus may be. But that surplus does enter into and form part of the share stock, for that represents and absorbs into its own value surplus as well as capital, and the franchise in addition; so that the property of every company may consist of three separate and distinct things, which are its capital stock, its surplus, and its franchise; but these three things, several in the ownership of the company, are united in the ownership of the shareholders. The share stock covers, embraces, represents all three in their totality; for it is a business photograph of all the corporate possessions and possibilities. A company also may have no surplus, but, on the contrary, a deficiency which works an impairment of its capital stock. Its actual value is then less than its nominal or par value, while yet the share stock, strengthened by hope of the future and the support of earnings, may be worth its par, or even more. And thus the two things, the company's capital stock and the shareholder's capital stock, are essentially and in every material respect different. They differ in their character, in their elements, in their ownership, and in their value. How important and vital the difference is, became evident in the effort by the state authorities to tax the property of the national banks. The effort failed, and yet the share stock in the ownership of individuals was held to be taxable as against them. The corporation and its property were shielded, but the shareholders and their property were taxed."

Capital stock "is usually the representative of the property of the corporation, and the property of the corporation is the representative of the capital stock, and for purposes of taxation it is represented by whatever it is invested in." 1 Desty on Taxation, p. 351. However, the value of the capital stock is not necessarily equivalent to the value of the property. "The market value of the shares of a corporation," etc., does not necessarily indicate the actual value or amount of property which a corporation may own. The price for which all the shares would sell may greatly exceed the aggregate of the corporate property, or it may fall very far short of it. Undoubtedly the amount of property belonging to a corporation is one of the considerations which enter into the market value of the shares; but such market value also embraces other essential elements. It is not made up solely by the valuation or estimate which may be put on the corporate property, but it also includes the profits and gains which have attended its operations, the prospect of its future success, the nature and extent of its corporate rights and privileges, and the skill and ability with which its business is managed. In other words, it is the estimate put on the potentiality of a corporation, on its capacity to avail itself profitably of the franchise, and on the mode in which it uses its privileges as a corporate body, which materially influence and often control its market value. Com. v. Hamilton Mfg. Co., 12 Allen (Mass.) 303.

"From the economic point of view, capital stock is not necessarily identical with the property of a corporation. In the first place there is the question of the market or par value of the stock. Some of the commonwealths, as we know, tax corporations on the amount,

i. e., the par value, of the capital stock. Yet manifestly, where the market value of the stock may be double or half the par value, it cannot be maintained that the latter is identical with or an index to the value of the property. In no sense can capital stock at its par value be declared equivalent to the whole property. But even if we take the market value of the stock, we are not in a much better condition. For many of our corporations, especially railroads, are created on the proceeds of the bonds. In such cases, although the property may be very great, the profits are devoted mainly to meeting the interest on the bonded debt. There may be no dividends, and the value of the stock therefore may be very slight; yet the property which produces these profits may be enormous. Evidently the capital stock and the whole property are not identical. But we may go still farther. Even in the case of corporations which have no bonded debt, if the property does not pay good dividends, the capital stock even at its market value is no index of the property. A model-dwelling company may have property worth a million dollars; yet, if it is so managed as to pay no dividends, the stock will sell in the market for a very small sum. The value of this depreciated stock is evidently not the same as that on the company's real property. They are not interchangeable terms. Thus from whatever point of view we regard it, capital stock, economically speaking, is not identical with the corporate property. A tax on capital stock is not a tax on the whole property." Edwin A. R. Seligman, 5 Political Science Quarterly, 438.

—Under a statute prescribing as the basis of taxation of foreign corporations "the amount of capital stock employed in this state," the value of all goods on hand, and property and money on deposit and employed in business, in the state, may enter into the calculation of the amount, but not sales made by samples at their business offices in the state, to persons out of the state, with delivery from their factory located in another state. People v. Wemple, 133 N. Y. 323, reversing 16 N. Y. Supp. 602.

Capital Stock—Shares of Stock.—In State v. Home Ins. Co. (Tenn. 1892), 19 S. W. Rep. 1042, it was held that when the charter of a corporation phrase has been defined as the property of the corporation exclusive of its surplus and franchise;¹ as "another property" than the franchise;² as all the property, tangible and intangible, including the franchise;³ as the money or property put into the corporate fund by subscribers;⁴ as not only stock subscriptions, but all the actual tangible property;⁵ as the aggregate of the sum subscribed and paid in, or secured to be paid in, by the shareholders, with the addition of all gains or profits realized in the use and investment of those sums, or, if losses have been incurred, then it is the residue after deducting such losses;⁶ and as the money paid or authorized or required to be paid in as the basis of the business of a bank, and the means of conducting its operations.⁷

b. TAXABILITY OF CAPITAL STOCK.—Capital stock is taxable to the corporation,⁸ and in many of the states is taxed after provides that there shall be a certain state tax "on the amount of capital stock actually paid," its capital stock is exempt from further taxation, but an ad valorem tax may be imposed upon its shares of stock.

When a corporation is organized in a state, its capital stock is taxable in that state, though the owners are non-residents. Faxon v. McCosh, 12 Iowa 527.

Capital stock may be taxed as to amount, by a prior act, and as to the rate, by a subsequent act, and the latter is not a repeal of the former. Com. v. Erie R. Co., 98 Pa. St. 127.

Taxation of the excess in value of the capital stock of a corporation, over that of its tangible property subjected to taxation, is not prohibited by a statutory provision that when the tangible property of a corporation is listed and assessed for taxation, its shares of capital stock shall not be. Hyland v. Central Iron, etc., Co., 129 Ind. 68.

In Delaware, a tax of one-half of one per cent. of the cash value of the capital stock is assessed against the corporation, in addition to specific taxes on property, and a tax on earnings. Delaware Code 1874, p. 42.

In Georgia, all corporations excepting banks, where there is not a different mode of taxation specially prescribed, pay the same rate per cent. upon the whole amount of their capital stock paid in, as is levied on other capital. Georgia Code 1882, § 816.

In Illinois, the capital stock of all corporations incorporated by the state is assessed at its value, including the franchise less the assessed value of its tangible property. Illinois Rev. Stat. 1889, ch. 120, §§ 1, 3. This law, which further provides that the capital stock of certain classes of corporations shall be assessed by the state board of equalization and of other corporations, by the local assessors, is not in conflict with Illinois Const., art. 9, § 1, which empowers the legislature to tax "persons or corporations owning or using franchises or privileges, in such manner as it shall direct by general law, uniform as to the class upon which it operates." *Sterling Gas. In Indiana, corporations not taxed by special provisions of the statute, are taxed on all property, including franchises and excess of capital stock over property otherwise taxed. Indiana Acts 1891, p. 203, § 12.

In Kansas, the capital stock of corporations is assessed at its true value to the realty of the taxed corporation.¹ As elsewhere explained in this article, the tax, if laid on the capital stock at its par value, is generally held to be in effect a charge on the franchise; if laid on the capital stock at an assessed value, it is a property tax.² If it appears that the latter has been laid, exemption must be made of so much of the capital stock as is invested in non-taxable property.³

In Michigan, the capital stock of corporations shall not be taxed as such. Michigan Acts 1891, p. 173.

In Minnesota, the capital stock and franchises of corporations, except as otherwise provided, shall be listed for taxation where the principal office of the corporation is located. Minnesota Stat. 1891, § 1432.

In Mississippi, corporations are taxed on their capital stock at their principal place of business. Mississippi Rev. Code, § 473.

In New Jersey, manufacturing, mining, etc., corporations, organized under the Act of April 7th, 1875, are taxed on their capital stock at its actual value, and on their surplus. Sup. to New Jersey Rev. 1886, p. 161.

In New York, the capital stock, and surplus exceeding ten per cent. of the capital, less the value of the real estate and shares of stock actually owned by the corporation in other corporations paying a tax on capital in the state, is assessed at its actual value, and is taxed in the same manner as other personal and real property. New York Rev. Stat. 1889 (Birdseye), p. 2954, § 19.

In Nebraska, the capital stock of all domestic corporations is assessed for taxation at the market value of all the shares of stock, less the assessed value of the real and personal property otherwise taxed. Nebraska Comp. Stat. 1887, pp. 590, 591.

In Nevada and Arkansas, capital stock is taxed as personality. Nevada

In Oregon, corporations are taxed on such part of their capital stock as is liable to taxation and is not invested in real estate. Oregon Gen. Stat. 1887, § 2731.

In Pennsylvania, all corporations excepting manufacturing companies, pay a tax on their capital stock, varying from three mills on each $1 of the actual value of the capital stock of insurance companies to eight mills on each $1 of the par value of shares in banks. Pennsylvania Laws 1891, p. 238, §§ 21-25.

In South Carolina, corporations are taxed on their capital stock in proportion to the amount of tangible property which they have in the state, representing that capital. South Carolina Gen. Stat. 1882, § 194.

In Vermont, the statute taxing the capital stock of corporations, allows for the exemption of so much thereof as may be invested in property otherwise taxed. Vermont Rev. Laws, § 288. And when the stock of a corporation does not exceed in value the property which it represents, all of which is assessed to the corporation, it should not be assessed to the stockholders under the provisions of the Vermont statute providing for the deduction from the value of the stock, of the value of the real and personal property of the corporation represented by the stock, and itself taxed. *Willard v. c. CAPITAL STOCK OF INTERSTATE CORPORATIONS.—A corporation chartered by two states is taxable on its capital stock in each.¹ Farther, a state may tax such proportion of the whole capital stock of a foreign sleeping car company as the number of miles over which its cars are operated within the state bears to the whole number of miles over which its cars are operated, though such cars run into, through and out of the state.²

d. VALUATION OF CAPITAL STOCK.—The market value of the shares of stock does not alone furnish a proper basis for the valuation of the capital stock.³ It may be considered, as may the indebtedness and the general condition of the corporation.⁴

J. 308, where the court, by Clopton, J., said, in construing Alabama Civil Code, 1887, § 453 (9): "Regarded as a tax upon property, the question then is, whether, under the revenue law, the corporation is entitled to a deduction from the assessed value of its capital stock of such portion as is invested in the bonds of the state. It is contended that no deduction can be made under the statute, except of such portions as may be invested in property otherwise taxed. The argument is, that the capital stock includes everything in which it is invested, and that expressly excepting the portion of its investments in property otherwise taxed is the exclusion of such portions as may be invested in property non-taxable. . . . Unless a deduction from the assessed value of the capital stock of the portion invested in bonds of the state is allowed, then there exists the anomaly of taxing, in the form of capital stock, investments expressly exempted from all taxation. If a part of the money capital of an individual be invested in state bonds, it will be conceded that such part is not liable to taxation; why then should it be held that the portion of the capital of corporations so invested is taxable?"

4. Indebtedness May Be Considered.—People v. Coleman, 49 Hun (N. Y.) 607.

Where commissioners of taxes are to determine the assessed value of the capital stock of a corporation, the thing to be taxed is the capital of the company, and not the shares of the stockholders. Such capital and surplus must be assessed at its own value, and, when that is correctly known and determined, no other value can be substituted for it. When its amount and value are undisclosed and unknown, the assessors may consider the market value of the share stock and the general condition of the company, as indicative of surplus or deficiency, and of the probable amount of either. They may further resort to such means of information when the amount of capital and surplus is disclosed, but the assessors have sufficient reason to disbelieve the statement, and such reason is founded upon facts established by competent proof. Where the corporation presents to the assessors a sworn statement of its assets and liabilities, the truth of which is not questioned or doubted by the assessors, they have no discretion to assess the value of the capital stock at a larger sum independently of the established facts. People v. Coleman, 126 N. Y. 433.

A leading case on this subject is Porter v. Rockford, etc., R. Co., 76 Ill. 561, in which the following rules, adopted by the state board of equalization, were under consideration: "First, the market or fair cash value of the shares of capital stock and the market or fair cash value of the debt, excluding such indebtedness for current expenses, shall be combined or added together, and the aggregate amount so ascertained shall be taken and held to be the fair cash value of the capital stock, including the franchises respectively of such companies and associations. Second, from the aggregate amount ascertained as aforesaid, there shall be deducted the aggregate amount of the equalized or assessed valuation of all the tangible property respectively of such companies and associations, such equalized or assessed valuation being taken in each case, as the same may be determined by the equalization or assessment of property by this board, and the amount remaining in each case, if any, shall be taken and held to be the amount and fair cash value of the capital stock, including the franchise, which this board is required by law to assess respectively against companies and corporations now or hereafter created under the laws of this state." The foregoing rules were upheld, and the case was affirmed and the rules approved in State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 578.

When the tax is upon the market value of the capital stock, evidence of the value of the shares when they have been withdrawn from the market may be ascertained from other sources; and, when they have been exchanged for securities, the value fixed upon them in the exchange is a proper basis for the assessment. Planters' Crescent Oil Co. v. Jefferson Parish, 41 La. Ann. 1137.

Where a bridge owned by a corporation was duly declared a county bridge, the surplus of the damages assessed over the amount of capital stock, which was divided among the stockholders, was in the nature of profits, and a proper measure of the tax upon the capital stock. Matson's Ford Bridge Co. v. Com., 117 Pa. St. 265; 20 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 604.

In estimating the value of the capital stock, the assessed value of the real estate should be deducted. People v.

Com'rs of Taxes, 46 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 227.

An assessment of the stock of a corporation is not illegal because its value is determined by including realty in another state in which the company has invested part of its capital. American Coal Co. v. Alleghany Co., 59 Md. 187.

When the law requires the appraisal of stock to be made between the 1st and the 15th of November, at its cash value, "not less, however, than the average price for which it sold during the year," it means that the valuation shall be the November selling price, unless the average selling price during the year shall exceed that sum, in which case the latter shall govern. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Com., 94 Pa. St. 474; 13 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 666.

The stock should be assessed at its actual, and not par, value. People v. Com'rs of Taxes, 64 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 405. However, an assessment at par will be valid if the evidence shows the market value to be higher than the par value. St. Charles St. R. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 31 La. Ann. 852.

A law making the market value the basis of assessment is constitutional. New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 32 La. Ann. 19.

In People v. Com'rs of Taxes, 104 N. Y. 240, it is held that in certiorari to correct an assessment of the capital stock of a corporation made by the commissioners of taxes, it is incumbent upon the company, before it is entitled to call upon the board to correct the assessment by increasing the sum to be deducted for the value of its real estate, to give evidence and furnish data showing that the actual value exceeded the sum fixed by the commissioners.

Deduction of Foreign Realty.—In several states the value of the corporation's realty is deducted from the amount of the assessment of the capital stock. The following decisions bear on the ascertainment of the value of foreign realty for the purpose of deduction.

If the realty be situated in a foreign state, and the valuation assessed there can be ascertained, it will be adopted in New York, on the ground that to take the assessed value of real property in another state, where it is practicable and convenient to ascertain the facts, as the actual value, in the absence of some controlling circumstance which

Under a statute providing that in taxing certain corporations the aggregate value of the shares of the capital stock shall be taken as the basis of assessment, it was held that proposed but unissued new shares could not be included in estimating the value, although such shares are paid for and have a market value.¹

"But if the real estate should be in another state or country, or if for any other reason its assessed value cannot be obtained, then, as the best and nearest substitute for it, the price paid, as the presumed value, in the absence of proof, or any other standard, may be taken as the assessable value." Dictum in People v. Montgomery Gas Light Co., 64 Ala. 269; Com. v. Penn Gas Coal Co., 62 Pa. St. 241. Section 7 of the Revenue Act of 1879 (Pa.) (P. L. 112), imposes a tax on the gross receipts of railroad companies "for tolls and transportation."

In Com. v. New York, etc., R. Co. (Pa. 1891), 48 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 633, the defendant was a foreign corporation operating a railroad through one of the counties of Pennsylvania. It leased and operated a branch railroad within Pennsylvania, which branch connected with the railroad of a canal company. The payments of the canal company to the defendant for the transportation by the canal company of coal over the branch road, were held not to be receipts for transportation within the meaning of the act. Said payments were, however, held to be receipts for tolls.

The Minnesota courts have held that "earnings" means only receipts from operation, and does not include the amount received by a railroad from another company for the right to run its trains over the road. State v. St. Paul, etc., R. Co., 30 Minn. 311; 13 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 663.

In New York, under a peculiarly phrased statute, it has been held that "income" means gross income, and that "profits" means gross, not clear, profits. People v. Niagara Co., 4 Hill (N. Y.) 20; People v. New York, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 605.

In South Carolina, the gross receipts of an express company upon which it is taxed, has been held not to include such sums as it collects for forwarding goods over connecting lines, as agents for such lines, nor such sums as the company are compelled to pay to the railroad and steamship companies over which it does business. Southern Express Co. v. Hood, 15 Rich. (S. Car.) 66; 94 Am. Dec. 141.

In Virginia, the net income of corporations is ascertained by "deducting from the gross receipts the costs of operation, repairs, and interest on indebtedness." Virginia Laws of 1883-84, ch. 450, § 20.

The interstate commerce commission distinguishes between earnings and income, by including in earnings only receipts from transportation, and designating as income the receipts from property owned but not operated. 3. See INTERSTATE COMMERCE, vol. 11, p. 548. Some of the earlier cases on the taxation of gross receipts from interstate commerce are: Southern Express Co. v. Hood, 15 Rich. (S. Car.) 66; 94 Am. The leading case was State Tax on Gross Receipts, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 284, until the decision of Philadelphia, etc., S. S. Co. v. Com., 122 U. S. 326, in which it was held that the imposition of a tax, under the acts of Pennsylvania passed March 20th, 1877, and June 7th, 1879, upon a steamship company incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania, upon the gross receipts of such company, derived from the transportation of persons and property by sea between different states, and to and from foreign countries, is a regulation of interstate and foreign commerce, in conflict with the exclusive powers of Congress under the constitution of the United States. The court, by Bradley, J., said: "The question which underlies the immediate question in the case is, whether the imposition of the tax upon the steamship company's receipts amounted to a regulation of, or an interference with, interstate and foreign commerce, and was thus in conflict with the power granted by the constitution to Congress. The tax was levied directly upon the receipts derived by the company from its fares and freights for the transportation of persons and goods between different states, and between the states and foreign countries, and from the charter of its vessels, which was for the same purpose. This transportation was an act of interstate and foreign commerce. It was the carrying on of such commerce. It was that, and nothing else. In view of the decisions of this court, it cannot be pretended that the state could constitutionally regulate or interfere with that commerce itself. But taxing is one of the forms of regulation. It is one of the principal forms. Taxing the transportation, either by its tonnage, or its distance, or by the number of trips performed, or in any other way, would certainly be a regulation of the commerce, a restriction upon it, a burden upon it. . . . If, then, the commerce carried on by the plaintiff in error in this case could not be constitutionally taxed by the state, could the fares and freights received for transportation in carrying on that commerce be constitutionally taxed? If the state cannot tax the transportation, may it, nevertheless, tax the fares and freights received therefor? Where is the difference? Looking at the substance of things, and not at mere forms, it is very difficult to see any difference. The one thing seems to be tantamount to the other. It would seem to be rather metaphysics than plain logic for the state officials to say to the company: 'We will not tax you for the transportation you perform, but we will tax you for what you get for performing it.' Such a position can hardly be said to be based on a sound method of reasoning. . . . If this case (State Freight Tax, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 232) stood alone, we should have no hesitation in saying that it would entirely govern the one before us; for, as before said, a tax upon fares and freights received for transportation is virtually a tax upon the transportation itself. But at the same time that the case of State Freight Tax was decided, the other case referred to, namely, that of State Tax on Railway Gross Receipts, was also decided, and the opinion was delivered by the same member of the court. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 281. This was also a case of a tax imposed upon the Reading Railroad Company. It arose under another act of assembly of Pennsylvania passed in February, 1866, by which it was enacted that, 'in addition to the taxes now provided by law, every railroad, canal, and transportation company incorporated under the laws of this commonwealth, and not liable to the tax upon income under existing laws, shall pay to the commonwealth a tax of three-fourths of one per centum upon the gross receipts of said company; the said tax shall be paid semi-annually.' Under this statute the accounting officers of Pennsylvania stated an account against the Reading Railroad Company for tax on gross receipts of the company for the half year ending December 31st, 1867. These receipts were derived partly from the freight of goods transported wholly within the state, and partly from the freight of goods exported to points without the state, which latter were discriminated from the former in the reports made by the company. It was the tax on the latter receipts which formed the subject of controversy. The same line of argument was taken at the bar as in the other case. This court, however, held the tax to be constitutional. The grounds on which the opinion was based, in order to distinguish this case from the preceding one, were two: First, that the tax, being collectible only once in six months, was laid upon a fund which had become the property of the company, mingled with its other property, and incorporated into the general mass of its property, possibly expended in improvements, or otherwise invested. The case is likened, in the opinion, to that of taxing goods which have been imported after their original packages have been broken, and after they have been mixed with the mass of property in the country, which, it was said, are conceded in Brown v. Maryland to be taxable. This reasoning seems to have much force. But is the analogy to the case of imported goods as perfect as is suggested? When the latter become mingled with the general mass of property in the state, they are not followed and singled out for taxation as imported goods, and by reason of their being imported. If they were, the tax would be as unconstitutional as if imposed upon them whilst in the original packages. When mingled with the general mass of property in the state, they are taxed in the same manner as other property possessed by its citizens, without discrimination or partiality. We held in Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, that goods brought into a state for sale, though they thereby become a part of the mass of its property, cannot be taxed by reason of their being introduced into the state, or because they are the products of another state. To tax them as such was expressly held to be unconstitutional. The tax in the present case is laid upon the gross receipts for transportation as such. Those receipts are followed, and caused to be accounted for, by the company, dollar for dollar. It is those specific receipts, or the amount thereof (which is the same thing), for which the company is called upon to pay the tax. They are taxed, not only because they are money, or its value, but because they were received for transportation. No doubt a ship-owner, like any other citizen, may be personally taxed for the amount of his property or estate, without regard to the source from which it was derived, whether from commerce, or banking, or any other employment. But that is an entirely different thing from laying a special tax upon his receipts in a particular employment. If such a tax is laid, and the receipts taxed are those derived from transporting goods and passengers in the way of interstate or foreign commerce, no matter when the tax is exacted, whether at the time of realizing the receipts, or at the end of every six months or a year, it is an exaction aimed at the commerce itself, and is a burden upon it, and seriously affects it. A review of the question convinces us that the first ground on which the decision in State Tax on Railway Gross Receipts was placed is not tenable; that it is not supported by anything decided in Brown v. Maryland; but, on the contrary, that the reasoning in that case is decidedly against it." See also Fargo v. Stevens, 121 U. S. 230; 31 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 452.

Where the tax is based upon the receipts, and such receipts are derived partly from interstate commerce and partly from internal commerce, only receipts that are clearly derived from internal commerce are to be considered, for the purposes of assessment. *Rat-terman v. 1. In Maltby v. Reading, etc., R. Co., 52 Pa. Co. v. Com.*, 66 Pa. St. 77; but in a later case decided on the authority of Maltby v. Reading R. Co., 52 Pa. St. 140, appealed from the supreme court of Pennsylvania to the Supreme Court of the United States, and reported as State Tax on Foreign Held Bonds, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 300, the latter court reversed the decision of the supreme court of Pennsylvania, Justices Davis, Clifford, Miller and Hunt dissenting. The court, by Mr. Justice Field, said: "The bonds issued by the railroad company in this case are undoubtedly property, but property in the hands of the holders, not property of the obligors. So far as they are held by non-residents of the state, they are property beyond the jurisdiction of the state. The law which requires the treasurer of the company to retain five per cent. of the interest due to the non-resident bondholder is not, therefore, a legitimate exercise of the taxing power. . . . It is a law which impairs the obligation of the contract between the parties." To the same effect are Com. v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., 27 Ohio St. 344; San Francisco v. Mackey, 22 Fed. The court, by O'Neill, J., said: "It appears absurd to contend that income, derived from an institution not taxable, after it has been separated from it, and is in the pocket of a citizen amenable to the taxing power of a state, and having no other safeguard against its abuse than the discretion of his representative, is still not liable to taxation."

If dividends have been declared or earned, but not divided, they are to be assessed against the corporation. Montgomery Co. v. Montgomery Gas Light Co., 64 Ala. 269.

A company paying a tax imposed by a statute which provided that the capital stock of all companies should pay a tax at the rate of one-half mill for each one per cent. of dividend declared by such company; and in case of no dividend being declared, then three mills upon a valuation of the capital stock, was held liable to pay a tax imposed upon the annual net earnings of all companies "not paying a tax to the state upon dividends under existing laws." The court held that the company paid a "tax on capital graduated by the dividends," but did not "pay a tax to the state upon dividends." Phoenix Iron Co. v. Com., 59 Pa. St. 104.

Town lots, over which a railroad company has the right of way, may be taxed as right of way, but this precludes them from being also taxed as town or city lots. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Miller, 72 Ill. 144.

In Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. People (Ill. 1891), 27 N. E. Rep. 200, it was held that under Illinois Rev. Stat., ch. 120, § 42, which defines the "railroad track," which must be assessed by the state board of equalization, as the "right of way, including the superstructure of main, side, and second track and turn-outs, and the station and improvements of the railroad company on such right of way," city lots which have been bought by a railroad company with the intention of using them as a site for its station, when it should acquire title to other adjoining lots, but which it has held for four or five years without attempting to acquire title to such other lots, form no part of its "railroad track." The court said: "It seems to us to be very clear that whatever appropriation the appellant intends to make, or may hereafter make, of said lots, when it has succeeded in acquiring title to the residue to its proposed depot grounds, said lots cannot now be said to be, in any proper sense, a part of its 'railroad track.' They are not, and never have been, actually appropriated by the appellant as a part of its right of way, and so do not come within its definition of 'railroad track,' as given by said section 42 of the revenue law. Even if the title to the residue of the site for the proposed passenger station had been acquired and the station built, that alone would not necessarily constitute the lots in question a part of appellant's 'railroad track.' Where stations and other improvements are erected on the 'right of way' of a railroad company, they may be regarded as a part of the 'railroad track,' within the meaning of section 42 of the revenue law; but section 46 clearly contemplates the possibility of stations and other buildings and structures of railroad companies not being on their right of way, and therefore not a part of their 'railroad track.' No railroad tracks have ever been constructed upon the lots in question here, and there is no proof in the record that the appellant contemplates the construction of any of its tracks thereon. It is not easy to see, then, how the construction by the appellant of its passenger station on a piece of land adjoining this right of way will ipso facto have the effect of constituting said land a part of the right of way. But there has so far been no appropriation of said lots as a site for a passenger station. The evidence merely shows an intention to make such appropriation whenever the complainant succeeds in obtaining title to the residue of the property necessary for the purpose. That may or may not happen, and, until it does, the lots which the appellant now holds cannot be regarded as having been definitely appropriated to any railroad purpose. There is no view of the case, then, in which said lots can now be regarded as a part of the appellant's 'railroad track.'"

3. The law as to the taxation of rolling stock engaged in interstate commerce may be said to have been settled, after much confusion, by the decision in Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18; 46 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 236, affirming 107 Pa. St. 156. It was there held, Bradley, Field and Harlan, JJ., dissenting, that a state may tax the cars of a foreign sleeping car company employed in interstate commerce, and which run into, through, and out of such state, and may ascertain the proportion of the property of such company upon which the tax should be placed, by taking as a basis of assessment, such proportion of the capital stock of the company as the number of miles over which it runs cars within the state, bears to the whole number of miles in that and other states over which its cars are run. Followed in Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Hayward, 141 U. S. 36; Denver, etc., R. Co. v. Church, 17 Colo. 1.

(3) Railroads are Units.—Under the generally adopted method of taxing railroads, it is held that each, from one end to the other, is an entirety, and as a whole only may be subject to taxation or coercive sale.⁴

(4) Their Residence.—For purposes of taxation, the corporation is to be deemed a resident of each town and county through

1. By the usual contract of the Pullman Palace Car Company, the railroad company is required to keep the cars in good running order and repair, and to bear such running expenses, including light, fuel, lubricating material and ice, and also to bear the expense of all repairs rendered necessary by accident and casualty. The Pullman Company agrees to provide the cars, keep the carpets, upholstery, and bedding in good cleanly condition; furnish necessary employes to preserve order in the cars, collect berth and coach fares, and take proper charge and care of the inside of the cars. It also agrees to furnish to the railroad company for a term of fifteen years a sufficient number of cars to meet the requirements of travel over all lines of railway owned or operated by the railroad company.

On the other hand, where, by a Missouri statute, it was provided that all railroads in that state, "and all other property, real, personal or mixed, owned by any railroad or corporation in this state," should be assessed and taxed in the method prescribed by the act, it was held that under this statute, cars belonging to the Pullman Palace Car Company were not owned by the railroad within the meaning of the statute, and were not to be assessed against it. State v. St. Louis Co., 84 Mo. 234; 29 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 192.

A statute of Wisconsin, required the owners of drawing-room, palace and sleeping cars to return annually to the railroad commissioner a "statement of the gross earnings made by the use of such cars between points within the State of Wisconsin," and to pay a license fee of two per cent. upon such earnings. It was held that the statute only required a statement to be returned of the earnings derived from the use of such cars in transporting passengers, who both got on and off at points within the state. The court did not decide whether the statute, if otherwise construed, would have been unconstitutional. State v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 64 Wis. 89.

(5) Valuation.—In the absence of prescribed methods of valuation, any may be adopted which tends to the ascertainment of the value of the property for the purposes for which it is used. Personal inspection, inquiry of experts, testimony of witnesses, consideration of income, competition, earning capacity, situation with reference to markets and trunk lines—consideration, in short, of all the elements which constitute railroad value; all these are proper methods of arriving at a valuation for assessment.³

b. NATIONAL ROADS.—Lands granted by Congress to aid the construction of a railroad cannot be taxed by the state until the company, having complied with the conditions of the grant, is entitled to a patent.⁴

A statute providing that appraisers, in estimating the value of a railroad for taxation, should take into consideration the location of the road for business, the competition of other roads, its earnings, etc., was held to be constitutional in *Louisville, etc., R. The cost of acquisition is not an absolute criterion of the value, but is an important element to be considered, under the circumstances upon which the value is to be formed. Illinois Cent. R., etc., Co. v. Stookey, 122 Ill. 358; 31 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 479.

Branch roads owned or leased by a company, though constituting but one system, should be assessed and valued separately from the main line; counties through which such branch roads run are only entitled to the tax on the branches according to their respective values. *Louisville, etc., R. The evidence which a board may hear in order to determine the value of a road for taxation, need not be confined to that which would be competent before a court. State v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 8 Mo. App. 583; 1 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 632.

In estimating the value of railroad property, the inquiry should be directed to what it is worth for the purposes for which it is designed, and not for other purposes to which it might be applied. Buffalo, etc., R. Co. v. Erie Co., 48 N. Y. 93; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. State, 8 Heisk. (Tenn.) 663; State v. Illinois, etc., R. Co., 27 Ill. 64; 79 Am. Dec. 396. c. INTERSTATE ROADS.—The usual method of valuing for taxation the portion within a given state of an interstate road, is by consideration of the proportion between the mileage within and the mileage without the state and of the value of the whole.¹

d. CONSOLIDATED ROADS.—The consolidation of the rights, privileges, franchises, and purposes of two or more railroad companies into one, where there is no provision of the statute or constitution to the contrary, leaves the portions of the roads thus formed subject to the same rules of taxation that existed before the consolidation.²

The capital stock and bonds of an interstate railway are liable to state taxation in the proportion that the length of road in the state bears to the entire length of road. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Com., 66 Pa. St. 73.

A tax on the franchise may be assessed on this basis. Buffalo, etc., R. Co. v. Com., 3 Brew. (Pa.) 386; and so may a tax on the interest on the loans. Buffalo, etc., R. Co. v. Com., 3 Brew. (Pa.) 386. So also may a tax on the rolling stock. Richmond, etc., R. Co. v. Alamanace, 84 N. Car. 504; 7 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 339. This method is, however, liable to difficulties which might defeat the just assessment of roads whose value per mile within the state is less than that without.

In Minot v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 18 Wall. (U. S.) 206, the court, by Field, J., said: "Assuming that the tax is upon the property of the corporation, if the ratio of the value of the property in Delaware to the value of the whole property of the company be less than that which the length of the road in Delaware bears to its entire length, and such is admitted to be the fact, a tax imposed upon the property in Delaware, according to the ratio of the length of its road to the length of the whole road, must necessarily fall upon property outside of the state. The length of the whole road is in round numbers one hundred miles. The length in Delaware is twenty-four miles. The tax upon the property estimated according to this ratio would be in Delaware 24-100 or 6-25 of the amount of the tax upon the whole property. But the value of the property in Delaware is not 6-25 of the value of the whole property, but much less than this proportion would require. We repeat, therefore, that upon the assumption made by the appellant, there would be great difficulty in sustaining the tax."

2. State v. Keokuk, etc., R. Co., 99 Mo. 30; State v. Seaboard, etc., R. Co., 52 Fed. Rep. 450; Natchez, etc., R. Co. v. Lambert, 70 Miss. 779.

Under the New York statute authorizing any railroad company organized under New York laws . . . to merge and consolidate its capital stock, franchise, and property with the capital stock, etc., of any other railroad company or companies organized under the laws of this state, or under the laws of this state and any other state, or under the laws of any state or states, and providing for the conversion of the stock of the consolidated companies into that of the new corporation, it was held that where a New York company consolidated with companies organized under the laws of other states with a capital stock equal to the aggregate of the stock of the consolidated companies, such consolidation created a new corporation, which was required to pay the organization tax on the total amount of its capital stock, as required by the New York Act of 1886, ch. 143, § 1. *People v. e. LEASED ROADS.—Taxes assessed upon the gross earnings of a railroad have been held to be taxes upon the property of such road, within the provision of a statute requiring the lessor of a railroad, and not the lessee, to pay such taxes—especially, where the rent to be paid is a certain proportion of the gross earnings, and the statute directs the lessee to pay the taxes and deduct them from the rent.¹

f. UNION STATIONS.—Payment of a percentage on their gross earnings by the railway companies which own all the stock and use the terminal facilities of a union depot company constitutes payment of taxes on all the property of the latter.²

g. COUNTY AID.—A railroad company cannot be taxed to pay the amount of a county's subscription to aid in building the road.³

8. Foreign Corporations—a. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.—Corporations are not "citizens" within the meaning of the clause of the federal constitution, guaranteeing to the "citizens" of each state the enjoyment of all the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several states. Accordingly, it is no infringement of the privileges and immunities of citizens of other states for a state to impose upon corporations, of which such citizens are stockholders, such taxes, etc., as it may deem fit and proper, as a condition to their carrying on business within its borders.⁴

ture of Illinois, is an association incorporated under Illinois laws, in the sense of the revenue law of that state authorizing the taxation of its capital stock. Quincy R. Bridge Co. v. Adams Co., 88 Ill. 615. See also CORPORATIONS, vol. 4, p. 274.

1. A law which requires the lessee of a railroad to deduct the taxes levied on the road, from the rent stipulated to be paid under the lease, and pay the same to the state, is not void, even with reference to existing leases as impairing the obligation of a contract, where both lessor and lessee and the rent due are proper subjects of taxation. *Vermont, etc., R. 3. Applegate v. Ernst, 3 Bush (Ky.) 648.

In Elizabethtown, etc., R. Co. v. Carter Co. (Ky. 1892), 18 S. W. Rep. 370, it appeared that the defendant county, being unable to pay certain bonds issued by it in aid of a railroad, procured a legislative enactment, whereby it was able to compromise with the bondholders, and secure a reduction of the indebtedness. The act authorizing the compromise also authorized, for the payment of the said bonds, a regular ad valorem tax, to be levied from year to year, "according to the assessment lists . . . reported by the assessor." It was held that, although the mode of ascertaining the property to be assessed was thus prescribed, and the assessment of railroad property was not by an assessor, but by a board created for that purpose, the act evidently contemplated that the property of the railroad, as well as all other property in the county subject to taxation, should be assessed; and whether or not it had constituted any part of the basis of credit, was immaterial.

A foreign country is "another state," within the meaning of a law exempting stockholders in one state from a tax on their shares of a foreign corporation, if the stock is taxed where the corporation is situated. Foster v. Stevens (Vt. 1891), 13 L. R. A. 166.

Such a tax is not obnoxious to a constitutional requirement that taxes shall be equal and uniform, because it discriminates in favor of domestic companies. State v. Lathrop, 10 La. Ann. 398; State v. Fosdick, 21 La. Ann. 434; People v. Thurber, 13 Ill. 554; Fire Department v. Noble, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 453; Firemen's Ben. Assoc. v. Lounsbury, 21 Ill. 511; 74 Am. (U. S.) 168; Liverpool Ins. Co. v. Massachusetts, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 566. In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Mayer, 28 Ohio St. 521, the court sustains a tax on the gross receipts of foreign telegraph companies doing business in the State of Ohio, although the domestic corporations of that state are not so taxed. Foreign insurance companies may be taxed additionally upon all premiums collected by them, the taxes to be paid into a fund for the use of the fire department. Walker v. Springfield, 94 Ill. 364.

S. 540, seem to hold that, if a state should impose on a corporation, a condition as to its entry within the state or as to its continuance within the state, which is repugnant to the state or federal constitution, the corporation would have either to comply with the condition and waive its constitutional privileges, or to take the consequences of remaining without or departing from the state. These decisions do not, however, seem to be harmonious with Baron v. Burnside, 121 U. S. 186; 17 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 222, and *San Francisco v. Liverpool, etc., Ins. b. DEFINITION OF "DOING BUSINESS."—Occasional and isolated transactions do not render concerns liable to taxes laid upon foreign corporations "doing business" within the state.⁴

c. "RETALIATORY LEGISLATION."—In some of the states there are statutes imposing upon foreign corporations seeking to do business therein the same taxes, licenses, fees, and conditions exacted by the home state of such corporations from the corporations of the former seeking to do business in the latter. The constitutionality of this legislation has been attacked upon may be changed after entry. Philadelphia Fire Assoc. v. New York, 119 U. S. 119.

3. In Portland Bank v. Apthorp, 12 Mass. 252, and in Com. v. Hamilton Mfg. Co., 12 Allen (Mass.) 298, the corporations taxed on their franchises were creations of the taxing power. In Atty. Gen'l v. Bay State Min. Co., 99 Mass. 148; 96 Am. Dec. 717, the court went further, holding that a franchise tax might be imposed on the capital stock of a foreign corporation. "It is not merely the creation of corporate functions and privileges," the court said, "or the conferring of rights and franchises by the legislature, which entitles the state to tax the possessor of such privileges and rights." See also State v. Sioux City, etc., R. Co., 43 Minn. 17.

4. Laws imposing such taxes are not intended to withdraw absolutely the comity which enables foreign companies to bring suits and make contracts. In the case of the Standard Underground Cable Co. v. Atty. Gen'l, 46 N. J. Eq. 270; 19 Am. St. Rep. 394, the court said: "The appellant is a corporation incorporated under the laws of this state; it is a manufacturing company; it has an office in this state, and procures from other manufacturing corporations in the state much of the material used by it; but the manufacture of its special product, into which these materials enter, is carried on in the State of Pennsylvania. It must, therefore, under the rulings in this court, be held to be a company not transacting its business in this state, within the meaning of this law. American Glucose Co. v. State, 43 N. J. Eq. 280; 15 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 112."

A New Jersey manufacturing corporation, which has its principal business office there, but which manufactures and sells a portion of its wares in New York, and has mills, warehouses, and large bank deposits in that state, is a foreign corporation "doing business" there within the meaning of Laws N. Y. 1881, ch. 361, and subject to taxation thereunder. People v. Equitable Trust Co., 96 N. Y. 387; People v. Horn Silver Min. Co., 105 N. Y. 76; 18 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 210; People v. Wemple (N. J. 1892), 29 N. E. Rep. 812.

A foreign manufacturing company which maintains an established location, and an agent in New York City for the purpose of selling its products or facilitating their sale, and which keeps funds in New York City to maintain its place of business and to enable its agent to carry on his operations, is "doing business within the state," within the meaning of Laws N. Y. 1885, chapters 359, 501, which provide that every foreign corporation "doing business with the state" shall be subject to a tax on its corporate franchise or business, to be computed on the basis of the amount of capital stock employed within the state. Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Wemple, 44 Fed. Rep. 24. See also People v.

III. TAXATION OF THE SHAREHOLDER—1. Direct Tax—a. RESIDENT SHAREHOLDER—(1) In Domestic Corporations.—The taxation of shares of stock in a corporation is governed by the rules which govern the taxation of other choses in action.³ They are taxable to the owner at his residence;⁴ unless the state has given, as it may give, them a special situs for the purpose of taxation.⁵ They are thus taxable notwithstanding either the fact that the corporation has paid a tax on its property or its capital stock or both;⁶ or the fact that the corporation's property is

In Conwell v. Connersville, 15 Ind. 150, the court, by Davidson, J., said: "It is true, we have decided that stocks in railroad companies, are taxable to the corporations. State v. Hamilton, 5 Ind. 310. But that decision is based upon a statute, which expressly requires that mode of taxation to be applied to that class of corporations. In the absence of this statute, it is quite evident, that the individual stockholders would be, alone, liable to be taxed for their shares of railroad stock."

Pledged Stock.—Shares of stock which have been pledged as collateral for bonus, with power to the pledgee to transfer the shares to his own name, and, in case the bonus is not paid, to sell, but which stand on the books of the company in the name of the pledgor, are taxable in the pledgor's name. Ratterman v. Ingalls (Ohio, 1891), 28 N. E. Rep. 168. See also Tucker v. Aiken, 7 N. H. 113; and Waltham Bank v. Waltham, 10 Met. (Mass.) 334.

exempt from taxation.¹ This is true because the capital stock and the shares are distinct properties.²

(2) In Foreign Corporations.—A tax may be levied on shares of stock of foreign corporations, by the state of the owner's resi-

tions (2d ed.), § 477, a; Desty on Taxation (1st ed.), vol. 1, p. 356; State Bank v. Richmond, 79 Va. 113; Memphis v. Ensley, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 553; 32 Am. Rep. 532; Cook v. Burlington, 59 Iowa 251; 44 Am. Rep. 679.

In Seward v. Rising Sun, 79 Ind. 353; 13 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 315, Bicknell, C. C., said: "In the absence of a statute to the contrary, although a corporation may be taxable for its corporate property, the owners of shares of its stock may be taxed therefor where they reside. Conwell v. Connersville, 15 Ind. 150."

1. Belo v. Forsyth Co., 82 N. Car. 415; 33 Am. Rep. 688. In that case, which holds that shares in a railway corporation, whose property is exempted by its charter, may be made to pay an ad valorem tax, the court, by Smith, C. J., said: "It is not pretended that the assessment and taxation of the estate of the debtor where he may reside, or his estate may be found, should relieve the security, which the creditor holds, from liability for its share of the common burden. The same principle, and with equal force, may be applied to the stockholder and the corporation. The latter must bear the taxation imposed upon its property, and this may diminish its distributable profits, but the stockholder cannot, any more than the creditor, claim exemption on this account, for his stock, as distinct and separate property in his own hands." Conwell v. Connersville, 15 Ind. 150; Nashua Sav. Bank v. Nashua, 46 N. H. 389; Smith v. Exeter, 37 N. H. 556. And see Floyd Co. v. New Albany, etc., R. Co., 11 Ind. 570.

A state may tax shares of capital stock invested in United States bonds, against stockholders, although it cannot tax the bonds themselves. St. Louis, etc., Assoc. v. Lightner, 47 Mo. 393. 2. In Van Allen v. Assessors, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 573, on page 583, the court, by Justice Nelson, says: "The tax on the shares is not a tax on the capital of the bank. The corporation is the legal owner of all the property of the bank, real and personal. . . . The interest of the shareholder entitles him to participate in the net profits earned by the bank in the employment of its capital, during the existence of its charter, in proportion to the number of his shares. . . . This is a distinct independent interest or property, held by the shareholder like any other property that may belong to him." Burroughs on Taxation (1st ed.), § 86; Cook's Stock, Stockholders, and Corporation Law (2d ed.), § 563; Bradley v. Bauder, 36 Ohio St. 28; 38 Am. Rep. 547; Porter v. Rockford, etc., R. Co., 76 Ill. 561; Danville Banking, etc., Co. v. Parks, 88 Ill. 170; State v. Branin, 23 N. J. L. 484; Memphis v. Farrington, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 539; Minot v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 18 Wall. (U. S.) 206.

In a note to Com. v. Delaware Div. Canal Co. (Pa.), 2 L. R. A. 798, it is said: "The capital stock of a corporation, and the shares of the capital stock, are distinct things. So a tax on the shares of stockholders in a corporation, is a different thing from a tax on the corporation itself or its stock, and may be laid irrespective of any taxation of the corporation when no contract relations exist. Glean v. Dodge (D. C. 1885), 3 Cent. Rep. 287; Tremont Bank v. Boston, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 142; State v. Petway, 2 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 396; State v. Thomas, 26 N. J. L. 181; *Lycoming Co. v. dence.¹ This rule is not affected by the fact that the corporation has in its state paid taxes on capital stock or property or both.² Some of the states, however, exempt such shares from taxation when a tax has been paid on them in the state where the corporation is located.³

Such a tax is not opposed to the constitution of the United States, nor to a provision in a state constitution that "the burdens of the state ought to be fairly distributed among its citizens." Dyer v. Osborne, 11 R. I. 321; 23 Am. Rep. 460. Nor to a provision that property shall be taxed "by a uniform rule." Worthington v. Sebastian, 25 Ohio St. 1; Bradley v. Bauder, 36 Ohio St. 28; 38 Am. Rep. 547.

In Dyer v. Osborne, 11 R. I. 321; 23 Am. Rep. 460, it was held that a person owning shares in a manufacturing corporation in Massachusetts, but residing in Rhode Island, was liable to a tax upon his shares at his place of residence, although they had been assessed under the laws of Massachusetts in the city where the corporation was located, and the owner had paid the tax. The court, by Durfee, C. J., said: "The laws of Rhode Island are paramount in Rhode Island, and all the inhabitants of the state are subject to them without regard to the laws of any other state. . . . It would certainly be going too far to hold that a man of wealth in Rhode Island cannot be taxed at all, if his property is invested in the stocks of a manufacturing corporation of another state and there subject to taxation."

See Worth v. Ashe Co., 90 N. Car. 409, where this same point is decided, and this language is quoted with approval.

It is said that if one chooses to submit his property to the taxing power of a state by investing in stocks of corporations which are liable to be made to collect a tax from non-resident shareholders, the courts can afford him no relief. Tappan v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 500; Nashville v. Thomas, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 600; Bedford v. Mayor, etc., of Nashville, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 409; *First Nat. Bank v. In Mayor, etc., of Baltimore v. Hussey, 67 Md. 112, it was held that stock representing the debt of the city of Baltimore, owned by a resident of New York, was not taxable by the State of Maryland.

In Catlin v. Hull, 21 Vt. 152, and

(2) In Foreign Corporations.—As a state's taxing power is limited to persons, property and business within its boundaries, shares of a foreign corporation's stock held by a non-resident cannot, of course, be taxed.¹

2. Tax Collected from the Corporation.—Corporations, even national banks, may be made tax-collectors by being required to reserve for the benefit of the government, deductions from the shareholders' interests.²

Redmond v. Rutherford Co., 87 N. Car. 122, it was held that choses in action belonging to a non-resident, in the hands of an agent within the state, may be taxed. This latter case quoted the opinion of Chief Justice Pearson, pronounced in Alvany v. Powell, 2 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 51, to the effect that the doctrine that personal property is deemed to follow the person of the owner "is based upon a fiction which has no application to the question of revenue."

A municipality has no authority to tax shares of stock in corporations within its jurisdiction, owned by persons residing elsewhere, unless such authority is expressly conferred by statute. Evansville v. Hall, 14 Ind. 27; Conwell v. Connorsville, 15 Ind. 150; Craft v. Tuttle, 27 Ind. 332.

In Griffith v. Watson, 19 Kan. 23, it was held that shares of stock in a gas company in the city of Lawrence, owned by a resident of Wakarusa Township, could not be taxed by the city of Lawrence where he did not reside. The court said: "Said shares of stock must be considered as personal property . . . and must therefore be taxed, if taxed at all, to the holders thereof where such holders reside."

In Gordon v. Mayor, etc., of Baltimore, 5 Gill (Md.) 231, it was held that a general taxing power, "granted in the most comprehensive terms, and without any limitation as to the objects on which the power is to operate," was a sufficient authority for levying a municipal tax upon the bank stock of a corporation in the city owned by a non-resident.

In Arkansas, banks are required to pay tax on the shares of stock, but may recover the amount so paid from the stockholder. Arkansas Dig. of Stat. 1884, §§ 5632, 5633.

In North Carolina, the cashier of the bank is required to pay the state taxes on shares of stock to the treasurer of the state, and the taxes assessed for school and county purposes to the sheriff of the county in which the bank is situated. North Carolina Laws 1891, p. 291, § 4.

In some of the states, non-resident shareholders in all corporations are taxed, and the corporation pays it and collects it from the shareholder. Connecticut Gen. Stat. 1888, §§ 3916, 3917; Maryland Pub. Gen. Laws 1888, p. 1250.

Vermont makes this provision as to stock in all corporations but railroads, telephone, insurance, steamboat, and car and transportation companies, the stock of which companies is exempt from taxation. Vermont Rev. Stat. 1880, §§ 283, 284; Acts 1890, p. 16.

In Massachusetts, a law requiring all corporations to reserve and pay into the treasury of the commonwealth a certain proportion of all dividends declared by them on shares of non-resident owners has been declared unconstitutional. Oliver v. Washington Mills, 11 Allen (Mass.) 268. See a similar rule declared in New Jersey. State v. Thomas, 26 N. J. L. 181.

"The fact that the tax on the shares is collected from the bank, instead of directly from the stockholders, does not alter the character of the tax. This mode of requiring the officers of corporations to pay the tax on the dividends due the shareholders, or on the shares, is the one practised in New England and some of the other states, and by Congress, and is one which experience shows to be convenient and proper." Burroughs on Taxation (1st ed.), § 86. See First Nat. Bank v. Kentucky, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 363.

In Jenkins v. Charleston, 5 S. Car. 393; 23 Am. Rep. 14, it was held that the city council of Charleston may lawfully tax its own stock, as well that owned by non-residents as that owned by residents of the city, and may enforce payment by deducting the amount of the tax from interest due on the stock.

It was held in State Tax on Foreign Held Bonds, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 300, that the corporation could not be made collector of a tax on bonds in the hands of non-resident owners.

Neither can such a tax be enforced against the corporation's assets after it becomes insolvent, nor against a receiver's assets. Lionberger v. Rowse, 43 Mo. 67; Reife v. Columbia L. Ins. Co., 11 Mo. App. 374; Cooley on Taxation, p. 433.

Corporations may, it seems, be compelled by mandamus to collect such taxes. State v. Mayhew, 2 Gill (Md.) 487; Barney v. State, 42 Md. 480; McVeagh v. Chicago, 49 Ill. 318.

In Nashua Sav. Bank v. Nashua, 46 N. H. 389, it was held that the real estate of a bank is taxable in the town where situated, regardless of any assessment that has been made on the capital stock. The court said: "It is a fundamental principle in taxation that the same property shall not be subject to a double tax, payable by the same party, either directly or indirectly;" but on the next page it adds: "If this were in substance a double tax, it would only show that the statute has in this instance admitted an anomaly in conflict with the general policy of the law, which can only be excused on the ground that, from the nature of the case, the injustice of double taxation cannot be avoided."

In Lenawee Co. Sav. Bank v. Adrian, 66 Mich. 273; 18 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 471, in which it was held that the bank fixtures and surplus property held by a bank which had paid a tax on its real estate, and whose shareholders had paid a tax on the value of their shares, after deducting the value of the real estate so taxed to the bank, could not be assessed for taxation under the statute of 1885, the court said, "Whether legally possible to levy double taxes under any circumstances, as it is claimed some authorities justify, there is no doubt they ought not to be levied, and we have no doubt this statute has prevented banks and their shareholders from being subjected to them."

ample.¹ Statutes will be so construed as to prevent double tax-

In Salem Iron Factory v. Danvers, 10 Mass. 514, decided in 1813, it was held that a manufacturing corporation is taxable for its real property in the town where it lies, notwithstanding the individual corporators are liable to be taxed for their several shares in the towns where they dwell. But the personal property of the corporation was held not to be taxable; the court observing that, as the shares are articles of personal estate, for which the owners are taxable in their respective towns, "it appears unjust and contrary to the spirit of our laws, that the corporation should also be taxed for the same property."

But see Tax Cases of 1841, 12 Gill & J. (Md.) 117, and Gordon v. Mayor, etc., of Baltimore, 5 Gill (Md.) 231, where the doctrine is advanced that, "the stock of a bank is the representative of its whole property; and when a tax has been laid on the stock in the hands of the shareholders, the real and personal estate of the company becomes exempt from taxation. To tax both the real or personal property and the stock, would be a double tax, and unjust."

In Iron City Bank v. Pittsburgh, 37 Pa. St. 340, in which it was held that a tax could be assessed against the discount business of a banking corporation which had paid a tax on its capital stock, the court says: "With a firm conviction that bank stocks are taxed beyond any other forms of property in the commonwealth, . . . we are brought, nevertheless, to the conclusion that this tax is legal and constitutional."

In People v. Home Ins. Co., 92 N. Y. 328; 3 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 363, on page 347, the court, by Ruger, C. J., said: "In performing the duty of levying taxes for the support of the government, state legislatures may, in the exercise of their undoubted power, impose double taxes, or lay burdens beyond the financial capacity of the classes taxed, and however impolitic or unwise such a course would be, the courts have no right to interfere with the legislative discretion."

But see Angell & Ames on Corporations (11th ed.), § 461, where it is said: "It appears, then, that the capital stock of a corporation may, in the discretion of the legislature, be taxed as an aggregate, to the corporation, according to its value, or to the stockholders, on account of their separate ownership of it; but cannot be taxed at the same time in both modes." Citing Boston Water Power Co. v. Boston, 9 Met. (Mass.) 199; Smith v. Burley, 9 N. H. 423; Gordon v. Mayor, etc., of Baltimore, 5 Gill (Md.) 231; Bank of Cape Fear v. Edwards, 12 Gill & J. (Md.) 117.

But the cases cited from Massachusetts and New Hampshire turn on the construction of statutes in those states; the one from North Carolina depends upon the provisions of the company's charter, and the Maryland cases were decided with direct reference to a provision of the constitution of that state.

A tax may be laid on the net earnings or income of a corporation which is paying a bonus of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on its capital stock in lieu of tax on dividends. Jones, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Com., 69 Pa. St. 137.

In Rudderow v. State, 31 N. J. L. 512, the court, by Elmer, J., said: "Our state constitution contains no restrictions upon the power of taxation, and in the absence of such restrictions, or of restrictions in the Constitution of the United States, all persons inhabiting or doing business in the state, whether individual citizens or artificial persons doing business as corporations by virtue of legislative grants, may be taxed, at the discretion of the legislature, to such extent as the public exigencies may require; and such taxation may be universal or limited, discriminating or general, equal or unequal."

In a note to People v. Worthington, 21 Ill. 171; 74 Am. Dec. 95, it is said: "Sovereign states undoubtedly possess the power to tax all property within their jurisdiction, and also to determine the mode and limit of such taxation. Catlin v. Hull, 21 Vt. 152; Dundee Mortgage, etc., Co. v. School Dist. No. 1, 19 Fed. Rep. 359; State Tax on Foreign Held Bonds, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 300; Kirtland v. Hotchkiss, 100 U. S. 491. Mr. Justice Field, in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United ation, if possible.¹ A tax upon the capital stock, or property of the corporation and an additional tax upon the shares in the States in the case of the State Tax on Foreign Held Bonds, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 319, said: 'Unless restrained by provisions of the federal constitution, the power of the state as to the form and extent of taxation is unlimited, where the subjects to which it applies are within her jurisdiction.' In taxing credits, it is sometimes impossible to avoid double taxation, because both the credit and the property mortgaged to secure the debt are taxed. Yet, it is held that there is no constitutional objection to such taxation. Alabama Gold L. Ins. Co. v. Lott, 54 Ala. 499; Lamar v. Palmer, 18 Fla. 147; Golddart v. People, 106 Ill. 25; Appeal Tax Court v. Rice, 50 Md. 302; St. Louis Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. St. Louis Co., 56 Mo. 503. Double taxation is against the spirit of our laws and should not be imposed if it can be avoided; but the imposition of such taxation is not in excess of the legislative power, and courts will not declare it illegal merely because the same value is taxed twice. Burroughs on Taxation, § 49; Osborn v. New York, etc., R. Co., 40 Conn. 491; Cook v. Burlington, 59 Iowa 251; 44 Am. Rep. 679; State v. St. Louis Co. Ct., 47 Mo. 594; State v. Collector of Chambersburg, 37 N. J. L. 258; Cooley on Taxation, p. 158."

The holding of a charter from one state, when the corporate property is located or corporate business transacted in another state, does not relieve the corporation in both or either from taxation, in any form which the legislative power may, under its constitution, adopt. Standard Underground Cable Co. v. Atty. Gen'l, 46 N. J. Eq. 270; 19 Am. St. Rep. 394.

In Toll Bridge Co. v. Osborn, 35 Conn. 7, it appears that a corporation whose property consisted principally of real estate, was taxed upon its capital stock, and that the shares were taxed in the hands of the stockholders, while a railroad which held most of the stock of the corporation was taxed upon its capital stock and shares at the enhanced value due to this ownership; but the court held that the corporation was liable to pay a tax upon its real estate. The court said: "The instances in which property is taxed more than once are not very infrequent. . . . No doubt it is and ought to be the general policy of the legislature to avoid double taxation of the same property. But there is also as little doubt that this general policy is not always carried out. And while it may be true that in a case of doubtful construction as to the meaning of the legislature, this policy might be sufficient to authorize the court to give a construction to a statute that would avoid this result, still, in cases where the language is clear, the fact that it imposes double taxation will never justify a court in disregarding it."

In Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Com., 66 Pa. St. 73, the supreme court adopts the opinion of Judge Parson of the court below, in which he says: "Double taxation has never been considered unlawful in this state. On the contrary, it is of frequent occurrence. The real and personal property of a corporation may be taxed, although it pays a tax on the stock which purchased it. Lackawanna Iron Co. v. Luzerne Co., 42 Pa. St. 431. See Carbon Iron Co. v. Carbon Co., 39 Pa. St. 251; Westchester Gas Co. v. Chester Co., 30 Pa. St. 232; Saving Fund v. Yard, 9 Pa. St. 361. Equality of taxation is not required by our constitution, 7 Harris 258. The stock may be fully taxed to the institution and also to the stockholders, Whitesell v. Northampton Co., 49 Pa. St. 529; and the stockholder in the corporation of another state is obliged to pay a tax to Pennsylvania on his stock, he being a resident here, although the whole property and stock is subject to taxation in the state of its location. McKeen v. Northampton Co., 49 Pa. St. 519; 88 Am. Dec. 515."

In Smith v. Burley, 9 N. H. 423, the court held that, although the statute under consideration was "broad enough to include shares of stock as subjects of taxation to the owner, if such was the intention of the legislature, we cannot for a moment suppose that such an intention existed, unless we can find that the provision of the act of 1827, for taxing all the property to the corporation, is repealed by the act of 1833; for, if that still stands, a taxation of the shares at their appraised value would in fact be a double taxation of the property, once to the corporation itself, and again to the corporators, which would be unjust, oppressive, and unconstitutional." Cited and approved in Cheshire Co. Telephone Co. v. State, 63 N. H. 167.

In Pennsylvania Co., etc. v. Com. (Pa. 1888), 15 Atl. Rep. 456, in which several acts were construed together to avoid a construction of a statute by which the capital stock of a company and the shares held by the stockholders should both be taxed, the supreme court of Pennsylvania, by Paxon, J., said: "Conceding the power of the legislature to impose a double tax in this manner, its exercise is never to be presumed. The intent to impose double taxation must be clearly expressed. We are of opinion that, the shares of the defendant company having been taxed in the hands of the shareholders under the act of 1885, its capital stock cannot be taxed under the act of 1879."

In Montgomery Co. v. Montgomery Gas Light Co., 64 Ala. 269, it is held that in view of the legislative policy disclosed by the statutes of the state, not to subject the same property to double taxation, the courts will not so construe a statute as to impose a double tax, unless such construction is required by the express words of the statute, or by necessary implications; but, where a mass of property, subject to taxation, is covered by a general clause in the statute, while it falls partly within and partly without the terms of a special clause, effect will be given to each clause, by holding the general clause applicable only to that portion which does not fall within the special clause.

In Salem Iron Factory v. Danvers,

10 Mass. 514, in which it is held that where the shares of stock of a corporation are taxed to the holders, its real estate should be taxed under a general revenue law, while its personal property should be exempt, the court says: "We should not adopt any construction of the laws which would subject the same property to be twice charged for the same tax, unless required by the express words of a statute or by necessary implication." This case is cited with approval in State Bank v. Savannah, Dudley (Ga.) 130, which holds that a city might tax the shareholders of a bank upon their shares, under a charter empowering it to levy taxes on real and personal estate, but this taxation would by implication exclude the taxation of the bank on its capital stock.

But see Lycoming Co. v. Gamble, 47 Pa. St. 106, and Whitesell v. Northampton Co., 49 Pa. St. 526, where a statute imposing a tax upon "all shares of stock in any bank, institution or company now or hereafter incorporated," and in the following section mentioning as a subject for taxation, the "capital stock of the banks, institutions," and companies therein mentioned, was held to authorize a tax on both the capital stock and shares.

In Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U. S. 137; 29 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 205, in which the principle is declared that the capital stock and shares of stock are so far distinct that the shares may be taxed even when the capital stock has been taxed or is exempt from taxation, the court holds that in the absence of an express legislative declaration to impose such a tax, it cannot be presumed that the legislature intended to include shares in such a company, when imposing a tax on shares of stock. The court, by Chief Justice Waite, says: "It is no doubt within the power of the state, when not restrained by constitutional limitations, to assess taxes upon them in a way to subject the corporation or the stockholders to double taxation. Double taxation is, however, never to be presumed. . . . Sometimes tax laws have that effect, but if they do, it is because the legislature has unmistakably so enacted. All presumptions are against such an imposition."

In Hannibal, etc., R. Co. v. Shacklett, 30 Mo. 560, where it is held that the legislature could not intend to tax the same property in two different hands of the stockholders, is generally not considered double taxation;¹ neither is a tax on the franchise in addition to a tax on modes, Napton, J., who delivered the opinion of the court, adds: "A double taxation is an absurdity, at least, where the proceeds of the taxation go in one direction, since it is in effect an increased rate of taxation merely, and could be more plainly and simply expressed by making it so in terms." State v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 37 Mo. 265.

In New York, etc., R. Co. v. Sabin, 26 Pa. St. 245, the court held that, when the legislature have exercised the taxing power "by taxing all the property of a particular company in a specified manner, and have intimated no design to subject it to any further taxation, we hold the power to be satisfied, and do not add, by judicial implications, burdens which the legislature have not thought fit to impose," and that a railroad company paying an annual franchise tax of $10,000, and a tax on its capital stock imposed by special acts of the legislature, was not liable to taxation on its property under the general tax law.

Badlam, 57 Cal. 594*.

In Van Allen v. Assessors, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 573, it is held that the shares are so far distinct from the capital stock of a corporation that they may be taxed, even where the capital is invested in property exempt from taxation. Sump- ter Co. v. National Bank, 62 Ala. 464; Harrison v. Vines, 46 Tex. 15.

In Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 687, it is said: "The capital stock and the shares may both be taxed, and it is not double taxation."

In Belo v. Forsyth, 82 N. Car. 417; 33 Am. Rep. 688, the court, holding that the state has authority to lay a tax upon the shares of stock, where the property is either exempt or has paid a tax, says: "The question is scarcely open to debate."

In Providence, etc., R. Co. v. Wright, 2 R. I. 459, it is held that the rails, sleepers, bridges, etc., of a railroad corporation, together with their easement in the lands, are real estate and subject to taxation, even where the capital stock has been taxed to the shareholders.

In Cook v. Burlington, 59 Iowa 251; 44 Am. Rep. 679, it was held that the legislature of Iowa had the power under the constitution to impose a tax upon the property of a toll bridge company, and also a tax upon the shares of the corporation stock in the hands of the shareholders. The court, by Rothrock, J., said: "It has never been held in this state that what is here denominated duplicate taxation is in excess of the legislative power. The most that can be said of the utterances of this court is, that it should be held in disfavor by courts and legislatures." But it adds: "The taxation of the property of the corporation and also of the stock bears no resemblance to taxing the same tract of land twice to the same person, nor once to A, and again to B. That would be a double taxation, which we suppose would not be allowable in any state in the Union."

In Frazer v. Siebern, 16 Ohio St. 614, this form of taxation is commended, and the court, by Welch, J., says: "In a system like ours, where intangible as well as tangible property is taxed, some forms of double taxation are unavoidable; but the object should be to avoid double taxation, wherever it is practicable, and, as nearly as may be, to tax all according to their actual wealth. That object is best attained in the case of a corporation, or joint-stock company, by taxing the stockholders—the persons who own its property—upon the full value of their shares therein, including, of course, their interest in the franchise or privilege, and in all tangible property owned by the company; and by taxing the corporation also upon the value of such tangible property. The stockholders are thus taxed, as all other individuals who own tangible and intangible property are sometimes unavoidably taxed, once upon all he is worth, and a second time upon that part of his property which is tangible."

But see State v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 37 Mo. 265, where it was held that when the shares of stock are taxed, the property of the corporation is exempt. The court said: "If the property of a corporation is taxed in the hands of the stockholders, it cannot be taxed in the hands of the corporation also. A corporation is taxable like a natural person, but it is not to be taxed twice." See also Hannibal, etc., R. Co. v. Shacklett, 30 Mo. 550; State v. Tunis, 23 N. J. L. 546.

In State v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 77 Mo. 202; 13 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 426, the court said: "Taxing the shares against the stockholders, and also the capital stock, or the property represented by the capital stock, is duplicate taxation. State v. Branin, 23 N. J. L. 484; First Nat. Bank v. Kentucky, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 360; Angell & Ames on Corp. (8th ed.), §§ 460, 461; Smith v. Burley, 9 N. H. 423; *Middlesex R. Co. v. Dec. 531; American Bank v. Munford, 4 R. I. 478; Burroughs on Taxation 174." This case is cited with approval in Valle v. Ziegler, 84 Mo. 214.

See also Pennsylvania Co. v. Com., 22 W. N. C. (Pa.) 340, where it was held that the shares of a corporation having been taxed under a special act of 1885, its capital stock could not be taxed under the general act for the taxation of all corporations passed in 1879; that such taxation, would be practically double taxation, which will never be presumed where the legislative intent to impose double taxation is not clearly expressed.

In Cook's Stock, Stockholders and Corporation Law (2d ed.), § 567, it is said that a double tax exists where either the corporate realty, or personality, or franchise, or capital is taxed, and a tax is also levied on the shares of stock without any deduction for the former taxation.

In Spelling on Private Corporations (1st ed.), § 1114, it is said that, "When the capital of a corporation is taxed in addition to a tax upon its shares in the hands of the stockholders, or upon the capital which is invested in its property, and also upon the property itself, it is duplicate taxation."

In Rosenberg v. Weekes, 67 Tex. 578, the court, by Willie, C. J., said: "Our statutes do not contemplate that real estate belonging to banks shall be taxed at all. All the provisions of these statutes which levy a tax upon any property whatever, except shares in national banks, are wholly inapplicable to these institutions. They apply only to other corporations and individuals. To hold them applicable to national banks would violate not only the act of Congress, but our state constitution, for it would subject national bank shares to double taxation."

In Gillespie v. Gaston, 67 Tex. 599, the court, by Stayton, J., said: "To tax the shares of a stockholder in a corporation, when all the property which gives value to such shares is taxed against the corporation, would be in effect double taxation of the same thing, for the certificate and ownership of shares but evidence and give to the shareholder the right to participate in the profits to be derived from the business to be conducted by the corporation so long as it continues in business, and to share in the proceeds of its property on dissolution."

In Bangor, etc., R. Co. v. Harris, 21 Me. 533, the court, by Whitman, C. J., said: "The interest in this railroad being personal estate, was not otherwise taxable than as such. Each shareholder was taxable for the amount of his interest in it in the town where he resided, and not elsewhere, and to allow the inhabitants of the towns throughout which it might pass, to tax it, would be subjecting it to a double taxation, which could be tolerated neither by the policy, nor justice of the law, and the legislature never could have designed such a thing."

This case is criticised by the later case of Cumberland Marine R. Co. v. Portland, 37 Me. 444, in which the court says: "The case was decided without argument. . . . The statute of 1838 undoubtedly escaped the observation of the court." But impliedly affirms the expression above quoted, and the property or capital stock.¹ But the taxation both of the capital stock and of the property represented by it is double taxation.² This rule, however, does not apply to property unneces-

bases its decision that the real estate of a corporation is taxable as such, upon the ground that the statute provided that "all real estate belonging to any corporation, shall be assessed to such corporation in the town or other place where such real estate or machinery and goods are situated and employed; and, in assessing the stockholders for their shares in any such corporation, their proportional part of the value of such machinery, goods and real estate, shall be deducted from the value of such shares."

In Com. v. New England Slate, etc., Co., 13 Allen (Mass.) 391, which cites Com. v. Hamilton Mfg. Co., 12 Allen (Mass.) 298, as an authority, the court, by Wells, J., says: "The fact that the defendant corporation held property, which was subject to the burden of taxation in other ways, does not render this tax upon its franchise illegal. In the practical operation of the powers of taxation, which are given in several forms, it is inevitable that double taxation should occur in some cases. The legislature may relieve against it by allowing deductions, if it sees fit to do so; but the court can only apply the law as it stands."

In Spring Valley Water Works v. Schottler, 62 Cal. 69, it is held that the franchise of a corporation is a species of property liable to taxation, and the court adds: "By declaring, as was done in section 3608 (Pol. Code of Cal.) that shares of stock were not to be taxed because they possessed no intrinsic value over and above the value of the property of the corporation which they stand for and represent, and as taxing of the shares and property both, would be double taxation, and therefore the shares should not be assessed, but the property should, no doubt it was their intention to tax everything into the shape of property owned by the corporation; that everything entering into and giving value to the shares should be taxed. It cannot be doubted that the legislature . . . did not intend to leave the system in relation to so important a matter in such a shape, that so large an amount of property as indicated by the difference between the market value of the shares of corporations and the value of the tangible property of such corporations, should escape taxation."

In Monroe Sav. Bank v. Rochester, 37 N. Y. 367, the court, by Fullerton, J., said: "The powers and privileges which constitute the franchises of a corporation, are in a just sense property, and quite distinct and separate from the property which by the use of such franchises the corporation may acquire;" and held that a bank may be taxed upon such franchises, where the capital stock is invested in United States bonds, which cannot be taxed.

In Wilmington, etc., R. R. Co. v. Board, etc., 72 N. Car. 10, the state board had apparently valued the franchises of the railroad at the full value of all its property, and it was held that the company was liable to a tax on its real estate. The court said: "The franchise of a corporation is capable of a valuation apart from the property which the corporation may happen to own, and a valuation of the franchise does not necessarily or properly include a valuation of the corporate property."

In Com. v. New York, etc., R. Co., 150 Pa. St. 234, it was held that a tax upon the net earnings or income of trust companies which have no capital stock, and a tax upon certain bonds owned by them, was not double taxation, although the net earnings or income was derived from the interest on such bonds—the former tax being held a tax on the franchise.

2. Cheshire Co. Telephone Co. v. State, 63 N. H. 167; Rice Co. v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 23 Minn. 280.

In State v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 37 Mo. 265, it is said: "It would seem to be clear that, in contemplation of law, there cannot be any other property of this corporation, over and above the stock held by the shareholders," and the court holds that where the capital stock is taxed, the tangible property of the railroad is exempt. See also Hannibal, etc., R. Co. v. Shacklett, 30 Mo. 550.

sary to the operation of the business of the corporation.¹ Some states provide against double taxation by statutes exempting shares of stock from taxation when the corporation itself is taxed on its property and capital stock.² Others deduct a proportionate part of the value of the corporate property otherwise taxed, from the value of each share.³ Others tax the shares and exempt the property or capital stock of the corporation, or both of them, from taxation.⁴

V. EXEMPTIONS.—(See CORPORATIONS, vol. 4, p. 272*d*; TAXATION—Exemptions.)

In Scotland Co. v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., 65 Mo. 123, it is held that a railroad company whose stock is, by law, exempt from taxation, cannot be taxed on property owned and used by it in the operation of its railway and necessary for that purpose, because the stock is but the representative of the property.

In Augusta v. Georgia R., etc., Co., 26 Ga. 651, where the charter of a company provided that "the stock of said company and its branches shall be exempt from taxation for and during the term of seven years, from and after the completion of the said railroads or any of them; and after that, shall be subject to a tax, not exceeding one-half per cent. per annum, on the net proceeds of their investment," it was held that the city council of Augusta could not impose a tax on the banking part of the capital stock of the company, nor on its real estate situated in Augusta.

In Hannibal, etc., R. Co. v. Shacklett, 30 Mo. 558, it is said that "Capital stock, in its strict significance, exists only nominally; the money or property which it represents is the tangible realty. The one is the representative of the other; and if the stock and the property it represents are both taxed, the taxation is double." Contra, Toll Bridge Co. v. Osborn, 35 Conn. 7; Nashua Sav. Bank v. Nashua, 46 N. H. 389; Boston Water Power Co. v. Boston, 9 Met. (Mass.) 199; American Bank v. Mumford, 4 R. I. 478.

In Nashville Gas Light Co. v. Mayor, etc., of Nashville, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 406, under a statute which enacted that no tax shall hereafter be assessed upon the capital of any joint-stock company of the state, but that the shareholders shall be assessed on the value of their shares of stock therein; with a proviso that this should not be so construed as to exempt from taxation the real estate held or owned by any such corporation, it was held that a company was liable to pay the tax imposed upon its shareholders, and also upon its real estate purchased with money paid in as capital stock, and used in its business.

2. See various state statutes. The constitution of California forbids the double taxation of property. In Burke v. Bodlam, 57 Cal. 594, it is said: "A mortgage or trust deed securing a debt is, under the constitution, to be deemed and treated as an interest in the property affected thereby, and assessable to the owner. The property itself is also to be assessed to its owner; but to prevent what would otherwise be double taxation, the constitution requires that, in making the assessment, the value of the security shall be deducted from the value of the incumbered property. So in the case of credits, not secured by mortgage or trust deed, the legislature may provide that there shall be deducted therefrom debts due to bona fide residents of the state. Not only does the language of the constitution neither require nor permit double taxation, but we think it may be safely said that neither the framers of the instrument nor those who ratified it ever supposed that under its provisions there could be any such thing; for both in the debates on the floor of the convention which framed it, and in the arguments of those who advocated its adoption before the people, are to be found repeated disclaimers of any such intention."

I. DEFINITION.—A tax title is the title by which one holds land which he has purchased at a tax sale. It is that species of title which is inaugurated by a successful bid for land at a collector's sale of the same for non-payment of taxes, completed by the failure of those entitled to redeem within the specified time, and evidenced by the deed executed to the tax purchaser, or his assignee, by the proper officer.¹

II. POWER TO SELL LANDS FOR TAXES.—See TAXATION — Tax Sales, vol. 25, p. 367.

III. REQUISITES.—1. Generally.—All the requisites of a valid tax title, except the deed, have been fully treated elsewhere in this work. They are: power to impose the tax,² levy,³ assessment,⁴ opportunity and failure to pay,¹ return of delinquency,² sale,³ certificate, report, and confirmation of sale,⁴ and opportunity and failure to redeem from the sale.⁵ Generally speaking, it will be found that any material variance from the statutory prescriptions in reference to any of these matters will be fatal to the tax title. The last act in the execution of the statutory power to sell lands for the non-payment of taxes is the deed.

2. The Deed—a. POWER TO MAKE, AND BY WHOM EXECUTED.—It is held that authority to make a deed to the lands sold for non-payment of taxes by a county or town must be expressly given or it does not exist; and that the grant of power to levy taxes and to sell lands for their non-payment, does not imply, or give to the corporation, power to convey the lands so sold.⁶

The local statutes name the officer who is to execute the deed, and no other has authority to perform the act.⁷

If the officer is allowed by law to have a deputy, the latter may make the deed, unless its execution is specially enjoined upon the principal; and when the deputy acts in the matter, he should do so for and in the name of his principal.⁸

6. Smith v. Todd, 55 Wis. 459; Knox v. Peterson, 21 Wis. 247.

In Doe v. Chunn, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 336, the plaintiff in ejectment claimed title under a sale by the collector of a borough tax. The act incorporating the borough authorized the collector to sell lots for the non-payment of taxes, but was silent as to the making of conveyances. It was held that though the previous proceedings were regular, the deed of the collector vested no title in the purchaser.

And in Sibley v. Smith, 2 Mich. 487, it was held that the principle that every grant of power carries with it the usual and necessary means for the exercise of that power, and that the power to convey is implied in the power to sell, cannot be admitted in the construction of statutes which are in derogation of the common law, and the effect of which is to divest a citizen of his land. Such statutes, although enacted for the public good, must be construed strictly. But see Bruce v. Schuyler, 9 Ill. 221; 46 Am. Dec. 447; Farrar v. Eastman, 5 Me. 345; 2 Blackwell on Tax Titles (5th ed.), § 732.

In Mead v. Nelson, 52 Wis. 402, it was held that a resolution of the county board instructing the county clerk "to issue a tax deed to the county on all certificates remaining in the county treasurer's office three years from the date of their issue," created a continuing authority in the clerk, until it should be revoked, to execute tax deeds from year to year thereafter, whenever the three years for redemption upon the certificates should expire, and such direction by the county board is authorized by § 146, ch. 18, Taylor's Sts., then in force.

In California, the law authorizing sheriffs to act as tax collectors, does not authorize a sheriff as tax collector to appoint a deputy tax collector; and a tax deed executed by a sheriff as tax collector by his under-sheriff is not admissible in evidence, and vests no title in the grantee. Lathrop v. Brittain, 30 Cal. 680.

Under the Virginia Stat., Feb. 9th, 1814, the sheriff or any of his deputies may make the sale, but whichever officer does so, that officer alone is competent to convey the land to the purchaser. Wilsons v. Doe, 7 Leigh (Va.) 22. See also Chapman v. Bennett, 2

When, however, the deputy is, in case of the absence or disability of his principal, clothed with all the statutory powers of that officer, and required to perform his duties, it seems that he may, when the circumstances contemplated by the law exist, execute the deed by describing himself, and signing it, as deputy, without naming the principal.¹ And the presumption in favor of the correctness of official action applies, in the absence of any direct showing that the circumstances existed which authorized the deputy to act.²

The general rule is that the officer who sells may not, after the expiration of his term, execute a deed to the purchaser; that act must be performed by the incumbent of the office when the deed is due.³

Under most of the statutes the officer has no authority to make the deed to the purchaser within the time allowed for redemption, and a deed so made passes no title.⁴

1. Gilkey v. Cook, 60 Wis. 133. In this case, Cole, C. J., for the court, referring to the observation made by himself in Huey v. Van Wie, 23 Wis. 613, that "the power to make the deed is vested in the officer, and when the deputy acts, he should do so in the name of his principal," says: "I refer to the general rule that any ministerial duty may be performed by deputy, and add that the deputy should proceed in the name of his principal. This general remark is doubtless open to the just criticism passed upon it by council, that it was not necessary for the decision there made, and fails to make the proper distinction between an act performed by an agent on behalf of his principal, and an act performed by a deputy who is authorized by law to do the act in question. In the one case, the agent derives his authority to act from his principal for whom he acts. In the other, the deputy derives his authority from the law which clothes him with all the power of the clerk in the given case, or rather makes him the officer to perform that duty for the occasion. The distinction is well founded in reason and should not be overlooked."

Under How. Sts. (Mich.), § 283, the deputy auditor general may sign the deed in his own name, when his chief is sick or necessarily absent. Here, the court took judicial notice that the statute empowering the deputy auditor general to act in his principal's stead, had long been construed in the office of the auditor general as authorizing the deputy to act in his own name when the circumstances arose which enabled him to act at all. Westbrook v. Miller, 56 Mich. 148; Drennan v. Herzog, 56 Mich. 467.

In Davis v. Living, 32 W. Va. 174, it was held that under the provisions of the West Virginia Code of 1868, a tax deed executed in 1870 by a deputy recorder, and duly acknowledged by him in his own name as such deputy, is admissible in evidence in ejectment for the land embraced in the deed.

In Tennessee, prior to the Act of 1856, ch. 91, § 3, a sheriff who had sold land for taxes had no power, after the expiration of his term, to execute a deed to the purchaser. Hightower v. Free-dle, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 312.

But in Kentucky, it is held that the power to sell and convey is entire, and the officer who sold may lawfully convey after he is out of office. Graves v. Hayden, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 61.

Under the Illinois Rev. Law of 1839, the deed may be made either by the officer making the sale, or his successor. Bestor v. Powell, 7 Ill. 119.

Where the deed does not conform in its recitals to the facts, the officer is authorized to execute a second and corrected deed; but he has no power to execute a second deed which shall misstate the facts respecting any proceedings prior to its execution, and such a deed is void.¹

In some of the states, the production of the tax certificate is a condition precedent to the authority of the officer to execute the deed.²

b. PURCHASER'S RIGHT THERETO.—After the expiration of the period of redemption, the purchaser at the tax sale is entitled to receive a tax deed, upon the performance by him of all the conditions precedent imposed by the law;³ and the right may be

The Minnesota Act of 1862, has been construed to authorize the execution of the deed before the expiration of the time of redemption. Baker v. Kelley, 11 Minn. 480.

In Connecticut, the deed is to be executed immediately after the sale, but it is to lie in the town clerk's office twelve months, unrecorded, for the purpose of giving notice to the tax debtor that he may redeem. Ives v. Lynn, 7 Conn. 505.

Coan*, 30 Iowa 536; Gould v. Thompson, 45 Iowa 450; Finley v. Brown, 22 Iowa 538; Woodman v. Clapp, 21 Wis. 350.

Neither the power nor the duty of the clerk is exhausted by the execution of an irregular and imperfect deed. Douglas v. Nuzum, 16 Kan. 515.

If the proceedings, up to the execution of the deed, are invalid for want of a sufficient description of the premises sold, and the deed conforms to this description, the county clerk has not the authority to cure such defective description by the execution of a second deed containing another and different description than that set forth in the certificate and the proceedings upon which it is issued. Hewitt v. Storch, 31 Kan. 488; Bowman v. Cockrill, 6 Kan. 311; Corbin v. Bronson, 28 Kan. 532.

In Nebraska, a county treasurer has no authority to issue a second deed upon a canceled certificate in the clerk's office. Baldwin v. Merriam, 16 Neb. 199; Reed v. Merriam, 15 Neb. 323; Thompson v. Merriam, 15 Neb. 498.

Where the treasurer has executed to the purchaser a valid deed in compliance with the statute and the sale, he cannot divest, or in any way affect the title thus conveyed, by the execution of a second deed. Bulkley v. Callanan, 32 Iowa 464.

2. Reed v. Merriam, 15 Neb. 323; Silliman v. Frye, 6 Ill. 664. In this latter case, it being said that, as the law authorizes the assignment of the certificate, and the execution and delivery of the deed to the assignee, it cannot be determined to whom the deed shall be made until the presentation of the certificate to the officer.

3. Forqueran v. Donnelly, 7 W. Va. 114.

The purchaser, under Wisconsin Laws of 1854, ch. 66, or Laws of 1859, ch. 22, is entitled to a deed at the end of three years from the date of sale, in all cases where the lands are unredeemed at that time, although the lands of minors, married women, etc., are subject to redemption after the delivery of the deed. Wright v. Wing, 18 Wis. 45. See also Woodbury v. Shackleford, 19 Wis. 59.

Second Sale—Postponement of Right to Deed.—In Illinois, if the purchaser allows the land to be again sold within two years, whether for the same class of taxes, or for other taxes properly assessed, his right to a deed is postponed for two years from the date of the second sale, and a deed obtained within the limitation from the second sale is void and inoperative. Denike v. Rourke, 3 Biss. (U. S.) 39.

Conditions Precedent—Production of Tax Certificate.—In Nebraska, the presentation by the purchaser of a tax certificate is a condition precedent to his right to demand a deed. Reed v. Merriam, 15 Neb. 323.

Payment of Legal Fees.—In Wisconsin, enforced by mandamus.¹ Further, as the right of the purchaser is to a good and perfect deed, if the officer makes an imperfect deed, he may be compelled by mandamus to issue a second and the purchaser must pay all legal fees that have accrued since the issuance of the certificate. State v. Strahl, 17 Wis. 146.

Affidavit of Non-occupancy.—In Wisconsin, where the land is unoccupied, proof must be filed with the officer issuing the deed that such land has not been occupied or possessed for the period of thirty days or more at any time within the six months immediately preceding the time when application for the tax deed is made. The period of thirty days means thirty consecutive days. Such affidavit may be made by a person other than the owner and holder of the certificate. Howe v. Genin, 57 Wis. 268.

Under this statute, an affidavit of non-occupancy made March 9th, and filed with the county clerk on the next day, stating that "the lots and pieces or parcels of land enumerated and described below are not now and have not been within the last six months in the possession or occupancy of any person for a period of thirty days," shows with sufficient certainty that no one of the parcels described has been occupied for a period of thirty days within the six months immediately preceding March 10th. Dreutzer v. Smith, 56 Wis. 292.

Report of Surveyor.—In West Virginia, the purchaser is required to have a report made by the surveyor of lands for the county in which the same are situated, specifying the metes and bounds of the land sold, giving such description thereof as will identify them, and the county clerk, unless there be some valid objection to the report, shall order the same to be recorded in his office, and a record thereof shall be made accordingly. Orr v. Wiley, 19 W. Va. 150.

Notice to Redeem.—The necessity for giving to the tax debtor notice to redeem has been treated elsewhere. See TAXATION—Redemption.

1. Jones v. Welsing, 52 Iowa 220. In this case, after the sale by the treasurer, the deputy collector received the taxes from the owner and gave his receipt therefor, both being ignorant of the fact of sale. Upon a discovery of the mistake, the treasurer offered to return to the purchaser the amount of his bid, with ten per cent. interest, which was refused. The time for redemption had expired. It was held that the purchaser was, nevertheless, entitled to a writ of mandamus to compel the issuance to him of the deed.

Mandamus Denied.—But mandamus will not lie when actions are pending in other courts to have the tax proceedings adjudged void, State v. Patterson, 11 Neb. 266; nor where the assessment was invalid, or the petition fails to aver an assessment and levy, and that the taxes were unpaid, Bosworth v. Webster, 64 Cal. 1; nor where the purchaser fails to comply with the requirements of the statute relating to the giving of notice to redeem. State v. Gayhart, 34 Neb. 192. See also TAXATION—Redemption.

In Michigan, mandamus will not lie to compel the county treasurer to issue deeds of lands for which the petitioner had paid, where that officer's return shows that the money paid was tendered to, and accepted by, him the same day, and that the lands had been conveyed to other parties before he again tendered the money. Atcheson v. Huebner (Mich. 1892), 51 N. W. Rep. 634.

Where, under the statute, the tax deed was conclusive of certain facts, and prima facie proof of others, and A, part owner of the tract, not having paid the taxes on his part before the sale, had purchased the certificate of sale to the whole tract, and refusing the redemption money offered by B, the other part owner, on the ground that he could only redeem the whole, sought to compel the issue to him of the tax deed; it was held that he had neither a legal nor equitable right to the deed, and his petition for mandamus was denied. State v. Williston, 20 Wis. 228.

In People v. New York, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 395, the statute authorized the corporation of the city of New York to sell lands for taxes, and to execute a lease of the same to the purchaser, if the owner failed to redeem within a specified time. The corporation failed to publish the notice, required to be published after the sale and before the expiration of the time of redemption, calling upon the owner to come in and redeem. The time for redemption had expired. The court declined to grant corrected one.¹ So, also, may his successor in office, who has the same means of correcting the errors.² But it seems that mandamus will not lie to compel the issuance of a second deed in order to relieve the applicant from the consequences of his own mistakes or omissions in obtaining the first deed,³ nor to compel the officer to execute a second deed containing recitals which would be contradicted by his return of the tax sale.⁴

A statute requiring the owner of a certificate, made before the enactment of the law, to give notice to the occupant of the premises of his application for a deed, does not impair the obligation of the contract;⁵ but such a statute cannot be applied to cases where the right to the deed became absolute before its passage.⁶

Under some of the statutes, the owner of the tax certificate is required to demand a deed thereon, or to commence an action for the foreclosure of the same, within a specified time after the sale, or the expiration of the period of redemption, and, failing in this, he loses all rights under his purchase and certificate.⁷

And, although there may be no statutory limitation upon the a mandamus requiring the corporation to execute the lease.

Under § 898 of the Iowa Code, the notice required by §§ 894 and 895 to be given to the owner and occupant before the execution of the deed, is not necessary, where the sales were made before the passage of those provisions. Robinson v. First Nat. Bank, 48 Iowa 354.

6. Rollins v. Wright, 93 Cal. 395.

Chapter 113, Wisconsin Laws of 1867, requiring, under certain circumstances, three months' notice to be given of the application for a deed, cannot be applied to a case where the owner of the certificate was entitled to a deed before the passage of the act, or in less than three months thereafter. Kearns v. McCarville, 24 Wis. 457; Curtis v. Morrow, 24 Wis. 664; State v. Hundhausen, 23 Wis. 508.

In Nebraska, a deed issued more than five years after the date of the tax certificate is invalid, and creates no lien upon the land. Alexander v. Wilcox, 30 Neb. 793; Fuller v. Colfax, 33 Neb. 716. See also Helphrey v. Redick, 21 Neb. 80; Parker v. Matheson, 21 Neb. 546; D'Gette v. Sheldon, 27 Neb. 829.

In Illinois, the time the purchaser is prevented from taking out his deed by injunction or order of any court, or by a refusal of the court to make the same, is to be excluded from the computation of the limitation prescribed; but the courts are not authorized to extend the exceptions to other cases than those named in the statute. Gage v. Reid, 118 Ill. 35.

In Wisconsin, the record made by the proper officers of the assignment of the certificate by the county at a certain time, is conclusive of the fact that the ownership of the certificate passed from the county at that time, and a deed issued upon such a certificate more than six years thereafter is, under Revised Statutes of that state, § 1182, void, notwithstanding any ownership of the certificate acquired by the county after such assignment. Hiles v. Cate, 75 Wis. 91.

The owner of a certificate upon occupied premises, who elects, under Wisconsin Revised Statutes, § 1181, to foreclose the same by action instead of taking a deed, although he is not required to give the notice called for by section 1175, must still commence his action while he is in a position to demand and obtain a deed; that is, before the time to give the notice has expired. Goffe v. Bond, 69 Wis. 366.

right to demand a deed, yet, when the purchaser delays for a long time to apply for one, a presumption of abandonment of his claim under the purchase may arise in favor of a bona fide grantee of the tax debtor.¹ When the certificate of sale is assignable, an assignment in due form passes to the assignee the right to the deed.²

c. RESTRAINING EXECUTION.—Elsewhere in this article it is shown that equity will, in a proper case, entertain a bill to remove a cloud upon the title occasioned by a tax deed.³

The jurisdiction to avert a cloud, when there was no other remedy, is a corollary of the conceded power to remove it; accordingly, chancery will restrain the issuance of a deed to lands illegally sold for taxes, when it would constitute a cloud upon the owner's title.⁴ But equity will not interfere when the danger is merely speculative and potential—it must be made to appear that there is a determination to create the cloud;⁵ nor at the instance of one who does not show an interest in the lands.⁶

1. Ockendon v. Barnes, 43 Iowa 615. Here a delay of more than eleven years was held sufficient to give rise to such presumption.

2. This subject is treated elsewhere. See TAXATION—Tax Sales; also infra, this title, Parties.

In Kansas, it is held that equity will not interfere to restrain the sale, or enjoin the execution of the deed when the property is subject to taxation, the tax legal, and the valuation not excessive, merely on the ground of irregularities in the tax proceedings. Hudson v. Atchison County, 12 Kan. 146; Johnson County v. Ogg, 13 Kan. 206; Lawrence v. Killam, 11 Kan. 499.

In Perley v. Dolloff, 60 N. H. 504, it was held that a bill in equity to set aside the sale and enjoin the officer from executing a deed, on the ground of an invalid assessment merely, will be dismissed for want of equity, where it appears that the tax assessed upon the plaintiff was no more than his proportionate share; nor, in such case will the court abate the tax, upon a petition for that purpose.

337; Crooke v. Andrews, 40 N. Y. 551; Hanlon v. Westchester County, 57 Barb. (N. Y.) 392.

Where, therefore, an action was instituted against the comptroller, within a month after the execution by him of a tax certificate, to restrain him from executing a deed, on the ground that the taxes were illegally laid, it was held that, as by the statute (New York Laws of 1855, ch. 427, § 83) the comptroller is prohibited from conveying, and is directed to cancel the sale, whenever he discovers prior to the conveyance that the sale was invalid, in the absence of any allegation or proof of a demand upon the defendant to cancel the sale, and a refusal, or that he threatened or intended to make a deed in pursuance of the certificate, the action is not maintainable. Clark v. Davenport, 95 N. Y. 477.

6. Johnson v. Brett, 64 Iowa 162.

Where the sale was for a tax extended upon a void assessment, execution of a deed will be enjoined at the instance of a party whose title, though acquired after the assessment, will be clouded by the deed. Siegel v. Outagamie County, 26 Wis. 70.

Where the petition in such an action showed upon its face that plaintiff had sold the land before the institution of the suit, it was held that the burden was upon him to show such interest in the property as to entitle him to the relief asked, and that a demurrer on the ground that the petition did not show him entitled to the relief asked, was properly sustained. Harlow v. Gow, 44 Iowa 533.

The issuance of the deed has been enjoined where there was no valid assessment;¹ where the collector and bidders were guilty of fraud at the sale;² and where the owner was prevented from redeeming by the fraudulent misrepresentation of the purchaser.³

The officer authorized by law to issue the deed, and the holder of the tax certificate, should be made parties defendant in such an action.⁴

As a general rule, relief will be granted only upon condition that the applicant pay to the tax purchaser the taxes chargeable upon the lands, interest, and legal costs.⁵

d. REQUISITES—(1) In General.—Where the statute prescribes no form for a tax deed, the deed must be so drawn as to be sufficient according to the rules of the common law to transfer the title of a former owner and vest the estate in the purchaser.⁶ In some cases the form prescribed by statute has been held to be mandatory and to be strictly pursued,⁷ but in the majority of cases a substantial compliance has been held sufficient.⁸ A deed

1. Marsh v. Clark County, 42 Wis. 502; Brooks v. Howland, 58 N. H. 98.

2. Gage v. Graham, 57 Ill. 144. In this case a combination was entered into by the collector and the principal bidders, to prevent competition in the bidding, and that the land should be struck off to one of the parties for the sums charged to the respective tracts, and bidding was thus prevented. The court enjoined the collector from making a deed to a party to the fraud.

3. Koon v. Snodgrass, 18 W. Va. 320. Here the purchaser fraudulently misrepresented to the owner that the land purchased was a different tract of land and one in which the owner had no interest, with a view of preventing him from redeeming within the required time, and it was, for that reason, not redeemed; the purchaser was perpetually enjoined from obtaining a deed to the land.

4. Siegel v. Outagamie County, 26 Wis. 70; Sanders v. Yonkers, 63 N. Y. 489.

When the tax purchaser is not a party to the action, and does not appear therein, he is not bound by the decree. Helphrey v. Redick, 21 Neb. 80. See also Fuller v. Colfax, 33 Neb. 716.

5. See infra, this title, Actions Concerning Tax Titles; Stewart v. Meyer, 54 Md. 454; Hart v. Smith, 44 Wis. 213. In Rowe v. Peabody, 102 Ind. 198, a complaint to restrain the execution of the deed, was held bad on demurrer, because it failed to aver a tender, and to make an offer to pay the lawful taxes.

6. Einstein v. Gay, 45 Mo. 62; State v. Mantz, 62 Mo. 258.

The deed must show upon its face the amount of taxes, interest, and costs due upon the tract sold. Guffey v. O'Reilly, 88 Mo. 418.

7. Hubbell v. Campbell, 56 Cal. 527; Grimm v. O'Connell, 54 Cal. 522; Russell v. Mann, 22 Cal. 131; Williams v. McLanahan, 67 Mo. 499; Wellshear v. Kelley, 69 Mo. 353; Hopkins v. Scott, 86 Mo. 140. Although it is said that the deed need not recite literally the language of the statute. Pearce v. Tittsworth, 87 Mo. 639.

In Arkansas, a tax deed in "the usual form" is a deed which substantially recites the material steps required to constitute a valid tax sale, including a proper description of the land, the price paid, and words granting the lands to the purchaser. Bonnell v. Roane, 20 Ark. 114.

8. Martin v. Garrett, 49 Kan. 131; McCauslin v. McGuire, 14 Kan. 248; Bowman v. Cockrill, 6 Kan. 311; Haynes v. Heller, 12 Kan. 381; Mack v. Price, 35 Kan. 134; *McQuesten v. The omission of the words "time and," when the statutory form prescribed the expression "and whereas at the time and place aforesaid," was held not to be a substantial departure from the statutory form where the time to be referred to was plainly shown by other which shows upon its face that the requirements of the law have not been followed is void.¹ But a deed made in strict conformity with a particular form prescribed by statute, however, is good, though it does not show on its face that it was executed under, and in pursuance of, the special power given by statute.² Where parts of the deed. Haynes v. Heller, 12 Kan. 381.

In Sullivan v. Donnell, 90 Mo. 278, it was held that a tax deed omitting the word "publicly," prescribed in the statutory form to indicate the manner of making the sale, was void.

In Knowlton v. Moore, 136 Mass. 32, it was held that the requirement that the deed "shall state the place of residence of the grantee" was not merely directory, and a failure to comply with the requirement was a fatal defect. See also Harrington v. Worcester, 6 Allen (Mass.) 576.

The absence of a recital of a date of execution or order authorizing the sale, is held to be fatal to the validity of the deed. Williams v. McLanahan, 67 Mo. 499. And where the statutory form required a recital of the year for which the taxes were sold, the deed in which the year was misrecited was held to be void. Maxcy v. Clabaugh, 6 Ill. 226. But see Bank of Utica v. Mersereau, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 528; 49 Am. Dec. 189.

The deed of resident lands in form required for non-resident lands, is void. Jacks v. Dyer, 31 Ark. 334.

In Wisconsin, the statute prescribing the form for a deed provides that it shall be "in substantially the form given," or "in other equivalent form." As to what has been held a compliance with the statute, see Lybrand v. Haney, 31 Wis. 230; Marshall v. Benson, 48 Wis. 558; Austin v. Holt, 32 Wis. 478; Falkner v. Dorman, 7 Wis. 388; Krueger v. Knab, 22 Wis. 429; Lain v. Cook, 15 Wis. 446; Cutler v. Hurlbut, 29 Wis. 152; Geekie v. Kirby Carpenter Co., 106 U. S. 379; Condit v. Blackwell, 22 N. J. Eq. 481; Cousins v. Allen, 28 Wis. 232.

The Date.—A date is not essential to the validity of a tax deed, but it takes effect from the delivery. Where a tax deed did not mention the date of its execution, but the acknowledgment was fully dated and the deed recorded on that date, the Statute of Limitations was held to run from such time. McMichael v. Carlyle, 53 Wis. 504. Nor is the certificate of acknowledgment, if good in other respects, invalidated by the absence of the date. Irving v. Brownell, 11 Ill. 402.

The time of the execution of a tax deed, as in ordinary deeds, may be shown by parol evidence. Thompson v. Schuyler, 7 Ill. 271.

Official Signature.—A deed which in other respects is in the form prescribed, is not affected by the fact that it is signed by the sheriff and tax collector, and not by the latter only, as required. Bell v. Gordon, 55 Minn. 45.

Any description of the officer executing the tax deed, which identifies him and shows his official relation, is sufficient. Knox v. Huidekoper, 21 Wis. 527. And see Bulger v. Moore, 67 Wis. 430.

The signature by the county clerk of a tax deed, as clerk of the board of supervisors, does not invalidate the deed under Wisconsin statutes, nor is it invalidated by the failure to mention the name of the county in such signature, where it is correctly stated in the attesting clause. Scheiber v. Kaehler, 49 Wis. 291.

Mandamus to Compel the Execution of a Deed in the Statutory Form.—If through mistake or inadvertence, the statutory form be departed from, the officer required to make the deed may be compelled by mandamus to execute a deed in the correct and statutory form. Douglass v. Muzum, 16 Kan. 515; Corbeir v. Bronson, 28 Kan. 532. See also supra, this title, Purchaser's Right Thereto.

2. Falkner v. Dorman, 7 Wis. 388; Hobson v. Dutton, 9 Kan. 477; Bowers v. Chambers, 53 Miss. 259. See also McIntyre v. White, 5 How. (Miss.) 298; Amos v. Allnutt, 2 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 215.

The deed in the form prescribed is sufficient, even if it fails to show for what year the taxes were sold, Marshall v. Benson, 48 Wis. 558; or does not state that the land was sold at public auction at the proper place, if it was in fact so sold, Davis v. Harrington, 35 Kan. 196; or omits to state the name the conditions of the sale are such that to follow the statutory form would recite an untruth and show an illegal sale, the form must be modified to suit the facts.¹

The form prescribed may be made applicable to a deed for a sale which took place before the passage of the act as well as for a subsequent sale.²

(2) Recitals.—As a general rule, the omission or misrecital of particular facts required by statute to be recited in the deed, will invalidate it.³ Thus, the failure to recite the notice or advertisement;⁴ the cause of the sale, as the delinquency of of the owner. Bell v. Gordon, 55 Minn. 45.

1. Magill v. Martin, 14 Kan. 67; McCauslin v. McGuire, 14 Kan. 234; Sullivan v. Donnell, 90 Mo. 278; Skinner v. Williams, 85 Mo. 489.

2. Lain v. Shepardson, 18 Wis. 60; Gardenhire v. Mitchell, 21 Kan. 83. See also Robinson v. Howe, 13 Wis. 347.

3. Moore v. Harris, 91 Mo. 621; Duff v. Neilson, 90 Mo. 93; Spurlock v. Allen, 49 Mo. 178; McEntire v. Brown, 28 Ind. 347; Doe v. Hileman, 2 Ill. 323; Wambole v. Foote, 2 Dakota 1; Lawrence v. Zimpleman, 37 Ark. 693; McDermott v. Scully, 27 Ark. 226; Harrington v. Worcester, 6 Allen (Mass.) 576; Wakeley v. Mohr, 18 Wis. 136; Bender v. Dugan, 99 Mo. 126.

It has been held that the misrecital of the consideration for the deed, Hubbell v. Campbell, 56 Cal. 527; or the failure to state that the sale was publicly held, Daniels v. Case, 45 Fed. Rep. 843; Sullivan v. Donnell, 90 Mo. 278; or to state for what year the lands were assessed, and for what amount, and that the tracts were assessed separately, Spain v. Johnson, 31 Ark. 314; Jacks v. Dyer, 31 Ark. 334; Buchanan v. Reynolds, 4 W. Va. 681; Maxcy v. Clabaugh, 6 Ill. 26, will invalidate the deed. But see Wetherbee v. Dunn, 32 Cal. 106.

A sheriff's deed is void if it does not recite the judgment, where the statute requires it to be recited. Dufour v. Camfranc, 11 Martin (La.) 607; 13 Am. Dec. 360.

In Allen v. Buckley, 94 Mo. 158, the deed, which did not recite that the lands were sold separately, when required to be so sold, was held to be void. But in Waddington v. Dickson, 17 Colo. 223, it was held that a tax deed conveying title to several tracts, which shows that they were advertised separately, is sufficient to show that they were sold separately.

In Duff v. Nielson, 90 Mo. 93, it was held that a tax deed which did not recite the date of the issue of the special execution under which the property was sold, was void.

In Virginia, under a statute requiring all the circumstances of the sale to be recited in the deed, it was held that it must appear on the face of the deed that the sale was had at the time and place prescribed, but that it was not necessary to recite all the steps which preceded such sale, such as advertisement of the time and place. See Flanagan v. Grimmer, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 421. But see Buchanan v. Reynolds, 4 W. Va. 681.

Omission in Deed of Recitals of Certificate of Sale.—A recital in the deed that the certificate of sale contained the matter required by law, is not a sufficient recital of such matters. Hughes v. Cannedy, 92 Cal. 382; DeFrieze v. Quint, 94 Cal. 653. The failure to recite in the deed the recital in the certificate of sale as to when the purchaser will be entitled to a deed, is held to vitiate the deed. Anderson v. Hancock, 64 Cal. 455; Grimm v. O'Connell, 54 Cal. 522. But in Doland v. Mooney, 79 Cal. 137, it was held that the fact that the amount of taxes and costs recited in the certificate of sale was fifty cents less than that recited in the tax deed, did not affect the validity of the deed or sale.

4. Wiggin v. Temple, 73 Me. 382; Abbott v. Doling, 49 Mo. 302; Moore v. Harris, 91 Mo. 616.

A tax deed which recites simply the posting of written advertisements when printed ones are required, is void. Laguer v. Rains, 48 Mo. 536.

In Yankee v. Thompson, 51 Mo. 234, a tax deed which contained no further recital of notice of sale than that the lands "were advertised according to law," was held to be void on its face. See also Jones v. Miracle (Ky. 1893), 21 S. W. Rep. 241.

the tax;¹ or the time² or place³ of the sale, has been held to invalidate the tax deed, when such recitals were required by

In Ladd v. Dickey, 84 Me. 190, where the collector was required to recite the time when he gave notice, the recital that nine months had elapsed before he gave notice of sale, or that he gave notice at least six weeks before the time of sale, was held insufficient. It was held that he should also state where he posted the notices.

Adjourned Sale.—In Hill v. Atterbury, 88 Mo. 114, it was held that although the statutory form required the recital of the advertisement of the time of the original sale, it did not require the recital of sales adjourned from day to day.

1. Hubbard v. Johnson, 9 Kan. 632; Gilfillan v. Chatterton, 38 Minn. 335. The recital that the tax was chargeable, is not equivalent to a statement that it was delinquent, Sheehy v. Hinds, 27 Minn. 259; nor does the recital that the tax was due, show it to be delinquent. Sherburne v. Rippe, 35 Minn. 540.

In Heil v. Redden, 38 Kan. 255, the omission of the word "remaining," where it should have been stated that "the land was offered for sale for the payment of taxes then due and remaining unpaid," did not affect the validity of the deed.

In Massachusetts, the deed is required to state the cause of the sale, and not only the demand on the person taxed, but also that payment was not made within fourteen days thereafter, and the failure to make such recital will invalidate the deed. See Langdon v. Stewart, 142 Mass. 576. Harrington v. Worcester, 6 Allen (Mass.) 546; Lunenburg v. Heywood, Chair Co., 118 Mass. 540; Adams v. Mills, 126 Mass. 278.

In Maine, a tax deed is required to recite that it was necessary to sell the whole of the land to pay the taxes and charges, and that no person would pay the same for a smaller quantity of land. Lovejoy v. Lunt, 48 Me. 377; Loomis v. Pingree, 43 Me. 311; Briggs v. Johnson, 71 Me. 236; French v. Patterson, 61 Me. 203; Allen v. Morse, 72 Me. 502; Brookings v. Woodin, 74 Me. 222; Whitmore v. Learned, 70 Me. 276.

In Indiana, it is held that where a tax deed fails to show that the personal property of a delinquent has been exhausted before the sale of his real estate, or that he had no such property, such deed, unless accompanied by proper evidence of the fact, is inadmissible as evidence of title. Ward v. Montgomery, 57 Ind. 276.

2. Haynes v. Heller, 12 Kan. 381; Mason v. Crowder, 85 Mo. 526; Thompson v. Lawrence, 2 Baxt. (Tenn.) 415.

In Hill v. Atterbury, 88 Mo. 114, it was held that a recital of a deed of sale as of a date other than the time for which the statute required the sale to be advertised, did not affect the validity of the deed. See also Easton v. Savery, 44 Iowa 654; Love v. Welch, 33 Iowa 192; Stafford v. Laurer, 49 Kan. 690.

In Brigins v. Chandler, 60 Miss. 862, it was held that a misrecital of a date of the sale did not preclude the party claiming title thereunder from showing aliunde that the sale was made at the proper time.

Misrecital of the Time of the Sale.—In Hurlbut v. Dyer, 36 Iowa 474, it was held that a tax deed which recited the sale as having been on the 26th of February, when in fact it was on the 26th of January, did not render the deed invalid; especially, it was said, as the sale might legally have been made on the 26th of February.

In Callanan v. Hurley, 93 U. S. 387, it was held that where the sale of land for delinquent taxes was continued for several days, the recital of a sale as made on the first day of the sale, although actually made later, did not affect the validity of the deed.

In Harris v. Curran, 32 Kan. 580, it was held that a tax deed was not void because it recited that the sale was made on May 6th, 1870, at a sale begun on the first Tuesday of May, 1870, when in fact, May 6th, 1870, was Friday, and the first Tuesday was the third day of the month. So in Shell v. Duncan, 31 S. Car. 547, the recital of the time of the sale as on the first Monday in March, the fourth day thereof, when it was in fact the seventh, did not affect the validity of the deed.

3. Haller v. Blaco, 10 Neb. 36; Howard v. Lamaster, 11 Neb. 582; Thompson v. Merriam, 15 Neb. 498; Baldwin v. Merriam, 16 Neb. 199; Shelley v. Towle, 16 Neb. 194; Towle v. Holt, 14 Neb. 221; Thompson v. Lawrence, 2 Baxt. (Tenn.) 415.

In Frentz v. Klotsch, 28 Wis. 312, it was held that a recital that the land was sold at the county seat, was suffistatute. A recital of the conclusions resulting from facts required to be stated is not sufficient, the facts must be recited.¹

Whether expressly required or not, it is essential to the validity of the deed that it recite enough of the previous proceedings to show the authority to sell the lands, and to make the deed.² But it is held to be not necessary that the deed shall show that everything has been done that the law requires.³ The misrecital of facts not required to be stated will not vitiate the deed, when it does not appear that there has been an actual violation of the law.⁴ Such recitals may be corrected by evidence cient, and that it was not necessary to further define the place as at the courthouse.

In Landregan v. Peppin, 86 Cal. 122, it was held that a recital of a specific date will control a recital that notice was given as required by law.

A recital in a tax deed that certain facts appear from the records of the auditor's office, is not equivalent to a recital that they exist. White v. Flynn, 23 Ind. 46.

2. Woodward v. Sloan, 27 Ohio St. 592; Turney v. Yeoman, 14 Ohio 208; Hobbs v. Shumates, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 516; Madland v. Benland, 24 Minn. 372; O'Mulcahy v. Florer, 27 Minn. 449; Smith v. Ryan, 88 Ky. 636; Jones v. Miracle (Ky. 1893), 21 S. W. Rep. 241; Sibley v. Smith, 2 Mich. 486. And see Perkins v. Dibble, 10 Ohio 433; 36 Am. Dec. 97.

The omission in the deed to recite that the sale was made in pursuance of an order required, renders the deed void. McDermott v. Scully, 27 Ark. 226. In Call v. Dearborn, 21 Wis. 504, a deed which did not recite or refer to the judgment or order of court under which the sale was made, was held invalid.

In Bedgood v. McLain, 89 Ga. 793, where the tax fi. fa. under which the land was sold was misdescribed in the deed, it was held that parol evidence was admissible to prove such mistake.

In Buchanan v. Reynolds, 4 W. Va. 681, it was held that a deed which did not recite by whom the sale was made, was void.

In Nebraska, where lands offered for sale and not sold for want of bidders, are permitted to be sold at private sale, a tax deed issued in such case must recite the facts authorizing such sale. Ludden v. Hansen, 17 Neb. 354. And see State v. Helmer, 10 Neb. 25.

Authority for Adjourned Sale.—In Gregg v. Jesberg, 113 Mo. 34, it was held that where the tax deed discloses the fact that the tax sale was an adjourned one, it must contain a recital showing that the adjournment did not exceed the period prescribed by law, or it will be void.

Lost Deed.—A second deed made to replace a former one, which has been lost or destroyed, must recite the loss or destruction of the first deed, and is not admissible in evidence in support of the tax title unless it does so. Burroughs v. Goff, 64 Mich. 464.

3. Pleasants v. Scott, 21 Ark. 370; 76 Am. Dec. 403; Morss v. Shear, 25 Cal. 38; 85 Am. Dec. 94; O'Grady v. Barnhisel, 23 Cal. 287; Bank of Utica v. Mesereau, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 538; 49 Am. Dec. 189. And see State v. Mantz, 62 Mo. 258; Walker v. Taylor, 43 Ark. 543.

No invalidity appearing upon the face of the deed, it is to be presumed that the sale was conducted in the manner required by law. McCoy v. Michew, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 386; Smith v. Easton, 37 Iowa 584; Griffin v. Tuttle, 74 Iowa 219.

Where the tax deed recites that the grantee held the tax certificate as assignee of the treasurer, it must be presumed that the treasurer bid off the land for the county as authorized. Frentz v. Klotsch, 28 Wis. 312.

In Brien v. O'Shaughnessy, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 724, it was held that a tax deed was not void which failed to recite that in selling the land the officer followed the statute, by offering first to sell a less quantity than the whole to whoever would bid the amount of the taxes.

4. Matter not required to be recited aliunde.¹ As to the power generally to correct erroneous recitals, and to issue new and corrected deeds, see note 2.

(3) Description.—(See also TAXATION—The Assessment—Tax Sales).—A valid tax deed must contain such a description as will, without the aid of extraneous facts, designate with reasonable certainty the property sought to be conveyed,³ which description may be treated as surplusage, and does not affect the validity of the deed. Harper v. Rowe, 55 Cal. 132.

In Hickman v. Kempner, 35 Ark. 505, it was held that the false recital that the land was assessed in the name of an unknown owner, did not vitiate the sale.

1. Brigins v. Chandler, 60 Miss. 862; Longfellow v. Quimby, 33 Me. 457.

Deed in Evidence.—Where a tax deed has sufficient recitals to justify its introduction as evidence, the omission of other recitals may be supplied by oral proof. Budd v. Bettison, 21 Ark. 582.

In Grimm v. O'Connell, 54 Cal. 522, it was held that one claiming under his deed, in which there is a misrecital as to whom the property was assessed, is precluded from proving by evidence aliunde that the assessment was not made as recited, and that the assessment not being according to law the deed is void. See also Brady v. Dowden, 59 Cal. 51.

2. See supra, this title, Power to Make, and By Whom Executed.

3. As to the sufficiency of the description, the following cases may be consulted: Thibodaux v. Thibodaux, 29 La. Ann. 508; Wilson v. Marshall, 10 La. Ann. 327; Schattler v. Cassinelli, 56 Ark. 172; Greene v. Lunt, 58 Me. 519; Griffin v. Crippin, 60 Me. 270; Harber v. Dyches (Tex. 1890), 14 S. W. Rep. 580; Wofford v. McKinna, 23 Tex. 36; 76 Am. Dec. 53; Flanagan v. Boggess, 46 Tex. 330; Kilpatrick v. Sisneros, 23 Tex. 113; Claiborne v. Elkins, 79 Tex. 380; Libby v. Mayberry, 80 Me. 137; Roberts v. Deeds, 57 Iowa 320; Brechev v. English, 129 Ill. 646; Head v. James, 13 Wis. 641; Mecklem v. Blake, 19 Wis. 419; Annan v. Baker, 49 N. H. 161; Bosworth v. Danzien, 25 Cal. 296; Brunn v. Murphy, 29 Cal. 326; Newby v. Brownlee, 23 Fed. Rep. 320.

In Campbell v. Packard, 61 Wis. 88, a description of the property as lying in a certain county, but failing to designate it as lying in a town in which it was situated, was held to invalidate the deed.

But in Haynes v. Heller, 12 Kan. 381, the failure to state the county and state in which the land sought to be conveyed was situated, did not invalidate the deed, as in another part thereof the same land as the property sold was accurately described; and in Keepfer v. Force, 86 Ind. 81, it was held that where section, township, and range were given by number, it was not necessary that the county should also be given.

A description of the land as bounded by the land of a third person, does not render the deed uncertain on its face. Scheiber v. Kaehler, 49 Wis. 291; Brunn v. Murphy, 29 Cal. 326.

A description is not defective which calls for a certain quantity of land bounded on three sides by well-known streets, upon a plat of a city laid out, surveyed, and platted, and on the other by the unsurveyed lands. Garwood v. Hastings, 38 Cal. 216.

In Hill v. Mowry, 6 Gray (Mass.) 552, a deed which fixed the boundary on the north and west, and described the property as bounded on the east by land by which it was in fact bounded only in part, and as bounded on the south by land from which it was in fact separated, was void for uncertainty.

In Quinby v. North American Coal, etc., Co., 2 Heisk. (Tenn.) 596, a description of the property as "eleven tracts of land, containing twenty-three thousand acres, lying in 13th district of White County, sold as the property of ————," shall not be a sufficient identification.

The description as "the north part of the northeast quarter of section No. 10, township No. 15, range No. 23, east, containing 100 acres in the county of Johnson, State of Kansas," was deemed sufficiently certain and definite. Martz v. Newton, 29 Kan. 331.

In Wisconsin, under a statute which provides that any description which shall indicate the land intended, with ordinary and reasonable certainty, will be sufficient, the description as "a certain specified lot in block No. 19, to the village," instead of in the village, was held sufficient, although it was said that prior to the passage of this must conform in all essentials to that employed in the previous proceedings.¹

The property may be described by the name by which it is commonly known,² or by the use of well-known abbreviations.³ But the description of a lot as part of a certain tract, is not sufficient, and will vitiate the deed, although the larger tract be statute it would probably have been invalid for uncertainty. Delorme v. Ferk, 24 Wis. 201. See also Reinhart v. Oconto County, 69 Wis. 352; Meade v. Gilfoyle, 64 Wis. 18.

In Louisiana, the name of the owner of land is required to be given as descriptive of the land assessed, when the title of the owner is of record, and an error in this respect is fatal to the title under the sale. Sutton v. Calhoun, 14 La. Ann. 205.

Reference to Plat.—Lands may be described by reference to town plats, if actually recorded, though not legally. Johnstone v. Scott, 11 Mich. 232; Simmons v. Johnson, 14 Wis. 523.

Description as in a Certain Shape.—In Newby v. Brownlee, 23 Fed. Rep. 320, it was held that lands described as a certain portion of a certain quarter-section, without showing that the part sold is square, are sufficiently described, where the statute fixes the shape.

In Ammons v. Dwyer, 78 Tex. 639, it was held that a tax deed which conveys four thousand acres of land, lying in the shape of a square, is void, where it appears that it was impossible to lay off from the property sold four thousand acres in the form of a square.

A description, as two hundred and seventy (270) acres in the north-east corner of a certain section, is not an insufficient description, as the land is presumed to lie in the form of a square. Hooper v. Clayton, 81 Ala. 391. See also Dolan v. Trelevan, 31 Wis. 147.

Description Defective as to Part.—In Watkins v. Inge, 24 Kan. 612, it was held that an insufficient description of one tract in a deed will not invalidate the deed as to the other tracts of property sufficiently described. See also Hunt v. Chapin, 42 Mich. 124.

Reformation by Action.—A deed which by mistake of the county auditor erroneously describes the land, cannot be reformed by action. Judicial sales, as a general proposition, are not subject to correction by reforming the deed. Keffer v. Force, 86 Ind. 81. And see Rogers v. Abbot, 37 Ind. 138; Miller v. Kolb, 47 Ind. 220.

1. Lowe v. Ekey, 82 Mo. 286. And see Boon v. Simmons, 88 Va. 259; O'Neil v. Tyler (N. Dak. 1892), 53 N. W. Rep. 434.

In Blair Town Lot, etc., Co. v. Scott, 44 Iowa 143, where the description of the property in the assessment roll and that of the deed did not necessarily contemplate the same parcels, it was held that, in the absence of evidence aliunde showing them to be the same, the deed was void for uncertainty.

A deed for part of a tract, where the report of the sale showed that an entire tract was sold, is void. Jones v. Dils, 18 W. Va. 759.

Where there was an insufficient description of the property sold at the tax sale, and a deed conforms to this defective description, the county clerk has no power to cure such defect by the execution of a subsequent deed containing a different description than that set forth in the tax certificate and proceedings upon which it was issued. Hewitt v. Storch, 31 Kan. 488; Bowman v. Cockrill, 6 Kan. 311.

In Kansas, if a description in the deed does not conform to the description of the property in the assessment roll, such prior description, if imperfect, avoids the deed, although the description of the deed itself is sufficient and complete. Stout v. Mastin, 139 U. S. 151; Hewitt v. Storch, 31 Kan. 488. A deed, the description of which follows the description of the assessment, which was made in disregard of the statute then in force, is invalid. Bruce v. McBee, 23 Kan. 379.

2. See People v. Crockett, 33 Cal. 153; Anderson v. Hancock, 61 Cal. 88; High v. Shoemaker, 22 Cal. 371.

A description as "Commencement Plantation," consisting of thirteen hundred and thirty acres, situated in — county, — state, was held sufficient in Vaughan v. Swayzie, 56 Miss. 704.

3. Humphries v. Huffman, 33 Ohio St. 395; Winkler v. Higgins, 9 Ohio St. 599; Lafferty v. Byers, 5 Ohio 458; Wilkins v. Tourtellott, 28 Kan. 825; Poindexter v. Doolittle, 54 Iowa 52; Shackleford v. Bailey, 35 Ill. 387; John- accurately designated.¹ Parol evidence cannot be resorted to for the purpose of supplying the defective description.² And, unlike deeds between individuals, tax deeds cannot be aided by intentment.³ But a latent ambiguity may be removed by evidence aliunde.⁴

(4) Seal.—The statutes usually require in terms that a tax deed shall be under seal. Statutes requiring an instrument in son v. Ashland Lumber Co., 52 Wis. 458; Hintrager v. Nightingale, 36 Fed. Rep. 847; Yandell v. Pugh, 53 Wis. 295; McCready v. Lansdale, 58 Miss. 877.

In Ronkendorff v. Taylor, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 349, the description as $\frac{1}{2}$ of lot No. 491, was insufficient. And in Larrabee v. Hodgkins, 58 Me. 412, the deed containing a description of property as " $\frac{1}{4}$ No. 5, R. 8, W. E. L. S.," was held to be void. So in Smith v. Blackiston, 82 Iowa 240, a description as the undivided acres of a certain section, was too indefinite. See also Griffith v. Utley, 76 Iowa 292; Ellsworth v. Nelson, 81 Iowa 56.

In Bosworth v. Farenholz, 3 Iowa 84, a description as "40 feet of lot No. 2, in block No. 2," was void for uncertainty.

A deed which recites that a certain section of land was offered for sale, and that B. purchased thirty-five acres thereof, and conveys the said land to him, is void for uncertainty. Jacks v. Chaffin, 34 Ark. 534.

In Wetherbee v. Dunn, 32 Cal. 106, a description as "Block, No. 25, less a lot belonging to —, 70 by 137 $\frac{1}{2}$," in the southeasterly corner," was sufficient.

Parol Evidence.—In Barton v. Anderson, 104 Ind. 578, it was held that parol evidence is admissible to explain the abbreviations allowed.

Location by Purchaser.—In Pennsylvania, a treasurer's deed may define the quantity, but not the location, of a part of a tract of land sold for taxes, and the sale will be valid, the grantee being permitted to locate such part for himself. Coxe v. Blanden, 1 Watts (Pa.) 533; 26 Am. Dec. 83; McCord v. Bergautz, 7 Watts (Pa.) 490. And see McCullough v. McCall, 10 Watts (Pa.) 374. But see Hart v. Hawkins, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 502; 6 Am. Dec. 666.

1. In Bowers v. Chambers, 53 Miss. 259, a description, "14 A's off N. E. cor. East $\frac{1}{2}$, S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$, sec. 20," was held sufficient. So in Taylor v. Wright, 121 Ill. 455, a description, "W. side, N. $\frac{1}{2}$ S. E. N. W. 10 acres, sec. 8, T. 23, R. 10," was held sufficiently certain. And in Selden v. Coffee, 55 Miss. 41, a description "frl. N. $\frac{1}{2}$ sec. 14," was held to be sufficient. But the description "bal. frl. sec. 11," etc., was held to be void, as containing a patent ambiguity.

But in Lowe v. Ekey, 82 Mo. 286, a description with abbreviations as follows: "U. N. E. N. Union R. W. A., and P. R. R.," was insufficient, although the use of the following abbreviations, "T. for township, R. for range, L. for lot, B. for block," and abbreviations for the points of the compass were expressly authorized by statute.

2. Roberts v. Deeds, 57 Iowa 320; Keane v. Canovan, 21 Cal. 302; 82 Am. Dec. 732; People v. Mahoney, 55 Cal. 286; Orono v. Veazie, 61 Me. 431; Bowers v. Andrews, 52 Miss. 596; McGuire v. Stevens, 42 Miss. 724.

So in Curtis v. Brown County, 22 Wis. 167, where there was a description of property as in A's addition, parol evidence could not be received to show that A's second addition was meant, where the town in which the land lay contained the two additions.

3. Nelson v. Brodhack, 44 Mo. 596; 100 Am. Dec. 328; Orton v. Noonan, 23 Wis. 102; Tallman v. White, 2 N. Y. 66; Griffin v. Creppin, 60 Me. 270; Curtis v. Brown County, 22 Wis. 167. See also Dike v. Lewis, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 237.

But in Thompson v. Ela, 60 N. H. 562, it was held that a manifestly erroneous statement of a course or boundary, which is immaterial, might be rejected. See also Ives v. Kimball, 1 Mich. 308. And in Huey v. Van Wie, 23 Wis. 613, it was held that, where a tax deed recites that the land is situated in a certain village and county, naming the wrong county, the court will take judicial notice of the village in the proper county.

4. Brown v. Walker, 11 Mo. App. 226; Marsh v. Nelson, 101 Pa. St. 51; Stewart v. Colter, 31 Minn. 385; Jenkins v. Sharp, 27 Wis. 472. But see Wofford v. McKenna, 23 Tex. 36.

When the description is not uncertain on its face, but is made so by averment, writing under seal, in order to convey an estate in lands, are applicable to tax deeds. In either of these cases, the absence of the seal will invalidate the deed.¹ Unless otherwise provided, the private seal of the officer executing the tax deed is sufficient.²

e. PARTIES—(1) Grantor.—Where the deed is required to be made in the name of the state or the municipality for whose taxes the land is sold, a deed executed in the name of the officer making the sale conveys no title to the grantee.³ Where the deed is in the name of the sheriff or collector as grantor, as required in some of the old statutes, covenants of warranty required to be inserted are not personal but official.⁴

the uncertainty will be removed by evidence aliunde. Selden v. Coffee, 55 Miss. 41.

1. Doty v. Beasley, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 14; Shortridge v. Catlett, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 587; Sutton v. Stone, 4 Neb. 321; King v. Hyatt, 51 Kan. 504.

Where the required seal is omitted, time will not cure the defect. Reed v. Morse, 51 Kan. 141.

In Mississippi, under the code of 1871, a conveyance by a tax collector was not required to be under seal, Bowers v. Chambers, 53 Miss. 259; but the exception did not apply to a conveyance made by the auditor or other officers not expressly mentioned in the statute creating the exception. Day v. Day, 59 Miss. 318.

Cannot Be Corrected in Equity.—In Altes v. Hinckler, 36 Ill. 265; 85 Am. Dec. 406, it was held that a bill in chancery cannot be maintained to correct an error of the officer making the deed in neglecting to affix the seal to it.

2. Eaton v. North, 20 Wis. 449; Sturdevant v. Mather, 20 Wis. 576; Huston v. Foster, 1 Watts (Pa.) 477; Herron v. Murphy (Pa. 1888), 13 Atl. Rep. 958.

In Watts v. Gilgore, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 330, it was held that a commissioners' deed under their common seal, is void. See McCoy v. Dickenson College, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 254.

In Nebraska, although private seals are abolished by statute, the requirement of an official seal to the tax deed is not dispensed with, and the deed without such a seal is void. Bendexen v. Fenton, 21 Neb. 184; Sullivan v. Merriam, 16 Neb. 157; Shelley v. Towle, 16 Neb. 194; Baldwin v. Merriam, 16 Neb. 199; Seaman v. Thompson, 16 Neb. 546; Hendrix v. Bogg, 15 Neb. 469; Deputron v. Young, 134 U. S. 241.

In Wisconsin, in Brown v. Cohn (Wis. 1893), 54 N. W. Rep. 1101, under a statute providing that a "tax deed shall be executed by the clerk of the county board of supervisors, who shall affix thereto the seal of such board," a device like a seal with the words "County clerk, — County," etc., used by the clerk with the knowledge of the board of supervisors, was held sufficient.

In Bulger v. Moore, 67 Wis. 430, where the clerk stated that he had affixed the seal of "the county board of supervisors," when it should have been the "seal of the county," and had signed his name to the deed as "clerk of the board of supervisors," when it should have been signed as "county clerk," the deed was held valid. See also Dreutzer v. Smith, 56 Wis. 202.

3. Woodman v. Clapp, 21 Wis. 355; Treat v. Smith, 68 Me. 394.

In Leggett v. Rogers, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 406, under a statute which required that the deed should be in the name of the people of the state, a deed executed by an officer, which recited the statute and the proceedings generally, and that the land had been sold and the deed given in virtue thereof, was held to be valid. See also Bank of Utica v. Mersereau, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 528; 49 Am. Dec. 189. So in Willson v. Henry, 40 Wis. 594, under a statute requiring a county clerk to execute the deed in the name of the state, an acknowledgment of the deed by the clerk, stating that it is the deed of the state, was sufficient. See also McNamara v. Estes, 22 Iowa 246.

Municipal Taxes.—In Florida, under a statute providing that deeds for taxes sold by the state shall be made in the name of the state, a deed of land sold for unpaid city taxes is properly made in the name of the city as grantor. Florida Sav. Bank v. Brittain, 20 Fla. 507. See also Sams v. King, 18 Fla. 557.

4. Stevenson v. Weeks, 22 N. H. 257; Wilson v. Cochran, 14 N. H. 397; Gibson v. Mussey, 11 Vt. 212.

(2) Grantee.—The tax deed should be made to the person entitled to receive it, as the purchaser at the tax sale;¹ or assignee of the certificate of sale, who, when the assignment is authorized, succeeds to all the rights and privileges of the original purchaser.²

Several collectors cannot join in one deed for lands sold by them severally. Humphry v. Boge, 2 Root (Conn.) 437.

1. See supra, this title, Purchaser's Right Thereto.

When authority is given to make a deed to the highest bidder, the name of another cannot be legally substituted. Keene v. Houghton, 19 Me. 368.

In Walton v. Hale, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 104, it was held that a deed executed to persons other than those reported to have been the purchasers, is invalid, and the officer making the deed shows no authority to make it, unless there has been such a long acquiescence and possession as to justify a presumption in its favor.

Where the statute authorizes the making of a deed to the original purchaser or to the assignee by written indorsement, the deed to the administrator of the purchaser at the tax sale, "for the use of the heirs," conveys no title. Alexander v. Savage, 90 Ala. 383.

In Ogden v. Bemis, 125 Ill. 105, it was held that a tax deed made to Hiram Coombs upon a tax sale to H. Coombs will not be set aside, where the affidavit of the grantee states that he purchased the premises described in the certificate of sale, and requests that a deed be made to him.

How Designated.—It is sufficient if the grantee is nominated by his customary name, no matter what may have been his true name. Garwood v. Hastings, 38 Cal. 216. A tax deed issued to partners in the firm name has been held sufficient. Sherry v. Gilmore, 58 Wis. 324.

Conveyance to Self.—In Barr v. Randall, 35 Kan. 126, it was held that where the person entitled to the tax deed is the person authorized to make it, and he makes a deed to himself as an individual, which is immediately recorded, it is not absolutely void, and will not even be voidable after the Statute of Limitations relating to tax deeds has run in its favor.

2. In Dreutzer v. Smith, 56 Wis. 292, it was held that under a statute which provides that the county clerk or treasurer may assign tax certificates "by writing his name in blank on the back thereof," the assignment may be made by an officer, by stamping his name and official character. Under such a requirement, the deed cannot be issued to a second assignee, whose assignment is not indorsed on, or attached to, the certificate. Smith v. Todd, 55 Wis. 459. Nor can the certificate be assigned by delivery. Horn v. Garry, 49 Wis. 464.

In Territory v. Pereca (N. Mex. 1892), 30 Pac. Rep. 928, it was held that the mere writing on the back was not a sufficient indorsement, under a statute providing that the certificate "shall be assigned by indorsement."

Assignment by Quit-claim Deed.—It was held that a quit-claim deed from the holder of a tax-sale certificate, is not such an assignment of the certificate as will authorize the making of a deed from the county to the grantee in such quit-claim deed. Clippinger v. Tuller, 10 Kan. 377; State v. Winn, 19 Wis. 323; Lain v. Shepardson, 23 Wis. 224.

Assignee of County or Town.—A deed made to the assignee of a county, the owner of the certificate, which has no authority to transfer such certificate, is void upon its face. So in Kansas, where an assignment for a certificate of sale made in 1862, for taxes of 1861, was not authorized, a deed based thereon was void. Judd v. Driver, 1 Kan. 455; Sapp v. Morrill, 8 Kan. 677; Entreken v. Howard, 16 Kan. 553.

Where authority to make the assignment of the certificate was given to the county clerk only, as was the case under the law of 1864, a valid deed could not be made to the assignee of the certificate assigned by a county treasurer. Shoat v. Walker, 6 Kan. 66. Nor could the county commissioners make the transfer. State v. Haughey, 5 Kan. 639; Jordan v. Kyle, 27 Kan. 190. It seems that the assignment may be made now by the county treasurer. Board of Regents v. Linscott, 30 Kan. 240.

In Wisconsin, a town cannot lawfully receive or make an assignment of a certificate of sale, and a tax deed issued to the purchaser of a certificate from a town is void as against the original owner. Irvin v. Smith, 60 Wis. 175; Eaton v. Manitowoc County, 44 Wis. 489; Jackson v. Jacksonport, 56 Wis. 310; Dreutzer v. Smith, 56 Wis. 292.

The requirement that the fact of assignment should be stated in the deed, is material and cannot be disregarded.¹

f. EXECUTION—ACKNOWLEDGMENT.—In the execution of a tax deed, the statutory requirements as to signing, sealing and witnessing, must be substantially complied with.² And unless acknowledged in the manner provided, it will not be considered as executed.³ Mere formal inaccuracies in the acknowledgment,

1. North v. Wendell, 22 Wis. 431; Krueger v. Knab, 22 Wis. 429. A memorandum at the bottom of the deed, but not a part thereof, is not sufficient evidence of the assignment. Florida Sav. Bank v. Brittain, 20 Fla. 507.

A deed which is in the statutory form stating that "B, assignee of the county of A, had deposited," contains sufficient evidence of the fact of the assignment. Knox v. Huidekoper, 21 Wis. 527.

In Pitkin v. Shacklett, 106 Mo. 571, a tax deed reciting that the purchaser at the tax sale had assigned "all his right, title, and interest in and to said land," was held to be void under a statute requiring a recital that the indorsement was under the hand of the purchaser written on the back of the certificate of purchase. See also Pitkin v. Reibel, 104 Mo. 505.

Record of Assignment.—In Swan v. Whaley, 75 Iowa 623, it was held that the recording of the assignment of the certificate of sale was not essential to the assignment, but was provided for in order that the treasurer might know who was entitled to the deed.

Presumption.—In the absence of evidence that the certificates were not properly assigned, if the deed recites that the grantee is assignee thereof, it must be presumed that the assignment was properly made. Cousins v. Allen, 28 Wis. 232.

Mandamus.—The county clerk or other person duly authorized may be compelled by mandamus to execute a proper deed to the owner of the certificate of sale, to whom a defective deed has been issued. Clippinger v. Tuller, 10 Kan. 377; State v. Winn, 19 Wis. 323. See also, as to the power to compel the execution of a tax deed by mandamus, supra, this title, Purchaser's Right Thereto.

2. The deed must have the official seal, if required, before it can be admitted in evidence, Day v. Day, 59 Miss. 318; Sutton v. Stone, 4 Neb. 319; though when the statute does not require it, the seal may be omitted. Bowers v. Chambers, 53 Miss. 259.

In Florida, a tax deed will not convey the property, unless it is attested by subscribing witnesses, Paul v. Fries, 18 Fla. 573; and in Indiana, it is not evidence of a legal title in the holder, unless witnessed by the county treasurer. Gabe v. Root, 93 Ind. 256; Bowen v. Striker, 100 Ind. 45. And see McCauslin v. McGuire, 14 Kan. 234.

In Connecticut, the deed, to be effectual, must be attested by two witnesses, and no deed not thus attested, will prove a transfer of real estate. Watson v. Atwood, 25 Conn. 313.

In the absence of a statutory provision to the contrary, tax deeds must be executed and acknowledged in the same manner as other conveyances of land. Hogins v. Brashears, 13 Ark. 242.

Proof of Execution.—In Dillingham v. Brown, 38 Ala. 311, where there were no attesting witnesses to the deed, evidence of the handwriting of the grantors, and of the official character of the party signing the deed as tax collector at the time of the tax sale and date of his deed, were held sufficient proof of execution.

3. Sterlin v. Daley, 37 Mo. 483; Dalton v. Fenn, 40 Mo. 109; Dunlap v. Henry, 76 Mo. 106; Williams v. McLanahan, 67 Mo. 499; Ryan v. Carr, 46 Mo. 483; Douglass v. Bishop, 45 Kan. 200; Bowen v. Striker, 100 Ind. 45; Keech v. Enriquez, 28 Fla. 597; Bird v. McClelland, etc., Brick Mfg. Co., 45 Fed. Rep. 458. And see ACKNOWLEDGMENT, vol. 1, p. 143; DEEDS, vol. 5, p. 443.

The certificate of acknowledgment should be taken by a duly authorized and qualified officer, Bird v. McClelland, etc., Brick Mfg. Co., 45 Fed. Rep. 458; Douglass v. Bishop, 45 Kan. 200; and substantially comply with the requisites of the statute. Schleicher v. Gatlin, 85 Tex. 270.

It has been held that a treasurer's deed for unseated land sold for taxes, may be acknowledged after the treasurer's term of office has expired. Heron v. Murphy (Pa. 1888), 13 Atl. Rep.

however, will be disregarded.¹ In some of the states acknowledgment has been held to be unnecessary.²

An improper official designation attached to the signature will not invalidate the deed, where the identity of the officer is not thereby rendered doubtful or uncertain.³

g. DELIVERY AND ACCEPTANCE—(See also DEEDS, vol. 5, p. 445).—Tax deeds, in so far as delivery and acceptance are concerned, stand upon the same footing as other deeds between individuals; the delivery and acceptance must be mutual and concurrent acts, and the deed takes effect from that time.⁴

Under the Massachusetts statutes, no title can be claimed under a tax deed, unless it has been acknowledged and recorded. Tilson v. Thompson, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 359.

In Waddingham v. Dickson, 17 Colo. 223, it was held that a statute authorizing a deputy county clerk to take and certify acknowledgments to deeds, does not require the acknowledgment to tax deeds to be taken in the name of the clerk, but permits the deputy to take it in his own name.

Deed Acknowledged in Sister State.—A certificate of acknowledgment made by a commissioner of another state need not be under seal. Irving v. Brownell, 11 Ill. 402; and no certificate of the official character of such commissioner need be produced. Thompson v. Schuyler, 7 Ill. 271.

Acknowledged Deed as Evidence.—In Kansas, a tax deed duly acknowledged is sufficient without witnesses. Stebbins v. Guthrie, 4 Kan. 353; McCauslin v. McGuire, 14 Kan. 234.

And in Pennsylvania, a sheriff's deed, with a certificate indorsed upon it, under the hand and official seal of the prothonotary, that it was duly acknowledged in open court, and entered of record, is prima facie evidence without showing the record. Foust v. Ross, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 501.

Necessity for Revenue Stamp.—Where a deed is required to be stamped, it is admissible in evidence, though not stamped at the time the action was commenced, if it has since been stamped in pursuance of the act of Congress, before actually used in evidence. Knox v. Huidekoper, 21 Wis. 527.

It has been held that Congress cannot, without the consent of the state, impose a stamp duty upon tax deeds executed under the laws of the state, such deeds being means or instruments devised by the states for the purpose of collecting their own revenues. Sayles v. Davis, 22 Wis. 217; Delorme v. Ferk, 24 Wis. 201.

Presumption of Regularity.—The acknowledgment will be presumed to have been regular, in the absence of evidence to the contrary. Douglass v. Bishop, 45 Kan. 200.

1. A mere mistake in the date of the acknowledgment will not prevent the deed from being recorded. Yorty v. Paine, 62 Wis. 154. See also Chase v. Whiting, 30 Wis. 544. Nor will a certificate of acknowledgment, if in other respects sufficient, be vitiated for want of a date. Irving v. Brownell, 11 Ill. 402; Thompson v. Schuyler, 7 Ill. 271.

Where an acknowledgment recited that the deputy county clerk appeared before the proper officer and acknowledged the execution of the deed "as such county clerk," it was held sufficient, the words in quotations being construed to mean "as such deputy county clerk." Ward v. Walters, 63 Wis. 39.

In Hall v. Baker, 74 Wis. 118, it was held that the record of a tax deed is not defective because the name of the county and not of the state is given as grantor in the index, under a statute requiring a general index to be kept, in which the names of grantors are entered.

2. Thompson v. Schuyler, 7 Ill. 271; Graves v. Bruen, 6 Ill. 167.

3. Bulger v. Moore, 67 Wis. 430; Knox v. Huidekoper, 21 Wis. 527.

4. Hulick v. Scovil, 9 Ill. 159; Caruthers v. McLaran, 56 Miss. 371; McMichael v. Carlyle, 53 Wis. 504.

The presumption is that a party will accept a deed because he is to be benefited thereby, but this presumption is never carried to the extent of presuming an acceptance without evidence thereof. Hulick v. Scovil, 9 Ill. 159.

Possession Prima Facie Evidence of Delivery.—The possession of a deed

h. RECORDING—(See also RECORDING ACTS, vol. 20, p. 527).—The recording acts of some states are sufficiently comprehensive to cover tax deeds, while in others there are special statutes which in terms require them to be recorded in the same manner as other conveyances; in such cases the deed, unless recorded, is without effect against the rights of parties having no actual notice thereof.¹ In the absence of such statutes, however, registration has been held unnecessary.² As a general rule, tax deeds must regularly executed is prima facie evidence of its delivery and acceptance. Games v. Stiles, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 322.

As a general rule, the production of an office copy of a tax deed is prima facie proof, not only of the execution, but also of the delivery of the deed; but there may be circumstances attending the record of the deed, which, if shown, will prevent the presumption of delivery from arising therefrom, or diminish its force. Whitmore v. Learned, 70 Me. 276.

The acknowledgment of a tax deed need not fix the date of delivery. Caruthers v. McLaran, 56 Miss. 371.

1. Stierlin v. Daley, 37 Mo. 483; Dalton v. Fenn, 40 Mo. 109; Allen v. Everts, 3 Vt. 10; Tilson v. Thompson, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 359.

That is sufficient registry of a tax deed which would be a sufficient registry of any other deed. Oconto County v. Jerrard, 46 Wis. 317.

Where the index to the record of a tax deed described the property as "parts of sections 28 and 29, see record," it was held sufficient to impart constructive notice. Peirce v. Weare, 41 Iowa 378.

The corporate seal of the official to a tax deed is sufficiently recorded if indicated upon the record by the word "seal" written within a scroll. Huey v. Van Wle, 23 Wis. 613; Putney v. Cutler, 54 Wis. 66.

A deed which has been left with the registrar for record, having the date of its reception indorsed on it, but which has neither been spread upon the record nor entered in the general index, is not recorded within the meaning of the Wisconsin statute relating to redemption. International L. Ins. Co. v. Scales, 27 Wis. 640.

Under the Florida statutes, the lien of a judgment against a person who has been in possession of land for two years, is superior to a tax deed for the lands executed before judgment, but not acknowledged and proved for record as required by law. Hill v. Gordon, 45 Fed. Rep. 276.

The special limitation of one year within which to assail the validity of tax titles acquired under the provisions of Florida Laws of 1872, ch. 1865, applies only to tax deeds acquired under that act that have been recorded. Keech v. Enriquez, 28 Fla. 597.

In Wisconsin, the grantee in a tax deed has no such right to the possession of the premises as will enable him to maintain ejectment therefor, until the tax deed is properly recorded. Hewitt v. Week, 59 Wis. 444.

Where a tax deed is registered before the expiration of the period of redemption, it is sufficient, and no new registry is required after the expiration of the period of redemption. Davis v. Hurst (Tex. 1890), 14 S. W. Rep. 610.

The Iowa statute does not make the record of the assignment of a certificate of purchase at a tax sale essential to the sale. It is required for the purpose of affording evidence to the treasurer of the person entitled to the deed, when the right to it accrues, and not for the purpose of giving constructive notice of the rights of the assignee. Swan v. Whaley, 75 Iowa 623.

Notice of Defects.—A recorded tax deed showing a defect which can be cured by legislation, is notice to a purchaser from the former owner, and he takes title at the risk of the enactment of curative legislation. In re Com'r's Report, etc., 49 N. J. L. 488.

2. Graves v. Bruen, 6 Ill. 167; Rhinehart v. Schuyler, 7 Ill. 473; Thompson v. Schuyler, 7 Ill. 271.

The common-law rule then governs, under which a deed is valid without being recorded. Burroughs on Taxation 326.

In Goodman v. Sanger, 91 Pa. St. 71, it was held that a tax deed of unseated land, made by a treasurer to the commissioners of a county, is not void as against a subsequent purchaser from the owner of the land, because not recorded in the be properly executed and acknowledged in order to make the recording of them constructive notice.¹

i. AS EVIDENCE—(1) At Common Law.—The burden is on the party claiming under a tax deed to show that the preliminary steps required by law have been complied with. And at common law, the deed is not even prima facie evidence of such facts, but proof of the legality of the sale and regularity of the officer's proceedings must be made aliunde;² even a recital in the deed of the performance of the acts necessary to validate it not being office for recording deeds of the county. A complete record of the proceedings may be found in the commissioner's office sufficient to give ample notice to persons interested. And see Seechrist v. Baskin, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 403; 42 Am. Dec. 251.

Under the statutes of Illinois, the holder of a tax certificate must take out his deed thereon, and file the same for record within one year after the expiration of the time of redemption, or the certificate or deed, and the sale on which it is based, will be void. But the time he is prevented from taking out his deed by injunction or order of court, or by refusal of the officer to make the same, is to be excluded from the computation of such time. But the courts are not authorized to extend the exceptions to other cases than those named. Gage v. Reid, 118 Ill. 35.

The deed is, at best, evidence of the regularity of the sale only, and is not evidence to prove title, unless accompanied by proof that the proceedings anterior to the sale have been in conformity to the statute. Scott v. Detroit, etc., Soc., 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 119; Latimer v. Lovett, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 204. And see sufficient to dispense with independent proof.¹ But the tax deed is sometimes held to be prima facie evidence of title as against a mere trespasser or intruder.² And where the assignment of the tax certificate is permitted, a deed to an assignee thereof in due form, is usually prima facie evidence of the regularity and validity of all assignments of the certificate recited therein.³

(2) Under Statutes.—In many of the states statutes have been

Rapp v. Lowry, 30 La. Ann. 1272; Coxe v. Deringer, 82 Pa. St. 236.

A deed of conveyance from the register of lands, of land sold for taxes, of itself makes no title. Bosworth v. Bryan, 14 Mo. 575.

Where an act making tax deeds prima facie evidence of certain things, is repealed, the mere introduction in evidence of a tax deed made under the former statute is not sufficient to establish title, without proof of the preliminary steps. Emeric v. Alvarado, 90 Cal. 444.

In Florida, the record of a deed is not proper evidence, if objected to, without proof of an original duly executed, and an original is not per se evidence, but its execution must be proved by evidence other than the certificate of proof or acknowledgment for record. Neal v. Spooner, 20 Fla. 38.

Polk v. Rose, 25 Md. 153; 89 Am. Dec. 773; Smith v. Corcoran, 7 La. 46; Jesse v. Preston, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 120.

A recital in a deed is only evidence against parties and privies in blood, in estate, and in law. It is not evidence against strangers, nor one claiming under the party executing the reciting deed, by title prior thereto, or adversely to him, but only against those claiming under him by title subsequent. Hill v. Draper, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 454.

Some of the cases have held, however, that the recitals in a deed regular upon its face will be presumed to be correct, and that the officers have done their duty by complying with all the statutory prerequisites. See Livingston v. Hudson, 85 Ga. 835; Taylor v. Winona, etc., R. Co., 45 Minn. 66; Cousins v. Allen, 28 Wis. 232; Smith v. Todd, 55 Wis. 459; Powell v. Brown, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 285; Parker v. Bixby, 2 Tyler (Vt.) 466. And see Hall v. Collins, 4 Vt. 316.

In Hall v. Collins, 4 Vt. 316, it was held that recitals in a tax collector's deed are not evidence of the acts of other persons, although they may be of the acts of the collector himself.

In Morton v. Waring, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 72, it was held that the recitals in a deed made by the register of the land office, that the requisitions of the law authorizing him to sell had been complied with, are evidence of that fact, but not of any other fact.

2. See Troutman v. May, 33 Pa. St. 455; Dikeman v. Parrish, 6 Pa. St. 210; 47 Am. Dec. 455; Foster v. McDivit, 9 Watts (Pa.) 344; Foust v. Ross, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 501; Johnston v. Jackson, 70 Pa. But the assignment may be shown by enacted modifying the common-law rule, and making a tax deed prima facie evidence, either of the facts recited therein, or of the regularity of all the prior proceedings upon which it is based, and upon its introduction in evidence casting upon the adverse party the burden of showing the non-existence of, or irregularity in, such proceedings;¹ and there is no doubt as to the competency parol evidence to have been made at a different time from that stated in the deed. Shelton v. Dunn, 6 Kan. 128.

In Pitkin v. Reibel, 104 Mo. 505, it was held that a tax deed may be sufficient to furnish evidence of an assignment of the certificate so as to enable the grantee to recover for taxes paid, though it is insufficient to carry title.

Under statutes making a tax deed either prima facie or conclusive evidence of the regularity of all proceedings up to its execution, if the deed recites that the grantee was the assignee of the tax certificate, it must be assumed that the assignment was properly made, until the contrary is shown. Cousins v. Allen, 28 Wis. 232.

The deed may be made evidence of title in cases in which the land was forfeited to, or purchased by, the state or government, and afterwards deeded to a purchaser, as well as when the sale is made direct to the purchaser by the taxing officer. See Deringer v. Coxe (Pa. 1887), 10 Atl. Rep. 412.

A deed which is not assailable except for fraud or mistake in the assessment or sale, or upon proof that the taxes were paid before sale, is prima facie evidence of good title. Hardie v. Chrisman, 60 Miss. 671; Greene v. Williams, 58 Miss. 752.

Under the Mississippi constitution, a tax deed is to be regarded with the same favor and indulgence as a title by a sheriff's deed on sale under execution. Virden v. Bowers, 55 Miss. 1.

Levee tax titles in Mississippi, whether acquired by purchase at public sale by the tax collector, or from the levee treasurer after the lands are struck off to him, are placed upon the same footing of prima facie validity as ordinary tax titles. Beirne v. Burdett, 52 Miss. 795.

In Tennessee, a tax deed reciting all the preliminary requisites to the sale, is prima facie evidence of their existence; but if any of such preliminary requisites are omitted, the deed is a nullity. Hightower v. Freedle, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 312.

The presumption of ownership arising from a recital in a tax deed that the property had been assessed in the name of a specified person as owner, is overcome by an affirmative showing in the record that another person was then the owner. Baer v. Choir, 7 Wash. 631.

In Shackleford v. Hooper, 65 Ga. 366, it was held that the recitals in a tax deed are prima facie evidence of the acts of the officer making the sale, such as the advertisement, place, manner of sale, etc., but not as to the authority to sell.

Recitals in a collector's deed are not evidence of what has been done by other persons previous to its execution, whether such recitals are evidence of the doings of the collector himself or not. Hall v. Collins, 4 Vt. 316. And see Smith v. Corcoran, 7 La. 46.

In Maine, the recitals in a tax deed more than thirty years old, are held to be evidence of the facts recited, only when the grantee takes and holds possession of the premises under the deed. McAllister v. Shaw, 69 Me. 348; Worthington v. Webster, 45 Me. 270; 71 Am. Dec. 543.

declare that the tax deed shall be conclusive evidence of the regularity of the sale and of certain of the proceedings prior thereto,¹ and in so far as such enactments apply to the manner of making the sale, or to simple irregularities in the exercise of the power to tax, and not to a vital part of the power itself, they are constitutional.² But where they attempt to make the deed conclusive

The Iowa statute making tax deeds conclusive as to the manner of the sale, is applicable in chancery cases as well as in actions at law. Clark v. Thompson, 37 Iowa 536.

Under the Tennessee statute, sales made in accordance with the provisions of the act are conclusive, unless the party attacking them can prove payment of the taxes previous to the judgment and order of sale. Randolph v. Metcalf, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 400.

2. Raley v. Guinn, 76 Mo. 263; Oswego County v. Betts, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 638; McCready v. Sexton, 29 Iowa 356; 4 Am. Reg. 214; Jeffrey v. Brokaw, 35 Iowa 505; Robinson v. First Nat. Bank, 48 Iowa 354; Rollins v. Wright, 93 Cal. 395; Kelly v. Herrell, 20 Fed. Rep. 364.

The deed may be made conclusive evidence of due notice of the sale, as such notice is not essential to an exercise of the taxing power. Allen v. Armstrong, 16 Iowa 508; Hurley v. Powell, 31 Iowa 64. But see contra, Marx v. Hanthorn, 30 Fed. Rep. 579.

In Iowa, a tax deed is conclusive that the treasurer complied with his duty, in endeavoring to collect the tax by distress and sale of personal property, before selling the real estate. Stewart v. Corbin, 25 Iowa 144.

A warrant is not an indispensable prerequisite to the validity of a tax sale. A law making the tax deed conclusive evidence that the requirements of the statute in that respect were complied with, therefore, is constitutional. Parker v. Sexton, 29 Iowa 421.

A recital in a tax deed as to whom the property was assessed is conclusive, Brady v. Dowden, 59 Cal. 51; and tax deeds, showing lands sold in parcels, alleged to have been sold in bulk, are conclusive upon that point. Rima v. Cowan, 31 Iowa 125.

The time of a tax sale is not regarded as jurisdictional, and a tax deed is conclusive evidence of a compliance with the law in that respect. Shawler v. Johnson, 52 Iowa 472; Phelps v. Meade, 41 Iowa 470.

In New Jersey, where the deed, declaration of sale, or conveyance, is made evidence of title in any action in which the title is directly in issue, the proceedings on which the deed is founded can only be called in question by certiorari. Woodbridge v. Allen, 43 N. J. L. 262.

Tax deeds may be made conclusive as to matters essential to a valid exercise of the taxing power, if not attacked within a designated period, which must be reasonable. See Ostrander v. Darling (N. Y. 1891), 27 N. E. Rep. 353; Bronson v. St. Croix Lumber Co., 44 Minn. 348; Bull v. Kirk, 37 S. Car. 395; Johnston v. Sutton, 45 Fed. Rep. 296. And see supra, this title, Limitation of Actions. Or until attacked in a direct proceeding brought for that purpose and set aside. Doremus v. Cameron, 49 N. J. Eq. 1.

Deed Conclusive as to Manner of Sale.—While the legislature has no constitutional power to deprive the owner of his land for taxes delinquent thereon, without a sale thereof, and therefore cannot make a tax deed conclusive evidence of the fact of sale, yet it has full authority to prescribe the manner of making the sale, and, consequently, may constitutionally make the tax deed conclusive evidence that the sale was made in the manner thus prescribed. Rima v. Cowan, 31 Iowa 125. And see Martin v. Cole, 38 Iowa 141; Smith v. Cleveland, 17 Wis. 556; Huey v. Van Wie, 23 Wis. 613. And in Bulkley v. Callanan, 32 Iowa 461, it was held that while a tax deed is not conclusive evidence of the fact of an assessment, levy or sale, it is as to the manner thereof. And see In re Lake, 40 La. Ann. 142; Ware v. Little, 35 Iowa 234; Phelps v. Meade, 41 Iowa 470; Gould v. Thompson, 45 Iowa 451; Clark v. Thompson, 37 Iowa 536; Hubbard v. Johnson County, 23 Iowa 134; *Madson v. evidence of matters vitally essential to the valid exercise of the taxing power, they are void.¹

A stipulation of the existence of certain facts, under which it is found that the assessment in question was made to a person not the owner of the property, effects a waiver of the conclusive character of the tax deed, and an admission that, if in the judgment of the court, the person to whom the property was assessed was not the true owner, then the assessment was invalid and the tax deed void. Tracy v. Reed, 38 Fed. Rep. 69.

1. Abbott v. Lindenbower, 42 Mo. 162; Abbott v. Lindenbower, 46 Mo. 291; Bannon v. Burnes, 39 Fed. Rep. 892; Marx v. Hanthorn, 148 U. S. 172; Davis v. Minge, 56 Ala. 121; Stoudemire v. Brown, 48 Ala. 699; Allen v. Armstrong, 16 Iowa 508; Martin v. Cole, 38 Iowa 141; Gardner v. Early, 69 Iowa 42; Magruder v. Esmay, 35 Ohio St. 221; Lufkin v. Galveston, 73 Tex. 340. And see Baker v. Kelley, 11 Minn. 480; Silsbee v. Stottle, 44 Mich. 561; Quinlon v. Rogers, 12 Mich. 168; Adams v. Beale, 19 Iowa 61; Holbrook v. Dickinson, 46 Ill. 285; Joslyn v. Rockwell, 128 N. Y. 334; Ray v. Murdock, 36 Miss. 692.

In McCready v. Sexton, 29 Iowa 356; 4 Am. Rep. 214, such an act was held unconstitutional in so far as respects the essential prerequisites for the exercise of the taxing power; such as the assessment, levy, sale, and the like. So far as the act makes the deed evidence of the fact of the assessment, it is unconstitutional. Immegart v. Gorgas, 41 Iowa 439; Powers v. Fuller, 30 Iowa 476; In re Lake, 40 La. Ann. 142.

A tax deed may be assailed by proof of failure to comply with whatever may be a constitutional prerequisite to a valid sale for taxes, even though it is provided by statute that the conveyance shall vest a perfect title in the purchaser, which shall not be invalidated or defended against, except by proof of certain specified things. Greene v. Williams, 58 Miss. 752. And see Bell v. Coates, 54 Miss. 538; Powers v. Penny, 59 Miss. 5.

And under the Mississippi statute, declaring that no defense against a tax title shall avail, unless it be shown that the taxes were paid before the sale, any material departure from the law of assessment and sale may be set up. Griffin v. Ellis, 63 Miss. 351; Dingey v. Paxton, 60 Miss. 1037; Davis v. Vanarsdale, 59 Miss. 367; Stovall v. Connor, 58 Miss. 138; Smith v. Nelson, 57 Miss. 138; McLeod v. Burkhalter, 57 Miss. 65; Hartreader v. Clayton, 56 Miss. 383; 31 Am. Rep. 369; Vaughan v. Swayzie, 56 Miss. 705; Mead v. Day, 54 Miss. 58; McGehee v. Martin, 53 Miss. 519. And see Griffin v. Dogan, 48 Miss. 11; Meeks v. Whatley, 48 Miss. 337.

Notwithstanding an act making the tax deed conclusive evidence of the regularity of the prior proceedings, it may be shown that no warrant was issued for the collection of the tax, or that there was no sale thereon on that account. Kelly v. Herrall, 20 Fed. Rep. 364. And it is always competent to show fraud committed by the officer conducting the sale, or by the purchaser, even under such statutes. Butler v. Delano, 42 Iowa 350.

Nor can such provisions preclude the owner from showing payment of the tax before the sale, Rowland v. Doty, 1 Harr. (Mich.) 3; Curry v. Hinman, 11 Ill. 420; Jackson v. Morse, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 441; 9 Am. Dec. 225; nor from showing that the land has since been redeemed. Cooper v. Shepardson, 51 Cal. 298.

A tax deed is not conclusive evidence of the giving of notice when the time for redemption will expire. Wilson v. Crafts, 56 Iowa 450; Reed v. Thompson, 56 Iowa 455.

In Strode v. Washer, 17 Oregon 50, it was held that the exclusion of evidence showing that the assessment was void, in that the property had been assessed with other property not owned by the defendant, and the value of all fixed at a gross sum, was error, even under a statute making a tax deed conclusive evidence of the regularity of the assessment.

In White v. Flynn, 23 Ind. 46, the court expressed an opinion that the legislature could not make a tax deed conclusive evidence of the facts therein recited; and in Gavin v. Shuman, 23 Ind. 32, it was held that such an act was in derogation of common law and should be strictly construed.

All such statutes are to be strictly construed; ¹ thus a provision that the deed shall be sufficient evidence of any fact is held to mean sufficient prima facie evidence.² And where the deed is made evidence of the regularity of the sale, it applies to the sale alone, and not to the steps preliminary thereto,³ or to those required to be subsequently taken to complete the inceptive title

One who takes a tax deed under a law making it conclusive evidence of the regularity of the proceedings, cannot avail himself of a remedy provided by a subsequent statute, without subjecting himself to the disadvantages of that statute in making his deed merely prima facie evidence, and exposing his title to impeachment by proof of irregularities. Burrows v. Bashford, 22 Wis. 100.

1. Townsend v. Martin, 55 Ark. 192; Parr v. Matthews, 50 Ark. 390; Stierlin v. Daley, 37 Mo. 483; Parker v. Smith, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 70; Gavin v. Shuman, 23 Ind. 32; Garrett v. Weege, 67 Wis. 435; Bucknall v. Story, 36 Cal. 67.

Though it is provided by statute that a tax deed shall be taken as prima facie evidence of title, unless it is made in pursuance of the act, it is without authority and void, and not admissible as evidence of title. Carlisle v. Longworth, 5 Ohio 369.

As a general rule, such statutes do not apply to sales for corporation taxes, such taxes being private and not public. Shoalwater v. Armstrong, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 217. And see Glass v. White, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 475; Bucknall v. Story, 36 Cal. 67; Sharp v. Speir, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 76; Kelly v. Medlin, 26 Tex. 48; Ansley v. Wilson, 50 Ga. 418; Johnson v. Phillips, 89 Ga. 286.

To support a deed for taxes under a special law, the preliminary requisites which constitute the authority of the officer to sell the lands, must be shown, even though, under the general law, a tax deed is made prima facie evidence of such prerequisites. Kelly v. Medlin, 26 Tex. 48.

In Marsh v. Nelson, 101 Pa. St. 51, an act providing that the oath of the tax collector shall be deemed conclusive that the taxes are unpaid, and that no personal property can be found on the land out of which said taxes can be made, was held to be retrospective only, and not to apply to sales of land for unpaid taxes assessed after its passage.

A statute making a deed good and effectual in law and in equity, does not make it even prima facie evidence that the requirements of law have been complied with. Hadley v. Tankersley, 8 Tex. 12.

A statute declaring that a tax deed shall vest in the purchaser an absolute estate in fee simple, is merely descriptive of the estate acquired by the purchaser, and does not make the deed evidence of the existence of the facts necessary to empower the comptroller to sell the land. *Varick v. passed by the sale.¹ And a deed made prima facie evidence of title when the land is not redeemed within a prescribed time, is not admissible without proof first made that there has been no redemption within that time.² Where the sale is required to be founded on a judgment, a tax deed must be supported by proof of a valid judgment and precept.³ And when the deed is made

In Tallman v. White, 2 N. Y. 66, it is held that the statute declaring a comptroller's deed conclusive evidence of the regularity of the sale, applies only to the proceedings to be had after the power to sell is acquired.

In North Carolina, a party claiming, under a sheriff's deed for land sold for taxes, must show that the taxes are due. Jordan v. Rouse, 1 Jones (N. Car.) 119.

In Parker v. Smith, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 70, it was held that under the Indiana statute of 1824, a tax deed is prima facie evidence of the regularity of the proceedings relative to the purchaser's title, only so far as the acts of the collector are concerned.

In Louisiana, while a tax deed to lands sold as the property of an unknown person, is prima facie evidence of a valid sale, yet, in the absence of a recital in the deed, and proof aliunde of the appointment of a curator to represent the unknown owner, and of due notice to the curator, the sale is absolutely void. *Rapp v. It must be shown that proper notice of the expiration of the time for redemption was given. Reed v. Thompson, 56 Iowa 455; Wilson v. Crafts, 56 Iowa 450.

It is as necessary to produce the comptroller's certificate to prove a failure to redeem, as it is to produce the comptroller's deed to prove the sale made by him. Both are necessary links in the chain of the purchaser's title, and both, like other facts, must be proved by the best evidence of which the nature of the case admits. Jackson v. Esty, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 148.

The recitals in the deed are not admissible to establish the judgment and precept. People v. Doe, 31 Cal. 220; Bolan v. Bolan, 4 Nev. 150.

Where a tax deed for land is relied on, the judgment and precept under which the sale was made, showing that in fact there was no judgment rendered against the land, are competent to show that no title passed by such deed; but they are not sufficient to show that the deed did not constitute color of title, or want of good faith in obtaining the title. Coleman v. Billings, 89 Ill. 183.

A variance between the judgment recited in the tax deed and the judgment itself, is a good cause for excluding such deed as evidence. Pitkin v. Yaw, 13 Ill. 251.

In Illinois, a regular tax deed founded on a valid precept and judgment, is prima facie evidence of every fact necessary to authorize a recovery upon it. Spellman v. Curtenius, 12 Ill. 409. And if not supported by the judgment and precept, the deed is void, and cannot be used as evidence of title. Eagan v. Connelly, 107 Ill. 458; Hinman v. Pope, evidence of the facts therein recited, it is evidence of those facts only and not of any fact not recited.¹ The recital of steps of which the deed is not made evidence, does not dispense with proof thereof.² As a rule, a tax deed made evidence of the facts recited, is admissible only when its recitals show a compliance with the requisites of the statute,³ and a deed bearing upon its face

6 Ill. 131; Williams v. Underhill, 58 Ill. 137; Gage v. Lightburn, 93 Ill. 248.

But since the amendment of 1879, making the deed prima facie evidence of the regularity of the proceedings, it is unnecessary, in the first instance, for the party claiming title under the tax deed, to produce such precept. It is sufficient if he gives in evidence the tax deed, which may be rebutted by showing there was no valid precept. Ransom v. Henderson, 114 Ill. 528.

In Dukes v. Rowley, 24 Ill. 221, it was held that under a statute making a tax deed evidence of title, the collector's report and certificate of advertisement, upon which judgment of sale was rendered, must be shown to have been recorded in order to support the deed.

And see Farrar v. Eastman, 5 Me. 345; Thurston v. Miller, 10 R. I. 358; Brown v. Goodwin, 1 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 452.

Under a statute requiring the deed to contain a brief statement of the proceedings had for the sale of the lands, which shall be evidence that such sale and other proceedings were regularly made, the deed is evidence of those proceedings only of which that brief statement is required. Marsh v. Brooklyn, 59 N. Y. 280.

Though where the deed is made prima facie evidence of the regularity of all the precedent proceedings, it is evidence, though such proceedings are not recited. Sibley v. Smith, 2 Mich. 486; Scarry v. Lewis, 133 Ind. 96.

In Moss v. Shear, 25 Cal. 38; 85 Am. Dec. 94, it was held that if the various acts showing a compliance with the statute, on the part of the revenue officer, are inserted in the deed, such recitals are prima facie evidence to support title; but if they are not inserted, they may be proved aliunde.

Even where it is provided that the certificate of the auditor shall be prima facie evidence of the facts contained in it, to make it such it is necessary that it shall contain a detailed statement of the performance of the particular duties enjoined by law upon the auditor. Morton v. Reeds, 6 Mo. 64.

The failure to recite a requisite to a valid levy of a tax in a tax deed in which all the proceedings had in such levy, and all other essential proceedings, are set out, is evidence by implication that the requirement omitted was not complied with. Long v. Burnett, 13 Iowa 28; 81 Am. Dec. 400; Rayburn v. Kuhl, 10 Iowa 92.

the evidence of its invalidity is not admissible in evidence for any purpose.¹

In order that a tax deed may be admitted in evidence, it must be shown that it was made in pursuance of authority given by law,² and was duly executed and acknowledged,³ and

A deed absolutely void is inadmissible in evidence for any purpose. Wright v. Cradlebaugh, 3 Nev. 341; Carlisle v. Longworth, 5 Ohio 369; Delaroderie v. Hillen, 28 La. Ann. 537; Moore v. Brown, 11 How. (U. S.) 414.

If a tax deed recites a void assessment, it is void, and it cannot be shown that there was in fact a valid assessment. Grimm v. O'Connell, 54 Cal. 522. And where the deed shows on its face a violation of a statute requiring the collector to sell each tract separately, the invalidity cannot be cured by evidence aliunde contradicting the recitals. Pack v. Crawford, 29 Ark. 489.

An objection to the introduction in evidence, of a state tax deed that assumes facts to be established which constitute matter of defense to the deed, but which might be disputed, is untenable. Crane v. Reeder, 25 Mich. 303.

A tax deed, regular but for the objection that the person to whom the land was assessed became the purchaser, ought to be received in evidence; when the opposite party may show that the purchaser occupied such a position as required him to pay the taxes. Pleasants v. Scott, 21 Ark. 370; 76 Am. Dec. 403.

A tax deed which is void by reason of fatal defects in the proceedings of the collector, being upon record, has no further operation than to give character to such acts as the grantee, and those claiming under him, may do upon the land. Wing v. Hall, 44 Vt. 118.

In Washburn v. Cutler, 17 Minn. 361, it was held that a void tax deed is admissible to show claim of title to sustain an adverse possession. See also Edgerton v. Bird, 6 Wis. 527; 70 Am. Dec. 473; Watkins v. Winnings, 102 Ind. 330.

A tax deed which has been set aside on account of irregularities, is not evidence, and in such case, in order to uphold the tax for which the sale was made, it must be shown by common-law proof that steps essential to a valid tax have been taken. O'Neil v. Tyler (N. Dak. 1892), 53 N. W. Rep. 434.

Where a statute declares the effect of a tax deed, when executed and acknowledged in pursuance of a designated authority, it does not make the deed presumptive evidence of such authority. Bemis v. Weege, 67 Wis. 435.

In California, a sheriff acting as tax collector, has no authority to appoint an under tax collector; and a deed executed by a sheriff as tax collector, by his under sheriff, is inadmissible in evidence, and conveys no title to the grantee. Lathrop v. Brittain, 30 Cal. 680.

In New Hampshire, an office copy of a deed, when admissible as part of a chain of title, is prima facie evidence of the authority of the person who certifies the acknowledgment. Harvey v. Mitchell, 31 N. H. 575.

Rejection of Part.—The fact that a portion of the recitals in a deed are not authenticated, may be sufficient reason for the rejection of such portion as evidence, but cannot constitute a ground for rejecting another and entirely distinct and separate portion, which is properly authenticated. Gilman v. Riopelle, 18 Mich. 145.

it is subject to be rebutted by evidence of any material defect in the proceedings antecedent to its execution and delivery.¹

j. AS COLOR OF TITLE—(See also ADVERSE POSSESSION, vol. 1, p. 225; TITLE (REAL PROPERTY), vol. 26).—There is no doubt that a tax deed, fair on its face, and purporting to convey title to the lands sold, will constitute color of title, under which adverse possession for the period prescribed in the Statute of Limitations will operate as a bar, notwithstanding it may be insufficient to pass an absolute title, by reason of defects and irregularities in the tax proceedings prior to its execution.² But the question upon which there is much conflict of authority is, will a tax deed, void on its face, constitute such color of title? In some jurisdictions it will,³ for example, in Nebraska, Iowa, Alabama, Wis-

It would be error to admit a tax deed not properly acknowledged, or without proof of the signature of the officer making the sale, even as color of title. Winstanley v. Meacham, 58 Ill. 97.

In California, a tax deed properly acknowledged is admissible in evidence without further proof. Courts will take judicial notice of the fact as to who holds the office of tax collector, and of the genuineness of the signature of the officer. Wetherbee v. Dunn, 32 Cal. 106.

The recitals in a tax deed, of the date of the collector's receipt of the tax books, may be contradicted by his receipt to the clerk, showing a different date. Hickman v. Kempner, 35 Ark. 505.

Where a deed may properly be recorded in two places or offices, and is so recorded, and the original is lost, one record or a copy of it may be introduced in evidence to impeach the other, and from the whole, the jury may find what the original deed was. Wells v. Jackson Iron Mfg. Co., 48 N. H. 491.

In Missouri, though a tax deed shows by its recitals that the law has been complied with, it may be contradicted as to material matters by evidence, wherever the questions arise, whether in a collateral proceeding or otherwise. Abbott v. Doling, 49 Mo. 302.

Good faith on the part of the person claiming title by adverse possession under color of title, is required.² Color of title is a question of law; but the good faith of the party claiming under it is a question of fact, to be found and settled like other facts.³ In the absence of evidence to the contrary, good faith will be presumed.⁴

A tax certificate is not sufficient to constitute color of title. An instrument, to be effectual as color, must purport on its face to convey title—such certificate in the ordinary form does not purport to pass any title; at most, it is only evidence that the holder, or his assignor, purchased the land therein described, at the tax sale, and that if not redeemed according to law, the holder will be entitled to a deed.⁵ Nor does a mere sale of the lands for non-payment of taxes give the purchaser color of title.⁶

But a quit-claim deed from the grantee in the tax deed, will constitute color of title.⁷ The tax deed, it has been held in one

Texas.—Wofford v. McKinna, 23 Tex. 36; 76 Am. Dec. 53. In Wheeler v. Merriman, 30 Minn. 372, it was held that a quit-claim deed purporting to remise, release, and convey all the grantor's interest in and to the land, and containing the following, "intending hereby to convey only my title to said land, acquired by the pur-case, is available as color of title only from its date, and not from the date of the sale.¹

k. BY WHAT LAW GOVERNED.—Tax deeds are governed by the laws in force at the time of sale.²

IV. WHO MAY ACQUIRE—1. Persons Bound for Taxes.—One whose duty it is to pay the taxes may not, by neglecting to pay them, and allowing the land to be sold in consequence of such neglect, add to or strengthen his title, either by purchasing at the sale himself, or by suffering a third person to buy, and then purchasing from him. A purchase under such circumstances operates as a payment of the taxes, leaving the title in precisely the situation in which it would have stood had the payment been before, instead of after, the sale. The obligation to pay the taxes may be owing either to the public or to the owner. These principles are applicable to the following cases: The real owner;³ one in possession chase of the same for taxes for the year 1864, and previous years"—constitutes "color of title in fee," and the recital in the deed that the title conveyed is only a tax title, is not of itself sufficient to charge the grantee with actual notice of the infirmities in such title, although of record.

1. When Color of Title Commences.—DeGraw v. Taylor, 37 Mo. 311.

2. State v. Mantz, 62 Mo. 258; McCann v. Merriam, 11 Neb. 241; Smith v. Cleveland, 17 Wis. 556; Nelson v. Roundtree, 23 Wis. 369; Woodman v. Clapp, 21 Wis. 355.

3. Owner.—McAlpine v. Zitzer, 119 Ill. 273; Griffin v. Turner, 75 Iowa 250; Pleasants v. Scott, 21 Ark. 370; 76 Am. Dec. 403; Swift v. Agnes, 33 Wis. 228; Montgomery v. Whitfield, 41 La. Ann. 649; Thorington v. Montgomery, 88 Ala. 548. Contra, Branham v. Bezanson, 33 Minn. 49. And where the owner of a distinct parcel of land neglects to pay the taxes thereon, and the same is sold jointly with the land of others, and he purchases the whole, the sale is void and passes no title; the purchaser being in default in not paying his taxes. Cooley v. Waterman, 16 Mich. 366; Lewis v. Ward, 99 Ill. 525; State v. Williston, 20 Wis. 228. But see Towle v. Shelly, 19 Neb. 636.

Where land subject to the lien of certain taxes is leased and subsequently purchased by the owner at a tax sale, the lease is still good; the taxes being extinguished as by a payment. Smith v. Phelps, 63 Mo. 585.

But it seems that the fact that lands were assessed to, and sold in the name of, a particular person, does not preclude his acquiring title thereto, if he was under no legal obligation to pay the taxes, and they were not assessed to him with his consent. Pleasants v. Scott, 21 Ark. 370; 76 Am. Dec. 403.

And where the owner holds by a title acquired after the levy of the tax, and has not assumed its payment, or in anywise become liable to see it paid, he is not disqualified from acquiring the tax title. Oswald v. Wolf, 129 Ill. 200.

Where one, at the time the taxes accrue, holds the legal title to the land, but this is subsequently set aside because of fraud on the part of his grantor, he may afterwards purchase the tax title and set it up against the legal title. Seymour v. Harrison (Iowa, 1892), 52 N. W. Rep. 114. See also Atkinson v. Dixon, 89 Mo. 464.

Purchase by Grantor with General Warranty.—In Frank v. Caruthers, 108 Mo. 569, a person conveyed to his children, with general warranty, lands on which he had allowed taxes to become delinquent, and subsequently they were sold for such taxes and conveyed to him by the purchaser at the sale; it was held that he acquired no title thereby.

Claimant Under Prior Void Tax Title.—

One who is not in possession of the property, and whose only claim thereto is based upon a void tax deed, may acquire a valid title by purchasing at a subsequent sale. Mallory v. French, 44 Iowa 133; Neal v. Frazier, 63 Iowa 451; Eaton v. North, 29 Wis. 75; Coxe v. Gibson, 27 Pa. St. 160; Staley v. Leomans, 53 Ark. 428.

When Title Is in Controversy.—It has been held that where there is a bona under claim of ownership at the time of assessment; ¹ a purchaser in possession under an executory contract, and agreeing to pay taxes; ² one receiving the rents and profits, and ought to keep fide controversy as to a title, and one of the claimants is in possession, he is under no duty to the other to pay the taxes, and may strengthen his claim by procuring a tax title. Jeffery v. Hursh, 45 Mich. 59. Compare Butterfield v. Walsh, 36 Iowa 534.

1. One in Possession Under Claim of Title.—McMinn v. Whelan, 27 Cal. 300; Coppinger v. Rice, 33 Cal. 403; Bernal v. Lynch, 36 Cal. 135; Barrett v. Amerein, 36 Cal. 322; Garwood v. Hastings, 38 Cal. 216; Christy v. Fisher, 58 Cal. 256; Kelsey v. Abbott, 13 Cal. 609; Reily v. Lancaster, 39 Cal. 354; Stears v. Hallenbeck, 38 Iowa 550; Anson v. Anson, 20 Iowa 55; 89 Am. Dec. 514; Thomas v. Stickle, 32 Iowa 71; Jones v. Davis, 24 Wis. 229; Bassett v. Welch, 22 Wis. 175; Fallass v. Pierce, 30 Wis. 443; Whitney v. Gunderson, 31 Wis. 359; Smith v. Lewis, 20 Wis. 350; Lybrand v. Haney, 31 Wis. 230; Stubblefield v. Borders, 92 Ill. 279; Choteau v. Jones, 11 Ill. 301; 1 Am. Rep. 460; Dubois v. Campau, 24 Mich. 360; Rule v. Broach, 58 Miss. 552; Pool v. Ellis, 64 Miss. 555; Douglas v. Dangerfield, 14 Ohio 522; Wambole v. Foot, 2 Dakota 1; Rodman v. Sanders, 44 Ark. 504; Miller v. Ziegler, 31 Kan. 417; Jacks v. Dyer, 31 Ark. 333; Gwynn v. McCauley, 32 Ark. 97.

But it is held that one in possession by virtue of a purchase at a tax sale, is not precluded from becoming a purchaser at a subsequent sale, made before his title has become absolute by the expiration of the time of redemption. Tweed v. Metcalf, 4 Mich. 579.

In Lacey v. Davis, 4 Mich. 140; 66 Am. Dec. 524, it was held that one in possession of land, claiming it as his own, cannot acquire title by purchasing at a sale for taxes which were a lien upon the land at the time of his taking possession.

But in Blackwood v. Van Vleit, 30 Mich. 118, this case is criticised; the court, by Cooley, J., saying that they have examined into the cases relied upon in Lacey v. Davis, "and find that in all of them, the party who was held precluded from acquiring a title at a tax sale, was either in possession of the land when the tax was assessed, and, upon that ground, chargeable with its payment, Douglas v. Dangerfield, 14 Ohio 522;

Ballance v. Forsyth, 13 How. (U. S.) 18; Voris v. Thomas, 12 Ill. 442; Glancy v. Elliott, 14 Ill. 456; or by contract or otherwise it had become his duty to other parties concerned to make payment. Chambers v. Wilson, 2 Watts (Pa.) 495. These cases fall short of supporting the court in the position taken."

Mere Possession Without Claim of Title.—Mere possession by one who does not claim title to the lands, and who is in no wise bound for the taxes, does not constitute a bar to his acquiring a valid tax title. Moss v. Shear, 25 Cal. 38; 85 Am. Dec. 94; Bowman v. Cockrill, 6 Kan. 311; Blakeley v. Bestor, 13 Ill. 709; Seaver v. Cobb, 98 Ill. 200; Stubblefield v. Borders, 92 Ill. 279; Sands v. Davis, 40 Mich. 14; Curtis v. Smith, 42 Iowa 665; Weichselbaum v. Curlett, 20 Kan. 709; 27 Am. Rep. 204; Buckley v. Taggart, 62 Ind. 236.

In Link v. Doerfer, 42 Wis. 391; 24 Am. Rep. 417, it was held that the taking of a tax deed by a party who occupied the land at the time of the levy of the tax, is presumptively inconsistent with any prior claim of title, and in the absence of evidence that his previous entry or occupation was under claim of title, he must be assumed to have been a mere intruder, and as such, capable of acquiring a tax title.

2. Purchaser in Possession Under Executory Contract, and Agreeing to Pay Taxes.—Oliver v. Croswell, 42 Ill. 41; Baily v. Doolittle, 24 Ill. 577; Quinn v. Quinn, 27 Wis. 168; Haskell v. Putnam, 42 Me. 224; Stinson v. Richardson, 48 Iowa 541. See also Jones v. Wells, 31 Mich. 170.

And one who enters into an arrangement with another who is in possession by virtue of such a contract, cannot acquire a valid title to the premises as against such owner by virtue of a sale for taxes, which, under the contract, it was the duty of his assignor to pay, but would hold any title thus acquired in trust for the owner. Bertram v. Cook, 32 Mich. 518.

There are cases holding that a vendee, under an executory contract, in possession and enjoying the rents and profits, is also incapacitated, although the title bond does not in terms indicate who is to keep down the taxes during the interval before the contract down the taxes; ¹ tenant in common, or his grantee; ² tenant for becomes executed. Miller v. Corey, 15 Iowa 166; Hunt v. Rowland, 22 Iowa 54; Fitzgerald v. Spain, 30 Ark. 95; Harkreader v. Clayton, 56 Miss. 383; 31 Am. Rep. 369; Johnston v. Smith, 70 Ala. 108. See also Seaver v. Cobb, 98 Ill. 200; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Bulte, 45 Mich. 113.

1. One Receiving Rents and Profits.—Hunt v. Gaines, 33 Ark. 267; Duffitt v. Tuhau, 28 Kan. 292; Sanders v. Ellis, 42 Ark. 215.

2. Tenants in Common.—Emeric v. Alvarado, 90 Cal. 444; Holterhoff v. Mead, 36 Minn. 42; Dubois v. Campau, 24 Mich. 360; Richards v. Richards, 75 Mich. 408; Butler v. Porter, 13 Mich. 292; Page v. Webster, 8 Mich. 263; 77 Am. Dec. 446; Clark v. Brown, 70 Iowa 139; Smith v. Smith, 68 Iowa 608; Sheean v. Shaw, 47 Iowa 411; Conn v. Conn, 58 Iowa 747; Shell v. Walker, 54 Iowa 386; Fallon v. Chidester, 46 Iowa 588; Weare v. Van Meter, 42 Iowa 128; 20 Am. Rep. 616; Pratt v. St. Clair, 6 Ohio 93; Clark v. Lindsey, 47 Ohio St. 437; Bracken v. Cooper, 80 Ill. 221; Chickering v. Faile, 38 Ill. 342; Bender v. Stewart, 75 Ind. 88; Burgett v. Taliaferro, 118 Ill. 503; Brown v. Hogle, 30 Ill. 119; McChesney v. White, 140 Ill. 330; Delashmuth v. Parrent, 39 Kan. 548; Phipps v. Phipps, 39 Kan. 495; Muthersbaugh v. Burke, 33 Kan. 260; Cocks v. Simmons, 55 Ark. 104; Johns v. Johns, 93 Ala. 239; Donnor v. Quartermas, 90 Ala. 164; Willard v. Strong, 14 Vt. 532; 39 Am. Dec. 240; Downer v. Smith, 38 Vt. 464; Williams v. Gray, 3 Me. 207; 14 Am. Dec. 234; Harrison v. Harrison, 56 Miss. 174; Fox v. Coon, 64 Miss. 465; Wise v. Hyatt, 68 Miss. 714; Allen v. Poole, 54 Miss. 323; Barker v. Jones, 62 N. H. 497; Lloyd v. Lynch, 28 Pa. St. 419; 70 Am. Dec. 137; Maul v. Rider, 51 Pa. St. 377; Davis v. King, 87 Pa. St. 261. The foregoing cases hold that the most that can be acquired by such a purchase, is a right to compel contribution from the co-tenants, for the taxes paid in their behalf, and to have the amount treated as a lien upon the property to secure such contribution.

Nor is a tax deed acquired by a tenant in common, sufficient in equity to divest the interest of a co-tenant, notwithstanding the holder of the deed may have acquired the tax certificate before he became a tenant in common. Flinn v. McKinley, 44 Iowa 68; Tice v. Derby, 59 Iowa 312.

As Against Strangers.—But the title acquired will be good as against strangers; the tenant stands in no fiduciary relation towards them; and if the co-tenants do not complain, they may not. Burgett v. Williford, 56 Ark. 187.

Effect of Adverse Possession.—But it has been held that adverse possession under a tax title by a tenant in common for twenty years, will give him as complete title as though there had been no joint tenancy. English v. Powell, 119 Ind. 93.

In Wright v. Sperry, 21 Wis. 331, it was held that where the mortgage of land, and the foreclosure of judgment and sale, purport to be of the entire premises, but the purchaser requires in fact only an undivided part, thereby becoming tenant in common with the mortgagor, he may take title to the residue by purchasing an outstanding tax deed to the whole; his claim of title to the whole under the foreclosure sale, being adverse to that of the mortgagor. But compare Davis v. Chapman, 24 Fed. Rep. 674, holding that where a tenant in common with his own funds buys the interest of his co-tenant at a tax sale, but the sale is irregular, vesting in him only a lien upon the property, which, by lapse of time, may ripen into a perfect title, but before that event he receives rents sufficient for his reimbursement, he must so apply them, and not permit the statute to run.

Grantee of Tenant in Common.—A grantee of a tenant in common, is under the same duties and obligations to the latter's co-tenants as his grantor, and like him, cannot divest their interest by acquiring a tax deed to the common property. Austin v. Barrett, 44 Iowa 488. But this rule does not apply where the grantor acquired the tax title first, and subsequently purchased a co-tenant's interest in the land, as the owner of a tax title has a right to supplement it by such a purchase, and to rely upon it. Jonas v. Flanniken, 69 Miss. 577.

Husband of Tenant in Common.—The rule of the text precludes also the husband of a tenant in common from acquiring a valid tax title as against her co-tenants. Burns v. Byrne, 45 Iowa 285; Chace v. Durfee, 16 R. I. 248; life;¹ tenant in possession under an agreement to pay taxes;²

Busch v. Huston, 75 Ill. 343. But compare Broquet v. Warner, 43 Kan. 48, where it is held that a tax title purchased by the husband of a co-heiress to the lands of the heirs, where the husband and wife were not in possession of the land, is not void as between the holder and the mortgagee under a mortgage from the father of the heirs.

Trustee of Tenant in Common.—A trustee of a tenant in common can neither severally, nor jointly with another, acquire a tax title adverse to the co-tenants of his cestui que trust. And being himself disqualified, the title of the party taking jointly with him, must fall also. Sorenson v. Davis, 83 Iowa 405.

Partition Before Assessment.—If partition is had, and the land is held in severalty, before the taxes for which the land is sold, were assessed, there will be nothing to prevent anyone of the former co-tenants from buying the land of the other exclusively for his own use. Maul v. Rider, 51 Pa. St. 377.

After Co-tenant's Interest Has Ceased.—And a tenant in common of land which has been sold for taxes, may, after his interest has been conveyed and he has ceased to be connected with the title as tenant in common, buy the tax title and set it up as against his former co-tenants. Jonas v. Flanniken, 69 Miss. 577.

Tenant in Common Acquiring Title from Purchaser at the Sale After Expiration of Time of Redemption.—The foregoing principles have been modified in several jurisdictions where it is held that, after a sale to a stranger and the time for redemption has passed, one of the tenants in common may purchase the land from the stranger, who has received his deed, and such purchase will not enure to the benefit of his co-tenants. Kirkpatrick v. Mathiot, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 251; Reinboth v. Zerbe Run Imp. Co., 29 Pa. St. 139. Nor will the fact of indebtedness by the purchaser of the tax-sale title to his former co-tenant, to an amount equal to one-half of the purchase-money, alter the case. Lewis v. Robinson, 10 Watts (Pa.) 355.

To the same effect are Alexander v. Sully, 50 Iowa 192; Keele v. Cunningham, 2 Heisk. (Tenn.) 288; Coleman v. Coleman, 3 Dana (Ky.) 398. See also Frentz v. Klotzsch, 28 Wis. 312. But the contrary is held in Battin v. Woods, 27

W. Va. 58, and Dubois v. Campau, 24 Mich. 360. In the latter case, it is said that such a purchase by the co-tenant only corrects the wrong he had before committed, and operates as a payment of the tax, and he may not set up such tax title against his co-tenants.

1. Tenant for Life.—As it is the duty of a tenant for life to pay the taxes assessed during his tenancy, he is not allowed to purchase and hold adversely to the remainderman or reversioner. Varney v. Stevens, 22 Me. 331; Dunn v. Snell, 74 Me. 22; Patrick v. Sherwood, 4 Blatchf. (U. S.) 112; Olleman v. Kelgore, 52 Iowa 38; Phelan v. Boylan, 25 Wis. 679; Foley v. Kirk, 33 N. J. Eq. 170; Burhaus v. Van Zandt, 7 N. Y. 524; Stewart v. Matheny, 66 Miss. 21. And he will not be entitled to the benefit of ch. 23, § 4, Mississippi Laws, 1888, providing, with reference to certain tax titles sold and conveyed by public authorities, that occupation of such lands for twelve months shall constitute a bar to any action to recover the same. Jones v. Merrill, 69 Miss. 747.

But in Illinois, it is held that where the tenant for life procures the issuance of a tax deed to himself, and then conveys the land by warranty deed, the possession taken thereunder is adverse to that of the remainderman, as the warranty deed is color of title in fee. Lewis v. Pleasants (Ill. 1892), 30 N. E. Rep. 323.

2. Tenant in Possession Under Agreement to Pay Taxes.—Busch v. Huston, 75 Ill. 343; Blake v. Howe, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 306; 15 Am. Dec. 681; Shepardson v. Elmore, 19 Wis. 424; Williamson v. Russell, 18 W. Va. 612; Haskell v. Putnam, 42 Me. 244; Donner v. Quartermas, 90 Ala. 170; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Boulte, 45 Mich. 113; Carithers v. Weaver, 7 Kan. 110.

A purchase by the tenant under such circumstances, would be considered as held in trust for the landlord if living, and if dead, then for his heirs. Burgett v. Taliaferro, 118 Ill. 503.

Where There is no Covenant to Pay Taxes.—The cases are not agreed as to the right of the tenant to acquire a valid tax title as against his landlord, when there is no agreement to pay taxes. In favor of his right are: Ferguson v. Etter, 21 Ark. 160; Bettison v. Budd, 17 Ark. 545; Weichselbaum v. Curlett, 20 Kan. 709; 27 Am. Rep. 204. Against it are:

a licensee ;¹ a mortgagee ;² a mortgagor in possession and parties claiming under him.³

Bailey v. Campbell, 82 Ala. 342; Jackson v. King, 82 Ala. 432; Gaskins v. Blake, 27 Miss. 675; Petty v. Mays, 19 Fla. 652; Williamson v. Russell, 18 W. Va. 612. Especially if the taxes were upon improvements added by the tenant. Williams v. Towl, 65 Mich. 204. See also Thode v. Spoffard 65 Iowa 294.

1. Licensee.—Keokuk, etc., R. Co. v. Lindley, 48 Iowa 11; Saunders v. Farmer, 62 N. H. 572.

2. Mortgagee.—A mortgagee, either in or out of possession, may not acquire, as against the mortgagor or the other mortgagees, a tax title to the mortgage premises. Hall v. Westcott, 15 R. I. 373; Maxfield v. Willey, 46 Mich. 252; Taylor v. Snyder, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 490; Moore v. Titman, 44 Ill. 367; Chickering v. Failes, 26 Ill. 507; McLaughlin v. Green, 48 Miss. 175; Fisk v. Brunette, 30 Wis. 102; Burchard v. Roberts, 70 Wis. 111; Ward v. Matthews, 80 Cal. 343; Middletown Sav. Bank v. Bacharach, 46 Conn. 525.

Some cases make the circumstance of possession by the mortgagee all important. Thus, it is held that a mortgagee out of possession may acquire a tax title, Spratt v. Price, 18 Fla. 289; Summers v. Kanawha County, 26 W. Va. 159; Waterson v. Devoe, 18 Kan. 223; Williams v. Townsend, 31 N. Y. 415; and there is a dictum in Sturdevant v. Mather, 20 Wis. 576, to the same effect. While a mortgagee in possession may not acquire such a title. Schenck v. Kelley, 88 Ind. 444; Brown v. Simons, 44 N. H. 475; Shoemaker v. Bank, 15 Phila. (Pa.) 297.

Under the Minnesota Gen. Stats., ch. 11, § 87, a mortgagee may acquire title as against the mortgagor, when he is neither legally nor equitably bound to protect the property against the taxes for which the sale is made. Reimer v. Newel, 47 Minn. 237.

In Martin v. Swofford, 59 Miss. 328, it is said that whatever may be the rule as to the foregoing question, it is certain that the mortgagee may not buy for the common good, and then use the title acquired for the purpose of defeating the rights of the mortgagor.

The fact that an agent purchases at a tax sale, land upon which he holds in his own right a mortgage, will not render invalid the title acquired by his principal. Jury v. Day, 54 Iowa 573.

Purchase by Junior Mortgagee.—A junior mortgagee may not, by purchase at a tax sale, acquire title which will defeat the lien of a senior incumbrancer. Garrettson v. Scofield, 44 Iowa 35; Frank v. Arnold, 73 Iowa 370; Wadsworth v. First Nat. Bank, 73 Iowa 425; Goodrich v. Kimberly, 48 Conn. 395; Woodbury v. Swan, 59 N. H. 22; Smith v. Lewis, 20 Wis. 350. Compare Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Bulte, 45 Mich. 113.

Rights of Purchaser Under Senior Mortgage.—A purchaser in foreclosure under a senior mortgage by proceedings to which a junior mortgagee was not a party, cannot, by buying the land at a tax sale, acquire any right which will preclude such junior mortgagee from redeeming the premises by a tender of the proper amount. Anson v. Anson, 20 Iowa 55; 89 Am. Dec. 514.

Acquisition of Title by Lien Holder.—In Fair v. Brown, 40 Iowa 209, it was held that a lien holder cannot acquire title at a tax sale which will defeat the lien of another incumbrancer.

In Wilson v. Jamison, 36 Minn. 59, the question was presented, whether a judgment creditor of a mortgagor, having by his judgment a lien upon the property junior to the mortgage, could, by purchasing at a tax sale, acquire as against the mortgagee a title by vesting the lien of the mortgage. The court was equally divided upon the question, so that the decision of the lower court, that there was no disability, was affirmed.

The holder of a judgment lien may acquire title as against the owner to the property by purchasing at the sale. Morrison v. Bank of Commerce, 81 Ind. 335.

3. Mortgagor in Possession, and Parties Claiming under Him.—A mortgagor in possession, or parties claiming under him, cannot defeat the lien of the mortgagee by acquiring a tax title to the land. Allison v. Armstrong, 28 Minn. 276; 41 Am. Rep. 281; Kezer v. Clifford, 59 N. H. 208; Woodbury v. Swan, 59 N. H. 22; Phinney v. Day, 76 Me. 83; Gardiner v. Gerrish, 23 Me. 46; Fuller v. Hodgdon, 25 Me. 243; Dayton v. Rice, 47 Iowa 429; Fair v. Brown, 40 Iowa 209; Porter v. Lafferty, 33 Iowa 254; Stears v. Hollenbeck, 38 Iowa 550; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Bulte,

2. Agent, Attorney, Guardian, Husband, and Wife.—An agent having the control and management of the property, is disqualified from purchasing the same on his own account, without a previous explicit renunciation of his agency.¹ And the rule is not changed by the fact that the principal fails to furnish him funds to pay the taxes.² Nor can an agent engaged by the owner to bid off the property, acquire title thereto by taking the deed in his own name.³ And so, the purchase by an attorney of land, in regard

Jackson*, 99 Ind. 566; Travelers, Ins. Co. v. Patten, 98 Ind. 209; Beltram v. Villere (La. 1888), 4 So. Rep. 506; Austin v. Citizens' Bank, 30 La. Ann. 691; Newton v. Marshall, 62 Wis. 8; Avery v. Judd, 21 Wis. 262; Fallaas v. Pierce, 30 Wis. 443; Leppo v. Gilbert, 26 Kan. 138. And this rule applies to the owner of a small undivided interest in an equity of redemption. Middletown Sav. Bank v. Bacharach, 46 Conn. 513.

The purchaser of lands at an administrator's sale, subject to the mortgage, stands in the position of the mortgagor, and cannot acquire a tax title so as to cut off the mortgage. Edgerton v. Schneider, 26 Wis. 385.

A vendee, in possession, under an equitable title, occupies the position of a mortgagor as to the unpaid purchase-money, and he may not acquire a tax title to the premises to the prejudice of his vendor. Cowdry v. Cuthbert, 71 Iowa 733.

Where the mortgagor, by fraud and collusion with a third party, allows the land to be sold for taxes, and procures such party to purchase the same to defeat the mortgage, the tax title will be treated as though the mortgagor were the purchaser. McAlpine v. Zitzer, 119 Ill. 273.

A tax deed taken by the wife of the mortgagor at his request and held for his benefit, is invalid as against the mortgagee. Drew v. Morrill, 62 N. H. 565. But in Mississippi, it is held that the wife of the grantor in a trust deed to the land embraced therein, may defend successfully against an action of ejectment by the secured creditor who purchases at the trustee's sale. Carter v. Bustamente, 59 Miss. 559.

A debtor whose property has been seized, sold, and purchased by his mortgage creditor, may not subsequently acquire the tax title thereto as against such creditor, in virtue of a sale for taxes assessed in his name, and which accrued on the property during his ownership. Magner v. Hibernia Ins. Co., 30 La. Ann. 1357.

1. Agents.—Bartholemew v. Leech, 7 Watts (Pa.) 472; Murdoch v. Milner, 84 Mo. 96; Barton v. Moss, 32 Ill. 50; Gonzalia v. Bortelsman, 143 Ill. 634; Oldhams v. Jones, 5 B. Mon. (Ky.) 467; Morris v. Joseph, 1 W. Va. 256; 91 Am. Dec. 386; Franks v. Morris, 9 W. Va. 664; Woodman v. Davis, 32 Kan. 344; Coxe v. Wolcott, 27 Pa. St. 154; McMahon v. McGraw, 26 Wis. 614; Baker v. Whiting, 3 Sumn. (U. S.) 475.

In Fox v. Zimmerman, 77 Wis. 414, it was held that if an agent employed to collect rents and pay taxes on land, having rents in his hands sufficient to pay the taxes, permits the land to be sold therefor, and purchases the same, it is equivalent to a redemption, and he thereby acquires no title as against his principal; and the result is the same if the agent buys as agent for his wife and in her name, for in such case she is chargeable with notice of the fraud.

Where the court charged that the evidence was too slight to constitute an agency, this was, on appeal, held to be error—that it was a question for the jury. Lamb v. Irwin, 69 Pa. St. 436. See Lamb v. Davis, 74 Iowa 719, for a case where the circumstances were held not to constitute the party purchasing an agent.

But the purchase is voidable only at the option of the principal, who must refund what has been paid, if he avoids the purchase. Ellsworthy v. Cordrey, 63 Iowa 675.

Nor can an agent having charge of the lands, by a purchase of the certificate from the county, make himself the owner of the lands as against his principal. Fisher v. Krutz, 9 Kan. 501. See also Huzzard v. Trego, 35 Pa. St. 9; Shay v. McNamara, 54 Cal. 169.

to which he has been retained, is inconsistent with his relation to his client, and void, although there may have been no bad faith on his part.¹ But the mere fact that the purchaser had been, during the life of the owner, his attorney in some suits, does not cast upon him the duty of paying the taxes, or affect his right to purchase.²

A tax deed, made upon the sale of a minor's lands, to his guardian, conveys no title adverse to the ward, whether the deed be made to the guardian or to his assignee of the certificate of sale.³

It has been held that a husband may not acquire title, as against his wife, to her separate estate, by purchasing at a tax sale.⁴

3. Tax Officers.—The officer conducting the sale may not, either personally or by an agent, purchase the property;⁵ nor may he

1. Attorneys.—Wright v. Walker, 30 Ark. 44. But where the client refused for more than four years to pay his attorney fees, and reimburse him his expenses incurred in a suit to foreclose a mortgage, and the land mortgaged was subsequently bought by the attorney at a tax sale, the client being informed of the sale, and failing to pay the amount so advanced, it was held the client could not, seven years thereafter, maintain an action to set aside the tax deed. Eckrote v. Myers, 41 Iowa 324.

2. Pack v. Crawford, 29 Ark. 489.

3. Guardian.—Dohms v. Mann, 76 Iowa 723.

4. Husband and Wife.—Laton v. Balcom, 64 N. H. 92. And in this case it was also said that the wife is under a similar disqualification as to the husband's property.

In Willard v. Ames, 130 Ind. 351, the court, by Miller, J., said: "It seems to be settled law that a husband whose duty it is to look after the business interests of his wife and family, as well as to support them, will not be permitted to acquire title to the property of his wife by purchasing at a tax sale. But we know of no law to prevent a wife from purchasing at a public tax sale, the lands of her husband, or of others of which he is in possession, provided the purchase is made on her own account and with her own money."

But in Swift v. Agnes, 33 Wis. 229, the court, while refraining from determining whether a wife, especially one who has no separate estate, can take a tax deed of her husband's land and hold such land adversely to the husband, said: "If she may lawfully do so, some singular complications growing out of such transactions may hereafter arise."

In Burns v. Byrne, 45 Iowa 285, the court said: "It would be a startling doctrine that a husband may possess and enjoy the profits of his wife's real estate, neglect to pay the taxes, purchase the property at the same sale for the delinquency, and acquire a valid title. Such a refusal or neglect to pay taxes would be a fraud upon his wife and would vitiate the title acquired."

5. Officer as Purchaser.—Clute v. Barron, 2 Mich. 192; McLeod v. Burkhalter, 57 Miss. 65; Sponable v. Woodhouse, 48 Kan. 173; Haxton v. Harris, 19 Kan. 511; Chandler v. Moulton, 33 Vt. 245.

In Spicer v. Rowland, 39 Kan. 740, it was held that a sale directly to the officer himself, or to a firm of which he is a member, is absolutely void, and may be called in question by a purchaser at a subsequent sale, or other interested party.

In Iowa, under the statute, the sale is held to be voidable only, and the title based on such a sale, when held by a subsequent purchaser for value without notice, may not be defeated, save upon proper proceedings instituted therefor. Ellis v. Peck, 45 Iowa 112. And the right to have the sale set aside may become barred by the Statute of Limitations. Lawrence v. Hornick, 81 Iowa 193.

In Yancey v. Hopkins, 1 Munf. (Va.) 419, the sheriff who made the act in the matter as the agent of a third party.¹ This rule, however, is held not to preclude a clerk of the officer, who has no independent authority or control over the sale, from purchasing.²

sale, became the purchaser, and his title was held valid. But here there was a general custom, recognized in a public statute, and proved in the case itself, for sheriffs and their deputies to purchase lands at tax sales.

In Pennsylvania, a county commissioner may not purchase for himself lands sold at a treasurer's sale at a price less than the amount of taxes, costs, etc., but he may purchase at a price exceeding that amount. Cuttle v. Brockway, 24 Pa. St. 145.

In California, if a court commissioner, whose duty it is, in cases of default in tax suits, to draft a decree enforcing the lien, by negligence inserts in the decree a clause that the summons had been served, when such was not the fact, and subsequently buys the property at the sale, equity will not permit him to profit by his wrongful act, and will set aside his deed. Martin v. Parsons, 50 Cal. 498.

Deputy as Purchaser.—Under Iowa Code, § 885, the deputy of the county treasurer is prohibited from acquiring an interest in lands sold at a tax sale. And where he enters upon the books a sale as made to a party who is not present, and who subsequently assigns the certificate to him, the sale is invalid. Ellis v. Peck, 45 Iowa 112.

In Kirk v. St. Thomas' Church, 70 Iowa 287, the deputy county treasurer had funds of his minor child which he desired to invest in the purchase of property at a tax sale. He procured A, to bid in the property for that purpose. The certificate was made out to A, but never delivered to him. The deputy paid the bid to the treasurer and took the certificate and procured an assignment thereof by A to his son—A having no consultation at any time with the minor and receiving nothing for his services. The sale was held to be invalid.

In Galbraith v. Drought, 24 Kan. 591, it was held that where an auctioneer is employed by the sheriff to cry the property, and, although the sheriff be present, exercises full discretion in regard to the sale, he becomes pro hac vice, the deputy of the sheriff; and where, at such a sale, property be struck off by the auctioneer to himself, the sale is void under Kansas Code Civ. Pro., § 462; and this, although such purchase was made as an accommodation to the former owners, and with the understanding that they might have the property upon repayment of the amount of the bid.

Under the Virginia Act of 1813, where the deputy was the purchaser, the title was adjudged void in the hands of a bona fide purchaser claiming under the deputy. Taylor v. Stringer, 1 Gratt. (Va.) 158.

But in Arkansas, it is held that a deputy who has no control of the collection of taxes, may purchase at the sale as any other person. Hare v. Carnall, 39 Ark. 196.

And in Mississippi, the fact that the deputy sheriff becomes a purchaser at a sale made by his principal, does not render the sale ipso facto void, when it is not shown that the deputy had any part in making the sale, and there is no suggestion of any unfair practice or bad faith on his part in reference thereto. O'Reilly v. Holt, 4 Woods (U. S.) 645.

1. Officer Purchasing as Agent.—Everett v. Beebe, 37 Iowa 452; Corbin v. Beebe, 36 Iowa 336; Payson v. Hall, 30 Me. 319. In this latter case it was said: "A collector of taxes cannot, consistently with a faithful and legal discharge of his official duties, become the agent of a purchaser whose interest it is to acquire the whole estate, or as much of it as possible, by payment of the taxes and costs, and whose agent, to be faithful, must have the same interest, while a faithful discharge of official duty would require him to sell as little as possible of the estate to obtain such payment. His official duties and those of his private agency would come into direct conflict. The performance of one duty is inconsistent with the faithful performance of the other."

2. Fox v. Cash, 11 Pa. St. 207; Lorain v. Smith, 37 Iowa 67; Wells v. Jackson Iron Mfg. Co., 47 N. H. 235; 90 Am. Dec. 575.

In O'Reilly v. Holt, 4 Woods (U. S.) 645, it was held that the fact that the purchaser was clerk of the court, in whose office the deed must be filed on the day of sale, did not render the sale absolutely void.

And in Kentucky, it is held that if the deputy register of the land office becomes the purchaser, it is incumbent

4. State, County, and Municipality.—It is generally provided by statute that if the lands cannot be sold for want of bidders, or if the highest bid is insufficient to pay the taxes and costs, it shall be bid in for the state, county, or municipality, as the case may be.¹

upon him to show that his purchase was fair in every particular, and founded upon a full and adequate consideration. Morton v. Waring, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 72.

In Arkansas, the county clerk being required by law to advertise the land for sale, to attend and make a record of the sale, and to issue certificates of purchase and redemption, and a deed to the purchaser if not redeemed, is himself forbidden from becoming a purchaser. Cole v. Moore, 34 Ark. 582.

1. State, County, or City as Purchaser.

—In Nebraska, county commissioners may purchase at all tax sales, public or private, for the use and benefit of the county, lands which are offered and remain unsold for want of bidders. State v. Cain, 18 Neb. 635; Otoe County v. Mathews, 18 Neb. 466; Otoe County v. Brown, 16 Neb. 394; Shelley v. Towle, 16 Neb. 194. And it is unnecessary for the county to pay to the treasurer the amount of the delinquent taxes; the taxes being due the county in its own or a representative capacity—that is, as trustee of the various corporations, such as the towns, villages, and school districts within the county. Lancaster County v. Trimble, 34 Neb. 752.

Under the Kansas statute, a county may not enter into competition with individuals as a voluntary bidder; it can only become the involuntary purchaser of the lands when they cannot be otherwise sold for the amount due. And a deed reciting a sale to the county as a competitive bidder is void upon its face. Babbitt v. Johnson, 15 Kan. 252; Maggill v. Martin, 14 Kan. 67; Guitard Tp. v. Marshall County, 4 Kan. 332; Norton v. Friend, 13 Kan. 532; Larkin v. Wilson, 28 Kan. 513; Mack v. Price, 35 Kan. 134. But it seems that the party entitled may, if the sale was in fact valid, and that fact is apparent from the record of the sale and the certificate, compel by mandamus the issue of a valid deed. Bryson v. Spaulding, 20 Kan. 427.

By section 83 of the charter of the city of Elizabeth, if the lands are not bid for, they shall be struck off to the city for a term of fifty years; this term is not enlarged by section 22 of the New Jersey Act of 1873, p. 778; that applies to purchasers other than the municipality. And a sale to the state for a term of nine hundred years, is unauthorized. Morgan v. Elizabeth, 44 N. J. L. 571; Schatt v. Grosch, 31 N. J. Eq. 199; Ludington v. Elizabeth, 34 N. J. Eq. 357. See also In re Report of Com'rs, etc., 49 N. J. L. 488.

And under the Wisconsin Laws of 1859, ch. 22, § 9, a county is only authorized to purchase after the lands have been twice offered at public sale and remain unsold. And it is not then authorized to purchase the same jointly with an individual. And a deed, from which it appears that the land was sold to the county and another, is void upon its face. Sprague v. Coenen, 30 Wis. 209.

In North Carolina, under the Act of 1798, if no one bids off a smaller quantity than the whole for the sum due, such bid shall be considered as a bid by the governor for the use of the state. But the state's title is not complete until all the requisites pointed out by the act are complied with, such as execution of deed, registration of same, etc. Doe v. Bryan, 2 Hawks (N. Car.) 17.

And where the land was stricken off to the governor for the use of the state, and the officer, instead of executing his deed at the county court succeeding the sale, as the act requires, did it at a subsequent term, the deed was held to be inoperative. Den v. Rose, 4 Dev. (N. Car.) 549.

Under the act, the officer has no authority to use the name of the governor as a bidder for the state, except at a sale made prior to the period at which he settled, or ought to have settled, for the public revenue. Den v. Wilbourn, 5 Ired. (N. Car.) 344; Den v. Rose, 4 Dev. (N. Car.) 554.

In Pennsylvania, a treasurer's sale of unseated lands to the commissioners, for the county, for more than the taxes and costs, takes away the title of the owner—the county might refuse to ratify the purchase and charge the commissioners individually with the taxes and costs; but it is a matter entirely between the county and her commissioners. The former owner of the land has nothing to do with it. Russel v. Reed, 27 Pa. St. 166.

The commissioners selling lands for taxes, under the act of Congress of Feb. 6th, 1863, are bound to bid them off for the United States, if no one will bid more than two-thirds of their assessed value, unless the owner shall request that they be struck off to some other person at a less price; and the commissioners are without discretion in the matter. Turner v. Smith, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 830.

In Alabama, where lands are sold, whether under the revenue law of 1868, or that of 1874, or that contained in the Code of 1876, §§ 450-460, and the state purchases at the sale, the sum bid must include the county tax, with interest thereon and the penalties incurred, but the state is not liable to the county for this part of the amount bid. State v. Brewer, 64 Ala. 287.

In Tennessee, this matter of priority is regulated by statute, state, city, and county taxes being liens on the lands from the time they become due and payable, and the proceeds of sale are distributed in accordance with the priority of such liens. Nashville v. Lee, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 452.

In Pennsylvania, where the county commissioners, in pursuance of Act of March 13th, 1815, § 5, Pamph. Laws 177, bid in lands sold at a treasurer's sale, and subsequently, said lands being unredeemed, the commissioners sell the same in pursuance of the Act of March 29th, 1824, Pamph. Laws 167, the county must, where the proceeds of sale are sufficient, pay to the township, in which such lands are situate, the road tax due thereon at the time of the treasurer's sale, and which has since accrued. Rush Tp. v. Schuylkill County, 100 Pa. St. 356.

Forfeiture to State for Want of Bidders.—In some of the states, the statutes provide that if the lands cannot be sold for want of bidders, they shall be declared forfeited to the state. In such cases there can be no forfeiture, unless the lands are exposed for sale according to law, and there is a failure to sell for want of bidders. Biggins v. People, 106 Ill. 270; Scott v. People, 2 Ill. App. 642; State v. Thompson, 18 S. Car. 538; Owens v. Owens, 25 S. Car. 155; Magruder v. Esmay, 35 Ohio St. 221. See also Gilfillan v. Chatterton, 38 Minn. 335; Mulvey v. Tozer, 40 Minn. 384; Woodward v. Sloan, 27 Ohio St. 592. See TAXATION—Forfeiture for Non-compliance with Tax Laws.

Evidence of Failure to Sell.—In Ohio,

the books of the county auditor are held to be admissible in evidence to prove that the land was offered for sale and not sold for want of bidders, although in the entries of said books there may be some irregularities. Thevenin v. Slocum, 16 Ohio 519.

State Purchase—Louisiana.—There is no law in Louisiana preventing the state from purchasing at tax sales. The object of article 210 of the constitution of that state was to prevent the state from acquiring property for taxes by forfeiture, and not to prohibit the state from purchasing. Martinez v. State Tax Collectors, 42 La. Ann. 677; Breaux v. Negrotto, 43 La. Ann. 426.

Whether Deed is Necessary to Convey Title.—In Arkansas, at a sale under the "Overdue Tax Act," of March, 1881, where lands are struck off to the state for lack of bidders, no deed is necessary to convey title. Neal v. Andrews, 53 Ark. 445; Doyle v. Martin, 55 Ark. 37.

But in Mississippi, merely striking the land off to the state will not vest title. The list certified by the collector to be correct, provided by Code of 1871, § 1693, as an economical substitute for the numerous deeds formerly required, is essential. Mayson v. Banks, 59 Miss. 447; Ferrill v. Dickerson, 63 Miss. 210.

Where, by a statute in Wisconsin, it was provided that, "whenever any lot or tract of land shall be, or shall have been, for five consecutive years sold for taxes and bid in for the county, and remain unredeemed, the title thereof shall absolutely vest in the county where such lot or tract of land is situate," it was held that the original owner was divested of his title, and the title was vested in the county without any deed, and by the mere operation of the act, and that such a method of transfer to the county is constitutional. Baldwin v. Ely, 66 Wis. 171; Lombard v. White, 76 Wis. 445.

In Colorado, a deed is authorized to be executed to the county, and the form prescribed for cash purchasers should be substantially pursued as far as applicable to the county as a bidder, and varied only so far as may be necessary to show the truth of the transaction; as, for instance, it must show that it was struck off to the county for lack of bidders, etc. Dyke v. Whyte, 17 Colo. 296.

In Kansas, no deed can be issued to the county; the land being held by it for the purpose of being assigned to the

But a city or other municipal corporation, in the absence of an enabling statute, has no authority to purchase; the general power to buy and hold real estate, will not authorize it.¹

V. NATURE OF TITLE ACQUIRED—1. Before Execution and Delivery of Deed—(See also TAXATION—Tax Sales, vol. 25).—Until the expiration of the time for redemption, and the execution and delivery of the deed, the title to the lands sold remains with the tax debtor; the purchaser acquiring simply a statutory lien for the amount of his bid, interest, costs, and penalties.² He does not acquire the right of possession,³ and, consequently, is not entitled to the rents and profits.⁴ And his certificate of sale will first party willing to take it. State v. Magill, 4 Kan. 415; Guittard Tp. v. Marshall County, 4 Kan. 389.

1. Logansport v. Humphrey, 84 Ind. 467.

Under the Iowa Code of 1851, the counties of the state were not authorized to purchase. Bruck v. Broesigks, 18 Iowa 393. See also Miller v. Gregg, 26 Iowa 75.

The city of Milwaukee was not authorized in 1852 to purchase, and a sale to it was void. Knox v. Peterson, 21 Wis. 247.

Section 159 of the Illinois Act for the incorporation of cities and villages, confers no power to become purchasers, on cities and villages organized under special charters. Champaign v. Harmon, 98 Ill. 491.

The city of Jefferson has power under her charter, Missouri Acts 1872, p. 390, § 1, to buy at execution sales for taxes due the city. Jefferson v. Curry, 71 Mo. 85.

The Illinois Act of 1879, authorizing suit to be brought for delinquent taxes in the name of the people, or in the name of the proper county, is broad enough to authorize the county to purchase under the judgment. Douthett v. Kettle, 104 Ill. 357. Compare with the foregoing Keller v. Wilson, 90 Ky. 350; Parish v. Eager, 15 Wis. 590.

2. Stephens v. Holmes, 26 Ark. 48; Spratt v. Price, 18 Fla. 290; Douglass v. Dickson, 31 Kan. 310; People v. Hammond, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 276; Brackett v. Gilmore, 15 Minn. 245; Tripp v. Ide, 3 R. I. 51; Donohoe v. Veal, 19 Mo. 331; Shalemiller v. McCarty, 55 Pa. St. 186; Lightner v. Mooney, 10 Watts (Pa.) 407.

In Watkins v. Eaton, 30 Me. 535; 50 Am. Dec. 637, it is said that the purchaser's title is in principle a mortgage, although it does not exist in a form to be included by the statutory provisions respecting such instruments.

Under the Iowa Code of 1851, § 503, the legal title passes to the purchaser, but it is only to support the statutory lien. Dennison v. Keokuk, 45 Iowa 270; Tredway v. McDonald, 51 Iowa 663; Byington v. Buckwalter, 7 Iowa 512; 74 Am. Dec. 279.

Byington*, 11 Iowa 532; Tredway v. McDonald, 51 Iowa 663; Dennison v. Keokuk, 45 Iowa 270; Lacy v. Johnson, 58 Wis. 414.

In Minnesota, if the holder of the certificate enters and makes improvements before the expiration of the time for redemption, he does not hold under color of title, and, consequently, will not be allowed therefor. McLellan v. Omodt, 37 Minn. 157.

Under the Missouri Rev. Act of 1857, the purchaser is entitled to possession for a limited time, and after the expiration of the time for redemption, may procure a deed, but he cannot defend his possession simply upon his certificate, against a party showing a legal title. Dalton v. Fenn, 40 Mo. 109.

4. Mayo v. Woods, 31 Cal. 269; People v. Hammond, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 276; Woodland Oil Co. v. Lawrence, 1 Pennyp. (Pa.) 480. And under 1 Indiana R. S., 1876, p. 120, the holder of the certificate is entitled to the possession, and the rents and profits. Ethel v. Batchelder, 90 Ind. 520.

But the certificate does not confer this right unless the sale was regular and valid. When one takes possession under an invalid certificate, he is accountable for the rents and profits, and after receiving more than enough not protect him in the commission of waste.¹ But he has been permitted to maintain an action to enjoin the removal of buildings, and the commission of other such acts calculated to depreciate the value of the property.²

2. After Execution and Delivery of Deed.—The local statutes determine what estate is acquired by virtue of the tax deed, after the expiration of the period of redemption. In general, the grantee is vested with an estate in fee simple, all prior interests, liens and incumbrances being extinguished, the theory being that the land itself is taxed and sold, and not the owner's title.³ But in some of the states only such title and estate pass as were had to repay the amount of his bid, interest, and costs, will not be considered as holding a certificate which, constituting in the beginning a mere lien, can grow by lapse of time, under a statute of limitations, into a title at law, or into a defense against such a title. Davis v. Chapman, 24 Fed. Rep. 674; Barton v. McWhinney, 85 Ind. 481.

St. 186, holding that the owner of unseated lands may recover of the purchaser at a tax sale thereof, for timber, cut and removed therefrom before redemption of the premises. But compare Wright v. Wing, 18 Wis. 45.

2. Phillips v. Meyers, 55 Iowa 265. The Pennsylvania Act of June 13th, 1883 (T. L. 89), gives the purchaser of unseated lands the writ of estrepement against the owner or other person acting under him, to stay waste prior to redemption. Woodland Oil Co. v. Shoup, 107 Pa. St. 293.

Title Acquired from the State.—In Alabama, where the state is the purchaser, but acquires no title by reason of irregularities in the sale, a certificate purporting to transfer "all the right and title of the state secured by said purchase," confers no title. Fleming v. McGee, 81 Ala. 409. See also Boykin v. Smith, 65 Ala. 294.

In Mississippi, a plaintiff seeking to recover lands upon a tax title derived from the state, must, in order to make out his title, besides producing his deed from the state, show by the list of lands sold to the state, or by a deed from the

by the delinquent at the commencement of the year for which the assessment was made.¹ And when the statute deals with particular interests in the land, rather than the land itself, and assesses such interests separately, only the interest assessed and sold will pass, and previous liens will, as a rule, be left intact.²

When the right of redemption exists after the execution of the deed, as in some states in case of infants, married women, etc., the estate of the grantee is conditional, liable to be defeated by a redemption in conformity with law.³

Where different tax deeds are executed to different persons for the taxes of different years, the deed last executed for the taxes of the latest year, is paramount to any previously executed.⁴ It seems that the tax deed, when given, will not relate back to the time of sale.⁵

Where the owner of land has previously given a deed of trust to secure the payment of money thereon, the purchaser at the tax sale acquires only the equity of redemption existing in the grantor; and the land is first liable for the trust lien. Smith v. Lewis, 2 W. Va. 39.

Lands Mortgaged to School Fund—Iowa.—Under section 811 of the Iowa Revision, where lands are mortgaged to the school fund, the interest of the person who holds the title is alone sold for taxes, and the interest of the state is not affected, the purchaser acquiring only the right to redeem from the mortgage. This provision applied to all sales made after it took effect, whether the taxes became delinquent before or

In Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Butte, 45 Mich. 113, it is said that the title will relate back to the sale for all purposes of substantial justice, but not otherwise; and that it may not be used to divest rights acquired since the pe-

VI. RIGHTS OF PURCHASERS OF DEFECTIVE TITLES—1. At Common Law.—At common law, the doctrine of caveat emptor applies in its fullest extent to tax sales. If the tax title proves to be worthless, the purchaser is without remedy, either against the tax officer, the owner, the state, or the municipality. His payment is regarded as a voluntary one, and he assumes all risks; for, as in judicial sales, there is in tax sales, no warranty.¹

2. Under Statutes—a. RETURN OF PURCHASE-MONEY.—In most of the states statutes have been enacted, affording purchasers relief when their titles prove worthless. Usually they are authorized to recover of the owner the amount of the purchase-money, and all subsequent taxes, together with a specified rate of interest on the same; the whole being made a lien upon the land.² If, riod to which it would relate. See also Hemmingway v. Drew, 47 Mich. 554. And in Hess v. Griggs, 43 Mich. 400, it was held that the deed cannot, by relation, make parties trespassers by reason of acts done upon the land before it was given.

In Phillips v. Hudson, 31 N. J. L. 143, where the ordinance under which the lands were sold was void and the title failed, the purchaser was nevertheless allowed to recover the purchase-money from the town in an action of assumpsit, Beaseley, C. J., dissenting. But in Tooker v. Roe, 44 N. J. L. 591, the court, by Scudder, J., says in reference to this case: "In my opinion, the authority of this case is shaken by the dissenting opinion, and by the subsequent case of Hampton v. Nicholson, 23 N. J. Eq. 423, in which the chancellor says, 'Purchasers frequently accept deeds by which no title is conveyed, under a misapprehension of the law. When there is no mistake or misrepresentations as to the facts and no fraud and no warranty of title, they have no redress at law or in equity.' " See also State v. Picataway Tp., 43 N. J. L. 353.

By the terms of the Pennsylvania Act of April 21st, 1856, the rule caveat emptor does not apply to purchasers at treasurer's sales, where the lands sold are not in the county, or when they are sold upon a double assessment. Bredin v. Road Com'rs, 87 Pa. St. 441.

In Indiana, the purchaser will have the benefit of the state's lien in all cases, except (1) where the land is not subject to taxation; (2) where the taxes have been paid before sale; and (3) where the description is so imperfect as to fail to identify the land intended to be sold. Morrison v. Jacoby, 114 Ind. 84.

But one who claims the lien must show that the lands were sold for taxes and were purchased by him at such sale; mere voluntary payment will not entitle him to the lien. Sohn v. Wood, 75 Ind. 17.

In Millikan v. Ham, 104 Ind. 498, it is held that a purchaser at a sale for delinquent state and county taxes, who afterwards pays the city tax on such property, may have the same allowed and decree a lien thereon, as part of the original claim for the purchase price.

The fact that the owner of the land sold is a railroad corporation, does not deprive the purchaser, on failure of his title, of his right to personal judgment for the taxes, penalty, interest and costs, against the railroad company as such defaulting owner. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Alexander, 49 Ark. 190.

A valid tax title outstanding in a third party for subsequent taxes, is a good defense to the right of recovery, under the Michigan Laws of 1865, p. 575, giving to the holder of a tax deed, which is proved to be invalid, a lien upon the land and a judgment against the owner for the amount of the purchase-money and taxes paid by him with interest. This statute is applicable only to those cases where it will affect no one but the person owning the land when the taxes were assessed, and those claiming through him. Robbins v. Barron, 32 Mich. 36. See also La Rue v. King, 74 Iowa 288; Hunt v. Curry, 37 Ark. 100.

Under Illinois Sess. Laws 1885, p. 235, providing "that any judgment or decree of court setting aside any tax deed procured under this act, shall provide that the claimant shall pay to the party holding such tax deed all taxes and legal costs, together with all penalties, as provided by law, as it shall appear the holder of such deed or his assigns shall have properly paid, or be entitled to in procuring such deed," a decree setting aside the deed on the ground of irregularity in the sale, upon payment of the amount of the purchase-money and all subsequent taxes, with interest thereon, is proper without requiring payment of the amount that would have been required to redeem the property with interest thereon. Gage v. Pirtle, 124 Ill. 502.

But in Missouri, the owner must pay, in addition to the purchase-money, the amount which would have been necessary to effect redemption, and this latter item must be included in the judgment giving a lien on the land. Allen v. Buckley, 94 Mo. 158.

In Johnson v. Stewart, 29 Ohio St. 498, the purchaser was allowed to recover from the owner the amount of taxes paid, with interest, but without penalty.

A purchaser at a sale for the non-payment of assessments, under the Two-Mile Improvement Law of Ohio, after the same has proved invalid, may recover from the owner the amount of taxes, interests, and penalties due at the time of sale, interests subsequently accruing, and all legal taxes by him afterwards paid under authority of section 32 of the act relating to county auditors (S. & C. 104), and section 106 of the Tax Law of 1859 (S. & C. 1473). Chapman v. Solars, 38 Ohio St. 378.

In Mississippi, where lands held by the state for taxes legally due thereon, are purchased from the auditor of public accounts within the period allowed the original owner for redemption, and the owner applied in due time to the auditor to redeem, the purchaser's right to reimbursement must be limited to the amount which the owner would however, the tax is illegal, creating no obligation on the part of the owner to pay it, the purchaser does not acquire a lien.¹ It is also provided in many states, that when the title fails by reason of the fact that the lands were not subject to taxation, or that the taxes had been paid before sale, the state, county or municipality, as the case may be, shall refund to the purchaser the amount of the purchase-money with interest.² And a statute giving the have been required to pay in redeeming the land, with interest thereon at six per cent. McLaran v. Moore, 60 Miss. 376.

In Arkansas, it is held that where a tax sale is adjudged invalid "for irregularity in the same," it will not be presumed, on appeal from a judgment in favor of the purchaser against the owner of the land sold for penalty, costs, etc., that the irregularity was at such a time, or of such a character, as to invalidate the penalty and costs. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Alexander, 49 Ark. 190.

The fact that some of the taxes were paid by strangers, does not affect the right of the holder of the tax title to recover them, when they were paid in his behalf. Guisse v. Early, 72 Iowa 283.

In West Virginia, there is no statute transferring the lien of the state for the subsequent taxes paid to the holder of an invalid title, and he is not entitled to reimbursement for same from the former owner. Simpson v. Edmiston, 23 W. Va. 675.

1. Mayer v. Peebles, 58 Miss. 628; Wilmerton v. Phillips, 103 Ill. 78.

In Minnesota, the purchaser has no lien for his purchase-money when the sale is invalid by reason of an illegal assessment or levy. Barber v. Evans, 27 Minn. 92. But in Mississippi, on the failure of the title of lands sold to the state for taxes in 1875, and bought from the state by an individual in 1885, the latter has a lien for the amount of the purchase-money, taxes, with interest and damages, if there was an effort by the proper officers to subject the land to sale for taxes due and unpaid; and no valid levy, assessment, or sale is necessary to support such lien. And the repeal of section 1718, by the act of 1877, operates only on sales thereafter to be made, and does not affect liens existing and vested before such repeal. Capital State Bank v. Lewis, 64 Miss. 727.

And under section 536 of the Mississippi Code of 1880, giving the purchaser a lien "if the taxes for which such land was sold were due, although said sale was illegal on some other ground," he may not be denied the benefit of the provision because the sale was based upon an invalid assessment, on the theory that taxes could not "be due" on such assessment. Kaiser v. Harris, 63 Miss. 590.

Under art. 6, § 64, of the Kansas City charter, providing that the purchaser may recover when his tax deed is executed "substantially as provided for in the preceding section," one claiming under a deed which fails to recite that the sale was "publicly" held, is not entitled. Bingham v. Delaugherty (Mo. 1890), 13 S. W. Rep. 208.

In Iowa, where the sale and deed transfer no interest because of an insufficient description of the premises in the proceedings, the purchaser may not recover for subsequently paid taxes. Roberts v. Deeds, 57 Iowa 320; Hintrager v. Nightingale, 36 Fed. Rep. 847; Barke v. Early, 72 Iowa 237.

2. In Michigan, this right of the purchaser arises only where either, first, the land was not subject to taxation at all; or second, the taxes had been actually paid in due time; or third, a certificate had been given in due time by the proper officer, that no taxes were charged on the land; and does not cover a case where the land was subject to taxation, and taxes have been actually assessed, even though illegally, and no attempt has been made to ascertain and pay them. People v. Auditor Gen'l, 30 Mich. 12.

Under the Nebraska statute, providing that "when by mistake or wrongful act of the treasurer or other officer, land has been sold contrary to the provisions of the act, etc., the county is to hold the purchaser harmless by refunding him the amount of principal, interest, and cost," the county is liable where the lands sold were not taxable, and upon which no tax was due. Roberts v. Adams County, 18 Neb. 471; Roberts v. Adams County, 20 Neb. 409; Fuller v. Colfax County, 33 Neb. 716; Wilson v. Butler County, 26 Neb. 716.

Under section 71 of the former revenue law of Nebraska (Gen. St. 924), it was only when, by such "mistakes or wrongful acts" as were not of record, and were not participated in by the purchaser, land was sold contrary to the provisions of the act, that the county was to save the purchaser harmless. Merriam v. Otoe County, 15 Neb. 408.

See Tyler v. Cass County, 1 N. Dak. 369, for a case where the sale was not by "wrongful act or mistake" of the officer within the meaning of a similar statute, and denying a recovery to the purchaser.

Where the county, from year to year after the sale, causes the land to be assessed and taxes levied thereon, the tax purchaser may pay the taxes to protect his supposed lien, and upon failure of his interest or title, may recover the amounts so paid, with interest, from the county. Wilson v. Butler County, 26 Neb. 676.

The claims against the county should be presented to the county board for audit and allowance, and if rejected, an appeal may be had to the district court. Fuller v. Colfax County, 33 Neb. 716; Richardson County v. Hull, 24 Neb. 536; Richardson County v. Hull, 28 Neb. 810.

Under Wisconsin Laws 1859, ch. 22, § 27, the claimant for repayment of money from the county is required to present the tax certificates and deeds, to be delivered and canceled on payment to him of the money; but he is not required, prior to such payment, either to cancel them himself, or to leave them with the board or other county officers to be canceled. Warner v. Outagamie County, 19 Wis. 611.

As to what constitutes a disallowance by the county board before an appeal is authorized to the circuit court, under 1 Taylor Stats. (Wis.) 302, see Warner v. Outagamie County, 19 Wis. 611.

Under the New York Laws 1855, ch. 427, §§ 83, 85, authorizing the comptroller to cancel tax sales which are invalid or ineffectual to pass title, and refund the money out of the state treasury to the purchaser, his power is not restricted to cases where the invalidity of the sale appears upon the face of the proceedings, but extends to cases where it does not so appear, and must be established by extrinsic evidence. And he may be compelled by mandamus to hear and determine an application by the purchaser to cancel the sale and refund the purchase-money, where the latter alleges that the tax was invalid, and presents proof in support of his allegation. People v. Chapin, 105 N. Y. 309.

In Indiana, it is only where the sale is void and conveys nothing that the purchaser may recover, and not where the sale is effectual to convey a lien. State v. Casteel, 110 Ind. 174; Ball v. Barnes, 123 Ind. 394.

But where the description of the premises in the tax deed is too uncertain and indefinite to render the sale effectual to convey title, but is sufficiently definite and certain to carry a lien, and an action is instituted by the owner of the land against the city treasurer and the purchaser, and defended by the city, wherein it is decreed that the purchaser acquired no lien, and the certificate is canceled and the plaintiff's title quieted, the city is concluded by the judgment, and the purchaser is entitled to reimbursement, under Indiana R. S. 1881, § 6487. Millikan v. Lafayette, 118 Ind. 323.

In Iowa, it is held that the city does not take the place of the delinquent taxpayer by an invalid sale, and is not liable to the purchaser, in refunding his money, for interest at the rate charged delinquents in the case of redemption; but it is liable at the rate of six per cent. from the date of payment by the purchaser. Corbin v. Davenport, 9 Iowa 239.

In Minnesota, the right is not dependent upon the judgment stating the reason for which the sale was declared void. It is sufficient that the sale has been declared void "by judgment of court." German Am. Bank v. White, 38 Minn. 471; Easton v. Hayes, 38 Minn. 463.

The procedure under Minnesota Gen. Sts. 1878, ch. 11, § 148, added by Laws 1881, ch. 10, is not judicial in its nature, and the duties thereby imposed may be performed by other than judicial officers. State v. Dressell, 38 Minn. 90.

Under the Colorado Gen. Sts. 1883, section 2824, providing that when land has been sold for taxes, "on which no tax was due at the time," the county shall refund to the purchaser the amount paid, etc., does not authorize an action by the purchaser to recover back the amount of personal-property tax admitted to be due and included in the purchase price. Larimer County v. National State Bank, 11 Colo. 564.

Under the Colorado Gen. Laws 1877, right may be made retroactive, and apply to titles founded upon sales made before its passage; ¹ but one assuming to take away, obstruct, or incumber the right, is void in so far as it purports to apply to sales already made. ²

The right extends as well to a purchaser of lands forfeited to the state for non-payment of taxes, as to a purchaser at a tax sale. ³

Under these statutes, if the original purchaser has assigned his interest, his assignee is the one entitled to restitution. ⁴ requiring the county to reimburse the purchaser who, in consequence of the mistake of the assessor or other official, does not obtain a good title, and in turn making such official responsible to the county, the county is liable to one who purchased at a sale taking place after the act took effect, although the mistake of the assessor rendering the title invalid was made prior to that time, giving the county no recourse against him. Hurd v. Hamill, 10 Colo. 174.

Under the Massachusetts Statutes of 1862, ch. 183, § 6, a mortgagee, whether in possession before foreclosure, or out of possession, who buys the land at the tax sale, is entitled to be reimbursed the purchase-money in case the sale is invalid. But a mortgagee who has, after the assessment of the tax, become the absolute owner, by buying at a sale under a power in the mortgage, and who buys the land at the tax sale, is not so entitled. Home Sav. Bank v. Boston, 131 Mass. 277.

In Kansas, it is held that the mere fact that a railroad company is the purchaser, does not prove that such purchase is ultra vires, and the tax-sale certificate in its hands null and void, so as to release the county from the obligation to refund, in case the sale proves to be invalid. School Dist. No. 15 v. Allen County, 22 Kan. 568.

In Wisconsin, it is held that a special contract by the county supervisors, at the time of the sale, with the purchaser or his assigns, to refund on demand the money paid at the sale with interest, if, through the failure of the officers to comply with the law in the tax proceedings, the certificate should be void, or an agreement to secure to such purchaser or his assigns a perfect title in fee simple to the lands, would be in excess of the authority conferred by law on that body, and of no effect. Hyde v. Kenosha County, 43 Wis. 129.

The remedy of the purchaser being purely statutory, unless he can bring his complaint within some provision of the statute, it will be bad. Hilgenberg v. Marion County, 107 Ind. 494.

1. Flinn v. Parsons, 60 Ind. 573; State v. Cronkhite, 28 Minn. 197; Schoonover v. Galarnaut, 45 Minn. 174. But the statute will be given a prospective effect only, in the absence of a clear legislative intent that it shall be retrospective. Shaw v. Morley, 89 Mich. 313.

2. Fleming v. Roverud, 30 Minn. 273; State v. Foley, 30 Minn. 350; Morgan v. Miami County, 27 Kan. 79; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Alexander, 49 Ark. 190. In Corbin v. Washington County, 3 Fed. Rep. 356, the law, at the time the sale was made, provided for the return of the purchaser's money, in the event that the sale should not be consummated by reason of irregularities therein. A subsequent statute providing that the purchaser should not be entitled to a return in any case, unless the board of supervisors should see proper to so order, was adjudged void in so far as it purported to apply to sales already made. But it was further held that a subsequent statute providing that the money should not be refunded, unless the party claiming under the tax deed should deliver a quit-claim deed, executed to such persons as the commissioners might direct, was a proper exercise of the power of the legislature to modify without impairing the remedy, and therefore valid.

In Mississippi, the right of the purchaser passes to the holder under him, and it makes no difference whether the latter acquires by a conveyance from the purchaser, or by conveyance from the sheriff under judgment and execution against him. McGehee v. Fitts, 65 Miss. 357.

In Morris v. Sioux County, 42 Iowa 416, the sale was void, but meanwhile

The right to reimbursement—whether by a recovery from the selling power,¹ or by foreclosure of the lien given upon the land²—is limited in time, by varying statutes. The period does not commence to run against the right to foreclose the lien until the title acquired by the tax deed fails; that is, until it is adjudged bad by a court of competent jurisdiction.³

the owner voluntarily redeemed his land. It was held that he could not be regarded as the assignee of the purchaser and entitled to the right given the latter to recover from the county.

In Fuller v. Colfax County, 33 Neb. 716, it was held that where the purchaser has neither demanded a deed within five years from the date of sale, nor instituted proceedings to foreclose the tax certificate within the period of limitation for such action, he is not entitled to reimbursement from the county by reason of the invalidity of the sale.

In Hutchinson v. Sheboygan County, 26 Wis. 402, it was held that the Statute of Limitations does not begin to run on the claim, until the grantee has clear and positive information or knowledge of the existence of proof that the sale was invalid; and a statement by one who was not the owner of, nor interested in, the land, that the tax was paid, was not sufficient to put the statute in motion. Paine, J., dissenting.

In Nebraska, an action to foreclose may be brought on the tax certificate, where the petition alleges that a deed, if issued, would be invalid; and in such case the cause of action would accrue at the expiration of the period of redemption, and suit may be brought at any time within five years thereafter. Parker v. Matheson, 21 Neb. 546; Helprey v. Redick, 21 Neb. 80; Shepherd v. Burr, 27 Neb. 432; DeGette v. Sheldon, 27 Neb. 829. But in Indiana, the right does not exist until the purchaser obtains the deed. Sharpe v. Dillman, 77 Ind. 280; Montgomery v. Aydelotte, 95 Ind. 144; Reed v. Earhart, 88 Ind. 159.

It is unnecessary for the holder of the tax deed to bring ejectment and fail therein, before instituting an action to foreclose his lien; he may allege in his petition the invalidity of his deed, and state facts showing his right to foreclose. McClure v. Warner, 16 Neb. 447; Shelley v. Towle, 16 Neb. 194; Miller v. Hurford, 13 Neb. 20.

In Douglass v. Boyle, 42 Kan. 392, where the tax deed was recorded in 1863, but the holder did not take possession of the land described therein until 1878, he was adjudged not entitled to a lien for the amount of taxes recited in said deed, with interest, as the deed and all rights thereunder were barred by the Statute of Limitations.

In Harber v. Sexton, 66 Iowa 211, where the tax deed was invalid by reason of the fact that the taxes had been paid prior to the sale, but the owner allowed the tax purchaser, in good faith, to pay the taxes on the land for more than twenty years, and then called him into a court of equity, where his invalid title was set aside; it was held that the purchaser was entitled to recover for all the subsequently paid taxes, with six per cent. interest on each payment from the date thereof, and to have the judgment declared a lien on the land, and that to such a case the Statute of Limitations had no application, since the right to reimbursement was a mere equity incidental to the relief asked by, and granted to, the plaintiff. Distinguishing Thode v. Spofford, 65 Iowa 294.

When the right to enforce a lien for the purchase-money, has been lost by lapse of time, a subsequent payment of taxes will be deemed voluntary, furnishing no cause of action, and ineffectual

b. COMPENSATION FOR IMPROVEMENTS.—Under statutes in many of the states, known as the “occupying claimants,” “betterment,” or “improvement” acts, the purchaser may, on failure of his title, recover from the owner for permanent and beneficial improvements, made in good faith, and in the belief that his title was good.¹ But in order to have the benefit of the occupying claimants’ act, the claimant, at the time the improvements are made, must have the full and actual possession; he may not enter upon the land in possession of another, and to restore the original right. Brown v. Fodder, 81 Ind. 491.

Michigan Compiled Laws, §§ 6252–3, do not apply, where the entry or holding was not under a tax title alone. Sands v. Davis, 40 Mich. 14; King v. Harrington, 18 Mich. 212.

The Minnesota Act of March 10th, 1873, was not intended to apply to cases of improvements made before its passage. Wilson v. School Dist., 22 Minn. 488.

Under the Ohio statute, the occupant in possession under claim of title, is allowed as well for improvements made before his tax title accrued, as for those made afterwards. Davis v. Powell, 13 Ohio 308; Shaler v. Magin, 2 Ohio 236. But the contrary is held in Wheeler v. Merriman, 30 Minn. 372, and Jacks v. Dyer, 31 Ark. 335.

In Wisconsin, the tax-title claimant cannot recover for any improvements made prior to November 1st, 1878, unless the tax upon which his deed was based is lawfully assessed upon the land. Oberich v. Gilman, 31 Wis. 495. But under Wisconsin Rev. Stat., § 3096, he may recover for improvements made since that date, notwithstanding the invalidity of the assessment. Zwietusch v. Watkins, 61 Wis. 615.

In Louisiana, where the sale is void because of an irregular assessment, but is made by competent authority, and no nullity is patent on the face of the tax deed, the purchaser cannot be regarded a purchaser in bad faith, but is entitled to reimbursement for useful improvements. Hickman v. Dawson, 35 La. Ann. 1086; Miller v. Montagne, 32 La. Ann. 1293; Guidry v. Broussard, 32 La. Ann. 924; Stafford v. Twitchell, 33 La. Ann. 520; Hopkins v. Daunoy, 33 La. Under the Kansas statute, one holding under a void certificate of sale, Stebbins v. Guthrie, 4 Kan. 353, or under a tax deed void on its face, Smith v. Smith, 15 Kan. 290; Wilder v. Cockshutt, 25 Kan. 504; Larkin v. Wilson, 28 Kan. 516; Millbank v. Ostertag, 24 Kan. 471, is entitled to compensation for improvements.

But in other jurisdictions it is held that if the deed shows upon its face that it is void, it cannot be the foundation for a claim for the value of improvements. House v. Stone, 64 Tex. 677; Hatchett v. Conner, 30 Tex. 104; Hershey v. Thompson, 50 Ark. 485. But one claiming under an invalid tax title not void on its face, is entitled to adduce evidence as to his improvements under his suggestion of good faith, and to have that issue determined. House v. Stone, 64 Tex. 677. approving French v. Grenet, 57 Tex. 273, and Wofford v. McKinna, 23 Tex. 36; 76 Am. Dec. 53, and questioning Robson v. Osborn, 13 Tex. 298.

In Liggett v. Long, 19 Pa. St. 499, it was held that where the officer omits to place his signature to the deed at the proper place for it, near the impression of a seal, but attaches it to the receipt for taxes and costs and bond for the make improvements, and receive compensation therefor.¹ His possession, however, need not be personal; the occupancy of the tenant is the occupancy of the landlord within this rule.² The occupant is not entitled to the actual costs of the improvements, but only to the amount which they have enhanced the value of the property.³ A grantee is an "assignee," within the meaning of these statutes passing the rights of the purchaser to his "assignee."⁴

VII. ACTIONS CONCERNING TAX TITLES—1. By Tax-title Claimant—
a. TO OBTAIN POSSESSION.—If the original owner, or one claiming under him, is in possession of the premises, the proper and usual remedy for the tax-title claimant, in order to obtain possession, is an action at law in the nature of ejectment.⁵ It is not competent for the legislature to provide for putting the purchaser in possession forcibly and without a judicial ascertainment of the facts, although the tax deed be made prima facie evidence surplus purchase-money, and acknowledges the deed in open court, which acknowledgment is duly certified on the deed and entered on the records of the court, the omission of the signature is not such a defect as will deprive the purchaser of reimbursement for improvements made on the faith of such title.

In Hilgenberg v. Rhodes, 111 Ind. 167, it was held that the purchaser was not entitled to compensation for improvements made by him after service of summons in a suit instituted by one asserting a paramount right to the property. But see Zweitusch v. Watkins, 61 Wis. 615.

2. Parsons v. Moses, 16 Iowa 440.

3. Childs v. Shower, 18 Iowa 261.

In Minnesota, the occupant is not entitled to interest upon the value of the improvements. Madland v. Benland, 24 Minn. 372.

4. Childs v. Shower, 18 Iowa 261.

5. See Crane v. Randolph, 30 Ark. 579; Whitney v. Stevens, 77 Ill. 585; Michigan Cent., etc., R. Co. v. McNaughton, 45 Mich. 87; Callanan v. Lewis, 79 Iowa 452; French v. Ladd, 57 Miss. 678.

Collateral Attack.—In Arkansas, in ejectment by a purchaser at a tax sale made in pursuance of a judgment of the circuit court having jurisdiction under the overdue tax law of that state, it is no defense that the taxes had been paid prior to the sale. The judgment and sale thereunder may not be collaterally attacked. McCarter v. Neil, 50 Ark. 188. See also Wallace v. Brown, 22 Ark. 118; 76 Am. Dec. 421.

Recording Tax Deeds.—In Wisconsin, it is held that until the tax deed is properly recorded, the grantee has not such a right to the possession of the land as will enable him to maintain ejectment therefor. Hewitt v. Week, 59 Wis. 444. See also Hewitt v. Butterfield, 52 Wis. 384.

When Bonds Are in Custody of Court.—In Young v. Vanhooser, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 136, it was held that the remedy of a purchaser at a tax sale of lands in the custody of the court of chancery at the time, is by petition pro interesse suo in the suit in which the receivership exists, setting out his title, and asking for possession on the title, or for leave to assert the title in a suit for that purpose; and an original bill against all parties to the chancery suit, without leave, is not maintainable.

Defect in Title.—In Iowa, although there are defects in the title of the patent holder, he is nevertheless entitled to possession as against one claiming under a void tax deed, when his possession is based on claim and color of title. Keokuk, etc., R. Co. v. Lindley, 48 Iowa 11.

In Pennsylvania, where, in an action of ejectment by one claiming under a treasurer's tax deed, there is a question as to the validity of the deed, because of a doubt in regard to the identity of the land described in the writ and the deed, of title in him.¹ Summary proceedings may be authorized, but, at the same time, they must be of a judicial nature.²

It should be observed, however, that the law does not require the purchaser to institute judicial proceedings and be put in possession by the officers of the law, when he may enter peaceably, and without resistance or difficulty.³

b. TO QUIET AND CONFIRM TITLE.—In some of the states statutes have been passed authorizing the tax-title claimant to bring a bill in chancery to quiet and confirm his title.⁴ In some or because it is uncertain whether the land was really assessed as unseated, or whether it was in fact unseated, such questions are properly for the jury and not for the court. And this is true, although the defendant is an intruder, not having even color of title. Miller v. McCullough, 104 Pa. St. 624.

Under the Michigan Comp. Laws, § 1141, providing that the holder of a tax title shall not be entitled to possession as against the holder of a subsequent tax deed, until he shall have paid or tendered to the latter the amount of the taxes for which the subsequent deed was given, it was held that the subsequent title, which will thus preclude possession, is not necessarily a legal tax title, although the tax on which it was based must have been one that was not merely arbitrary, but had some warrant in law. Sinclair v. Learned, 51 Mich. 336. See also Beard v. Sharrick, 67 Mich. 321.

1. Calhoun v. Fletcher, 63 Ala. 574. See also Ex p. Webb, 58 Ala. 109; Webb v. Carlisle, 65 Ala. 313.

2. In Louisiana, it is held that in the absence of a statute expressly authorizing it, the tax-title claimant may not proceed to evict the former owner, by rule to show cause. In that state the proceeding must be by petition and citation. Fischel v. Mercier, 32 La. Ann. 704; Mayenno v. Millandon, 32 La. Ann. 1123; State v. Judge, 27 La. Ann. 704; Schoembs v. Krieger, 33 La. Ann. 420.

Under section 4, Ohio Act March 2d, 1846, the tax-title claimant may recover possession by action of forcible detainer. Hannel v. Smith, 15 Ohio 134. But prior to that act, he could not. Kelley v. Hunter, 12 Ohio 216.

Mississippi Code 1880, section 538, providing for an action of unlawful detainer for the recovery of possession by the purchaser, and making a judgment in his favor therein, after one year, a bar to any action to controvert his title, is applicable alike to all sales of lands for taxes, and precludes all controversy, whatever may be the ground for assailing the title. McLemore v. Scales, 68 Miss. 47.

In summary proceedings under the charter of the city of Brooklyn, New York Laws 1854, ch. 384, as amended by New York Laws of 1862, ch. 63, and New York Laws, 1873, ch. 863, to recover the possession of land by the grantee in the tax deed, it is necessary to prove by competent common-law evidence, the service of the notice of sale required by said chapter (tit. 5, § 27), to be served before the owner can be divested of his title. The affidavit of such service required to be filed by the charter (tit. 5, § 28), is not competent evidence.

In People v. Andrews, 52 N. Y. 445, it is held that in order to confer jurisdiction in the proceedings for the recovery of possession under the laws mentioned above, an affidavit merely stating that the party in possession refused to deliver the same upon demand, is not sufficient.

3. Martin v. Langenstein, 43 La. Ann. 789.

4. Under Mississippi Code, section 587, providing that a party claiming under a tax title may apply to the chancery court to have his title quieted and confirmed, "and if it shall appear that complainant is entitled to a decree, it shall be rendered confirming the tax title against all persons claiming to hold the same by title existing at the time of sale," it was held that where plaintiff fails to show title in himself, it cannot avail him that his adversary's claim is imperfect. Peterson v. Kittridge, 65 Miss. 33.

This provision applies to every variety and species of such titles. Chrisman v. Currie, 60 Miss. 858; Belrne v. Burdette, 52 Miss. 795. See Belchor v. Mhoon, 47 Miss. 613; Metcalfe v. Perry, 66 Miss. 68, holding that the provision jurisdictions, actual possession by the tax-title claimant is essential; in others it is not.¹

The purchaser of an undivided interest may have his title thereto quieted and confirmed against persons denying his right and title to any and all parts and interests in the premises; it not being necessary for him to turn out his co-owners in so doing.²

In a suit by the tax-title claimant for possession, or to quiet title, it is competent for the defendant to show any irregularities in the tax proceedings that would vitiate the title; as, for instance, applies to tax titles at sales for taxes due the levee board.

Who May Controvert the Confirmation.

—Under Mississippi Act 1860, for the confirmation of tax titles, a mortgagee out of possession, the holder of a mechanic's lien, or the purchaser at a bankrupt sale, has, in any event, such an "interest or claim," whether valid or not, as entitles him to controvert the confirmation of the tax title. Meeks v. Whatley, 48 Miss. 337.

On a petition filed for confirmation under the 149th chapter of the Revised Code of Arkansas, a party will not be permitted to defend, who claims by answer to do so merely as "tenant in possession," and a demurrer to such answer is good; the presumption of law being, in such case, that the person answering holds under the purchaser and is his tenant or a mere tort-feasor; unless the possession of such respondent is adverse to the tax-title claimant, he has no right to oppose confirmation. Black v. Percifield, 1 Ark. 472.

1. In Kansas, the plaintiff must allege and prove an actual possession by himself or tenant. Douglass v. Nuzum, 16 Kan. 515; Eaton v. Giles, 5 Kan. 24; Sale v. Bugher, 24 Kan. 434; Pierce v. Thompson, 26 Kan. 714; Brenner v. Bigelow, 8 Kan. 496; Giles v. Ortman, 11 Kan. 65.

In Wisconsin, the decisions have been somewhat vacillating. At first it was held that the plaintiff, in order to bring an action to quiet title under § 29, ch. 141, Rev. Sts., of that state, must have actual and visible possession of the premises; Grimmer v. Sumner, 21 Wis. 179; but this decision was overruled in Taylor v. Rountree, 28 Wis. 391, where the court sustained an action under the statute, although the plaintiff was not in actual possession, but only had the constructive possession which the law attaches to the legal title. In a subsequent case, this decision was overruled, and Grimmer v.

Sumner, 21 Wis. 179 affirmed, Wals v. Grosvenor, 31 Wis. 681.

The Michigan Law 1865, p. 576, provides that "any person claiming title to land through the auditor general's deed executed upon the sale thereof for non-payment of taxes, may file a bill in chancery to quiet his title thereto without taking possession thereof," etc. In a proceeding in chancery to quiet title by one claiming through such a deed against one holding the lands under an adverse claimant, it was held: first, that the act does not authorize such a proceeding against a defendant in possession, its purpose being to extend the remedy by bill in equity to cases where the land was vacant, and where under the then existing law the complainant could not bring his bill without first taking possession; second, that under art. 6, § 27 of the state constitution, it was not competent for the legislature to authorize such a proceeding without providing a mode by which the defendant could have the benefit of a jury trial, if he so elected, where the right existed when the constitution was formed. Tabor v. Cook, 15 Mich. 323.

In Arkansas, possession by the purchaser is unnecessary. Bonnell v. Roane, 20 Ark. 114; Worthen v. Ratcliffe, 42 Ark. 330; Black v. Percifield, 1 Ark. 472; Evans v. Percifull, 5 Ark. 424; Moses v. Hawkins, 22 Ark. 550; Scott v. Watkins, 22 Ark. 556.

In Indiana, the purchaser must have received his deed before he is in a position to have his title quieted. Sharpe v. Dillman, 77 Ind. 280.

A pleading by one holding only a certificate of sale, which proceeds on the theory that he is entitled to the remedy, is bad, as he is entitled to nothing more than to be protected in the lien transferred to him by the state at the time of purchase. McDonald v. Geisendorff, 128 Ind. 153.

2. Hintrager v. Nightingale, 36 Fed. Rep. 847.

that the sale was made on a day unauthorized by law;¹ that the delinquent list and notice of time and place of sale were not published as required;² that the assessment roll was not filed, or was not received and approved by the appointed officers at the time required.³

The defendant cannot, in such a proceeding, litigate the validity of any claim the federal government may have to cancel a patent to the land granted by it for fraud practised in its procurement, with the view of showing that the land was not liable to taxation when sold for taxes.⁴

In some of the states there are statutes requiring the former owners to deposit in court the amount for which the land was sold, and all subsequently paid taxes, with interest, as a condition precedent to the right to defend an action by the tax-title claimant to bar their rights and interests.⁵

When the statute authorizes the holder of the tax title to exhibit a bill for its confirmation "when the period of redemption has expired," the general period applicable to the whole community is intended, not the exceptional and special period allowed to parties under disability; accordingly, a bill brought against minors interested in the land after the expiration of the former, but before the expiration of the latter, is not premature. But the

4. Chrisman v. Currie, 60 Miss. 858.

In Missouri, it is held that the fact that the sheriff sold two lots together, cannot be set up as a defense. Brown v. Walker, 11 Mo. App. 226. See also Wellshear v. Kelley, 69 Mo. 343.

5. Powell v. St. Croix County, 46 Wis. 211; Wakeley v. Mohr, 15 Wis. 609; Jarvis v. McBride, 18 Wis. 315; Orono v. Veazie, 57 Me. 517.

In Wisconsin, it is held that such a provision can be upheld only by construing it to apply to defenses based upon mere irregularities in the tax proceedings, and not to those which go to the groundwork of the tax itself. Philleo v. Hiles, 42 Wis. 527; Tierney v. Union Lumber Co., 47 Wis. 248; Smith v. Smith, 19 Wis. 615; 88 Am. Dec. 707.

Thus, such an action may be defended without a deposit, upon the ground that the assessor did not value defendant's property, nor any considerable portion of the lands in his town, from actual view, and did not inform himself in any manner of the actual or relative value of the lands, but valued them arbitrarily, and did not sign or certify the tax roll, nor make and annex thereto the required affidavit. Philleo v. Hiles, 42 Wis. 527.

The defendant may also, without a deposit, set up any facts which show that the plaintiff was incapable, as against him or his grantor, of taking title by tax deed, or by deed for the taxes of the particular years relied upon. Wilson v. Jarvis, 19 Wis. 597. See also Wakeley v. Nicholas, 16 Wis. 588; Tondro v. Cushman, 5 Wis. 279. But where the answer does not state any facts impeaching the equity or justice of the tax, but alleges only technical defenses and irregularities in the proceedings, the defendant must make the required deposit before he may interpose such defenses. Wakeley v. Nicholas, 16 Wis. 588; Knight v. Barnes, 25 Wis. 352.

And in order to sustain a judgment for the defendant, there must be proof and a finding of the fact that the required deposit was made. It is not sufficient that the answer alleges a deposit. Smith v. Smith, 19 Wis. 615; 88 Am. Dec. 707.

If the action by the tax-title claimant is commenced while a prior action in the same court by the former owner, to quiet his title against him, is pending, the plaintiff in the prior action should set up the pendency thereof, together with any other defense he may have, in such subsequent action, and ask for a stay therein until his action is determined. Wilson v. Jarvis, 19 Wis. 597.

proceeding to confirm leaves the right of redemption after the removal of the disability of infancy, unaffected.¹

2. By the Owner—a. TO SET ASIDE SALE AND DEED.—As a general rule, if there has been fraud, or any illegality or irregularity materially affecting the tax proceedings, the owner may institute an action to set aside the sale and conveyance based thereon.²

2. In Gray v. Coan, 23 Iowa 345, it was held that a petition in equity to set aside a tax deed, alleging that the complainant was the owner of certain land at the time of the sale of the same for taxes, and still continues to be; that he had redeemed from the sale and paid all the taxes due, and that notwithstanding these facts the defendant had in some way obtained a tax deed to the land, states a good cause of action.

In Yancey v. Hopkins, 1 Munf. (Va.) 419, it was held that if land be listed to a wrong person, sold as the property of such person, and conveyed by deed to the purchaser, the proper resort of the owner for relief is to a court of equity, by which the deed may be canceled and a release or reconveyance of the land decreed.

Evidence of a fraudulent combination between purchasers at the sale, to prevent competition in the bidding, is admissible in the first instance, in an action to set aside a deed based on such sale, although it is not shown that the defendant, who was a purchaser, was a party to such combination. Kerwer v. Allen, 31 Iowa 578. As to fraudulent combinations at the sale, see TAXATION, subd., Tax Sales.

In Simpson v. Edmiston, 23 W. Va. 675, it is held that where the deed is assailed and claimed to be invalid, by a plaintiff, and such deed is exhibited with, and made part of his bill, and it appears upon its face to be invalid, the court will not decline to declare it void, and set it aside merely because the plaintiff's bill did not specify the particular grounds on which the court deems it void.

In Kentucky, a suit to set aside the sale, on the ground of fraud, may be maintained by the owner, though not in possession of the land, as it is not a suit to quiet title. Herr v. Martin, 90 Ky. 377.

In Perkins v. Nugent, 45 Mich. 156, a proceeding against the validity of a tax deed, on the ground that for a portion of the time covered by it, a part of the lands in the same township had not been assessed, was not sustained; it not appearing that such lands were worth anything during that period, and it being shown, on the other hand, that certain classes of real estate were then exempt.

Collateral Attack.—In Louisiana, tax titles which are not mere simulations, may not be attacked collaterally. They are presumed to be valid until annulled in and by a revocatory action. Jurey v. Allison, 30 La. Ann. 1234; Lannes v. Workingmen's Bank, 29 La. Ann. 112; Gerac v. Guilbeau, 36 La. Ann. 843. But this rule does not apply to a petitory action in which the defendant alleges the tax sale as his title. In such case, the plaintiff may show the illegality of the title opposed to him, though it be a tax sale prima facie valid. Hickman v. Dawson, 33 La. Ann. 438.

United States Direct Tax Act—Power of Treasury Department.—The officers of the United States treasury department could not set aside a sale, nor vacate a title acquired at a sale, for direct taxes, and the assent of the purchaser to the setting aside of the sale, after he had conveyed lands to a third person, cannot affect the rights of the latter, unless he assented also. Billings v. Stark, 15 Fla. 297.

Parties Defendant.—A sheriff having sold land for taxes, and subsequently taken an assignment of one-half of the same from the purchaser, is properly made a party to a bill filed by the former owner of the land to set aside the tax sale. Twombly v. Kimbrough, 24 Ark. 459.

Under Rev. Sts. Texas, art. 1202, providing that in every suit against the estate of decedent, involving title to real estate, the executor or administrator, if any, and the heirs, shall be made parties defendant, the heirs are not nec-

But where the owner has allowed judgment for taxes to go by default, he may not subsequently, in a suit to set aside the sale, be heard to allege that a part of the taxes for which the judgment was rendered was illegal.¹

The right to have the tax title set aside is not confined to the former owner, but may be exercised by a mortgagee or other creditor, and perhaps by anyone who can show such an interest in the estate as would have entitled him to redeem.²

b. TO REMOVE CLOUD FROM TITLE.—A court of equity, by virtue of its general powers, will entertain a bill by the true owner, in possession, to remove a cloud upon his title, occasioned by a essary parties to an action to cancel a tax deed by the executor and sole devisee, in which defendant files a bill in reconvention in the nature of a cross-action of trespass to try title. Lufkin v. Galveston, 73 Tex. 340.

An action to annul the title derived to the state through tax proceedings, cannot be maintained against the auditor general, unless the state consents to the suit and designates that official to represent it as party defendant thereto. Burrill v. Auditor Gen'l, 46 Mich. 256.

Where, by tax proceedings absolutely void, lands have been adjudicated to the state, and subsequently the state transfers the same by adjudication to third parties, under Louisiana Act 107, of 1880, the owner in reclaiming his property, is not bound to make the state a party, and is not without remedy because the state is exempt from suit. Denègre v. Gêrac, 35 La. Ann. 952.

2. Miller v. Cook, 135 Ill. 190; Burton v. Perry, 146 Ill. 127.

In Connolly v. Connolly, 63 Iowa 202, a tax deed was set aside at the instance of a mortgagee, on the ground that it was procured by a conspiracy for the purpose of divesting the lien of his mortgage.

In Ohio, a judgment creditor having a lien upon the land when sold for taxes, may not file a bill in equity to avoid the sale as invalid, without first refunding the amount of the tax, penalty, and interest, or offering to do so. Gillett v. Webster, 15 Ohio 623.

In Iowa, by statute no person is permitted to question the title acquired by a treasurer's deed, without first showing that he, or the party under whom he claims title, had title to the property at the time of sale, or that the title was obtained from the United States or from the State of Iowa after the sale. See Varnum v. Shuler, 69 Iowa 92; Foster v. Ellsworth, 71 Iowa 262. This statute was designed only to prevent the interference of strangers. One who claims under a tax deed, though his claim may not be good as against a prior owner, may question the validity of a subsequent tax title. Adams v. Burdick, 68 Iowa 666.

Where a county claimed to have title at the time of sale by patent from the United States to the state, and from the state to it, it was held that the patent from the state to the county was prima facie evidence of its title, and sufficient for the purpose of enabling it to question the tax title, and that evidence of the patent from the United States to the state was unnecessary. Callanan v. Wayne County, 73 Iowa 709.

And in Hintrager v. Klene, 62 Iowa 605, it was held that, where the party questioning the tax title is allowed to testify that he was the owner of the property at the time of sale, and is not required to produce the record, evidence of his title, there is a sufficient basis for the introduction of other evidence assailing the tax title.

Michigan Comp. Laws, § 1130, debarring any person from questioning a tax title unless he shows that at the time of sale, or subsequently, he, or the person through whom he claims, holds a title acquired from the United States, or from the State of Michigan, is held not to apply to one who shows a title prima facie sufficient under common-law rules. And a prima facie case is established by producing such evidence as raises a presumption of title in the claimant, as all titles in the State of Michigan are supposed either to have been granted or else to have been originally recognized and confirmed by the United States or by the state. Gamble v. Horr, 40 Mich. 561.

The general rule is that, if the complainant's title is legal in its nature, he must be in possession of the premises before he can successfully invoke the aid of equity, in the absence of a statute to the contrary; since, if he is out of possession, he may, by bringing ejectment, test the validity of the instrument constituting the alleged cloud. Where, however, his title is an equitable one, possession is not essential; and the same is true in some jurisdictions where the lands in question are wild and unoccupied.²

In Lyon v. Alley, 130 U. S. 177, the court, by Lamar, J., said: "It is well settled by the decisions of this court and the state courts, that after land has been sold and a conveyance of some sort made to the purchaser, courts of equity have inherent jurisdiction to give relief to the owner against vexatious litigation and threatened injury to the market value of the land, by removing the cloud which such illegal sale, and the illegal claim arising from it, may cast upon the title."

Under the general equity powers conferred upon the superior court by the Massachusetts statutes of 1883, ch. 223, that tribunal has jurisdiction of a bill in equity to remove a cloud upon title resulting from an invalid tax sale. And the discretionary power given by Pub. Sts., ch. 176, §§ 1, 2, of that state, by which, in a proper case, a party may be ordered to bring an action at common law to try his title, does not limit its general authority. Smith v. Smith, 150 Mass. 73; Clouston v. Shearer, 99 Mass. 209.

A court of equity has jurisdiction where the owner of land is in possession, and the holder of a tax title holds it as a cloud over the title, refusing to prosecute it. Sharpleigh v. Surdam, 1 Flip. (U. S.) 472.

In Massachusetts, a sale of land by the collector, more than two years after the warrant for the collection of the tax was committed to his predecessor, is void, although within two years after the warrant was committed to the collector who made the sale, if the land was alienated by the owner after the assessment of the tax, and before the sale; and the grantee in possession may bring a bill in equity against the purchaser to remove the cloud from his title, if the purchaser has recorded his tax deed, and refuses to release to the purchaser, and claims to be the owner of the land. Russell v. Deshon, 124 Mass. 342.

In Wisconsin, a tax certificate is such a claim to land as affects its value, and throws such a cloud on the title as to bring it within the purview of the statute and the equity powers of the court. Dean v. Madison, 9 Wis. 402; Maxon v. Ayers, 28 Wis. 612; Hamilton v. Fond du Lac, 25 Wis. 490.

In Chaffee v. Detroit, 53 Mich. 373, it is held that a void conveyance of property, to satisfy a special sewer assessment, casts a cloud on the title, which the owner and occupant of the premises cannot force the municipality to prosecute at law, and he may maintain a bill in equity to clear his title from such cloud.

In Arkansas, in a proceeding to dispel cloud from title, the affidavit required by the statute to be filed before action for the recovery of land, or the possession thereof, is not necessary. Chaplin v. Holmes, 27 Ark. 415.

Kellogg*, 16 Mich. 135; Busbee v. Lewis, 85 N. Car. 332; Clark v. Covenant Mut. L. Ins. Co., 52 Mo. 272; Shell v. Martin, 19 Ark. 139, which holds to the contrary, was disproved by Mr. Justice Fairchild in Apperson v. Ford, 23 Ark. 746, and has been discredited by the later decisions in that state. Branch v. Mitchell, 24 Ark. 421; Byers v. Danley, 27 Ark. 77; Miller v. Neiman, 27 Ark. 233; Chaplin v. Holmes, 27 Ark. 414; Sale v. McLean, 29 Ark. 612; Crane v. Randolph, 30 Ark. 579; Lawrence v. Zimpleman, 37 Ark. 643.

Possession by a duly authorized agent, having full and complete charge of the premises, will sustain the equitable jurisdiction in favor of the owners of the legal title who are non-residents.¹ If the complainant is in the actual possession, that fact should be alleged in the bill.²

But although actual possession is averred, if the fact is not established, but on the other hand the defendant is shown to be in possession, and nothing appears to prevent proceedings at law, the bill cannot be maintained.³

And an averment in the bill that the defendant has entered upon the premises and kept the complainant out by personal force and violence, has the effect of negating a fact that is necessary to the theory of the bill.⁴

The complainant must establish a reasonably clear title; he must proceed upon the strength of his own title, and not upon the weakness of his adversary's.⁵

But it would seem that actual possession established by the complainant, is proof sufficient of title to authorize the relief sought, in the absence of proof of title in someone else.⁶

While, as a general rule, in an action to remove a cloud upon the title, the facts which show the apparent validity of the instrument which is said to constitute the cloud, and, also, the facts showing its invalidity, are required to be stated in the complaint, yet when the instrument, which constitutes the cloud, is a tax deed, which under the statutes is declared to be prima facie evidence of title, the name of the instrument is sufficient for the purpose of showing an apparent title.⁷

It is not every tax deed that will constitute a cloud upon the title, so as to justify the interposition of equity. The rule for Wild and Unoccupied Lands.—Mathews v. Marks, 44 Ark. 436; Gould v. Sternburg, 105 Ill. 488; Gage v. Rohrbach, 56 Ill. 262; Hardin v. Jones, 86 Ill. 313; Whitney v. Stevens, 97 Ill. 482.

Under the Mississippi Code of 1871, § 975, a bill in equity may be maintained by the true owner against a party in possession to cancel, as clouds upon the title, a void tax deed, and a title bond from one who never had title. But the jurisdiction is exhausted when the clouds are removed, and the court may not put the complainant in possession. Wofford v. Bailey, 57 Miss. 239.

In Wisconsin, the holder of the legal title, though not in possession, may, independently of § 29, ch. 141, Rev. Sts. of that state, maintain a suit in equity, in the nature of a bill quia timet, to remove the cloud upon his title, when the invalidity of the hostile claim cannot be established by any record, but must be proven by extrinsic evidence. And in such a suit, the court may decree the reformation, surrender, or cancellation of the instrument constituting the cloud, or the reformation or cancellation of records, and the execution of deeds or releases. Pier v. Fond du Lac, 38 Wis. 476, overruling Gunderson v. Cook, 33 Wis. 551, as to the necessity of actual possession in order to maintain the bill quia timet independently of the statute, and criticising Shaffer v. Whelpley, 37 Wis. 334.

determining the question may be stated thus: When the deed is void upon its face, or the tax proceedings do not show a compliance with the statutory requirements, so that an inspection of the record and a comparison of it with the law will afford a decisive test of its illegality, it does not constitute a cloud, and in such cases, equity will not interpose.¹ When, however, the illegality or defect does not appear upon the record, but must be shown by evidence aliunde, so that the record would make out a prima facie right in the purchaser, and the evidence to rebut this case may possibly be lost, or be unavailable from death of witnesses, or other causes, or when the deed would, by statute, be presumptive evidence of a good title in the holder, so that he might rely upon it until the illegalities were established, equity will exercise jurisdiction and afford relief on the ground that a cloud exists or is imminent.²

Thus, where it appears on the face of the deed that several tracts of land were sold together for the taxes due on the whole, Crane v. Randolph, 30 Ark. 579; or the description of the land embraced in the deed is too vague and uncertain, Busbee v. Macy, 85 N. Car. 329, the deed is void, and casts no cloud upon the owner's title.

In Wisconsin, a tax deed upon a prior sale, though made and recorded after one upon a later sale, does not cast any cloud upon the title of the holder of the latter. Truesdell v. Rhodes, 26 Wis. 215.

2. Marquette, etc., R. Co. v. Marquette, 35 Mich. 504.

Under Oregon Comp. Laws 1874, p. 767, a tax deed is prima facie evidence of title, and of the regularity of the prior proceedings, which evidence can be overthrown only by the proof of certain facts dehors the deed. Therefore, the deed constitutes a cloud upon the title of the property. Tilton v. Oregon Cent., etc., Road Co., 3 Sawyer (U. S.) 22.

The same is true in California. Huntington v. Central Pac. R. Co., 2 Sawyer (U. S.) 503.

In Texas, a tax deed to property liable for taxation and sold in accordance with law, gives a good and perfect title which can only be impeached for actual fraud. Such a deed would, therefore, cast a cloud upon the title of lands regularly sold, but not liable for the tax, to remove which equity may be invoked. Cassiano v. Ursuline Academy, 64 Tex. 673.

"The true test," says Field, C. J., for the court, in Pixley v. Huggins, 15 Cal. 129, "by which the question whether a deed would cast a cloud upon the title of the plaintiff may be determined, is this: Would the owner of the property in an action of ejectment, brought by the adverse party, founded upon the deed, be required to offer evidence to defeat a recovery? If such proof would be necessary, the cloud would exist; if the proof would be unnecessary, no shade would be cast by the presence of the deed. If the action would fall of its own weight without proof in rebuttal, no occasion could arise for the equitable interposition of the court; as in the case of a deed void upon its face, or which was the result of proceedings void upon their face, requiring no extrinsic evidence to disclose their illegality. All actions arising upon instruments of that character must necessarily fail." See also similar observations by Chancellor Walworth in Van Doren v. New York, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 388.

Where the defendant, in an action to set aside the sale, asserts the validity of the sale, he may not, on appeal, claim that the plaintiff is not entitled to equitable relief because the tax sale proceed-

A sale of the lands by the owner, pending a suit to remove a cloud from the title, will not operate to defeat the suit; the decree obtained will enure to the benefit of his grantee.¹

An attaching creditor may maintain a bill in equity to remove the cloud of a tax deed upon the title of land of the debtor which he has attached.²

c. CONDITIONS OF RELIEF.—When the owner seeks in a court of equity to have a tax deed set aside, and the cloud created thereby removed from his title, the familiar maxim, "he who asks equity must do equity," will be applied, and he will be required to pay the amount for which the land was sold, and all subsequently paid taxes, with interest, as a condition to relief.³

Where, in an action to set aside a tax sale and certificate on the ground of the illegality of a portion of the taxes, the record discloses no means of determining what amount of the tax was valid, the court will not require payment of any amount as a condition of relief.⁴ If there is doubt as to which of several ings have not progressed far enough to be entitled to a presumption of regularity, and, therefore, to cast a cloud on the title of the plaintiff. Wilcox v. Rochester, 129 N. Y. 247.

In Indiana, a complaint to set aside the tax sale and to cancel the certificate, on the ground that the plaintiff had tendered the amount of the taxes and the interest thereon to the purchaser, is insufficient upon demurrer, unless the plaintiff also brings the money into court, or offers to pay it to the purchaser upon obtaining the relief sought. Lancaster v. DuHadway, 97 Ind. 565.

Where the party attacking the tax title avers that he is ready and willing, and offers to pay the holder the amount paid by him at the tax sale, together with all subsequent taxes, interest, and costs, it is error for the court to render judgment setting the tax sale aside, without requiring the payment of the sum so tendered. Corbin v. Woodbine, 33 Iowa 297.

In Kansas, before a suit is commenced to set aside a tax-sale certificate, the plaintiff must pay or tender all taxes embraced therein which the records show are valid, and which he is under obligation to pay. *Miller v. But where the holder of the tax title sues for partition, and the owner of the patent title pleads, in bar of the action, a former adjudication declaring the tax title invalid, he should not be required to refund the taxes paid by the plaintiff, as he is not asking for affirmative relief. *Thomsen v. And when a mortgagee of real estate asserts in equity his right as against the tax sale of the same, alleged by him to have been made collusively in conjunction with the mortgagor, for the purpose of getting rid of the mortgage for the mortgagor's benefit, whether he proceed against the purchaser alone, or against the purchaser and the mortgagor, it is not necessary for him to tender payment of the taxes for which the lands were sold. *Mendenhall v. defendants is entitled to the money, it should be ordered to be paid into court for the benefit of the parties entitled.¹

VIII. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—(See also LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, vol. 13, p. 667).—In many of the states there are what are known as special or short statutes of limitations, confining the right to institute actions for the recovery of real estate sold for the non-payment of taxes to a period of time much shorter than that which existed at the common law for the trial of land titles. The design of these statutes is to encourage purchases at tax sales, by forcing an early determination of the legality of the sale and of the title founded thereon. The statutes designate the time from which the period begins to run; the most usual being from the time the deed is recorded.²

In some cases the period commences from the time of sale. Gomer v. Chaffee, 6 Colo. 314; McDougall v. Monlezum, 39 La. Ann. 1005.

In some jurisdictions the true date of sale is held to be the time when the purchaser receives his deed, and not when the lands are struck off. The term sale is construed to mean a complete sale, which vests the title in the purchaser, and places him in a position to have the legality thereof tested in the courts. Eldridge v. Kuehl, 27 Iowa 160; Henderson v. Oliver, 28 Iowa 20; McCreedy v. Sexton, 29 Iowa 356; 4 Am. Rep. 214; Hurley v. Street, 29 Iowa 429; Thomas v. Stickle, 32 Iowa 71; *Douglass v. Under the Pennsylvania Act of 1804, limiting the action to five years from the sale, it was held, in opposition to the previous decision of Parish v. Stevens, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 298, that, as ejectment would not lie against a vacant or unoccupied tenement, the statute should be construed not to begin until the premises were occupied, upon the principle that it could not have been intended to apply to a condition of affairs that precluded the right of action. Waln v. Shearman, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 357; 11 Am. Dec. 624; Cranmer v. Hall, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 37.

Subsequently, however, when the right to maintain ejectment for unoccupied premises had been conferred by statute, it was held that the statute began to run in favor of the purchaser at the time the sale was perfected by deed; he being constructively in possession from that time. Robb v. Bowen, 9 Pa. St. 71; Johnston v. Jackson, 70 Pa. St. 164; Sheik v. McElroy, 20 Pa. St. 31; Burd v. Patterson, 22 Pa. St. 219.

In Arkansas, the statute begins to run against the former owner, unless he is within the saving clause, at the date of sale, whether the purchaser is in the actual possession or not. Mitchell v. Etter, 22 Ark. 178.

In Nebraska, the statute commences from the time the tax-title claimant takes actual possession, and not from the time the deed is recorded. Baldwin v. Merriam, 16 Neb. 199.

The Illinois statute provides that "hereafter every person in the actual possession of lands or tenements under claim and color of title made in good faith, and who shall for seven successive years after the passage of the act continue in such possession, and shall also, during such time, pay all taxes legally assessed on such lands or tenements, shall be held and adjudged to be the legal owner of said lands or tenements to the extent and according to the purport of his or her paper title." For cases arising under this act, see Irving v. Brownell, 11 Ill. 402; Goeway v. Urig, 18 Ill. 238; Schenck v. White, 53 Ill. 358; Clark v. Lyon, 45 Ill. 388;

In general, these provisions are applicable only to actions instituted for the recovery of the land, and not to equitable suits to quiet title thereto.¹ Nor have they any application, as against the original owner, where the person purchasing the tax title is precluded by his relation from becoming a purchaser; as, in such case, the question involved is one of fraud, and not the validity of the tax-sale proceedings.² Generally speaking, the intention and

Under the Missouri Rev. Law of 1872, which does not confer upon the holder of a tax certificate the right of possession before receiving the deed, when such holder goes into possession under his certificate, he is a trespasser and his possession adverse, and the right of action against him accrues so soon as the entry is made, and the period of limitation begins to run from such event. Parsons v. Viets, 96 Mo. 408.

In Kansas, where the original owner in possession commences an action challenging the validity of a tax deed within the time prescribed by the statute, and the action fails otherwise than upon the merits, he may commence a new action therefor at any time within one year thereafter, although the period of limitations has expired, or if sued by the holder of the tax title, he may assert his rights in an answer by way of counter-claim. Myers v. Coonradt, 28 Kan. 211.

And if the holder of a tax deed begins his action for the recovery of the premises within the time limited by law, and transfers his title to another party and dismisses his action by leave of court, his transferee may commence a new action within one year after the dismissal. Thornburgh v. Cole, 27 Kan. 490; Shively v. Beeson, 24 Kan. 352.

Where, under the statute, the purchaser can bring no suit for possession after five years from the sale, and the owner cannot, after that time, question the validity of the sale, and such purchaser has been prevented from asserting his rights in a court of law by unfounded and protracted litigation, until the statute has run against him, he is not without remedy in equity. *Union Mut. The ten years limitation in the Michigan Laws 1842, p. 133, is not applicable in favor of one in possession under some other claim at the time of obtaining the tax deed; it intends that the party seeking the benefit shall enter into the actual possession under the tax deed. Gilman v. Riopelle, 18 Mich. 145.

The special limitation contained in section 1709, Mississippi Code 1871, has reference to sales by tax collectors, and to no others. Clay v. Moore, 65 Miss. 81. See also Lewis v. Siebles, 65 Miss. 251.

And the special limitation imposed by section 902 of the Iowa Code, applies only to actions between the holder of the tax title and the owner of the land at the time of the sale, or those claiming through him. Actions between the former and other claimants are controlled by the general Statute of Limitations. Lockridge v. Daggett, 54 Iowa 332; Knight v. Campbell, 70 Iowa 730.

2. Jordan v. Brown, 56 Iowa 281.

Thus in Duffitt v. Tuhan, 28 Kan. 292, it was held that where a tenant in the actual possession of lands fraudulently acquires a tax title thereto, the statute applicable to bar his landlord from maintaining an action to set aside effect of these statutes are to cure all irregularities in the mode or manner of assessment, levy, and sale which, within the limitation fixed, might have invalidated the title;¹ they do not operate as a bar where there was no assessment, levy, or sale, in fact, or where the taxes were paid prior to the sale, or the land was not subject to taxation, or the like.² As a rule, these provisions operate in favor of the party in possession to bar the title of whichever such title is the one for relief on the ground of fraud; and in such case the statute does not commence to run until the fraud is discovered, and for this purpose there is no constructive discovery; if the tenant fraudulently obtains a deed in his own name and records it, it is not notice to the landlord which would put the statute in motion; the landlord and his grantees would be entitled to the full time limited by law after the actual discovery. To the same effect are Doyle v. Doyle, 33 Kan. 721; Carithers v. Weaver, 7 Kan. 10; Taylor v. Miles, 5 Kan. 498; 9 Am. Dec. 558; McGee v. Holmes, 63 Miss. 50.

The same principle has been applied to the case of a purchase by an agent in fraud of his principal, McMahon v. McGraw, 26 Wis. 614; Krutz v. Fisher, 8 Kan. 90; a tenant in common in fraud of his co-tenants, Austin v. Barrett, 44 Iowa 488; and a trustee in fraud of the co-tenants of his cestuis que trustent, Sorenson v. Coenen, 30 Wis. 209; Morris v. Carmichael, 68 Wis. 133; Urquhart v. Wescott, 65 Wis. 35.

In Iowa, failure to carry forward upon the tax list the delinquent taxes for which the sale sought to be avoided was made, is cured by the running of the statute. Griffin v. Bruce, 73 Iowa 126; Collins v. Valleau, 79 Iowa 626.

In Pennsylvania, the statute cures failure to file a surplus bond. Iddings v. Cairns, 2 Grant Cas. (Pa.) 88; Burd v. Patterson, 22 Pa. St. 219; Rogers v. Johnson, 67 Pa. St. 43.

In Mississippi, the running of the statute protects the title against any defective or irregular compliance with legislative, and not constitutional, requirements in connection with the sale; as, for example, the failure of the board of supervisors to examine and receive the assessment roll at the required time, or sale of land on a wrong day. Nevin v. Bailey, 62 Miss. 433.

Where the assessment was made by the officers of the town in which the lands were not, and never had been situated, and whose officers had never before exercised jurisdiction over the land, a deed issued upon a sale based upon such assessment is void, and the Statute of Limitations cannot be invoked in its support. Wadleigh v. Marathon County Bank, 58 Wis. 546; Smith v. Sherry, 54 Wis. 114.

In Iowa, the statute does not cure the failure to give the requisite notice of the expiration of the period of redemption. Wilson v. Russell, 73 Iowa 395. Where the deed recites as proof of service of the expiration notice, an affidavit of the publisher of a newspaper, showing the publication of the same, it is sufficient, although the proper proof of service was not filed with the treasurer, to put the statute in motion. Bolin v. Francis, 72 Iowa 619; Trulock v. Bentley, 67 Iowa 602.

In Louisiana, the assessment of the land in the name of another than the true owner is a radical defect not cured by the statute. Lague v. Boagni, 32 La. Ann. 912; Davenport v. Knox, 34 La. Ann. 407.

But in Barrow v. Wilson, 39 La. Ann.

party—the original owner, or the tax-title claimant—is, during the period prescribed, under the necessity of resorting to legal proceedings to obtain possession.¹

When neither party is in actual possession, a valid tax deed draws after it constructive legal possession, and makes it incumbent upon the original owner to bring his action within the period prescribed; and failing to do this, the title of the grantee in the tax deed becomes perfect, as if he had been in actual possession.²

403, where the property belonged to one Hanley, and the assessment was made in the name of Handley, and the purchaser had open and notorious possession under the tax title for the requisite period, the defect in the assessment was held to be cured by the statute. In this case, it was also held that the want of personal notice to the owner, his agent or curator, was only a relative nullity, and cured by the statute, Aff'g Allen v. Courett, 24 La. Ann. 24; Munholland v. Scott, 33 La. Ann. 1045, and overruling Person v. O'Neal, 32 La. Ann. 237.

Under section 92 of the Alabama Rev. Laws 1858, making the deed, when executed in substantial conformity to its provisions, prima facie evidence that the land described therein was subject to taxation for the years stated therein, and that the taxes were not paid prior to the sale, the Statute of Limitations of five years is a good defense to the purchaser in possession, although the taxes had been paid at the time of sale. Lassitter v. Lee, 68 Ala. 287. See also Pugh v. Youngblood, 69 Ala. 296.

And in Missouri, where the deed is valid on its face and has been recorded for more than three years before the institution of the suit, the special Statute of Limitations is a complete defense, and evidence is inadmissible to show that there was no assessment or levy of taxes on the land, or any judgment therefor, for the year for which the land was sold. Hill v. Atterbury, 88 Mo. 114.

In Kansas, a tax deed regular on its face, containing a perfect description of the land, and of record, the time prescribed, is protected by the statute from impeachment by evidence that the description on the assessment roll and in the certificate of sale are fatally defective. Maxson v. Huston, 22 Kan. 643. But the statute has no application to a case where there had been a tender of the full amount required to redeem before the execution and delivery of the tax deed. Wilson v. Reasoner, 37 Kan. 663.

In Wisconsin, it is held that where the grantee has been in the possession under his deed for three years next succeeding the record thereof, the deed may not be impeached because of an invalid assessment, Oconto County v. Jerrard, 46 Wis. 317; Marsh v. Clark County, 42 Wis. 502; or because the price of a United States revenue stamp was included in the amount for which the land was sold. Milledge v. Coleman, 47 Wis. 184.

In Knox v. Cleveland, 13 Wis. 245, it is suggested by the chief justice, that the only condition of things to which the statute will not apply is the want of authority ab initio of the taxing officers to put the taxing power in motion.

2. Hill v. Kricke, 11 Wis. 442; Whitney v. Marshall, 17 Wis. 174; Austin

It has been held that when the actual possession is disputed, and the original owner constantly contests with the tax-title claimant for it, and exercises frequent and numerous acts of ownership and possession during the period of limitation, the necessity for action within the prescribed time is upon the tax-title claimant.¹

If, however, the deed is void on its face, the statute will not run in favor of the holder thereof, although he has been in actual, open and notorious possession of the premises for the full statutory period.²

The statute prescribing a period of limitation may be made retrospective, and apply to titles founded upon sales made when there was no limitation;³ and the period existing at the time of sale may be shortened by subsequent legislation;⁴ provided, in

In Wisconsin, if the deed is void on its face, and the premises remain vacant and unoccupied for the statutory period, the tax title is barred, as the constructive possession is with the original owner, and the necessity for action on the tax-title claimant. *Cutler v. In Gomer v. Chaffee, 6 Colo. 314, Elbert, C. J., said: "It is difficult to see how the Statute of Limitations can avail a defendant holding a void deed. There was nothing for the statute to operate upon; nothing for it to run in favor of or against; nothing to set it in motion. The deed was void. It did not give him constructive possession, nor the right of actual possession."

But in Wisconsin, if the premises are actually occupied by the tax-title claimant for the period of limitation next after recording the deed, all opposing claims are barred, notwithstanding the deed may be void on its face. Edgerton v. Bird, 6 Wis. 527; 70 Am. Dec. 473; Lindsay v. Fay, 25 Wis. 460; Peck v. Comstock, 6 Fed. Rep. 22; Leffingwell v. Warren, 2 Black (U. S.) 599.

either case, that a reasonable portion of the time limited remains after the passage of the statute in which the right may be asserted. And when the statute existing at the time of sale has not fully run, the period may be extended, as such legislation affects the remedy and does not impair the obligation of the contract.¹ But when the bar is complete in favor of the tax-title claimant, there is vested in him an absolute title which may not be impaired by subsequent legislation.²

The statutes usually contain a saving clause in favor of owners under disability at the time of sale.³ But a disability of the owner at the time of sale cannot have the effect to extend the time within which the tax-title claimant is required to bring his action for the recovery of the property; the time is extended to the person under disability because he is supposed not to be cognizant of his rights, or not able to assert them; but rights may be asserted against a person under disability, and the same reason exists why the claimant of the rights should be diligent in asserting them, as in a case where they are to be asserted against a person not under disability.⁴

Under a statute giving a minor five years after the removal of his disability to institute his action for the recovery of the land from the tax-title claimant, it was held that an action by the minor's grantee was barred in five years from the date of the conveyance.⁵

TEACH; TEACHER—(See also EDUCATION, vol. 6, p. 158; PARENT AND CHILD, vol. 17, p. 331; SCHOOLS, vol. 21, p. 748).—A teacher is not an officer in the ordinary sense of the word. Teach and Instruct.—In the case of an outdoor apprenticeship, there is an implication that the master is to perform his covenant "to teach and instruct" at the place where he and his apprentice and the latter's parent resided at the date of the deed; Eaton v. Western, 9 Q. B. Div. 636, overruling Royce v. Charlton, 8 Q. B. Div. 1; but it would seem there would be no such implication in an indoor appren-

This definition, however, hardly coincides with the various interpretations given to the word, as used in different statutes, by the courts,² as will appear from an examination of the cases given in the note.³

3. In a statute allowing damages for injury happening by reason of an insufficient highway, to any person, team or carriage, the term "team" has been held to include a horse driven with other horses unharnessed and loose along the road. Elliott v. Lisbon, 57 N. H. 27.

And within the same statute it was held that one may recover for injuries to a sled and load of coal thereon. The court, by Sargeant, J., said: "We have no doubt that the legislature intended to include in the word 'team,' in the first section, the animal or animals that drew or carried the load, whether one or many, or that were driven over the highway, whether in harness or otherwise." Conway v. Jefferson, 46 N. H. 523.

A Connecticut statute provided that, "When any vehicle of the above description (that is, any 'vehicle for the conveyance of persons') shall meet or overtake a team in the public highway and shall have occasion to pass the same, the teamster shall," etc., etc. It was contended for the plaintiff that the term "team," as used in the statute, included and described a vehicle driven by the plaintiff and not designed for nor carrying any load. The court, while admitting that ordinarily a "team" would include such a vehicle, held that in the statute in question the term meant a vehicle, with the animals drawing it, used for carrying loads, as distinguished from one used for carrying persons. It said: "It is enacted in the third section that when 'any vehicle of the above description shall meet or overtake a team, the teamster shall, when necessary and practicable, turn his team,' etc., etc. Is it possible that the legislature meant to make no distinction between a 'vehicle for the conveyance of persons,' named in the first section, and a team,' named in the third section? We think the distinction is perfectly obvious. One has reference to the conveyance of persons—the other, to property. When vehicles for the conveyance of persons meet, each is to turn to the right. When such vehicles meet or overtake a team, the teamster shall, when necessary and practicable, turn his team so far on one side of the road as to give such vehicle an opportunity to pass, thus giving the teamster his choice as to the side of the road and not compelling him to turn to the right. Suppose these parties had met on the public highway, and the defendant had turned to the left in order to pass; would the plaintiff have yielded to him, and allowed him to choose his side of the road, because he was a teamster and driving a team?" Hotchkiss v. Hoy, 41 Conn. 577.

The Driver is no Part of the Team.—Webst. Dict.; Dexter v. Canton Toll-bridge Co., 79 Me. 563, citing Webst. Dict. That case was upon the Maine statute, providing that a person should not be entitled to recover damages for the injuries sustained by the breaking down of a toll-bridge, if the weight he was transporting "exceeded forty-five hundred pounds, exclusive of the team and carriage." It was held that the driver formed no part of the team, and that his weight was to be computed as part of the load.

Exemption Statutes.—Within the meaning of an exemption law, a team is one or more horses, with their harness and vehicle to which they are customarily attached for use. Dains v. Prosser, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 291; Brown v. Davis, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 44.

One Horse.—It has been settled that "one horse" is covered by and included in the word "team," as used in the New York statutes exempting the "team" of a householder, etc., from execution. Harthouse v. Rikers, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 606; Wilcox v. Howley, 31 N. Y. 653; Dains v. Prosser, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 290; Lockwood v. Younglove, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 505; Knapp v. O'Neil, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 317; Finnin v. Malloy, 33 N. Y. Super. Ct. 182; Hoyt v. Van Alostyne, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 568; Hutchinson v.

TEAMSTER.—One who drives horses and a wagon for the purpose of carrying goods for hire.¹ Also one who drives a team.²

Chamberlin, 11 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 248. In the last case it was said: "If this were not so, a man so poor that he could procure but a single horse to assist in supporting his family, could not have the benefit of the exemption. But if he had two horses, they would be protected only while in actual use to make a team; it is as necessary that the horses should be harnessed together as that there should be more than one. Again, suppose that while two horses are harnessed together and in actual use, one of them should meet with an accident and be killed, or be suddenly taken sick and die, the other would thereby become instantly liable to be seized for debt."

Harness and Vehicle.—In New York it is clear that the word "team," is not confined to the beasts harnessed together. It embraces the harness and vehicle with which the beasts are commonly used, and without which they would be of comparatively little value to the debtor. Harthouse v. Rikers, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 606; Eastman v. Caswell, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 75; Van Buren v. Loper, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 388; Dains v. Prosser, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 290; Hutchinson v. Chamberlin, 11 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 248. Contra, Morse v. Keyes, 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 18.

But the vehicle must be shown affirmatively to be part of a "team," i. e., it must be the vehicle to which "one or two horses are customarily attached for use." Brown v. Davis, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 43.

Team-Work.—Some of the statutes exempt a team "kept and used for team-work." "Team-work means work done by a team as a substantial part of a man's business, as in farming, staging, express carrying, drawing of freight, peddling, the transportation of material used or dealt in as a business. This is clearly distinguishable from what is circumstantial to one's business, as a matter of convenience in getting to and from it, or as a means of going from place to place to solicit patronage, or to settle or make collections, or to see persons for business purposes. It is plainly distinguishable from family use and convenience, pleasure, exercise, or recreation; none of these uses of a horse are suggested by the expression 'kept and used for team-work.'" Hickok v. Thayer, 49 Vt. 370.

In Webster v. Orne, 45 Vt. 40, it was held, where the owner of a horse had driven it himself and let others drive it; but afterwards, and prior to the attachment, had used it upon his farm for farm work, that it was exempt as engaged in team-work. See also Mundell v. Hammond, 40 Vt. 647; Sullivan v. Davis, 50 Vt. 646; Rowell v. Powell, 53 Vt. 304.

A lessee's covenant in an agricultural lease, to provide "team-work," extends to other than agricultural work—e. g., hauling coals; but it does not oblige the lessee to find a cart, plough, or other machine that may be necessary for the performance of the work. Marlborough v. Osborn, 5 B. & S. 67.

Team Embraces the Idea of Live Stock.

—In Inman v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 60 Iowa 460, the court, by Day, C. J., said: "Whilst it may be admitted that the term stock does not embrace the idea of a team, it cannot, nevertheless, be denied that the term 'team' embraces the idea of live stock. The word team means two or more horses, oxen or other beasts, harnessed together to the same vehicle for driving. A team, therefore, is composed of live stock, and cannot exist without it. It would be exceedingly technical to hold that two horses, when harnessed and hitched together to a wagon, cease to fall under the designation of live stock."

2. Teamster in an Exemption Statute.

—In Elder v. Williams, 16 Nev. 416, it was said: "The court instructed the jury that, 'To be a teamster, within the meaning of the law and of the statute concerning exemptions, a man need not necessarily drive his team. In the same sense of the statute, one is a teamster who is engaged with his own team or teams in the business of teaming; that is to say, in the business of hauling freight for other parties for a consideration, by which he habitually supports himself and family, if he has one.' We think the instruction is correct." And see generally, upon the construction of the term "teamster," as used in an exemption statute, the following California cases: Brusie v. Griffith, 34 Cal. 306; 91 Am. Dec. 695; Dove v. Nunan, 62 Cal. 400; Forsyth v. Bower, 54 Cal. 639. See also TEAM.

I. DEFINITION.—A telegraph is an apparatus or machine used to transmit intelligence to a distance by means of electricity. A telegram is a message or dispatch transmitted by the telegraph.¹

1. Of Telegraphs.—Gray on Telegraphs, § 1; Chesapeake, etc., Teleph. Co. v. Baltimore, etc., Tel. Co., 66 Md. 399; 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 213; 59 Am. Rep. 167; Anderson's L. Dict.

"An instrument or apparatus, which by means of iron wires, conducting the electric fluid, conveys intelligence to any given distance with the velocity of lightning." Webster's Dict.

The word was at one time used to indicate "a machine for communicating intelligence from a distance by various signals or movements previously agreed on; which signals represent letters, words or ideas, which can be transmitted from one station to another as far as the signals can be seen." Webster's Dict.

"The word 'telegraph' is now generally understood as referring to the entire system of appliances used in the transmission of telegraphic messages by electricity, consisting of: 1st, a battery or other source of electric power; 2d, a line wire or conductor for conveying the electric current from one station to another; 3d, the apparatus for transmitting, interrupting, and if necessary, reversing, the electric current at pleasure; and 4th, the indicator, or signalling instrument. See Imperial Dict." Hock-

The term telephone, in a general sense, applies to any instrument or apparatus which transmits sound beyond the limits of ordinary audibility. Technically it is restricted to an instrument or device which transmits the voice of the speaker by means of electricity.¹

A question as to the exact meaning of the word "telegraph" is whether, when used in a statute, it includes telephones. The definition given above would include a telephone, and, as a rule, a statute concerning telegraphs, in the absence of special controlling conditions, may apply to telephones as well.²

ett v. State, 105 Ind. 250; 11 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 577; 55 Am. Rep. 210.
1. Of Telephones. — Anderson's L. Dict.

An Indiana statute regulating telephones provided that the charge for a single telephone for one person should not exceed three dollars per month. The company exceeded this charge, and when indicted for so doing, defended on the ground that they had furnished more than one instrument to the relator. But all the instruments furnished, together constituted nothing more than the apparatus ordinarily used for telephonic communication. It was held that the word "telephone" embraced the whole instrument, as made up of these parts, and that the statute had been violated. The court, by Niblack, J., said: "In a general sense, the word telephone applies to any instrument or apparatus which transmits sound beyond the limits of ordinary audibility. The speaking tubes used for conveying the sounds of the voice from one room to another in large buildings, or a stretched cord or wire attached to vibrating membranes or discs, by which the voice is carried to a distant point, are, strictly speaking, telephones. But since the recent discoveries in telephony, the name is technically and primarily restricted to an instrument or device which transmits sound by means of electricity and wires similar to telegraph wires. In a secondary sense, however, being the sense in which it is most commonly understood, the word 'telephone' constitutes a generic term, having reference to the art of telephony as an institution, but more particularly to the apparatus as an entirety, ordinarily used in the transmission, as well as in the reception, of telephonic messages." Hockett v. State, 105 Ind. 559; 11 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 577; 55 Am. Rep. 209. See also Central Union Teleph. Co. v. Bradbury, 106 Ind. 1.

2. "Telegraph" Embraces Telephones.

St. Rep. 143. Telegraph "includes any apparatus for transmitting messages or other communications by means of electric signals." Anderson's L. Dict. Thus, under an "act to incorporate and regulate telegraph companies," a corporation may be organized to operate a telephone line and may condemn a route for it. State v. Central New Jersey Teleph. Co., 53 N. J. L. 341; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 1; Wisconsin Teleph. Co. v. Oshkosh, 62 Wis. 32; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 538. And this, although the telephone was not known when the act was passed. New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Southern, etc., Tel. Co., 53 Ala. 211; Atty. Gen'l v. Edison Teleph. Co., 6 Q. B. Div. 244; 29 Moak's Rep. 602. So, also, a statute providing for the locality of suits against telegraph companies, includes telephone companies. Franklin v. Northwestern Teleph. Co., 69 Iowa 97.

Telephone companies are also held to come within the provisions of statutes concerning the taxation of telegraph companies. Iowa Union Teleph. Co. v. Board of Equalization, 67 Iowa 250.

Telephone companies are bound by the provisions of a statute forbidding discrimination by telegraph companies. And, under such a statute, letters patent to the telephone company afford no excuse for discrimination. Chesapeake, etc., Teleph. Co. v. Baltimore, etc., Tel. Co., 66 Md. 399; 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. II. LEGAL STATUS OF TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES—1. As a Public Use.—The telegraph is such a public use as to justify the exercise of the right of eminent domain in its behalf; the same is true of the telephone, where it is not wholly a private affair, the use of which is denied to the public.¹ Whatever may be the character of any particular line, its owners, by accepting the benefits of a law extending to them the right of eminent domain, make it a public use and place themselves under obligations to permit the use of their lines by all persons, under proper and reasonable regulations.² A telegraph or telephone company is engaged in a business "affected with a public interest," within the principle which authorizes the state to regulate the charges of companies engaged in such business.³

2. As Common Carriers.—Various theories have been propounded as to the legal status of telegraph and telephone companies, and as to their analogy to common carriers, in order to determine whether or not telegraph companies are insurers of the correct transmission of messages, and whether such companies, and telephone companies as well, are bound to serve all who apply to them offering compliance with their regulations. The rule is that they are not insurers, but are so far common carriers as to be bound to serve the public with impartiality, and to exercise due diligence in the discharge of their public duties.⁴

of Telephone Companies to Furnish Equal Facilities to All.

Message Through a Telephone Considered a Telegram.—In Atty. Gen'l v. Edison Teleph. Co., 6 Q. B. Div. 244; 29 Moak's Rep. 602, in construing the Telegraph Acts of 1868 and 1869, empowering the postmaster-general to work and maintain telegraphs for the benefit and use of the public (31 & 32 Vict., ch. 110), it was held that a conversation through a telephone was a "message," or, at all events, a "communication transmitted by a telegraph," and therefore a "telegram" within the meaning of those acts; and that since the company made a profit out of the rents, conversations held by subscribers through their telephones were infringements of the exclusive privilege of transmitting telegrams granted to the postmaster-general by those acts.

1. Eminent Domain.—New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Southern, etc., Tel. Co., 53 Ala. 211; State v. American, etc., News Co., 43 N. J. L. 381; *Lockie v. Mutual Union Tel. Character of Property in Electric Appliances.—See Keating Imp. Co. v. Marshall Electric Light, etc., Co., 74 Tex. 605, holding that the poles, wires and lamps used in an electric light line are real property. But in another case it is held that telegraph wires, when fixed to the poles, do not lose their character as personal property and become part of the realty, so as to be covered by a pre-existing mortgage, where it is the intention of the parties, as fixed by agreement, that they shall remain personalty and be subject to removal. Boston Safe Deposit, etc., Co. v. Bankers', etc., Tel. Co., 36 Fed. Rep. 288. See also in this connection, Mulholland v. Thomson-Houston Electric Light Co., 66 Miss. 339.

3. See infra, this title, Regulation of Charges.

4. See Gillis v. Western Union Tel. Co., 61 Vt. 461; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp.

3. Are Not Insurers.—The question in this connection can relate only to telegraph companies.¹ There is authority for the view that such companies are common carriers, possessing the rights and subject to the obligations belonging to that relation, and that they are insurers of the correctness of messages transmitted, and are liable for all losses resulting from an incorrect transmission, unless occasioned by an act of God or of the public enemy.² The reasons, however, which gave rise to the stringent rule of liability imposed upon carriers of goods at common law, do not apply to telegraph companies, and there are material differences in the methods in which the business of the two agencies is conducted. The proposition that telegraph companies are insurers of the correctness of dispatches transmitted is therefore now regarded as unsound, and their liability is limited to losses caused by their negligence or willful default.³ Telegraph companies, however,

Cas. 568; 15 Am. St. Rep. 917; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Reynolds, 77 Va. 173; 5 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 182; 46 Am. Rep. 715.

1. The telephone companies do not offer to transmit messages, but merely furnish to subscribers the means of transmitting their own by word of mouth. Some cases have arisen in which the parties were not able to communicate directly, and the person at the central office of the company volunteered to act as a go-between; but the liability of the company in such a case has never been adjudicated. See Oskamp v. Gadsden, 35 Neb. 7; Sullivan v. Kuykendall, 82 Ky. 483; 56 Am. Rep. 901; infra, this title, Telephonic Communications as Evidence.

2. Authorities Holding that a Telegraph Company is a Common Carrier and Therefore an Insurer.—The leading case in support of this view is that of Parks v. Alta, etc., Tel. Co., 13 Cal. 422; 73 Am. Dec. 589, decided in 1859. The court, by Baldwin, J., said: "The rules of law which govern the liability of telegraph companies are not new. They are old rules applied to new circumstances. Such companies hold themselves out to the public as engaged in a particular branch of business, in which the interests of the public are deeply concerned. They propose to do a certain thing for a given price. There is no difference, in the general nature of the legal obligation of the contract, between carrying a message along a wire and carrying goods or a package along a route. The physical agency may be different, but the essential nature of the contract is the same. The breach of the contract, in the one case or in the other, is, or may be, attended with the same consequences, and the obligation to perform the stipulated duty is the same in both cases. The importance of the discharge of it in both cases is the same. In both cases the contract is binding, and the responsibility of the parties is governed by the same general rules." See also MacAndrew v. Electric Tel. Co., 17 C. B. 3; 84 E. C. L. 3; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Meek, 49 Ind. 53; Bowen v. Lake Erie Tel. Co. (Ohio, 1853), 1 Am. L. Reg. 685; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Fontaine, 58 Ga. 433. In Gray on Telegraphs, §§ 6-7, the argument in favor of this view is set out. True v. International Tel. Co., 60 Me. 9; 11 Am. Rep. 156; Bell v. Dominion Tel. Co., 25 L. C. J. 248; Bryant v. American Tel. Co., 1 Daly (N. Y.) 575; Shear. & Red. on Neg. (4th ed.), § 554 et seq.

The rule established in California by the case of Parks v. Alta, etc., Tel. Co., 13 Cal. 422; 73 Am. Dec. 589, has been changed by special statutory provisions, and the authority of the other cases is weakened by the fact that in most of them what was said about such companies being insurers, was unnecessary to the decision of the case.

3. Are not Insurers.—See Gray on Telegraphs, § 8; Thompson on Electricity, § 138, quoting from Breece v. U. S. Tel. Co., 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 292; 31 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 86; Ellis v. American Tel. Co., 13 Allen (Mass.) 232. See also the concurring opinion of Hunt, J., in Leonard v. New York, etc., Tel. Co., 41 N. Y. 571; 1 Am. Rep. 446. In Smith v. Western Union Tel. Co., 83 Ky. 104; are so far common carriers that they cannot by contract provide for their exemption from liability for the consequences of their own negligence or that of their servants.¹

8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 20; 4 Am. St. Rep. 126, the court, by Holt, J., says: "The current of authority is not in this direction, and properly so, because the transmission of messages is necessarily subject to the risk of mistake and interruption. The wire is exposed to the interference of strangers; a surcharge of electricity in the atmosphere, or a failure of or an irregularity in the electrical current, may stop communication; and it is continually subject to danger from accident, malice, and climatic influence when the company has not the actual immediate custody of the messages, as the common carrier has of the merchandise it carries; and it should not, therefore, like a common carrier, be treated not only as a bailee, but as an insurer." The liability of a telegraph company for error or failure in the transmission of a dispatch is quite unlike that of a common carrier. A telegraph company is intrusted with nothing but an order or message, which is not to be carried in the form in which it is received, but is to be transmitted or repeated by electricity, and is peculiarly liable to mistake; which cannot be the subject of embezzlement; which is of no intrinsic value; the importance of which cannot be estimated except by the sender, nor ordinarily disclosed by him without danger of defeating his own purposes; which may be wholly valueless, if not forwarded immediately; for the transmission of which there must be a simple rate of compensation; and the measure of damages for a failure to transmit or deliver, which has no relation to any value which can be put on the message itself. Grinnell v. Western Union Tel. Co., 113 Mass. 299; 18 Am. Rep. 485. See Baldwin v. U. S. Tel. Co., 45 N. Y. 744; 6 Am. Rep. 165.

1. Cannot Contract Against Liability.—In the case of Southern Express Co. v. Caldwell, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 269, the court, by Strong, J., said: "Telegraph companies, though not common carriers, are engaged in a business that is, in its nature, almost, if not quite, as important to the public as that of carriers. Like common carriers, they cannot contract with their employers for exemption from liability for the consequences of their own negligence." See infra, this title, General Rule as to Validity; CARRIERS OF GOODS, vol. 2, p. 818.

Generally speaking, the same rules of law which limit the liability of common carriers apply to telegraph companies. Thus, if the limitation is by notice, such

The true rule, then, as to the status of telegraph companies seems to be that they are analogous to common carriers in their obligations to serve the public in good faith and with impartiality; but responsible only for failure to exercise proper care.¹

4. Are Public Servants and Must Serve the Public Impartially and in Good Faith.—Although telegraph companies are not liable as insurers, they are so far common carriers that they are under a legal obligation to serve with impartiality all who apply to them and offer compliance with their regulations. They must transmit all proper messages correctly and without unreasonable delay, and, with certain exceptions, in the order in which they are received.² In many jurisdictions the enforcement of these duties is provided for by statutes.³

Telephone companies, like telegraph companies, are to some extent common carriers, and are bound to afford equal facilities to all. They can be compelled by mandamus to furnish facilities to one offering to comply with their regulations, even though such a party is a rival company.⁴

notice must have been assented to by the sender, either impliedly or expressly. See infra, this title, Evidence of Assent of Sender or Addressee to Printed Stipulations; CARRIERS OF GOODS, vol. 2, p. 815 et seq. In the case of telegraphic messages, however, this rule is simplified by the fact that the sender is required to affix his signature to the printed contract containing the limitation.

1. This is the conclusion arrived at by Mr. Gray in his work on Telegraphs, and supported by the overwhelming weight of authority. Gray on Telegraphs, § 8; *Smith v. Western Union Tel. Compared With Carriers of Passengers.

—The status of telegraph companies is practically that of ordinary carriers of passengers. "Although there may be no analogy between the business of telegraph companies and that of public carriers of passengers for hire, yet we regard their legal status as practically the same. Both are engaged in a business of a public nature. Both must serve all who come. Neither are insurers, nor liable as such, but both are liable for negligence." *Gillis v. Western Union Tel. Power of Company to Alienate Franchise.—It is a general rule that the grant of a franchise, public in nature, like that of a telegraph company, is personal to the grantee and cannot be alienated, except by consent of the granting power.² Therefore a telegraph company has no power, in the absence of special authority, to alienate the privileges granted to it by the federal or state government, and an agreement to transfer such privileges is ultra vires and void.³ Nor can such

In Hockett v. State, 105 Ind. 559; 11 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 577; 55 Am. Rep. 201, the court, in upholding the right of the state to regulate the charges of a telephone company, said, by Niblack, C. J.: "The telephone is one of the most remarkable productions of the present century, and although its discovery is of recent date, it has been in use long enough to have attained well defined relations to the general public. It has become as much a matter of public convenience and of public necessity as were the stage coach and sailing vessel a hundred years ago, or as the steamboat, the railroad and the telegraph have become in later years. It has already become an important instrument of commerce. No other known device can supply the extraordinary facilities which it affords. It may therefore be regarded, when relatively considered, as an indispensable instrument of commerce. The relations which it has assumed toward the public make it a common carrier of news, a common carrier in the sense in which the telegraph is a common carrier, and impose upon it certain well-defined obligations of a public character. All the instruments and appliances used by a telephone company in the prosecution of its business are consequently, in legal contemplation, devoted to a public use." See also Central Union Teleph. Co. v. State, 118 Ind. 194; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 481; 10 Am. St. Rep. 114; Central Union Teleph. Co. v. Bradbury, 106 Ind. 1. The cases uniformly hold telephone companies to be common carriers of news, in denying their right to discriminate. See infra, this title, Duty of Telephone Companies to Furnish, etc.

"The argument is that as the ground of their liability is the same as that of bailees, the legal status of the two must be the same. But this doctrine is justly criticised, because telegraph companies are engaged in a business of a public nature, and are precluded by rights and duties incident thereto from occupying the legal status of an ordinary bailee for hire, whose rights and duties arise wholly from the contract of employment." Gillis v. Western Union Tel. Co., 61 Vt. 461; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 570; 15 Am. St. Rep. 917. See also Western Union Tel. Co. v. Blanchard, 68 Ga. 299; 45 Am. Rep. 480.

The first of these cases considers at great length the obligations of the Union Pacific Railway Company to operate a telegraphic line along its entire route.

a. IN STREETS AND HIGHWAYS.—The right to construct a telegraph or telephone line along and upon a street or highway must be derived from an express grant of authority. It cannot exist from implication merely.⁴ The power to grant such authority rests ultimately in the legislature, by virtue of its power of control over all streets and highways;⁵ it may, however, be delegated to municipalities. In general, a municipal corporation has power

In Benedict v. Western Union Tel. Co., 9 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. to grant to a telegraph or telephone company the right to construct a line upon the streets within its limits, provided such construction will not interfere with the free use of the street by the public.¹ A telegraph or telephone line, consisting of wires strung upon poles, when constructed along and upon a street, constitutes a new use of the street, and an additional burden upon it. In Roake v. American Teleph., etc., Co., 41 N. J. Eq. 35; 12 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 342, the only injury imminent to complainant's property was that which would result from the wires passing over the street in front of the premises. It was held that the case did not authorize an injunction against the erection of the poles and wires.

"On the other hand, it is insisted the proprietary rights of the plaintiff have been interfered with in a manner detrimental to his interests as owner of the fee, and that the action of defendant in taking possession of his land forcibly and against his will comes within the constitutional inhibition that 'private property shall not be taken or damaged without just compensation.' This position is the one best sustained by authority, and rests on sounder principles. It is for this reason that the construction and maintenance of a telegraph line upon the highway is a new and additional burden upon the fee to which it was not contemplated it should be subjected, and for which the owner is entitled to additional compensation." Board of Trade Tel. Co. v. Barnett, 107 Ill. 507; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 81; 47 Am. Rep. 453. See Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Hartley, 67 Ill. 439; 16 Am. Rep. 624, for the doctrine of the court. See STREET RAILWAYS, vol. 23, p. 940, where similar cases are discussed.

In Pacific Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Irvine, 49 Fed. Rep. 113, Ross, J., said: "Where the fee of the highway is vested in the public, there can be no valid legal objection to the grant by the public of a right to erect such poles and wires without regard to the adjacent property holders; but where, as here, the fee of the highway remains in the adjacent owner, and only its use for purposes of public travel has been granted, I think it clear that every use of the highway not in the line of such travel is an additional burden, for which the proprietor of the fee is entitled to additional compensation, and which cannot be constitutionally taken from him without his consent, except by proceedings regularly instituted and prosecuted according to the law."

In 2 Dill. on Mun. Corp. (4th ed.), § 698, a, it is said: "The author considers the true doctrine to be, that the rights of the abutter, as between himself and the public, are substantially the same, whether the fee is in lien subject to the public use, or in the city in trust for street use proper. On the whole, the safer, and perhaps sounder view is that such a use of the street or highway (placing a telegraph line thereon) attended, as it may be, especially in cities, with serious damage and inconvenience to the abutting owner, is not a street or highway use proper, and hence entitles the owner to compensation for such use or for any actual injury to his prop-

Effect of Grant by State.—Consent of the state by law, to the erection of telegraph or telephone poles in highways is only intended to protect the telegraph company from indictment for maintaining a public nuisance in so doing. It gives the company no right to erect such poles unless the owner of the fee consents or receives compensation. Eels v. American Teleph., etc., Co. (Supreme Ct.), 20 N. Y. Supp. 600.

Authorities Contra.—The doctrine of the text is not universally recognized. In Pierce v. Drew, 136 Mass. 75; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 85; 49 Am. Rep. 7, it was held that Massachusetts Pub. Stats., ch. 109, §§ 4, 12, authorizing the construction of telegraph lines upon highways, did not provide for compensation to abutting owners; that the statute was nevertheless constitutional and valid, since an additional servitude was not imposed by the erection of poles and wires along the highway. The court said: "No right to take the private property of the owner of the fee is conferred by this act; all that is given is the right to use land, by permission of the municipal authorities, the whole beneficial use of which had been previously taken from the owner and appropriated to the public. It is a temporary privilege only which is conferred; no right is acquired as against the owner of the fee by its enjoyment, nor is any legal right acquired to the continual enjoyment of the privilege or any presumption of a grant raised thereby." Gray, J., in Boston v. Richardson, 13 Allen (Mass.) 160, was quoted: "When land, once duly appropriated to a public use, which requires the occupation of its whole surface, is applied by authority of the legislature to another similar public use, no new claim for compensation, unless expressly provided for, can be sustained by the owner of the fee." See Young v. Yarmouth, 9 Gray (Mass.) 386; Chase v. Sutton Mfg. Co., 4 Cush. (Mass.) 167; Com. v. Temple, 14 Gray (Mass.) 77. Compare dissenting opinion of C. Allen, J., concurred in by W. Allen, J.: "There is another reason for holding that the right to establish electrical lines is not included in the laying out of a highway. When land is taken for a highway, the payment of damages is to be made by the city or town within which it lies. But a city or town has no legal right to appropriate money for the establish-and to damages for any material injury to easement of access and passage over the street. Ownership of the fee of the soil occupied does not affect their rights.¹

Where the company has acquired no right to occupy the street with its lines, its occupation thereof is unlawful and amounts to a public nuisance, and the abutting owners may have an injunction against it or may bring an ordinary action for damages.²

A grant of a right of way along a street confers upon a telegraph company no right to trespass upon private property abutting thereon, to cut limbs of trees projecting over the sidewalk,³ ment of a line of telegraph for the general public use."

See, as upholding the doctrine of the Massachusetts court, Julia Bldg. Assoc. v. Bell Teleph. Co., 88 Mo. 258; 57 Am. Rep. 398; Gay v. Mutual Union Tel. Co., 12 Mo. App. 491; *State v. Measure of Damages.—The measure of damages to the abutting owner is the extent to which the rental and salable value of the property has been diminished, or the difference in the value of the property before and after the construction of the line. *Chesapeake, etc., Teleph. 2. Remedy of Abutting Owner.—Broome v. New York, etc., Teleph. Co., 42 N. J. Eq. 141 (injunction granted); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Williams, 86 Va. 696; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 564; 19 Am. St. Rep. 908 (ejectment); Board of Trade Tel. Co. v. Barnett, 107 Ill. 507; 47 Am. Rep. 453; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 81.

A company, acting on the assumption that it had the legal right, constructed its line on the highway without asking or obtaining the consent of abutting owners, or seeking to acquire their rights by negotiation or condemnation. Such abutting owners are not estopped to maintain their action on the ground of acquiescence. Blashfield v. Empire State Teleph., etc., Co. (Supreme Ct.), 18 N. Y. Supp. 250; Abendroth v. Manhattan R. Co., 122 N. Y. 1; 19 Am. St. Rep. 461.

As a rule, however, the courts are slow to compel the removal of a public work or the suspension of its operation. If an injunction is granted at all, it is usually conditioned to be inoperative provided the company makes proper compensation within a reasonable time. See STREET RAILWAYS, vol. 23, p. 940. Injunctions of this character constitute the remedy uniformly granted in New York against the elevated railway companies.

3. Liability for Cutting Trees Overhanging Sidewalk.—Memphis Bell Teleph. Co. v. Hunt, 16 Lea (Tenn.) 456; 57 Am. Rep. 237. In Tissot v. Great Southern Teleph., etc., Co., 39 La. Ann. 996; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 53; 4 Am. St. Rep. 248, it was held that removal of trees overhanging a sidewalk was unnecessary, and that the company must answer in damages for the trespass. See also Clay v. Postal Tel. Co., 70 or so to place its poles as to incommode or injure the public in its use of the street;¹ and the company is liable in damages for such trespasses.

Where a telephone or telegraph company occupies private property with its poles and wires, there can be no question as to the landowner's right to compensation. The right to such occupation can only be acquired by contract with the landowner, or by condemnation proceedings.² It has been held that a landowner is entitled to compensation, where the wires extend over his land, though there is no actual occupation of the soil.³

b. ON RAILROAD RIGHT OF WAY.—The construction of a telegraph line on a railroad company's right of way, imposes an additional burden upon the land covered by it, for which the original owner of the land, if he retains the fee, may recover compensation.⁴ There is an exception to this rule, however, where the line is constructed by the railroad company in good faith, for its own use, and is shown to be reasonably necessary for the proper operation of the road.⁵

A telegraph line is also regarded as subjecting the easement of the railroad company to an additional servitude, for which the company is entitled to compensation, under the constitutional provisions against the taking of private property.⁶ There is no

See Roake v. American Teleph., etc., Co., 41 N. J. Eq. 35; 12 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 342. It would be a case for the application of the rule de minimis lex non curat.

Cas. 214, the court, by Durfee, J., said: "It has been held, for reasons which we consider irrefragable, that a telegraph line erected by a railroad company within its location, for the purposes of its railroad, to increase the safety and efficiency thereof, does not constitute an additional servitude, but is only a legitimate development of the easement originally acquired. *Western Union Tel. The provision of the Virginia Code rule of law to prevent a telegraph company from acquiring, by contract with a railroad company,¹ a right of way over the land covered by the railroad's right of way, though it cannot contract for an exclusive right. Such exclusive rights are not favored in law; and, moreover, the railroad companies, having usually nothing more than a mere easement in the land covered by their right of way, have no power to grant exclusive privileges as to it.²

(1887), § 1287, providing that telegraph companies may construct their lines "along and parallel to any of the railroads of the state," does not authorize the condemnation of a right of way by a telegraph company along and upon the right of way of a railroad company. Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Norfolk, etc., R. Co., 88 Va. 920; 39 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 533. See also Laws New York 1853, ch. 471, § 2; New York City, etc., R. Co. v. Central Union Tel. Co., 21 Hun (N. Y.) 261.

In Mississippi, whenever any telegraph company secures the right to construct its line upon a railroad company's right of way, it shall be the duty of the railroad to receive and transport such material, construction cars, etc., as is necessary in constructing the line, and to distribute the material along the road as the telegraph company may direct, "upon such terms and conditions as may be reasonable and just." Laws of Mississippi (1890), ch. 63, p. 72.

Contract as to Use of Wire.—In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Western, etc., R. Co., 91 U. S. 283, the telegraph company contracted with a railroad corporation to put up a special wire for the exclusive use of the railroad, and to connect it with all the offices along the route. It was held that this contract did not amount to a sale of the wire to the railroad company, and a lessee of the road would have no right to the wire other than to use it in its telegraphic service.

1. Right of Way Acquired by Contract.—The right of a telegraph company to maintain its line along the right of way of a railroad company, under a contract whereby, upon dissolution or discontinuance of operations by the telegraph company, the railroad company became entitled to the property, is lost by a surrender of its charter by the telegraph company, just prior to its expiration, and its reincorporation under a subsequent statute, although such statute provides that the new company shall take all the property of the old. Latrobe v. Western Tel. Co., 74 Md.

232; Western Tel. Co. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 69 Md. 211.

So a license by a railroad company to maintain a telegraph line along its road, so long as the licensee existed as a telegraph company, expires with expiration of the telegraph patents held by the licensee; its reincorporation does not affect the case. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 20 Fed. Rep. 572; 5 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 223. See also Western Tel. Co. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 69 Md. 211.

2. Exclusive Right Cannot be Acquired.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Baltimore, etc., Tel. Co., 19 Fed. Rep. 660; 22 Fed. Rep. 133; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 99 (construing Rev. Stat. Texas, art. 624); Western Union Tel. Co. v. American Union Tel. Co., 65 Ga. 160; 38 Am. Rep. 781; Baltimore, etc., Tel. Co. v. Morgan's Louisiana, etc., R. etc., Co., 37 La. Under U. S. Rev. St., § 5263, a railroad cannot grant to a telegraph company the sole right to construct a line over its right of way, so as to exclude other companies whose lines would not interfere with those of the first company. Western Union Tel. Co. v. American Union Tel. Co., 9 Biss. (U. S.) 72.

c. FEDERAL AND STATE GRANTS OF RIGHT OF WAY.—By the statutes of the United States, a right of way over the public lands and the military and post roads of the United States, is granted to all telegraph companies complying with certain conditions.¹ This statute was enacted under the congressional power of control over inter-granted was not exclusive, and that the railroad could put up and maintain another wire for its own use or for the use of a third party. Marietta, etc., R. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 38 Ohio St. 24; 10 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 387.

Compare California, etc., Tel. Co. v. Alta Tel. Co., 22 Cal. 398, holding the California act granting to one company an exclusive privilege between certain points, to be constitutional and valid.

Authorities Contra.—See Canadian Pac. R. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 17 Sup. Ct. Can. 151; 33 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 1. It was held on appeal that the agreement made in 1869, between the W. U. Tel. Co. and the E. & N. R. Co., is binding on the present owners of the road; that the contract with the W. U. Tel. Co. was consistent with the purposes of its incorporation and not prohibited by its charter or by local laws; its right to enter into such a contract and to carry on the business provided for thereby is a right recognized by the comity of nations, and that the exclusive right granted to the W. U. Tel. Co. does not void the contract as being against public policy, nor as being a contract in restraint of trade. Canadian Pac. R. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 17 Sup. Ct. Can. 151; 33 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 1.

So a contract by a railroad company with a telegraph company for exclusive rights in favor of the latter, is not void so far as it excludes other competitors from the line of poles occupied by the telegraph company. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 86 Ill. 246; 29 Am. Rep. 28. See RAILROADS, vol. 19, p. 825, note 4.

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Atlantic, etc., Tel. Co., 7 Biss. (U. S.) 367, a contract between a railroad company and a telegraph company binding the former not to construct or allow to be constructed another telegraph line along and upon its right of way, is not void as against public policy.

State Cannot Authorize Grant of Exclusive Privileges.—In view of the Act of Congress, hereafter referred to in the next note Rev. Stat. U. S., §§

5263-68), a state cannot grant to a telegraph company exclusive rights in the right of way of any railroad within the state. "The statute amounts to a prohibition of all state monopolies in this particular." Pensacola Tel. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 96 U. S. 1, aff'd 2 Woods (U. S.) 643.

1. United States Statute Authorizing Occupation of Post Roads by Telegraph Lines.—U. S. Rev. Stat., §§ 5263-5268; 14 U. S. Stat. at Large, 221; Act of July 24, 1866.

Any telegraph company organized under the laws of any state, shall have the right to construct, maintain and operate telegraph lines over any part of the public domain, over and along any of the military or post roads of the United States, and under or across any of its navigable streams or waters; provided such lines are not so placed as to obstruct navigation, or interfere with the proper use of the military or post roads. U. S. Rev. Stat., § 5263.

Any such company may take from the public lands through which its line passes, the necessary stone, timber and other material for its poles, stations or other needful uses in constructing its line, and may preempt such portion of the unoccupied public land as may be necessary for its stations, not exceeding forty acres for each station; such stations to be not within fifteen miles of each other. U. S. Rev. Stat., § 5264.

The rights and privileges granted by the act of July 24, 1866, are not to be transferred "by any company acting thereunder to any other corporation, association or person." U. S. Rev. Stat., § 5265. See supra, this title, Corporate Rights and Franchises.

Telegrams between the several departments of the government and their officers and agents are to have priority over all other business of such lines, at such rates as the postmaster general shall annually fix. And no part of the appropriation for the several departments of the government shall be paid to any company refusing to comply with this section. U. S. Rev. Stat., § 5266; U. S. v. Union Pac. R. Co., 45 Fed. Rep. 221.

state commerce, and there is no question as to its constitutionality. It supersedes all conflicting state legislation on the same subject.¹ It does not, however, authorize telegraph companies which come within its terms to occupy a railroad company's right of way without compensation, but grants all privileges subject to the prior rights of other companies.² It prevents the exclusive use of any railroad company's right of way by a single telegraph company.³ A company acquires no right to any of the privileges conferred by this statute until it has filed with the postmaster-general its written acceptance of all the conditions contained therein.⁴ Statutes granting a right of way to telegraph companies

The United States may, for postal, military or other purposes, purchase all the telegraph lines and other property of such companies, at an appraised value to be ascertained by five competent, disinterested persons, two to be chosen by the postmaster-general, two by the company, and one by these four. U. S. Rev. Stat., § 5267.

Before any telegraph company exercises any of the powers and privileges conferred, it shall file its written acceptance with the postmaster-general, "of the restrictions and obligations required." U. S. Rev. Stat., § 5268.

Whenever any telegraph company, after having filed its written acceptance (provided in § 5268), shall refuse or neglect to transmit any proper messages offered by the government, or its officers or agents, concerning governmental affairs, the meteorological observations, etc., it shall be liable to a penalty of not less than one hundred dollars, and not more than one thousand dollars, for each such refusal or neglect; such penalty to be recovered by an action at law in any federal district court. U. S. Rev. Stat., § 5269; 19 U. S. Stat. at L. 232, 252.

By another statute, all railroads in the country are declared to be post roads. U. S. Rev. Stat., § 3964; POSTAL LAWS, vol. 18, p. 865. And being a "post road," a railroad cannot grant to any telegraph company an exclusive right of way. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 19 Fed. Rep. 660.

Streets of District of Columbia.—The streets of the District of Columbia are "post roads," within the meaning of the statute, and telegraph companies may construct their lines thereon without compensation to abutting owners. Hewett v. Western Union Tel. Co., 4 Mackey (D. C.) 424; 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 276.

2. "We cannot suppose it was the intention of Congress by these enactments, even if it had the power to do so, to put the right of way of every railroad company in the country at the mercy of the telegraph companies, and allow the latter to use them for the construction of their lines, without making compensation to any one therefor. Such a construction was wholly repudiated by Judge Drummond in the case of Atlantic, etc., Tel. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 6 Biss. (U. S.) 158, and by Judge Harlan in Western Union Tel. Co. v. American Union Tel. Co., 9 Biss. (U. S.) 72. In the latter case it is expressly said that under this act, telegraph companies must obtain the consent of the owners of the right of way, or condemn the same for telegraph purposes and make compensation therefor." American Teleph., etc., Co. v. Pearce, 71 Md. 535; 28 Am. St. Rep. 227. See also Pensacola Tel. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 96 U. S. 1, aff'g 2 Woods (U. S.) 643; *Southwestern R. Co. v. Southern, etc., Tel. 3. The legislature of Florida granted an exclusive right to a certain company to construct its line along the right of way of a railroad. It was held, however, that such a grant was in conflict with the act of Congress which was specially intended to secure to all companies equal privileges and to prevent monopolies, and that it could not stand. Pensacola Tel. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 96 U. S. 1, aff'g 2 Woods (U. S.) 643.

d. IN GENERAL.—The rules of law applicable to a railroad company's right of way apply in general to telegraph companies, subject, however, to the modifications which the differences in the structures demand.³ In several jurisdictions statutes exist which require the company to make an effort to contract with the landowner for a right of way before resorting to condemnation proceedings. In such cases, the company may condemn a right of way if, after having made a proposition to the landowner, it has navigable river until it has filed the acceptance. Chicago, etc., Bridge Co. v. Pacific Mut. Tel. Co., 36 Kan. 113; 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 271.

1. State Statutes.—See Georgia Acts of 1886-7, p. 111 (not affected by Acts of 1888-9, pp. 141, 175); Virginia Code (1887), § 1287; Laws of Mississippi (1890), ch. 63, p. 72; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cooledge, 86 Ga. 104.

Under Missouri Rev. St., § 879, telephone companies may place their poles along city streets, subject to regulation by ordinance as to the location and kind of posts, piers and abutments, and the height of the wires. And if a city board of public improvements attempts to interfere, it will be coerced by mandamus. State v. Flad, 23 Mo. App. 185.

There being serious doubt as to the validity of a statute (N. Y. Acts of 1887, ch. 716), in that it permits the telegraph company to be deprived of its right to maintain its wires on the structures of an elevated railroad, which is a post road, an injunction against any interference with the wires thereon, should be granted until the question can be passed on by the court of last resort, the maintenance of wires thereon not being attended with any public inconvenience. Western Union Tel. Co. v. New York, 38 Fed. Rep. 552.

The Virginia statute (Code of 1887, §§ 1287-90), authorizing the construction of telegraph lines along any of the state or county roads, does not authorize the occupation of a highway, without compensation to owners of abutting property who retain the fee of the soil. *Western Union Tel. The company's petition for the assessment of damages under the New Jersey act, must indicate the size of the poles to be erected, and the positions in which they will be placed. Broome v. New York, etc., Teleph. Co., 49 N. J. L. 624. Under the same act interests in several pieces of land belonging to different owners may be condemned in one procedure. State v. Central New Jersey Teleph. Co., 53 N. J. L. 341; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 1.

Crossing Navigable Waters.—Before a telegraph company can secure, by condemnation or otherwise, the right to construct its line across navigable waters, under U. S. Rev. Stat., §§ 5263-68, it must file with the postmaster-general its written acceptance of the obligations imposed by that statute. Chicago, etc., Bridge Co. v. Pacific Mut. Tel. Co., 36 Kan. 113; 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 271. And in constructing the line along a bridge over navigable water, the company may not interfere with the opening of the draw span of the bridge, or otherwise obstruct navigation. Pacific Mut. Tel. Co. v. Chicago, etc., Bridge Co., 36 Kan. 113; 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 268. See also City of Richmond, 43 Fed. waited a reasonable time without receiving a reply.¹ The judgment obtained by a telegraph company, through commissioners appointed to fix the compensation to a railroad company upon whose right of way the telegraph line is to be constructed, is not necessarily final.² A telegraph company, by condemnation proceedings for a right of way, does not acquire the fee of the soil. It can use the land only to erect and maintain in repair its telegraph poles and wires thereon.³

2. Liability for Injuries Caused by Improper Construction.—A telegraph or telephone company must exercise proper care to prevent injury to persons using the street. It is responsible for all injuries which result as a consequence of an improper construction or maintenance.⁴ It is not liable, however, when the proximate cause of

The fact that a telegraph line crossing a highway is allowed to swing down so low as to obstruct ordinary travel, is some evidence of negligence on the part of the telegraph company, and, in the absence of anything to explain it, will warrant a verdict against them for damages for injuries sustained by one who, using due care, is thrown from his vehicle by means of the wire. Thomas v. Western Union Tel. Co., 100 Mass. 156.

In an action against a telegraph company, for negligence in permitting telegraph poles to fall and suspend the wires across a highway, where a question is raised as to the soundness of the poles, it is error to admit evidence of the condition of other poles 40 or 60 rods away, without any evidence to show that they were of the same kind, put up at the same time, and equally exposed. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Levi, 47 Ind. 552. See also Brush Electric Light Co. v. Kelley, 126 Ind. 220; Central Pennsylvania Teleph. Co. v. Wilkes Barre, etc., R. Co., 11 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 417.

Electric Storm.—A telephone company which for several weeks permits its wire to remain suspended across a public highway, a few feet from the ground, is liable to a traveler who comes in contact therewith during an electrical storm and is injured by a discharge of electricity which had been attracted from the atmosphere, since the electricity would have been harmless except for the wire. Southwestern Tel., etc.,

the injury is some other agency than its own negligence.¹ The company cannot relieve itself of liability by abandoning the property.² Where poles are so placed as to constitute a nuisance, but their location is authorized by the city, the company and the city are severally liable for injuries resulting therefrom.³ City authorities have no right to authorize the erection of poles that will prove dangerous to persons properly using the street; and the company cannot claim exemption from liability on the ground that it had acted under authority from the city.⁴ But in such cases it must clearly appear that the location of the poles is dangerous. A mere possibility of danger is not sufficient.⁵

If no negligence is shown on the part of the company in the construction or maintenance of its lines, it cannot be held liable for an injury, one of the concurrent causes of which was the pres-

Injury to Vessel by Submarine Cable.—In The City of Richmond, 43 Fed. Rep. 85, it was held that a telegraph company which so laid submarine cables at the bottom of a river as to interfere with vessels, obstructed navigation, and was answerable for damage to a vessel.

Guy Wire.—In Sheldon v. Western Union Tel. Co., 51 Hun (N. Y.) 591, plaintiff, in passing another wagon on a narrow road, ran into a guy wire (concealed by shrubbery), and sustained injury. It was held that the evidence showed negligence and a recovery was allowed. See Keasbey on Electric Wires, p. 161; Wilson v. Great Southern Teleph., etc., Co., 41 La. Ann. 1041.

1. The company is bound to exercise ordinary care, and cannot be required to anticipate and provide against unusual and unexpected storms. Ward v. Atlantic, etc., Tel. Co., 71 N. Y. 81; 27 Am. Rep. 10.

Where the proximate cause of the breaking of a telegraph pole was the collision of a runaway team of horses therewith, it was held that the telegraph company was not liable for damages caused by the fall of the pole, which was so placed as to render collision with it improbable. Allen v. Atlantic, etc., Tel. Co., 21 Hun (N. Y.) 22. See also Henning v. Western Union Tel. Co., 43 Fed. Rep. 131; Davis v. Dudley, 4 Allen (Mass.) 557.

2. The line ran along the street, by license from the city. A fire occurred on that street and the water thrown by the fire engines on the burning building broke the cross bars to which the telegraph wires were attached and let about forty wires down upon the street. Soon after the fire, the company cut off the fallen wires at either end and spliced their lines over and past it, but left the broken wires lying on the street. Plaintiff, while crossing the street, fell over them and sustained serious injury. In a suit by him against the city, it was held that it was the duty of the company to have removed the wires; that it was not relieved of this duty by abandoning the property, and that it was therefore responsible for the injury. Nichols v. Minneapolis, 33 Minn. 430; 53 Am. Rep. 56.

5. In Roberts v. Wisconsin Union Teleph. Co., 77 Wis. 589; 20 Am. St. Rep. 143, the poles, though in the street, were as near the fence as possible without having the cross bars extending over private property. A runaway horse ran against one of them. The court held that the plaintiff could not recover for the injury to his horse. See also Allen v. Atlantic, etc., Tel. Co., 21 Hun (N. Y.) 22; Sheffield v. Central Union Teleph. Co., 36 Fed. Rep. 164.

ence of its wires, as where the poles and wires interfered with the operations of a fire company and prevented the extinguishment of the fire.¹

The company must provide safe appliances and exercise due care to prevent injury to employes. If it makes use of a dangerous agency, it must use a correspondingly high degree of care to prevent injury.²

In actions against telegraph companies for injuries resulting from the improper or negligent construction of their lines, the general rules of the law of negligence prevail as to the admission of evidence, the burden of proof, etc.³

3. Injury to Telegraph or Telephone Lines.—The protection of the poles and wires of telegraph, telephone, and cable lines has been the subject of statutory provisions in a number of jurisdictions.⁴

1. Liability Where Wires Prevent Extinguishment of Fire.—See Chaffee v. Telephone, etc., Const. Co., 77 Mich. 625; 18 Am. St. Rep. 424, where the plaintiff, owner of the burned building, on whose land the wires stood, had built by the side of them; had permitted a tenant to use one of the wires; and had never objected to them in any way prior to the fire. The court based its conclusion on the ground that the landowner had impliedly consented to the presence of the wires and that he could not object to them after so long an acquiescence. But in Thompson on Electricity, § 24, this conclusion is pronounced "doubtful at best" and "much weakened by the dissent of Mr. Justice Campbell."

2. Injuries to Employes.—See generally MASTER AND SERVANT, vol. 14, p. 842. In Clairain v. Western Union Tel. Co., 40 La. Ann. 178, a lineman, while putting up a wire, was injured by the breaking of a cross-arm. The evidence being conflicting, the verdict in his favor was sustained. See Flood v. Western Union Tel. Co. (Supreme Ct.), 15 N. Y. Supp. 400.

In Jenney Electric Light, etc., Co. v. Murphy, 115 Ind. 566, where an employe was injured in consequence of his using a defective ladder, and it appeared that he had continued using the ladder after knowing of the defect, a recovery was denied.

For additional cases involving the liability of companies where their employes were injured by sudden turning on of the current, or by "live" wires sagging upon "dead" ones, or otherwise in connection with their employment, see Piedmont Electric Illuminating Co. v. Patten, 84 Va. 747; Colorado Electric Co. v. Lubbers, 11 Colo. 505; 7 Am.

St. Rep. 255; Kraatz v. Brush Electric Light Co., 82 Mich. 457; Weiden v. Brush Electric Light Co., 73 Mich. 268.

3. Burden of Proof—Evidence.—See NEGLIGENCE, vol. 16, p. 453 et seq.; CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE, vol. 4, p. 15 et seq.

The mere fact that the plaintiff, while walking the street in the daytime, failed to observe an electric light wire suspended a few inches above the ground, over which she fell, does not of itself constitute contributory negligence. Brush Electric Light Co. v. Kelley, 126 Ind. 220. See also Woods v. Boston, 121 Mass. 337, for an illustration of the rule.

Evidence of Negligence.—In Pennsylvania Teleph. Co. v. Varnan (Pa. 1888), 15 Atl. Rep. 624, in an action for damages for injuries sustained by being thrown over a telephone wire, evidence was admitted to show that shortly after the accident, the defendant raised his wires at that point. This case, however, does not state the general doctrine. See NEGLIGENCE, vol. 16, p. 457. Evidence as to the height of the wires on the Sunday prior to the accident was admitted. It was shown that other persons, with wagons loaded equally high, had passed under the same wires without injury; but this was not held to show negligence on the part of the injured person. Pennsylvania Teleph. Co. v. Varnan (Pa. 1888), 15 Atl. Rep. 624.

Upon an issue as to the soundness of certain poles which had fallen, it is error to admit evidence of the soundness of other poles near them, without showing some proof that their condition ought to be the same as that of the others. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Levi, 47 Ind. 552.

4. Statutory Protection.—See the statutes of Illinois, Nebraska, Idaho, South

Independently of these statutes, any person or corporation interfering with such lines may be held liable in trespass, as in case of invasion of other private property.¹

4. Interference of Other Electric Appliances with the Telephone.—The operation of an electric street railway or an electric light system, both of which make use of powerful electric currents, seriously interferes with the proper working of a telephone system, where the wires of these systems occupy the same street. This has given rise to extensive litigation, in which the telephone company has sought to enjoin the other companies from placing their wires in close proximity to its own, and from using the earth as a return circuit.² Interference with the telephone system by the proximity of parallel wires conveying a stronger current results from induction. Injury of this character is easily preventible, and equity will grant relief against it, upon a proper showing by the

1. See Submarine Tel. Co. v. Dickson, 15 C. B., N. S. 759; 109 E. C. L. 759, and The Clara Killan, 3 L. R. Adm. 161; 19 W. R. 25; 39 L. J. Adm. 50. These were cases of interference by masters of vessels with submarine cables. See also Farnsworth v. Western Union Tel. Co. (Supreme Ct.), 6 N. Y. Supp. 735, where a verdict of two hundred and forty thousand dollars for damages for cutting the wires of plaintiff's line was set aside as excessive, it appearing that the line could be fully repaired at an expense of a few thousand dollars.

2. Facts Involved — Explanation of Causes of Disturbance.—Some explanation of electrical phenomena seems essential here to a proper understanding of the cases. The telephone, in order to be successfully operated, requires a delicate, sensitive electric current with accurate pulsations, and whenever this current is strengthened, or its pulsations interfered with by the addition of electric force from extrinsic sources, its usefulness is impaired or destroyed. The interfering currents cause a buzzing sound, which almost drowns the voice and make the annunciators ring, thus materially interfering with the successful working of the apparatus at the central office. This disturbance comes from wires conveying the powerful currents employed by the electric light and railway companies, and is produced by "induction" and "leakage" or "conduc-tion." Induction takes place where the wires of the two systems run closely parallel for long distances; the electric fluid escapes from the more powerful wire, and is induced by the atmosphere into the adjacent telephone wires. But the atmosphere is a poor conductor, and by placing the wires a reasonable distance apart and by using proper insulation, disturbances from induction are prevented and now occur less frequently. The disturbances arising from conduction or leakage are more serious and more difficult to prevent. They result from the earth's being used by both systems as a return circuit. The more powerful current unites with and absorbs, so to speak, the more delicate one. The only known way of preventing this is by the use of a metallic return circuit by either system. The objection to it is the expense, but it can be used by the telephone companies at a comparatively small cost and is actually in use by most of the electric lighting companies. The electric railway, however, uses its rails for conductors and these, not being insulated, affect other currents; a proper metallic circuit could be made only by a return wire kept in constant connection with each car by means of a second trolley, which is very expensive to build and is complicated in its operation. By the McCluer device, the telephone company can use a common return wire for all its instruments, without heavy expense. It is probably for this reason that when the practical question has been presented as to which company should construct its metallic return circuit, the courts have usually imposed the burden telephone company; but the right to this relief will depend in a measure upon whether the complaining company has a prior right of occupancy to the space covered by its wires as against the defendant company. A company owning such prior right of occupancy will not be enjoined from the beneficial use of it in favor of a subsequent occupant.¹

In cases of disturbance from conduction or leakage, which is the more serious source of injury, and which results from the use of the earth as a return circuit by both systems, the question as to the prior right of occupancy has been considered as immaterial and the injunction against the railway company denied in all cases. The decisions rest upon the ground that where a person or corporation is making lawful use of his own property or of a public franchise, and in so doing occasions injury to another, the question of his liability will depend upon whether he has made use upon the telephone companies. See Keasbey on Electric Wires, p. 139 et seq.; Thompson on Electricity, §§ 43, 50 et seq.; Hudson River Teleph. Co. v. Watervliet Turnpike, etc., Co., 135 N. Y. 393; 56 Hun (N. Y.) 67; 61 Hun (N. Y.) 141; Cumberland Teleph., etc., Co. v. United Electric R. Co., 42 Fed. Rep. 273; 43 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 194.

Since the electric railway wires above ground are never located close to the telephone wires, no contest has arisen between the telephone and electric railway companies, based on injury by induction; on the other hand, the electric light companies make use of a metallic return circuit, and there have been no controversies between such companies and those owning the telephone, based on injuries resulting from conduction. See the two notes following.

1. Injunction Against Proximity of Wires.—In Nebraska Teleph. Co. v. York Gas Light Co., 27 Neb. 284; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 547, the telephone company sued for an injunction to restrain the electric light company from occupying certain streets, and from placing the wires too close to its own. There was some contest as to which had the prior right of occupancy. The bill alleged that incandescent light wires could not be operated parallel to telephone wires at a less distance than three feet, nor arc light wires at a less distance than two feet, without seriously interfering with the telephone, and that if the arc light wires crossed the telephone wires at a less distance than ten feet without being securely boxed, there was danger of accident. The trial court enjoined the light company from using for arc light purposes, any wires running parallel and on the same side of the street with the telephone wires, and from using for incandescent light purposes any wires running parallel with the telephone wire on the same side of the street within a less distance than eight feet, and in any case for a distance greater than three hundred feet. It was further provided in the decree that, in all cases, wires must cross each other at an angle of not less than forty-five degrees, and a strong guard wire should be suspended between the wires of the two companies to prevent the upper wires from falling on the lower. The injunction was confined, however, to those streets in which the telephone company had a prior right of occupancy, and was refused as to streets in which the electric light company had been the first occupant. The court also enjoined the telephone company from placing its wires too near those of the light company. The decision of the trial court was sustained on appeal, except as to the injunction against the telephone company; that part of the injunction was set aside on the ground that the answer had asked for no affirmative relief, and that it did not appear that the telephone wires could exert the slightest influence upon those of the light company. See Keasbey on Electric Wires, p. 142 et seq.

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Champion Electric Light Co., 14 Cin. Wkly. Bull. 327, the telegraph company sought an injunction against the electric light company to restrain it from putting up parallel wires nearer than four feet from existing telegraph wires. The injunction of the best known means. He is not bound to adopt expensive devices nor the most recent inventions, when the person injured may protect himself by the use of an effective and inexpensive device.¹ To authorize the recovery of damages, or the issuance of an injunction to prevent injury, the complaining party must show that he has used reasonable care to protect himself and to

was denied, on the ground that it appeared from the testimony that there would be no sensible diminution in the current by induction caused by closer proximity of the wires; that the danger to linemen engaged in repairing the telegraph lines could be avoided by having the electric light current shut off, which could be done on notice, and would only be required during the daytime; and that the danger from falling wires in storms was too uncertain to be considered. The court, after discussing the facts and circumstances, added that if an injunction were granted, it would be with the limitations just stated, and with the reserved right to modify it after experiment.

It is the duty of a telephone company having its line along a street, so to construct its line as not to interfere with the free use of the street by the public for purposes of travel and transportation, and this duty includes the precautions necessary to keep its wires from coming in contact with those of a street railway subsequently occupying the street. Central Pa. Teleph. Co. v. Wilkes Barre, etc., R. Co., 11 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 417.

1. Injury from Conduction or Leakage.—See general principle stated in Hoyt v. Jeffers, 30 Mich. 181; Cumberland Teleph., etc., Co. v. United Electric R. Co., 42 Fed. Rep. 273; 43 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 194. In this last case the doctrine was discussed at length, and the history of the controversies between electrical companies reviewed. It appeared from the evidence that the use of a metallic circuit by either company would prevent any interference between the two currents. The telephone company could use such a circuit by the adoption of a safe and comparatively inexpensive device, while the railway company could do so only at a great expense and annoyance. The question was practically as to which company should undergo the expense of such a circuit. The denial of the injunction was placed by Brown, J., upon the following grounds: "1. That the defendants are making lawful use of the franchise conferred upon them by the state in a manner contemplated by the statute, and that such act cannot be considered as a nuisance in itself. 2. That in the exercise of such franchise, no negligence has been shown, and no wanton or unnecessary disregard of the rights of the complainant. 3. That the damages occasioned to the complainant are not the direct consequence of the construction of defendants' roads, but are incidental damages resulting from their operation, and are not recoverable. In a similar case, Hudson River Teleph. Co. v. Watervliet Turnpike, etc., Co., 135 N. Y. 393, a like conclusion was reached. Here the franchise of the telephone company was granted on the condition that the maintenance of its lines should not interfere with the enjoyment by the street railway company of its franchises." The court went on to say that, "It (the railway company) does not leave the natural forces of matter free to go unaffected by any interference on its part. It generates and accumulates electricity in large and turbulent quantities, and then allows it to escape upon the premises occupied by the plaintiff, to its damage. We are not prepared to hold that a person, even in the prosecution of a lawful trade or business upon his own land, can gather there, by artificial means, a natural element like electricity, and discharge it in such a volume that, owing to the conductive properties of the earth, it will be conveyed upon the grounds of his neighbor with such force and to such an extent as to break up his business or impair the value of his property, and not be held responsible for the resulting injury. The possibilities of the manifold industrial and commercial uses to which electricity may eventually be adapted, and which are even now foreshadowed by the achievements of science, are so great as to lead us to hesitate before declaring an exemption from liability in such a case." Preliminary questions in the case were described in Hudson River Teleph. Co. v. Watervliet Turn- prevent the injury, or that it was not preventible by the exertion of reasonable effort on his part.¹ But it must be conceded that in the present state of the development of electrical science, the questions discussed in this section cannot be considered as conclusively settled. The effect of further developments in the field of electric appliances may necessitate changes in the propositions of law hitherto maintained and applied.²

V. STATE REGULATION AND CONTROL—1. Generally.—Under its inherent power of police regulation and control over persons and property within its limits, a state may regulate the management of the property of a telegraph company, impose taxes upon it, and provide for the proper conduct of the company's business;³ it may impose penalties for a failure to transmit messages when

In East Tennessee Teleph. Co. v. Chattanooga Electric St. R. Co. (Chancery Ct. of Hamilton County, Tenn. 1891), 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. In City, etc., Tel. Co. v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. (Ohio, 1890), 23 Wkly. L. Bull. 165, the trial court granted the injunction on the ground that the telephone company had acquired a prior right to the use of the streets, and had expended money on the faith of this right, and that the defendants had no right to disturb them unless they could show that there was no other way in which they could enjoy their franchise to operate an electric railway. But the supreme court reversed this decision, for the reasons already set out. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. City, etc., Tel. Assoc., 48 Ohio St. 390. "It cannot be doubted that there is ample power in the legislative department of the state to adopt all necessary legislation for the purpose of enforcing the obligations of railway companies as carriers of persons and goods to accommodate the public impartially, and to make every reasonable provision for carrying with safety and expedition." Cooley's Const. Lim. (5th ed.), 718 [581].

The general statutory provisions in a state, relative to telegraph companies, apply as well to foreign corporations operating lines within the state, as to domestic companies. Ellis v. American Tel. Co., 13 Allen (Mass.) 226; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Way, 83 Ala. 542.

The state may provide that telegraph companies shall be "liable for the non-delivery of dispatches intrusted to their care and for all mistakes in transmitting messages made by any person in their employ;" and also, that such companies shall not be exempt from such liability by reason of "any clause, condition or agreement contained in its printed blanks." It may enforce these provisions against all companies operating lines within its borders, even where the message is sent to another state. Kemp properly tendered,¹ may regulate the manner in which its lines shall be constructed and maintained,² and may exercise such other general control as the public interests may require.³ But, like railroad companies, telegraph companies, whose lines are in more than one state, are instruments of interstate commerce, and agents of the general government, in which capacities they are

v. Western Union Tel. Co., 28 Neb. 661; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 608.

1. There are numerous cases enforcing the statutory penalty, though the constitutional question was not raised. The penalty imposed cannot ordinarily be enforced where the failure of duty on the part of the company occurs beyond the jurisdiction of the state. Alexander v. Western Union Tel. Co., 67 Miss. 386; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pendleton, 122 U. S. 347; 18 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 18; Little Rock, etc., R. Co. v. Davis, 41 Ark. 79; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 102; infra, this title, Interstate Messages.

In Connell v. Western Union Tel. Co., 108 Mo. 459; 39 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 594, it appears that the Missouri statute makes it the duty of every telegraph company within the state, to provide sufficient facilities for the dispatch of the business of the public, to receive dispatches from and for other telegraph lines and from and for any individual, and, on tender of payment of the usual charges, to transmit the same promptly and without partiality under penalty of two hundred dollars for every neglect or failure to do so. This statute is upheld as not being in violation of the exclusive power of Congress over interstate commerce. As such a statute merely provides for the enforcement of common-law duties, it seems that it cannot be objected to. It is clearly distinguishable from the statute of Indiana, which was declared invalid in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pendleton, 122 U. S. 347; 18 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 18, reviewing 95 Ind. 12; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 56; 48 Am. Rep. 692.

The Nebraska statute, providing for the liability of telegraph companies, and that they shall not be exempt from liability by reason of any stipulations to the contrary, is upheld in Kemp v. Western Union Tel. Co., 28 Neb. 661; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 607.

Right of State to Require Wires to be Placed Underground.—The fact that telegraph lines are, in a sense, instruments of interstate commerce, and that a federal statute authorizes companies operating such lines to occupy all military or post roads, including all public roads and highways, does not deprive a state of the power to require that in large cities all such lines shall be placed underground in proper subways. A statute providing such a requirement is a valid and proper exercise of the state's power of police regulation, and cannot be objected to as conflicting with the power of Congress. Mutual Union Tel. Co. v. Chicago, 16 Fed. Rep. 309; People v. Squire, 145 U. S. 175, aff'g 107 N. Y. 593; 1 Am. St. Rep. 894; American Rapid Tel. Co. v. Hess, 125 N. Y. 641; 39 Am. & Eng. Corp. 3. In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pendleton, 122 U. S. 347; 18 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 18, Field, J., said: "The subjects upon which the state may act are almost infinite, yet in its regulations with respect to all of them there is this necessary limitation—that the state does not thereby encroach upon the free exercise of the power vested in Congress by the constitution. Within that limitation it may, undoubtedly, make all necessary provisions with respect to the buildings, poles and wires of telegraph companies in its jurisdiction, which the comfort and convenience of the community may require." Cooley v. Board of Port Wardens, 12 How. (U. S.) 299; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Massachusetts, 125 U. S. 530; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 13; American Union Tel. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 67 Ala. 31;

not subject to the jurisdiction of the state.¹ The rule in this connection is the same as that applied to interstate railroads, and has already been set out in other articles.² Therefore, a state statute, prescribing the order in which dispatches must be sent, and requiring that where the persons addressed, or their agents, reside within one mile of the station, or within the city or town in which it is located, the dispatch must be delivered by a messenger, is, in so far as it affects messages to be delivered in another state, invalid as an interference with the exclusive power of Congress over interstate commerce.³

3. Regulation of Interstate Messages.—Indiana Rev. Stat., §§ 4176-78, provided that every telegraph company in the state should receive dispatches from persons or from other lines, and on payment of the usual charges "transmit the same with impartiality and good faith in the order of time in which they are received, under penalty" of one hundred dollars. The statute also provided for the preference of certain messages, and for the delivery of all messages by a messenger of the receiving office. When the validity of the statute was tested in the state court, upon the issue as to whether the sender of a dispatch from S. in Indiana to O. in Iowa could recover the penalty because the company's agent in O. failed to deliver the dispatch by a messenger as required, it was held by an undivided bench that the statute was valid and constitutional, and that the plaintiff might recover the penalty. The court recognized Pensacola Tel. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 96 U. S. 1, and other cases, but considered that the statute was nevertheless valid even as to messages sent out of the state, relying on Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 99; Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113; Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 232; Harrigan v. Connecticut River Lumber

Co., 129 Mass. 580; 37 Am. Rep. 387; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Blanchard, 68 Ga. 299; 45 Am. Rep. 480; Cooley's Const. Lim. (5th ed.) 718; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pendleton, 95 Ind. 12; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 56; 48 Am. Rep. 692; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Meredith, 95 Ind. 93; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 54.

But the decision of the state court was reversed on a writ of error in the United States Supreme Court, in the case of Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pendleton, 122 U. S. 347; 18 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 18, and the rule laid down that such a statute could be enforced only as to messages sent between points both of which were within the state. The court, by Field, J., after reviewing Western Union Tel. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 464, and Pensacola Tel. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 96 U. S. 1, said: "The object of vesting the power to regulate commerce in Congress was to secure, with reference to its subjects, uniform regulations, where practicable, against conflicting state legislation. Such conflicting legislation would inevitably follow with reference to telegraphic communications between citizens of different states, if each state was vested with power to control them beyond its own limits. The manner and order of the delivery of telegrams, as well as of their transmission, would vary according to the judgment of each state. . . . Indiana also requires telegrams to be delivered by messengers to persons to whom they are addressed, if they reside within one mile of the telegraph station or within the city or town in which such station is; and the requirement applies according to the decision of its supreme court in this case when the delivery is to be made in another state. Other states might consider that the delivery by messenger to a person living in a city many miles in extent, was an unwise burden, and require the duty

As the United States statutes give to all telegraph companies complying with certain conditions, the right to construct their lines along all military or post roads, a state has no power to grant to any company an exclusive right to the occupation of any post road within its borders, and a grant of such a right is void.¹

To insure the protection of its citizens, a state may require that no foreign corporation shall do business within its limits unless it has therein at least one known place of business, and an authorized agent upon whom process may be served.² And this, it seems, may apply as well to telegraph companies as to others, notwithstanding the fact that they are instruments of interstate commerce. While a state may not exclude absolutely any such company, it may impose reasonable restrictions and conditions upon it by virtue of its power of police regulation.³

within less limits; but if the law of one state can prescribe the order and manner of delivery in another state, the receiver of the message would often find himself incurring a penalty because of conflicting laws, both of which he could not obey. Conflict and confusion would only follow the attempted exercise of such a power. We are clear that it does not exist in any state." See infra, this title, Interstate Messages.

On similar principles, it is held that a message sent by telephone from one state to another is within the protection of the interstate commerce laws, and cannot be regulated or prohibited by injunction from a state court, on the ground that the persons or corporation engaged in sending such messages and operating the line, have not paid state taxes. In re Pennsylvania Teleph. Co., 48 N. J. Eq. 91; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 26.

The decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Pendleton case was confined to the particular case in hand, and is not to be given too extensive an application. Thus, where there is a refusal or total failure to transmit, the sender may enforce the statutory penalty, although the point of destination was in another state. So also, where the wrong complained of is a refusal to deliver, or a delay in delivery, the addressee, if the statute allows an action by him, may enforce the penalty, though the message is sent from a foreign state. All that was decided in the Pendleton case was that a state cannot enforce the performance of a duty beyond its borders, and the fact that the message is sent from one state into another does not deprive either state of the right to enforce the performance, within its borders, of the duties of the company engaging to transmit it. This view would follow from the accepted principles that a state may enforce the performance of the obligations of a public company though it is engaged in interstate commerce, and that a state law is not invalid merely because it incidentally affects interstate commerce. *Peck v. 3. In American Union Tel. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 67 Ala. 26; 42 Am. Rep. 90, the plaintiff, a telegraph company, filed a bill for an injunction to restrain the defendant from interfering with the construction and operation of its line. The state constitution provided that no corporation should do business within the state "without having at least one known place of business, and an authorized agent or agents therein." With this provision, the plaintiff had not complied. The injunction was denied on the ground that no right to such relief was shown to exist, but the court went on to hold that the constitutional provision quoted did not conflict with the Federal Constitution, saying: "The mandate of section 4, article 14 of the constitution of Alabama, which requires foreign corporations to have a known place of business and an authorized agent, is just as much a police regula-

The constitutional prohibition against the impairment of the obligation of contracts, and in favor of the protection of vested rights, affords a limitation to the state's power of control.¹ Thus, a municipal ordinance, granting to a particular company authority to construct and maintain telegraph lines along the streets without limitation as to time, and for a stipulated consideration, when accepted and acted on by the company by a compliance with all conditions, and by the construction of an expensive plant, acquires the features of a contract, which the city cannot afterwards annul or alter in its essential terms without the company's consent.² In this connection the same general rules as to the state's right of regulation and control, apply to telephone as to telegraph companies;³ the most common instances of its exercise are seen in statutes requiring telephone companies to furnish, without discrimination,⁴ facilities to all who apply for them, and in statutes regulating the charges of such companies,⁵ and the manner of the construction of their lines.⁶

2. Regulation of Charges.—A telephone company is engaged in a "business affected with a public interest," within the meaning of the rule laid down in a leading case,⁷ and the state, in the exercise of its police power, may therefore regulate the charges of

tion for the protection of the property interests of its citizens as a law forbidding vagrancy among its inhabitants. It does not impede or obstruct unreasonably any right conferred on foreign telegraph corporate companies by the act of Congress (U. S. Rev. St., §§ 5263-69), and is therefore free from constitutional objections." The court recognized that in Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 168, the corporation was not one engaged in interstate commerce, but considered that, notwithstanding the decisions in Pensacola Tel. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 96 U. S. 1, the same rule might be applied to telegraph companies operating in more than one state. American Union Tel. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 67 Ala. 33; 42 Am. Rep. 94. See also *Singer Mfg. It claimed the right under a section of the original ordinance, which provided that "all the acts and doings of said company under this ordinance shall be subject to any ordinance that may hereafter be passed by the city council concerning the same." It was held, however, that the city could not thus impair the contractual obligation, the court considering that "the city's construction of this section is strained and unreasonable, and conforms neither to its spirit nor letter." such companies, and provide a maximum rate which their charges shall not exceed.¹ The fact that the telephone lines are operated under patents granted by the general government in no way affects the right of the state in this regard.² Where a statute exists which regulates such charges, the telephone company cannot evade its operation. Thus, it cannot exceed the maximum rate by pretending to divide the charge into two items, one being designated as the regular rental and the other as a monthly charge for the use of the instrument by non-subscribers.³ Nor can it exceed the rate prescribed by attempting to charge a certain sum for each conversation, instead of charging a regular rental.⁴ The state may delegate its right of police regulation to a municipal corporation, but whether such a delegation has been made in any particular case, depends upon the construction of the charter or statute.⁵ The same principles will apply to telegraph companies. The fact that they are instruments of interstate commerce, and exercise privileges under special grants of right of way from the federal government, does not remove them from the state's power of control in matters of police regulation, though

St. Rep. 370, the mayor and assembly of St. Louis were authorized by the charter of the city "to license, tax and regulate telegraph companies or corporations, and all other business, trades, vocations or professions whatever," and also to provide for the "general welfare" of the city. It was held that the power to regulate telegraph companies included a similar power over telephone companies, although the latter were not in existence it may limit the power of the state where the charges relate to interstate messages.¹

3. Municipal Control—License Fees.—The legislature may delegate to a municipal corporation a general power to regulate the construction and maintenance of telegraph lines within its limits, and this power is included in the delegation of a general power of police control over streets.²

After the city, by virtue of its power to regulate, has designated the streets in which a company may place its wires, and the company has conformed to all the conditions, and expended money in placing its poles on such streets, the municipality cannot revoke the designation except for just and sufficient cause.³ But the fact that a company has obtained permission from a city to occupy the streets, does not secure immunity for it from subsequent regulations prescribed by the legislature, which do not amount to an impairment of its substantial vested rights.⁴

Where the telegraph line in a street amounts to a nuisance, the

at the time of the grant of authority. But it was considered that this power did not confer on the city authorities the right to regulate by ordinance, the charges of telephone companies. Such authority has, however, been conferred by a later statute. Missouri Acts 1889, ch. 434, p. 270.

Thus a company may be compelled to put up a shapely pole, as required by ordinance. Forsythe v. Baltimore, etc., Tel. Co., 12 Mo. App. 494.

Under the general telegraph law of New Jersey, the authorities of an incorporated town cannot, before prescribing regulations for the elevation at which the wires shall cross the streets, treat such use of the streets, for that purpose, as in no way impedes or endangers their full, free, and safe use, as a nuisance. American Union Tel. Co. v. Harrison, 31 N. J. Eq. 627.

Where a telegraph company erects poles and strings wires, under authority of an ordinance of the city council, which provides that such privilege shall expire on a certain day, the mayor has no right, without direction from the council and without notice to the company, to cut and remove the wires after the expiration of the time limited, and he will be liable as a trespasser for so doing. Mutual Union Tel. Co. v. Chicago, 16 Fed. Rep. 309.

3. Hudson Teleph. Co. v. Jersey City, 49 N. J. L. 303; 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 291. In this case Reed, J., said: "That the common council has the power, at its mere will, to amend the act which has legalized the occupation of the streets, and so leave the company's property impressed with the character of a nuisance which can be at once abated and their business thus destroyed, I cannot admit. The power of a common council to revoke its permission, given by statutory authority, to the location of a railroad in the streets of a city, was expressly denied in the case of People's Pass. R. Co. v. Baldwin, 37 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 424, and in Brooklyn Cent. R. Co. v. Brooklyn City R. Co., 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 358. I also understand the rule laid down in Com. v. Boston, 97 Mass. 555, in reference to the right of municipal authorities to proceed against telegraph poles in a street, as nuisances, after permission to so place them has once been granted, is in the same direction." municipal authorities have a right to abate it, by virtue of their general power to protect the public interest in the streets.¹

Under its power to regulate, a municipal corporation has no authority to tax a telegraph or telephone company operating lines within its limits, and therefore may not impose license fees, except so far as may be necessary for the expenses of inspection, etc.² Where, under express authority from the legislature, a municipal corporation is authorized to impose a license tax on the business of telegraph companies done within the city, the tax must be confined to such business as is not interstate in its character.³

VI. FEDERAL CONTROL.—The fact that a telegraph company whose lines extend into several states is an instrument of interstate commerce, subjects it to the control of Congress, so far as regards matters connected with commerce between the states.⁴ And Congress has a further right of control, by virtue of the conditions incorporated into the grants of franchises to certain companies which constructed lines through the territories and along the Pacific railroads.⁵

1. Nuisance.—New York, etc., Teleph. Co. v. East Orange, 42 N. J. Eq. 490. In this, an injunction to restrain the authorities from removing the poles was denied, on the ground that the company's authority to occupy the street was doubtful. See Mutual Union Tel. Co. v. Chicago, 16 Fed. Rep. 309.

2. License Fees.—See Leloup v. Mobile, 127 U. S. 640; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 27; Wisconsin Teleph. Co. v. Oshkosh, 62 Wis. 32; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 538. Thus an ordinance requiring all telegraph poles within the city to be inspected by the police department and licensed, and imposing a license fee of one dollar per annum for each pole, and two dollars and a half per mile of wire, is not unreasonable or invalid, and is within the city's power of "regulation." Allentown v. Western Union Tel. Co., 148 Pa. St. 117; Philadelphia v. Postal Tel. Cable Co. (Supreme Ct.), 21 N. Y. Supp. 556; Chester v. Western Union Tel. Co., 152 Pa. St. 464; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Philadelphia (Pa. 1888), 12 Atl. Rep. 144; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 40. Compare Philadelphia v. Western Union Tel. Co., 40 Fed. Rep. 615. So where the state has imposed an annual license fee in lieu of all taxes, a city cannot impose additional taxes in the form of license fees. Wisconsin Teleph. Co. v. Oshkosh, 62 Wis. 32; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 538.

But a privilege or license tax of five dollars a year on each pole within the city, cannot be upheld under the city's power to "regulate." St. Louis v. Western Union Tel. Co., 39 Fed. Rep. 59; New Orleans v. Great Southern Teleph., etc., Co., 40 La. Ann. 41; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 35. See also generally, LICENSE, vol. 13, p. 532; TAXATION, vol. 25, p. 1; infra, this title, Taxation—Of Telegraph Companies; New York v. Second Ave. R. Co., 32 N. Thus, in view of the fact that the telegraphic franchises granted by the Union Pacific acts were inalienable by the grantees, and also of the express reservation therein of the right to "add to, alter, amend or repeal," Congress had power to pass the act of August 7th, 1888, directing the railroad and telegraph companies which received government aid, henceforth to operate their telegraph lines by themselves alone and through their own officers and employés. U. S. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 50 Fed. Rep. 28. See also supra, this title, Corporate Rights and Franchises.

VII. DUTY OF TELEPHONE COMPANIES TO FURNISH EQUAL FACILITIES TO ALL.—Telephone companies, whether corporations or individuals, are engaged in a public employment and their business is affected with a public interest. They are bound, therefore, to serve impartially and without discrimination, all who apply for service and who tender a compliance with their regulations. The telephone, though of recent discovery, has become almost indispensable to the commercial and business public; it is a vehicle of public intelligence and its owners cannot refuse to discharge the obligations incumbent upon them as public servants.¹ Nor can they evade these obligations on the ground that they own and operate their lines under license from the holders of the patent, the terms of which license require that service shall not be furnished to certain rival companies. Owners of patents and persons holding under them must exercise their rights subject to the obligations imposed by the common or statute law, and cannot by contract or otherwise evade such obligations.²

1. In State v. Nebraska Teleph. Co., 17 Neb. 126; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 1; 52 Am. Rep. 409, it appeared that the relator, an attorney at law, applied to the local company for a telephone with the usual connections. The instrument was furnished, together with all the appliances, excepting a directory, the absence of which materially impaired the beneficial use of the telephone. After continued applications, a directory was furnished, but on pay day, the subscriber refused to pay except for the time during which he had been furnished with a directory; the company insisted on full payment. Neither would yield, so the company removed the instrument. Subsequently the relator applied for service, offering to comply with their reasonable regulations, but was refused. He then applied for mandamus to compel the company to render the service. It was held that the mandamus should issue. The court, after reviewing the status of the telephone companies and the public character of the obligations they assume, concluded that the company had "assumed the responsibility of a common carrier of news. Its wires and poles line our public streets and thoroughfares. It has, and must be held to have, taken its place by the side of the telegraph as such common carrier." That the duty to the relator was one growing out of its office as carrier and not out of contract; and that its relations with the relator as to the misunderstanding between them concerning the directory, could not affect the case. See also Delaware v. Delaware, etc., Tel., etc., Co., 47 Fed. Rep. 633; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 15; aff'd 50 Fed. Rep. 677; Central Union Teleph. Co. v. Bradbury, 106 Ind. 1; Budd v. New York, 143 U. S. 517; 36 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 31; People v. Manhattan Gas Light Co., 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 136. The telephone company cannot evade this obligation by alleging that it does not rent telephones, but furnishes such service by means of public stations only. Central Union Teleph. Co. v. State, 123 Ind. 113; Central Union Teleph. Co. v. State, 118 Ind. 194; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 481; 10 Am. St. Rep. 114.

2. Effect of Contract with Parent Company Owning Patent Right.—The American Bell Telephone Company owns the telephone patents, and its custom has been, in granting to local companies the right to operate lines, to provide in the grant that the grantee shall not afford telephone facilities to any telegraph company except with the grantor's consent. In State v. Bell Teleph. Co., 36 Ohio St. 296; 38 Am. Rep. 584, the terms of the grant were as stated, and the parent company had provided that the Western Union Telegraph Company should have a monopoly of all telegraphic transmissions in connection with the telephone. The court held that such a contract could not re-

In many of the states, statutes exist which provide for the enforcement of these obligations, but it seems that the rule would be the same, whether the obligation was declared by statute or considered as arising from the common law.¹

lieve the local company from its obligation to serve the public impartially, and issued a mandamus to compel the company to supply the relators (other telegraph companies), with telephone facilities. In this case a statute provided specifically as to the duties incumbent upon telephone and telegraph companies. In the case of Chesapeake, etc., Teleph. Co. v. Baltimore, etc., Tel. Co., 66 Md. 399; 59 Am. Rep. 167; 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 221, a similar state of facts existed. The case arose under the statute declaring the duties of telegraph companies, which, the court held, included telephone companies. A mandamus was issued to compel the telephone company to extend its service to the complainant telegraph company. So in Bell Teleph. Co. v. Com. (Pa. 1886), 3 Atl. Rep. 825; Central Dist., etc., Teleph. Co. v. Com., 114 Pa. St. 592; Commercial Union Tel. Co. v. New England Teleph., etc., Co., 61 Vt. 241; 15 Am. St. Rep. 893; Central Union Teleph. Co. v. State, 118 Ind. 194; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 481; 10 Am. St. Rep. 114; Central Union Teleph. Co. v. State, 123 Ind. 113. See also State v. Bell Teleph. Co. (Mo. 1880), 22 Alb. L. J. 363; State v. Bell Teleph. Co., 23 Fed. Rep. 539; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 7; Louisville Transfer Co. v. American Dist. Teleph. Co. (Ky.), 24 Alb. L. Jour. 283. In this last case the plaintiff carried on a passenger transfer business in public omnibuses and carriages, while the defendant operated a telephone exchange, and organized as a part of its business, a system of public transfer by carriages and coupés. The defendant had placed a telephone in plaintiff's office and threatened to remove it, whereupon plaintiff applied for an injunction. It was held that, the defendant being engaged in two distinct employments, there was no rivalry between him and the plaintiff as to the telephone business, and that he occupied the same relation to the plaintiff as toward the rest of the public and could not discriminate against him. See also CARRIERS OF GOODS, vol. 2, p. 788.

Authorities Contra.—The rule of the text is opposed by a single case. American Rapid Tel. Co. v. Connecticut Teleph. Co., 49 Conn. 352; 1 Am. &

Eng. Corp. Cas. 378; 44 Am. Rep. 237. The facts were the same as in the first case set out in this note. The court held that the parent company in Massachusetts, owning the patent, had a right, in granting licenses for its use, to impose whatever restrictions it chose; that the Connecticut corporation, therefore, acquired a right only to the restricted use of the patented device, and its duty to the public did not extend beyond that restricted use; that the statute requiring all telegraph and telephone companies to receive dispatches from all other telegraph and telephone lines, and transmit them on payment of the usual charges, could not operate to compel the Connecticut corporation to do what it had no right to do; and that a Massachusetts statute to the same effect was to be regarded as applying to the action of the Massachusetts corporation as a carrier of speech in that state, and not as affecting its right to manufacture its instruments and sell or lease them in other states as the owner of the patent. No authorities are cited in the opinion.

In People v. Hudson River Teleph. Co., 19 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 466, the rule is stated to be that "a telephone company may not withhold from one citizen, facilities which it grants to another. It may, however, make and enforce a regulation that a subscriber shall not use his instrument in transmitting messages for a rival company. But it may not insist that he shall not call messengers except from its office."

In St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Southern Express Co., 117 U. S. 3; 23 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 545, it is held that a railroad company may refuse to serve an express company, or may prefer one company to others. See EXPRESS COMPANIES, vol. 7, p. 542. But the reasons which called for the holding in that case cannot be applied to the cases under consideration. The distinction between the two classes of cases is stated in Delaware v. Delaware, etc., Tel., etc., Co., 47 Fed. Rep. 633; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 23; aff'd 50 Fed. Rep. 680.

1. Effect of Statutes.—"So far as the obligations of telegraph companies are

The rule of law thus recognized does not conflict with the provisions of the statutes of the United States, or the decisions rendered thereunder in regard to the rights of patentees.¹ It is true that the value of a patent right lies in its exclusiveness; it is a species of property consisting of the exclusive right to manufacture, to sell and to use. The patentee may dispose of just that portion of his property in the patent which he may find convenient or profitable, and the licensee or grantee will have no further rights than those granted.² The franchise secured by the patent holds the licensee under the operation of the patent, and restrains him from all use beyond that which the licensor has granted by the express terms of the license. The use of a patent is never allowed against the will of the patentee, nor can any power compel a larger grant from the patentee than he chooses to make.³ But the telephone patent is practically valueless except when subjected to a public use,⁴ and the owners of the patent, by subjecting it to such use and accepting the benefits flowing therefrom, must be held impliedly to have assumed the corresponding obligations, principal among which is the duty to serve the public without discrimination. They cannot ask of the state that the right of eminent domain be granted in their behalf, and that authority be given them to occupy streets and highways with their poles and wires, and at the same time insist upon immunity from public duties and from state regulation and control; their rights in the patent, in so far as they conflict with the new duties, are waived by their acceptance of such privileges.⁵

defined by the act (except the payment of the penalty) they are simply declaratory of the common law. These obligations are imposed by the demands of commerce and trade, and it would be idle to say that they existed only by force of the statute; and the same is true of the clause in the act making its provisions applicable to telephones." State v. Nebraska Teleph. Co., 17 Neb. 126; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 1; 52 Am. Rep. 409.

4. The construction of telephone lines would be practically impossible without the exercise of the right of eminent domain, and the right to occupy public streets. But such rights are never granted except in favor of a public use; hence, telephone companies are compelled to subject their patent to a public use in order to reap any benefit from it. A company may, however, refuse to furnish its service to one who violates its reasonable regulations, as, for example, one who uses obscene language in talking over the line.¹

The duty of the company in any particular case being established, mandamus is the proper remedy to enforce its performance,² and in such a proceeding the owner of the patent, under whom the defendant company holds, is not a necessary party, although the company's defense may be that its contract with the parent company, the owner of the patent, forbids the particular service in dispute to be furnished.³

VIII. LIABILITY OF TELEGRAPH COMPANIES FOR NEGLIGENT TRANSMISSION OR DELIVERY.—A telegraph company, upon accepting a message tendered it for transmission, is under a legal duty to transmit and deliver it without error or delay, and is liable in damages for any injury of which its negligence in the performance of this duty is the proximate cause. The questions in this connection are the duty of the company in the particular case, and proximate cause.⁴

1. General View of Company's Duty.—The first duty of the company is to accept all proper messages tendered it for transmission by persons who have complied with its reasonable regulations. For a willful breach of this duty, it can be held liable for exem-

Effect of Interstate Commerce Clause.—Statutes of a state, declaring the duties of telephone companies, are intended to apply only to the service within the state. The company cannot, therefore, defend against the application for a mandamus on the ground that it is engaged in interstate commerce, merely because, in furnishing the complainant with telephone service, it would put him in connection with the company's offices outside the state. Central Union Teleph. Co. v. State, 118 Ind. 194; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 481; 10 Am. St. Rep. 114. See supra, this title, State Regulation and Control.

2. Remedy is by Mandamus.—"The remedy by mandamus is the appropriate one. The duty is of a public character, and there is no other adequate mode of relief." State v. Nebraska Teleph. Co., 17 Neb. 126; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 1; 52 Am. Rep. 409, citing

Cas. 7, the court was divided as to whether or not the owner of the patent, the American Bell Telephone Company, was a necessary party; Brewer, J., considering that it was not, while Treat, J., dissented. Compare as to the rule of the text, Commercial Union Tel. Co. v. New England Teleph., etc., Co., 61 Vt. 241; 15 Am. St. Rep. 893.

plary damages,¹ though it is not liable for such damages where its refusal to transmit arises from a misunderstanding as to its duty in the case involved.² Or mandamus can be had to compel it to discharge this duty.³ Having accepted the message, the duty of the company is to exercise due care to secure its prompt and correct transmission and delivery; it is not, like a common carrier, made to insure correctness in transmission, but is bound only to the exercise of proper care.⁴ But the status of the telegraph companies as quasi public institutions, and their acceptance of special privileges from the state and federal governments, impose upon them unusual duties and obligations, and they are bound to exercise a degree of care commensurate with such duties; they cannot claim that the standard of their duty and liability is the same as that of private individuals. Their obligations as to the transmission of messages do not therefore arise entirely out of the contract of sending.⁵ In cases where, from any cause, it is impossible to send the dispatch, or where considerable delay will be necessary, it is the duty of the company to inform the sender, particularly where the message shows on its face the necessity or importance of its speedy transmission.⁶

2. Thus in the case of Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ferguson, 57 Ind. 495, the company refused to send a message because it had reason to believe that it was intended to promote an illegal purpose. The court held that it was liable in damages, but could not be held liable for exemplary or punitive damages. See infra, this title, Immoral Messages.

In Smith v. Western Union Tel. Co., 83 Ky. 104; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 20; 4 Am. St. Rep. 126, Holt, J., observes: "Its liability for neglect is not founded purely upon contract. It is chartered purely for public purposes; extraordinary powers are, therefore, conferred upon it; it has the power of eminent domain; if it did not serve the public, it could not constitutionally lay a wire over a man's land without his consent; and by reason of the gift of these privileges it is required to receive and transmit messages, and is liable for neglect, independent of any express contract." See also Western Union Tel. Co. v. Reynolds, 77 Va. 173; 5 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 182; 46 Am. Rep. 715.

6. Duty to Inform Sender When Delay is Unavoidable.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Harding, 103 Ind. 505; 10 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 617, where the court said: "It might well be that in a case where a message was delivered, which showed upon its face the importance of speedy transmission, and other means of making the communication were available to the sender, which might be resorted to, if he was informed that the one chosen was ineffectual, or his conduct might otherwise be materially controlled thereby, the company would be bound at its peril to ascertain and disclose its inability to serve him, or render itself liable to respond in damages."

In the case of a passenger who purchases a ticket entitling him to be carried, it is his duty to inquire, before embarking upon the train, whether it a. DUTY TO TRANSMIT WITHOUT ERROR OR DELAY.—The company's obligation, as a public servant, imposes upon it the duty to transmit all messages, properly offered for transmission, without error or delay, and it becomes liable for damages resulting from failure to exercise proper care.¹ But it is not, like a common carrier, liable as an insurer, and cannot, therefore, be held responsible for errors or delays caused by atmospheric disturbances or other causes beyond its control.² Where such causes prevent a direct transmission, the company is not guilty of negligence in selecting a circuitous route;³ and if it is necessary that the message pass through a repeating office, a reasonable allowance must be made in the company's favor for the delay caused by other business at such office.⁴ At small stations, it is not the duty of the company to keep more than one operator and a messenger boy, and if a slight delay occurs, owing to the operator's absence at his meals, the company cannot be held guilty of negligence, if the message is forwarded immediately on his return.⁵ A failure by the sender to comply with the reasonable and proper regulations as to sending messages, will relieve the company of its liability for an incorrect or delayed transmission, where it appears that the sender knew or ought to have known of such regulations.⁶

b. DUTY TO DELIVER.—The telegraph company owes an active duty to make use of reasonable diligence and effort to find the person to whom the message is addressed, and deliver to him a copy in writing. It can be excused from this duty only by showing that the person addressed was not within the ordinary delivery limits, or that delivery was prevented by the intervention of influ-

Compare Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cohen, 73 Ga. 522, where it is held that for an error in transmission, the company must respond in damages; that if by reason of atmospheric disturbances, the message cannot be correctly transmitted, the attempt to transmit should not be made.

510; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 615; 18 Am. St. Rep. 148.

But this proposition is true only as to small stations, and where it is manifest that a single operator cannot attend to the business, the court will not allow the company to evade its just liability, by alleging the inadequacy of its means for transmission. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Scircle, 103 Ind. 227; 10 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 616. In this case there was a delay of five hours and a half.

6. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Dozier, 67 Miss. 288; infra, this title, Contributory Negligence. Thus the mere delivery of a message written on a leaf torn from a blank book, without any word spoken either by the plaintiff's messenger or the company's operator concerning the sending of the message, and an absence of any payment made or tendered of the price for transmission, is insufficient to create a liability against the company for failure to send such message. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Liddell, 68 Miss. 1.

ences beyond its control.¹ In determining whether or not the company has properly discharged its duty in any particular case, the facts involved must be adverted to, and the general rules of law as to negligence applied.² In all cases delivery must be made to the addressee or his authorized agent.³ The addressee is entitled to a written copy of the message, and the company does not fully discharge its duty by transmitting the contents of the message over the telephone.⁴ And the company is not relieved of its obligation to deliver messages by the fact that the business of its office at the receiving station is not sufficient to justify the employment of an additional agent to make de-

1. A telegraph company is not responsible for the non-delivery of a night message if, before it could be delivered, the copy was destroyed by a fire caused by atmospheric influences, and not resulting from negligence or imperfection in instruments. Fowler v. Western Union Tel. Co., 80 Me. 381; 6 Am. St. Rep. 211.

The burden of proof rests upon the plaintiff to show that the addressee resided within the delivery limits. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Henderson, 89 Ala. 510; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 615; 18 Am. St. Rep. 148.

Instances.—Going to a doctor's office twice, to deliver a telegram summoning the doctor to attend at a childbirth, was not the extent of the messenger's duty, where it appeared that the doctor might have been found at his residence near by. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cooper, 71 Tex. 507; 10 Am. St. Rep. 772; Pope v. Western Union Tel. Co., 9 Ill. App. 283.

In an action for failure to deliver a message addressed to T., for plaintiff, the company made defense that the message was sent by a boy, who made inquiry, but did not find plaintiff nor T., who were unknown to defendant's agents. The sender was then notified, but failed to give any better address of T. who, however, had resided for six years in the same house, within one mile of defendant's office. Held, that the search was not sufficient. Western Union Tel. Co. v. McKibben, 114 Ind. 511; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 133.

In the case of Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lindley, 62 Ind. 371, the message having been received at the telegraph office on Saturday afternoon, the messenger made an attempt to deliver it, but could not, because the addressee's office at his place of business was closed; an attempt to deliver on Sunday failed for a like reason, and no further effort was made to deliver. It was held that the two attempts were no excuse for a failure to deliver on Monday. See also Western Union Tel. Co. v. Carter, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 624.

3. Delivery Must Be to Addressee or His Authorized Agent.—In Pearsall v. Western Union Tel. Co., 44 Hun (N. Y.) 532; aff'd 124 N. Y. 256; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 31; 21 Am. St. Rep. 662, the message was directed to "T. W. P. & Co.," but the company delivered it in an envelope addressed to "T. W. P." It was therefore regarded at the office of T. W. P. & Co. as Mr. P.'s private mail and was not opened until his arrival. It was an important message requiring immediate attention, and would have been attended to promptly had it been addressed to the firm instead of to Mr. P. personally. In consequence of the delay thus occasioned, the plaintiff suffered damage for which it was held that he could recover of the company.

In the case of Given v. Western Union Tel. Co., 24 Fed. Rep. 118; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 107, the company was considered to have discharged its duty when it telephoned to the addressee's place of business and learning that he was out of town for several days, caused the message to be delivered to his wife at his residence, and then informed the sender of what had been done. So in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Triessal, 98 Ind. 566, it is said that there is an implied authority on the part of a hotel clerk to receive a telegram for a guest, and the company cannot be held responsible for the negligence of the clerk in failing to deliver it.

4. Brashears v. Western Union Tel. Co., 45 Mo. App. 433. Here the telephone message was incorrect.

livery.¹ But where it can be shown that the proximate cause of the failure to deliver was the negligence of the sender in not giving a sufficiently definite address, there can be no recovery.² And where a message is sent addressed to one person in care of another, it has been held that the company performs its full duty by delivery to the person in whose care the message was sent;³ but this doctrine cannot always be applied, since if the residence of the addressee is a matter of common knowledge in the locality, and within easy reach of the office, the company would be bound to make some effort to deliver the message to him.⁴ The company may assume additional obligations by contract; thus, it may contract to forward to a person, who has removed from one city to another, all messages received by it for him. But such an agreement is binding on the company only for a reasonable time.⁵ And an obligation to deliver messages to an addressee at a particular place, cannot be thrust upon the company by a mere verbal instruction to one of its messengers, that addressee desired messages to him, when received during certain hours, to be delivered at a specified place.⁶ The delivery must be as speedy as is reasonably practicable; this duty of early delivery is as imperative as that of prompt transmission,⁷ and the company is responsible for damages which result as a proximate consequence of delay in delivery.⁸ The company cannot excuse

4. Thus in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Houghton, 82 Tex. 562; 39 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 577, a message was sent to H., the addressee, "care of Mrs. Basal." No such person as Mrs. Basal resided in the town and the company made no effort to deliver to H., although he was well known, and lived within two hundred yards of the telegraph office. It was held that the company was guilty of negligence in not making an effort to find H.

6. In the case of Given v. Western Union Tel. Co., 24 Fed Rep. 119; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 107, the plaintiff, the private secretary of the governor, claimed that the company was negligent in leaving a dispatch at his residence with his wife, instead of leaving it for him at the governor's office. He claimed that he had given verbal instructions to a messenger to have all messages sent to him at his office. The court held that such an instruction could not be binding on the company; the messenger in such case was the plaintiff's agent, not the company's. Besides, the proper method of directing the company in such a case, was by notice in writing.

7. Delay in Delivery.—Bliss v. Baltimore, etc., Tel. Co., 30 Mo. App. 103. A dispatch delivered in its regular order, and within thirty minutes from the time when received at the office of destination, is seasonably delivered. Julian v. Western Union Tel. Co., 98 Ind. 327. But a delay of three days after receipt of the message, if unexplained, is evidence of negligence. Harkness v. Western Union Tel. Co., 73 Iowa 190; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 182; 5 Am. St. Rep. 672. A failure to deliver is a failure to transmit. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Gongar, 84 Ind. 176.

2. The Company's Duty and Liability as Affected by Regulations or Contractual Stipulations—a. RIGHT OF COMPANY TO PROVIDE REASONABLE RULES AND REGULATIONS AS TO CONDUCT OF ITS BUSINESS.—Like every corporation or individual engaged in a public business, a telegraph company has the right to provide reasonable rules and regulations with which those desiring to employ its services must comply.⁴ This right, however, is subject to the restriction that the regulations shall not be unreasonable, or relieve the company of the obligations which law and public policy impose upon it.⁵ The reasonableness of any particular regulation is a question for the decision of the court,⁶ though there are complicated cases in which it has been submitted to the jury.⁷ A regulation ordinarily reasonable may operate unreasonably in a particular case, and in such case it will not be enforced.⁸ The company may require that all messages offered for transmission shall be fully and clearly written, without the use of numerals, and in the language prevailing at the place of contract;⁹ and that the contract of sending shall be made at one of its transmitting offices, so that if a message is sent to the office by one of the company's messengers, such messenger acts as the agent of the party sending the message.¹ The company may also require that the price of every message shall be prepaid,² together with a deposit to pay extra charges of delivery where the addressee is beyond the regular delivery limits;³ and may provide that, where the message asks for an answer, a deposit shall be made sufficient to pay for the answer.⁴ A regulation that messages shall not be indecent in language nor immoral in character is not unreasonable.⁵ The cases afford other instances.⁶ The company cannot, however, under the guise of regulations, escape from the obligations which public policy imposes upon it or insist upon harsh

Oral Message.—The company is, therefore, not bound to receive for transmission an oral message, and it cannot be held responsible for a failure to trans-

3. Including Charges for Delivery.—In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Henderson, 89 Ala. 510; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 615; 18 Am. St. Rep. 148, there was a regulation printed on the blanks to the effect that "messages will be delivered free within the established free delivery limits of the terminal office. For delivery at a greater distance a special charge will be made to cover the cost of such delivery." The sender of the message neither paid nor tendered the extra charge. It appearing that the sendee lived beyond the free delivery limits, it was held in an action against the company for non-delivery, that the regulation was a reasonable one; that the burden rests upon the sender to know whether or not the addressee lives within the delivery limits; and that such a regulation was binding on the illiterate as well as the intelligent. See also Anderson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 83 Tex. 17.

4. May Require Deposit to Pay for Answer.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. McGuire, 104 Ind. 130; 54 Am. Rep. 296 (deposit required, sufficient to pay for answer of ten words); Hewlett v.

Western Union Tel. Co., 28 Fed. Rep. 181; 14 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 134. In this latter case, the regulation was that "Transient persons sending messages which require answers, must deposit in advance an amount sufficient to pay for a reply of ten words." The plaintiff sent from his hotel, which he was just about to leave, a message, by a messenger, to the telegraph office with money for prepayment for his own message, but not for the answer. In a suit by him against the company, it was held that he could not recover. The court approved the case of Western Union Tel. Co. v. McGuire, 104 Ind. 130; 54 Am. Rep. 296, though it did not entirely adopt its reasoning. It was said that in the latter case, the ruling was placed "too entirely upon a mere question of etiquette between the parties."

6. Other Instances of Reasonable Regulations.—In Atlantic, etc., Tel. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 4 Daly (N. Y.) 527, a regulation was considered reasonable which required the name of the company from which a message is received, together with the date of its receipt, to be added to every message accepted from other companies for transmission to Europe and which required extra pay to be made for the transmission of such addition. Gray on Telegraphs, § 14.

The stipulations in the printed contract are practically nothing more than regulations, and their validity is governed by the same principles. See infra, this title, Stipulations in Contract of Sending.

Office Hours.—The company may pro-

or unreasonable conditions.¹ Thus, it cannot require its patrons to inform its employes of the true import and meaning of every message offered for transmission;² nor insist that every message shall bear the autograph signature of its sender, or the production of a power of attorney from him.³ But in case the message is not properly transmitted, the failure of the sender to inform the company of its character and importance will limit his recovery to nominal damages only.⁴

(1) Regulations as to Office Hours.—The company has the right to provide reasonable regulations as to the hours during which its offices shall be open for the transmission and delivery of messages;⁵ the reasonableness of the regulations varying with the character of the locality where the particular office is located, and ordinarily being a question for the court,⁶ though there is authority for the proposition that such a question is for the jury.⁷ It is not necessary that all offices should have the same office hours; such a rule would involve the necessity of all offices being kept open all the time.⁸ Nor can the employes at one office be required to know the office hours of all the other offices of the country; to exact such a requirement would be unreasonable, if not impossible.⁹ But there are cases which hold that the fact that the comvide office hours for its offices, during which time alone dispatches may be offered for transmission. Brown v. Western Union Tel. Co. (Utah, 1889), 21 Pac. Rep. 988; infra, this title, Regulations as to Office Hours. See also infra, this title, Sunday Messages.

But in view of the fact that the company is liable often for forged messages, it may well be questioned whether it may not enforce such a regulation. See Code of Tennessee, § 1324, b.

8. Office Hours Need Not Be the Same Everywhere.—The pressure of business in large cities requires the office to be always open; and to insist that the same office hours as are observed in the cities should be kept at every way station would render the right of the company to regulate its office hours, a nullity and a mockery. See Western Union Tel. Co. v. Harding, 103 Ind. 505; 10 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 619, where the rule of the text is upheld.

9. Employees at One Office Not Bound to Know Hours Observed at Other Offices.—In Thompson on Electricity, § 300, the author has to say: "It is a mere judicial assumption to say, as was said in one case, that the employes in a telegraph office are not required to know the hour at which an office of the company in another city closes. On the contrary, it is an obvious suggestion that in any properly regulated telegraph system, the offices would be classified and there would be a uniform time established for the closing of pany's office at the point to which the message is directed was closed when the message was received for transmission, is no defense to an action for delay.¹

b. STIPULATIONS IN CONTRACT OF SENDING—(1) General Rule as to Validity.—Messages offered for transmission are almost invariably written on blanks provided by the company, so that in affixing his signature to the message, the sender thereby signs a contract printed on the back of the blank containing certain stipulations intended to release the company from liability for mistakes or delay in transmission.² The question as to the validity of these stipulations has arisen in many cases, and the general rule deducible seems to be that while the company may, by regulations or special contract, fix reasonable limitations to its liability for errors in transmission, or for a failure to transmit, it cannot stiputhose of each class, of which time every agent receiving dispatches would be apprised," etc. But with great respect, it seems that the doctrine of the text, as laid down by Justice Miller, in the case of Given v. Western Union Tel. Co., 24 Fed. Rep. 119; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 113, is more consonant with reason. Justice Miller, speaking for the court in that case, said: "Nor do we see that it is the duty of this telegraph company to keep the employes of every one of its offices in the United States informed of the time when every other office closes for the night. The immense number of these offices all over the United States, the frequent changes among them as to the time of closing, and the prodigious volume of a written book on this subject, seem to make this onerous and inconvenient to a degree which forbids it to be treated as a duty to its customers, for neglect of which it must be held liable for damages. There is no more obligation to do this in regard to offices in the same state than those four thousand miles away, for the communication is between them all, and of equal importance." See Western Union Tel. Co. v. Harding, 103 Ind. 505; 10 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 617 (quoting Justice Miller's language); Stephenson v. Montreal Tel. Co., 16 U. C. Q. B. 539. And see also Thompson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 32 Mo. App. 197.

1. Cases Impliedly Contra.—In the case of Western Union Tel. Co. v. Broesche, 72 Tex. 654; 13 Am. St. Rep. 843, the message was delivered for transmission at half-past six o'clock in the afternoon, but was not transmitted until half-past eight the next morning; it announced that plaintiff would arrive on a midnight train bringing with him the corpse of addressee's relative. At the trial, the jury were instructed that the company could not be excused for the delay on the ground that the office to which the message was addressed was closed when the message was offered for transmission. The appellate court said: "We think the court did not err in giving this charge. The contract to transmit the message was made by appellant through its agent, who was fully authorized and empowered to make it; we do not think appellant can excuse its failure to perform the contract upon the ground that another one of its servants, acting under authority from appellant, rendered the performance of the contract impracticable." In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Bruner (Tex. 1892), 19 S. W. Rep. 149, the company accepted a message and undertook to deliver it about nine o'clock at night. It was held, following the Broesche case, that the fact that the office of destination was closed against the receiving office was no defense, especially since it appeared that no effort was made to send the message until next morning, when it was entirely too late. But in neither of these cases does the point here mentioned appear to have been much considered. The opinions contain nothing more than a mere statement of the rule.

2. See Western Union Tel. Co. v. Carew, 15 Mich. 525.

The principle of the text is clearly stated in 2 Redfield's Ry. Cas. 227: "Every attempt of carriers, by general notice or special contract, to excuse themselves from responsibility for losses or damages resulting in any degree from their own want of care and faithfulness, is against that good faith which the law requires as the basis of all contracts or employments, and therefore based upon principles and a policy which the law will not uphold." Quoted with approval, as applicable to telegraph companies, in Gillis v. Western Union Tel. Co., 61 Vt. 461; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 572; 15 Am. St. Rep. 917.

"It has long been the settled law of this state that a common carrier (including a telegraph company) cannot, either by special agreement with, or by notice brought home to, the shipper, relieve himself from liability for the consequences of his negligence." Western Union Tel. Co. v. Griswold, 37 Ohio St. 310; 41 Am. Rep. 500; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Blanchard, 68 Ga. 309; 45 Am. Rep. 480.

In Sweatland v. Illinois, etc., Tel. Co., 27 Iowa 433; 1 Am. Rep. 285, Dillon, J., said: "We have examined all the leading cases known to have been decided with respect to this subject (i. e., exemption from liability by special contract), and have not found one holding, when this was the exact point in judgment, that the ordinary printed conditions as to repeating messages, have the effect to release the company from mistakes caused by its own want of ordinary care." This language is approved in Marr v. Western Union Tel. Co., 85 Tenn. 546; 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 244. The court, by Lurton, J. said: "These limitations, contained in the agreement under which this message was sent, under any view of the power of the company to limit its liability for its own negligence, were invalid so far as the damage was a result of the negligence of the defendant or its servants."

Reason of the Rule.—The rule of the text is founded in the policy of the law its liability for the statutory penalty.¹ There is a class of cases, however, which uphold the doctrine that the company may by special contract exempt itself from liability, except for damages resulting from "gross negligence," or wilful default,² or as stated in other cases, from "fraud or any conduct inconsistent with good and in view of the practical monopoly which the telegraph companies enjoy. In Tyler v. Western Union Tel. Co., 60 Ill. 438; 14 Am. Rep. 38, Breese, J. said: "If it (the stipulation) be a contract, the sender entering into it was under a species of moral duress; his necessity compelled him to resort to the telegraph as the only means through which he could speedily transact the business in hand, and was compelled to submit to such conditions as the company in their corporate greed might impose, and sign such a paper as the company might present." See similar language used in Marr v. Western Union Tel. Co., 85 Tenn. 544; 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 243.

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Graham, 1 Colo. 237; 9 Am. Rep. 136, it is said in explanation of the reason of the rule: "Much has been said about the peculiar hazards to which telegraphs are exposed. This is all true, and courts and legislatures have been liberal in allowing companies to provide against such risks as arise out of atmospheric influences and kindred causes. At this point they have properly stopped. To permit them to contract against their own negligence would be to arm them with a most dangerous power, and indeed that would leave the public almost entirely remediless. It must be borne in mind that the public have but little choice in the selection of the company which is to perform the desired service. They are bound to take it as they find it, and to commit to its agents their messages, however valuable. Such being the case, public policy as well as commercial necessity require that companies engaged in telegraphing should be held to a high degree of responsibility."

Analogous to Common Carriers.—The rule of the text is merely an application to telegraph companies of the rule governing similar stipulation by common carriers. A common carrier may, by special contract or by actual notice, restrict its liability as insurer; but it cannot modify or limit its liability for the consequences of its negligence. See RAILROADS, vol. 19, p. 915;

2. As to Exemption from Liability For "Gross" Negligence.—This view is stated in Lassiter v. Western Union Tel. Co., 89 N. Car. 336; 5 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 230: "The exemption is not extended to acts or omissions involving gross negligence, but is confined to such as are incident to the service, and may occur when there is but slight attaching culpability in its officers and employes." Pegram v. Western Union Tel. Co., 97 N. Car. 57; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 122. See similar views expressed in Becker v. Western Union Tel. Co., 11 Neb. 87; 38 Am. Rep. 356; *Grimwell v. Western Union Tel. In Nebraska, a new rule has been established by statute, which eliminates considerations of degrees of negligence in this connection. Kemp v. Western Union Tel. Co., 28 Neb. 661; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 607.

In Texas, it is held that the stipulations against liability will not extend to injuries caused by "the misconduct, fraud, or want of due care on the part of the company, its servants or agents."

faith."¹ But the doctrine of degrees of negligence, or that there is any practical difference between negligence and gross negligence, has not the support of the better authorities,² and the rule accepted by the weight of authority is that a telegraph company, exercising a public employment, is liable for failing to exercise that degree of care and skill which a careful and prudent man would, under the circumstances, employ, and that any stipulation by which it undertakes to relieve itself from this duty to exercise care in the discharge of its employment, is contrary to public policy, and therefore illegal and void, even though the other party may voluntarily assent to it.³ As to what is sufficient to constitute proof of "gross negligence" within the meaning of the rule as just stated, the authorities differ. In some instances the mere fact that the message was improperly transmitted, if unexplained,

In Georgia, in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Fontaine, 58 Ga. 433, the court intimated that the company might restrict its liability except for "gross negligence;" but in a later case the rule is announced that the company cannot by contract limit its liability for negligence in any degree. *Western Union Tel. 2. See generally NEGLIGENCE, vol. 16, p. 426.

The opinion in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Griswold, 37 Ohio St. 311; 41 Am. Rep. 500, states the doctrine: "The cases which hold that common carriers may stipulate for immunity from liability for mere negligence, all agree that they are still liable for 'gross negligence.' But just what this term means is not easily ascertained. There is authority for holding it to be equivalent to fraud or intentional wrong. Jones on Bailments,

8-46 et seq. But a majority of the cases would seem to hold it to be a failure to exercise ordinary care. In Wilson v. Brett, 11 M. & W. 113, it was said by Baron Rolfe, that he could 'see no difference between gross negligence and negligence; that it was the same thing with a vituperative epithet.' See also Beal v. South Devon R. Co., 3 H. & C. 337; Austin v. Manchester R. Co., 11 Eng. L. & Eq. 513; and comments of Parke, B., in Wyld v. Pickford, 8 M. & W. 443. In Duff v. Budd, 3 Brod. & Bing. 177, it was held by Dallas, J., that 'Gross negligence is where the defendant or his servants have not taken the same care of the property that a prudent man would take of his own.' And by Best, J., in Batson v. Donovan, 4 B. & Ald. 21; 6 E. C. L. 373, that they 'must take as much care of it as a prudent man would take of his own property.' . . . In Beal v. South Devon R. Co., 3 H. & C. 337, it was held in the case of a carrier that 'Gross negligence includes the want of that reasonable care, skill and expedition which may properly be expected of him.'" To the same effect are Briggs v. Taylor, 28 Vt. 181, and Shear & Red. on Neg. (4th ed.), § 16; all substantially agreeing with Willes, J., in Lord v. Midland R. Co., L. R. 2 C. P. 344, that "Any negligence is gross in one who undertakes a duty and fails to perform it." See also Gillis v. Western Union Tel. Co., 61 Vt. 461; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 572; 15 Am. is considered evidence of gross negligence, though the weight of authority is the other way; the peculiar circumstances must control each case in a great measure.¹

(2) Stipulations as to Repeating Messages.—The blanks provided by the telegraph companies, on which messages are required to be written, contain a printed stipulation to the effect that the company will not be liable for mistakes or delays in the transmission of a message beyond the amount received for sending the same, unless it is ordered to be repeated.² The courts have taken vari-

1. What Constitutes Gross Negligence.—Within the meaning of the exceptional rule, as stated in the text, there is no proof of "gross negligence" on the part of the company where the plaintiff proves the mere fact of improper transmission without showing loss, or where the actual negligence occurred. Pegram v. Western Union Tel. Co., 97 N. Car. 57; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 123; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Neill, 57 Tex. 283; 44 Am. Rep. 589 ("have" instead of "home"); Becker v. Western Union Tel. Co., 11 Neb. 87; 38 Am. Rep. 356; Jones v. Western Union Tel. Co., 18 Fed. Rep. 717 (mistake of one word or figure no evidence of gross negligence). Compare Western Union Tel. Co. v. Howell, 38 Kan. 685; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 105; Baldwin v. U. S. Tel. Co., 45 N. Y. 744; 6 Am. Rep. 165. See also Kiley v. Western Union Tel. Co., 109 N. Y. 231; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 107; Garrett v. Western Union Tel. Co., 83 Iowa 257 (failure to send message, gross negligence); infra, this title, Presumption of Negligence.

Where the only evidence of negligence is that the operator sent in the message the word "bain" for "bail," there is no proof of gross negligence within the meaning of the rule stated. Hart v. Western Union Tel. Co., 66 Cal. 579; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 24; 56 Am. Rep. 119. The same is true where the word "fourths" is written instead of "eighths," in a message from an agent informing his principal of the price of cotton. Lassiter v. Western Union Tel. Co., 89 N. Car. 334; 5 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 230; White v. Western Union Tel. Co., 14 Fed. Rep. 710.

But to make three errors in a message containing only nine simple words is gross negligence. Thus, in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Crall, 38 Kan. 679;

5 Am. St. Rep. 795, the message offered to be sent was: "Ship Bones, sulky and traps to Valley Falls, immediately. G. Crall." The message received by the addressee read: "Ship Beons, Sulky and traps to Neosha Falls, immediately. G. Crawley." It was held that the evidence showed gross negligence. Also Western Union Tel. Co. v. Howell, 38 Kan. 685; 21 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 100, where it appeared that the message was plainly written out and not to be easily mistaken by anybody with ordinary eyesight, who should examine it with ordinary care. The operator materially changed the message by transmitting the word "Salina" for "Salem." There being no exculpatory or explanatory evidence offered by the company, the court held that it was a case of gross negligence.

Ignorance on the part of the company's employes of the locality of a well-known town to which a message is sent, is evidence of gross negligence. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Buchanan, 35 Ind. 429; 9 Am. Rep. 744. Indeed, it seems that the company's employes are bound to know the locality of any state to which a dispatch is directed. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Simpson, 73 Tex. 422.

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Goodbar (Miss. 1890), 7 So. Rep. 214, the operator receiving the message was informed by the sending operator that it contained nine words; he took down only seven words and delivered it as the whole message. It was held that such an error constituted gross negligence on the part of the company's servant and rendered it liable, notwithstanding the printed stipulations exonerating the company.

2. Language of the Stipulation.—The stipulation has never materially varied in form and language from that now used in the blanks of the Western Union. It provides that: "To guard against mistakes, the sender of the message should order it repeated, that is, ous views as to the validity and effect of such a stipulation. On principle it would seem that the stipulation is invalid, in that it opposes the recognized principle that an individual or corporation engaged in a public business cannot be allowed to contract against liability for the consequences of its own negligence or willful wrong doing.¹ And since it appears that the stipulation is not, as a matter of fact, provided with a view to securing correctness in the transmission of messages, but rather to protect the company from liability, it cannot be regarded as a reasonable regulation which it is within the company's power to provide.² Regarded as a contract, the telegraphed back to the original office. For repeating, one half the regular rate is charged in addition. And it is agreed between the sender of the following message and this company, that the said company shall not be liable for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery, or for non-delivery of any un-repeated message, beyond the amount received for sending the same; nor for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery, or for non-delivery of any repeated message beyond fifty times the sum received for sending the same, unless specially insured."

1. The whole doctrine is stated in Ayer v. Western Union Tel. Co., 79 Me. 493; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 145; 1 Am. St. Rep. 353: "Is such a stipulation in the contract of transmission valid, as a matter of contract assented to by the parties, or is it void as against public policy? We think it is void. Telegraph companies are quasi public servants. They receive from the public valuable franchises. They owe the public care and diligence. Their business ultimately concerns the public. Many and various interests are practically dependent upon it. Nearly all interests may be affected by it. Their negligence in it may often work irreparable mischief to individuals and communities. It is essential for the public good, that their duty of using care and diligence be rigidly enforced. They should no more be allowed effectually to stipulate for exemption from this duty than should a carrier of passengers, or any other party engaged in a public business. This rule does not make telegraph companies insurers. It does not make them answer for errors not resulting from their negligence. It only requires the performance of a plain duty. It is no hardship upon them . . . why should they make conditions for such performance? Having taken the message and the pay, why should they not do all things (including the repeating) necessary for correct transmission? Why should they insist on special compensation for using any particular mode or instrumentality as a guard against their own negligence? It seems clear to us, that, having undertaken the business, they ought, without qualification, to do it carefully, or be responsible for the want of care." Language to the same effect is used in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Tyler, 74 Ill. 168; 24 Am. Rep. 279; Bartlett v. Western Union Tel. Co., 62 Me. 209; 16 Am. Rep. 437; Tyler v. Western Union Tel. Co., 60 Ill. 421; 14 Am. Rep. 51; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Blanchard, 68 Ga. 299; 45 Am. Rep. 484; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Short, 53 Ark. 454.

"Any rule or regulation of the company, which seeks to relieve it from performing its duty belonging to its employment, with integrity, skill and diligence, contravenes public policy, as well as the law, and under it the party at fault cannot seek refuge. If it become necessary for the company, in transmitting messages with integrity, skill and diligence, to secure accuracy, to have such messages repeated, then the law devolves upon them that duty to meet its requirements." Western Union Tel. Co. v. Blanchard, 68 Ga. 299; 45 Am. Rep. 484.

2. See Thompson on Electricity, § 241. "This conclusion is at once suggested," says that author, "by that part of the condition which exonerates the company from the consequences of non-delivery or delay in delivering, neither of which happenings the repeating of the message would have any tendency to prevent. This part of the stipulation is, on its face, dishonest, corrupt and oppressive." Another consideration tending to show that it was never intended that the sender should take the stipulation is void as having been induced by a species of moral duress.¹ The weight of authority is therefore opposed to upholding such a stipulation and declines to sustain or enforce it.² Other cases hold that the telegraph company cannot, by such a stipulaprecaution of having his message repeated, is seen in the fact that repeating the message, greatly prolongs the time required for the ultimate delivery of the message, and people in haste will forbear to have the message repeated because it would prevent the expedition of which they are desirous. See Thompson on Electricity, § 241. A third consideration lies in the fact that the company stipulates that, even where the message is repeated, it will be liable only to the extent of fifty times the amount received for sending the message. Such a restriction of its liability is not allowable. See infra, this title, Limiting Liability to a Specified Amount; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Brown, 58 Tex. 170; 44 Am. Rep. 610.

"They (the printed stipulations) constitute, taken together, but an artful arrangement and device by which the consequences of their own negligence are thrown upon the shoulders of their customers, and they are enabled to conduct business with no responsibility beyond that of the most trivial character for their own want of due care." Marr v. Western Union Tel. Co., 85 Tenn. 545; 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 243.

1. Void as a Contract.—"If it be a contract, the sender entering into it was under a species of moral duress. His necessities compelled him to resort to the telegraph as the only means through which he could speedily transact the business in hand, and was compelled to submit to such conditions as the company, in their corporate greed, might impose, and sign such paper as the company might present. 'Prudential rules and regulations,' such as the company is authorized by statute to establish, cannot be understood to embrace such regulations as shall deprive a party of the use of their instrumentality, save by coming under most onerous and unjust conditions."—Breese, J., speaking for the court in Tyler v. Western Union Tel. Co., 60 Ill. 421; 14 Am. Rep. 51. Point is given to this argument by the fact that as a matter of common knowledge, the business of telegraphy in this country is practically under the control of a single corporation. Marr v. Western Union Tel. Co., 85 Tenn. 544; 16 Am. & Eng.

Corp. Cas. 243. See opinion of Bradley, J., in New York Cent., etc., R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 378, where language similar to that quoted above is used in laying down the rule that a common carrier cannot by contract limit its liability for its negligence. See also Dorgan v. Western Union Tel. Co. (U. S. C. C. for Ala. 1874), 1 Am. L. T. Rep. N. S. 406; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Griswold, 37 Ohio St. 311; 41 Am. Rep. 500.

"Telegraph companies do not deal with their employers on equal terms. There is a necessity for their employment. . . . Neither the commercial world nor the general public can dispense with their services. It is, therefore, just and reasonable that they should not be allowed to take advantage of their situation, and of the necessities of the public, to exact exemption from that measure of duty that the law imposes upon them, and that public policy imposes." Gillis v. Western Union Tel. Co., 61 Vt. 461; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 572; 15 Am. St. Rep. 917.

Graham, 1 Colo. 230; 9 Am. Rep. 136; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Blanchard, 68 Ga. 299; 45 Am. Rep. 480; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Meek, 49 Ind. 53; Western Union Tel. Co. v. tion, secure immunity from liability for negligence, but can only protect itself from liability for accidents which result from causes beyond its control.¹ But as a telegraph company is not, like a common carrier, liable as an insurer, its liability in any event does not extend beyond the consequences of its negligence. The holding of the cases is virtually that the stipulation is of no effect whatever.² Still other cases maintain that the stipulation as to repeating messages is a reasonable and valid one, and is embraced within the rule that every company engaged in a public undertaking may provide for the conduct of its business reasonable rules and regulations, to which all contracts with it are made subject. These cases proceed upon the ground that the extra charge for repeating is reasonably small, and if the sender fails to order his message repeated, he is presumed to have preferred to assume the slight risk.³ This last class of cases uniformly holds, however, holding, when this was the exact point in judgment, that the ordinary printed conditions as to repeating messages have the effect to release the company from mistakes caused by its own want of ordinary care."

Rep. 590 ("sold block for and home place for" a certain sum, transmitted "sold block for and half place for," etc.); Bennett v. Western Union Tel. Co. (Supreme Ct.), 2 N. Y. Supp. 365 ("horse" transmitted "horses." In this case sender attempted to have message repeated. It was held that his recovery was limited to fifty times the amount paid for transmission). Mr. Gray defends the stipulation: "Apart from the question whether a contract exonerating a telegraph company from liability for negligence is consonant with public policy, a contract is doubtless valid, in which a telegraph company, in consideration of a higher charge than the regular one for communicating a message, agrees to transmit that message to the office of destination and back from it. (MacAndrews v. Electric Tel. Co., 17 C. B. 3; 84 E.

C. L. 3.) A telegraph company is liable only for losses occasioned by its negligence. It is not negligent in failing to repeat a message back from the office of destination to the originating office, although it might, by repeating that message, discover and obviate the consequences of a breach of contract. There is therefore a consideration for this contract, since the telegraph company undertakes additional labor for an additional sum of money." Gray on Telegraphs, § 30. Further on, however (§ 49), the author seems to favor a different view: "The reasonableness of the rule thus recognized by the courts must be seen and acknowledged by all who give heed to the fact sworn to on the trial by several expert witnesses and denied by none, that the only known means of reaching absolute accuracy in the transmission of messages by telegraph, is by repeating them, that is, returning them to the office from which they were sent, for comparison with the original." Becker v. Western Union Tel. Co., 11 Neb. 87; 38 Am. Rep. 356. (The rule in Nebraska is now otherwise by statute.)

"Such a regulation does not undertake wholly to exempt the company from liability for loss, but merely requires the other party to the contract, if he considers the transmission and delivery of the message to be of such importance to him that he proposes to hold the company responsible in damages for a nonfulfillment of the contract on its part beyond the amount paid for the message, to increase that payment by one-half. Even a common carrier has a right to inquire as to the quality and value of goods or packages intrusted to him for carriage, and is not liable for goods of unusual value, if false answers are made to his inquiries." Grinnell v. Western Union Tel. Co., 113 Mass. 299; 18 Am. Rep. 489, citing Phillips v. Earle, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 182; Dunlap v. International Steamboat Co., 98 Mass. 377.

Doctrine in Texas.—The doctrine is stated in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hearne, 77 Tex. 83; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 588, in the opinion of the court by Acker, J.: "We think it should now be considered settled in this state that this limitation of liability by special contract is valid and binding, and that no recovery can be had for an error committed in transmitting an unrepeatable message, unless it be clearly shown that the error was caused by the

that the stipulation does not release the company from liability for mistakes or delays which result from its "gross negligence or misconduct, fraud or the want of due care on the part of the company, its servants or agents." But since a telegraph company is not liable in any instance except where the loss is occasioned by its negligence, it is difficult to see the value of the distinction made by the court. That the company is held liable for the consequences of its negligence, even though the message was not ordered repeated, is seen from the language of the court in Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Wilson, 69 Tex. 739; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 83: "That such condition or stipulation, in so far as it undertakes to exempt the company from liability for negligence of servants and employes is void, is too well settled to require discussion here."

It is believed, therefore, that the only effect to be given to such stipulations in Texas is that they cast upon the plaintiff the burden of showing affirmatively, not only the fact of injury, but that it resulted from the negligence of the company or its agents. See Western Union Tel. Co. v. Neill, 57 Tex. 283; 44 Am. Rep. 589; Womack v. Western Union Tel. Co., 58 Tex. 176; 44 Am. Rep. 614.

Doctrine in Kansas.—The validity of the stipulation as to repeating messages was brought up in the cases of Western Union Tel. Co. v. Crall, 38 Kan. 679; 5 Am. St. Rep. 795; and Western Union Tel. Co. v. Howell, 38 Kan. 685; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 100. In each case the stipulation was held void on the ground that the evidence showed "gross negligence" on the part of the company, and that, allowing to the stipulation the utmost effect ever extended, it could not be upheld in the particular cases under consideration. Whether it would have the effect to exempt the company from liability for injuries resulting from "ordinary negligence," is not decided. In the first case there were two mistakes in a short message, and an error in the name of the sender; it was considered that in such a case "the mere production of the mutilated message would have been sufficient to establish the gross carelessness of the defendant company."

In North Carolina, the expressions used in Lassiter v. Western Union Tel. Co., 89 N. Car. 334; 5 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 230; and Pegram v. Western Union Tel. Co., 97 N. Car. 57; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 119, indicate the doctrine to be, that the stipulation does not extend "to acts or omissions involving gross negligence, but is confined to such as are incident to the service and may occur where there is but slight culpability in its officers or employes." But in Thompson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 107 N. Car. 449; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 59, the court quotes, with approval, from the case of Smith v. Western Union Tel. Co., 83 Ky. 104; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 15; 4 Am. St. Rep. 126; and Gillis v. Western Union Tel. Co., 61 Vt. 461; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 568; 15 Am. St. Rep. 917; both of which cases hold unqualifiedly that a company cannot, by the stipulation as to repeating, limit its liability for negligence at all. But such stipulations are now held void. Brown v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 111 N. Car. 187; 39 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 583 (overruling previous conflicting cases).

Objection to Some of Cases Upholding Such Stipulation.—In Marr v. Western Union Tel. Co., 85 Tenn. 547; 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 243, a number of cases usually cited as upholding the validity of the stipulation concerning the repeating of messages, are reviewed and criticised, substantially as follows: The case of MacAndrews v. Electric Tel. Co., 17 C. B. 3; 84 E. C. L. 3, can hardly be regarded as authority for the proposition it is cited as sustaining, for it was an English case and based upon the English doctrine that a common carrier may contract against liability for his own negligence—a doctrine nowhere sustained in this country. See RAILROADS, vol. 19, p. 915; CARRIERS OF GOODS, vol. 2, p. 818. The case of Western Union Tel. Co. v. Carew, 15 Mich. 525, did not involve the negligence of the company sued, but that of an independent connecting company, for whose negligence the defendant company could not be held responsible. The case of Ellis v. American Tel. Co., 13 Allen (Mass.) 226, did not involve the fact of negligence, since the court held that no negligence was proved. And in Camp v. Western Union Tel. Co., 1 Metc. (Ky.) 164; 71 Am. Dec. 461, the suit was upon the contract to transmit, and no negligence was averred or proved.

misconduct," or its bad faith.¹ A distinction may very properly be made between negligence and willful wrong, for which latter the company may be held to a stricter liability;² but as has been pointed out, the distinction between gross and ordinary negligence is wrong in principle, valueless in practice, and repudiated by the great weight of authority,³ except in one or two jurisdictions where the doctrine of comparative negligence prevails.⁴ The effect of the stipulation as to repeating messages upon the presumption of negligence is adverted to in a subsequent section.⁵

But even in those jurisdictions in which stipulations as to repeating are held to be reasonable and valid, the sender's failure to have the message repeated is no bar to his action where compliance with the stipulation would not have prevented the wrong; the stipulation can apply only to such errors as are preventible by having the message repeated, although it may attempt to comprehend others.⁶ Thus, it does not apply where there is an

1. Does Not Release Company From Liability for Gross Negligence.—Ellis v. American Tel. Co., 13 Allen (Mass.) 226; Grinnell v. Western Union Tel. Co., 113 Mass. 299; 18 Am. Rep. 488; Redpath v. Western Union Tel. Co., 112 Mass. 71; 17 Am. Rep. 69; Pegram v. Western Union Tel. Co., 97 N. Car. 57; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 119; Womack v. Western Union Tel. Co., 58 Tex. 176; 44 Am. Rep. 614; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hearne, 77 Tex. 83; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 588; Jones v. Western Union Tel. Co., 18 Fed. Rep. 717 (and a mistake of one word or figure is not alone proof of gross negligence); MacAndrew v. Electric Tel. Co., 17 C. B. 3; 84 E. C. L. 3.

What Constitutes "Gross Negligence."—See Mowry v. Western Union Tel. Co., 51 Hun (N. Y.) 126. In Womack v. Western Union Tel. Co., 58 Tex. 176; 41 Am. Rep. 619, it is said that "the mere fact that there may have been an error in the message as received would not of itself be sufficient proof of negligence to entitle the plaintiff to recover." In this instance there was an error of a single letter, and the court held that the trial court should have held, as a matter of law, that there was no evidence of gross negligence. In Jones v. Western Union Tel. Co., 18 Fed. Rep. 717, a mistake of a single word was held no evidence of gross negligence. See Lassiter v. Western Union Tel. Co., 89 N. Car. 334; 5 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 230 ("three-eighths" transmitted "three-fourths," no negligence). So in Hart v. Western Union Tel. Co., 66 Cal. 579; 8 Am. & Eng.

Corp. Cas. 24; 56 Am. Rep. 119, the substitution of "bain" for "bail," was not considered evidence of gross negligence, though the first word was the cipher for two hundred and twenty-five tons, and the other meant only one hundred tons. In this case it was held that the burden rested on the plaintiff to prove that the mistake was the result of the defendant's gross negligence. But in Baldwin v. U. S. Tel. Co., 45 N. Y. 744; 6 Am. Rep. 165, it is said that an error in transcribing the direction, and a consequent misdelivery, are presumptive evidence of negligence in the operator, and cast the burden upon the company to show that it occurred without fault on its part.

2. See NEGLIGENCE, vol. 16, p. 392-3.

3. See NEGLIGENCE, vol. 16, p. 426; Gillis v. Western Union Tel. Co., 61 Vt. 461; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 571; 15 Am. St. Rep. 917; supra, this title, General Rule as to Validity.

4. See COMPARATIVE NEGLIGENCE, vol. 3, p. 367.

5. See infra, this title, Presumption of Negligence.

6. When Stipulation, though Valid, has no Application.—Birney v. New York, etc., Tel. Co., 18 Md. 341; 81 Am. Dec. 612; Thompson on Electricity, §§ 228-230.

In New York, etc., Print. Tel. Co. v. Dryburg, 35 Pa. St. 300; 78 Am. Dec. 338, the message as delivered to the agent for transmission was: "Send two hand bouquets," and the message actually transmitted to the addressee was, "Send two hundred bouquets." It appeared that the mistake was due solely to the unreasonable delay or a total failure on the part of the company to transmit the message,¹ nor where there is a failure to deliver it after it has been properly transmitted.² Nor does it apply to an error in the name of the place from which the dispatch is sent, that inadvertence of the clerk in mistaking the word "hand" for "hund.," supposing it to be an abbreviation for "hundred." The company was held liable, notwithstanding the message was not ordered repeated and the blank on which it was written contained the usual stipulation as to unrepeat messages, since compliance with the stipulation would not have prevented the occurrence of the error.

In Mowry v. Western Union Tel. Co., 51 Hun (N. Y.) 126, it appeared that the message, when offered, was placed in the pile of messages to be sent, and when it was reached, the operator called up the agent at the point of destination, but found the wire there in use. While waiting until he could communicate with that office, his attention was diverted to something else and he inadvertently placed the message among those which had been already transmitted. His mistake was not discovered and corrected until a week afterward. It was held that the stipulation would not exempt the company from liability in such a case.

1. The stipulation is usually against liability "for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery, or for non-delivery." Manifestly this does not embrace a total failure to transmit. Sprague v. Western Union Tel. Co., 6 Daly (N. Y.) 200; Garrett v. Western Union Tel. Co., 83 Iowa 257; Grinnell v. Western Union Tel. Co., 113 Mass. 299; 18 Am. Rep. 492. And in Thompson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 107 N. Car. 449; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 53, it is held that it does not exempt from liability for a delay in transmission.

The stipulation does not cover a failure by the company to transmit a cipher message from a receiving office to another line. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Way, 83 Ala. 542.

Though the regulations of a telegraph company may exempt it from liability in certain cases, yet a failure, by neglect of all effort, to transmit a message, is not within the scope of exemption. Birney v. New York, etc., Tel. Co., 18 Md. 341; 81 Am. Dec. 607.

In Garrett v. Western Union Tel. Co., 83 Iowa 257, the court, discussing this question, said: "Whatever right the defendant may have, if any, to limit its liability, or provide against the negligence of its agents in the transmission of messages, there can be no question that the language of the stipulation cannot be held to excuse the defendant for a failure to send the message, or to make the attempt to do so. . . . It would be a marvelous doctrine to hold in this case that the defendant could fail to attempt to send the message, as it contracted to do, and exonerate itself by paying back to the plaintiff the nominal sum it received for the service. If its liability is to be measured by that standard, its contract is a sham and deception. It could perform or not perform at pleasure, and escape all liability for the consequences of non-performance."

Whether Error was Preventable.—In Ellis v. American Tel. Co., 13 Allen (Mass.) 238, it is intimated by Bigelow, C. J., that it would be a question of fact for the jury as to whether the mistake in the dispatch would have been prevented or corrected by the repetition of the message; and that of course the company would be liable for any negligence causing damage which would not have been prevented by a compliance with the rules. These limitations are pronounced obiter dicta by Gray, C. J., in Grinnell v. Western Union Tel. Co., 113 Mass. 299; 18 Am. Rep. 492, and as being "somewhat wanting in precision."

2. Does Not Apply to Failure to Deliver.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Henderson, 89 Ala. 510; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 615; 18 Am. St. Rep. 148; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Graham, 1 Colo. 230; 9 Am. Rep. 136; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Fenton, 52 Ind. 6; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lowrey, 32 Neb. 732; Manville v. Western Union Tel. Co., 37 Iowa 214; 18 Am. Rep. 8; Bryant v. American Tel. Co., 1 Daly (N. Y.) 575; Baldwin v. U. S. Tel. Co., 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 505; 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 125; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Broesch, 72 Tex. 654; 13 Am. St. Rep. 843; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Wilson, 69 Tex. 739; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 80.

In this last case Acker, J., said: "We can conceive no sound reason in support of the requirement that the message shall be repeated when the injury resulted from a failure to deliver, and being not properly a part of the message, but rather a statement of a fact peculiarly within the knowledge of the company's agent.¹

Whether the sender actually ordered the message repeated is a question of fact to be determined by the jury from the evidence.² Stipulations as to repeating are said to be immaterial where the suit is brought by the addressee of the message, since they are binding only upon the sender.³ But whether or not this proposition is correct, must depend upon the view in which the addressee's right of action is regarded.⁴

(3) Requiring Claims to be Presented Within a Certain Time.—The stipulation contained in the usual contract of sending, to the effect that the company will not be liable for damages in any

we therefore hold with the great weight of authority, that the condition or stipulation here insisted upon as an exemption of the company from liability for damages resulting from a failure to deliver, is not reasonable, nor valid, nor binding;" citing Hibbard v. Western Union Tel. Co., 33 Wis. 564, and other cases.

In Manville v. Western Union Tel. Co., 37 Iowa 214; 18 Am. Rep. 8, it appeared that the message was properly transmitted, but was not given to the company's messenger at the receiving office to be delivered, until three days after its receipt; at the end of that time it was delivered to the proper person. It was held that the company was responsible for the consequences of the negligent delay, although the addressee had called for it on the day it was received, and would have received it if it had been repeated in accordance with the terms of the printed stipulation.

Compare with the above cases, Clement v. Western Union Tel. Co., 137 Mass. 463; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 66, holding that the stipulation as to repeating, exempts the company for liability for negligent delay on the part of its messenger in delivering a message given to him for delivery. Martin, C. J., said: "But the negligence of the messenger boys was plainly contemplated by the parties when they entered into the stipulation, and there are no principles of public policy which would prevent the company from stipulating that it will not be responsible for such negligence beyond a fixed amount, unless it receives a reasonable compensation for assuming further responsibility." Mr. Thompson calls this an "extraordinary decision," and says of it that "there is no sense whatever in the conclusion or reasoning adopted." Thomp-

2. What Amounts to a Request to Repeat.—In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Landis (Pa. 1888), 12 Atl. Rep. 467; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 206, it appeared that on receipt of the dispatch, the plaintiff, the addressee, went at once to the operator and requested him to ask the sender whether certain words were "five six" or "five sixty." It was held that this amounted to a request by the plaintiff to have the message repeated, and that it was immaterial that the forms established by the company for the repetition of messages were not complied with.

3. Whether Stipulation Binds Addressee.—"The receiver can be guided or informed solely by what is delivered to him, and has no opportunity to agree upon any such condition before delivery." De La Grange v. Southwestern Tel. Co., 25 La. Ann. 383; Tobin v. Western Union Tel. Co., 146 Pa. St. 375; 39 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 565; 4 Am. St. Rep. 248.

4. See infra, this title, Evidence of Assent of Sender or Addressee to Printed Stipulations. In Aiken v. Western Union Tel. Co., 5 S. Car. 358, it was held that express stipulations in the contract of sending, bind the case where the claim is not presented in writing within a certain length of time after the message is filed with the company for transmission,¹ does not tend to limit the liability of the company for the consequence of its negligence, and is not unreasonable, where the time allowed is not too short to enable the party claiming damages to become aware of the injury and to present his claim properly.² The reasons for this rule are obvious,³ and it has been upheld where the time was limited to sixty days,⁴ to thirty days,⁵ and to twenty days,⁶ after the filing of the message for transmission, though the rule as to the reasonableness of any particular length of time may change with peculiar circumstances.⁷ There receiver as well as the sender. And in Thompson on Electricity, section 237, it is considered that in so far as the receiver's right of action rests in contract, he is bound by the agreement entered into by the sender, as much so as the sender himself. But "if the telegraph company, when it delivers an erroneous message to the person to whom it is addressed by the sender, puts itself in the condition of a mere tort-feasor, one guilty of a misfeasance toward a stranger by which that stranger has incurred a loss, then this conclusion (i. e., that the receiver is not bound) is supportable." Thompson on Electricity, § 237.

6. Within Twenty Days.—Aiken v. Western Union Tel. Co., 5 S. Car. 358; Heimann v. Western Union Tel. Co., 57 Wis. 562.

Mr. Gray considers that a limitation of twenty days is too short. Gray on Telegraphs, § 34.

7. In Massengale v. Western Union Tel. Co., 17 Mo. App. 257, Lewis, P. J., said this in substance.

seems to be no reason why the stipulation should not apply to claims for statutory penalties as well as to other claims, but the authorities are conflicting on this point.¹ And there is authority for the view that such stipulations introduce unreasonable modifications to the general Statute of Limitations and unduly limit the company's liability, and are therefore contrary to public policy and void.² Where the stipulation is that the claim must be presented within a certain time after the sending of the message, the limitation does not begin to run until after the message is actually sent, so that if there is a total failure to transmit, the limitation

1. Stipulation as Applied to Claim for Statutory Penalty.—In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Yopst, 118 Ind. 248; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 527, the court, in holding that such a stipulation applied to claims for statutory penalties, said: "We conclude that where a contract is essential to the existence of a duty, and it contains a stipulation requiring the plaintiff to give a written notice of a default on the part of the company, the failure to give the notice required by the contract will defeat an action to recover the penalty attached to the violation of the duty created by the contract." Western Union Tel. Co. v. Jones, 95 Ind. 228; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 47; 48 Am. Rep. 713; Barrett v. Western Union Tel. Co., 42 Mo. App. 546; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Meridith, 95 Ind. 93; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 55.

But an addressee proceeding against the company under the same statute, is held not bound to the stipulation. Western Union Tel. Co. v. McKibben, 114 Ind. 511; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 133. And in order to take advantage of plaintiff's failure to present his claim in an action for the penalty, it must be specially pleaded. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Scircle, 103 Ind. 227; 10 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 610.

In Arkansas and Georgia, it is held that such a stipulation does not apply to claims for the statutory penalty. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cobbs, 47 Ark. 344; 58 Am. Rep. 756; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cooleedge, 86 Ga. 104. In Western Union Tel. Co. v. James, 90 Ga. 254, it is held that while the stipulation does not apply to claims for the statutory penalty, it does apply to all claims for special damages and operates, not only against the sender of a message, but also against the receiver, where message is in reply to a previous message sent by receiver.

2. Cases Holding Such Stipulations

Void.—In Johnston v. Western Union Tel. Co., 33 Fed. Rep. 362; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 116, it was held that the receiver of a telegram would not be bound by such a stipulation. The court said: "Is a stipulation which has the effect to preclude from the right of action the person to whom a prepaid telegram is directed and to whom it has never been delivered, no matter how gross the negligence of the company may be, a reasonable regulation? In the opinion of this court it is clearly unreasonable, and is contrary to public policy." See this case set out in Thompson on Electricity, § 249.

And in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Longwill (N. Mex. 1889), 21 Pac. Rep. 339; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 559, the court said: "Instead of being a reasonable regulation, we think the stipulation was an effort on the part of the company to restrict its legal liability to sixty days. It would introduce into the local jurisprudence of every state, territory and county, a species of private statutes of limitation or non-claim. It would avoid the policy of the state in the matter of the time in which actions, both in text and contract, should be brought." See also Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cobbs, 47 Ark. 344; 58 Am. Rep. 756; Western Union Tel. Co. v. McKibben, 114 Ind. 511; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 133 (addressee suing under section 4177 of Rev. Stat. Indiana); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Way, 83 Ala. 542; Southern Express Co. v. Caperton, 44 Ala. 101; 4 Am. Rep. 118 (limitation unreasonable and void as tending to fraud).

It will be observed, however, that in most of the above cases, the validity of the stipulation was denied on the ground that it could not be made applicable to actions for the statutory penalty or by the addressee. In Johnston v. Western Union Tel. Co., 33 Fed. Rep. 362; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas.

does not apply.¹ This is not evaded by a provision that the claim must be presented within a certain time after the message is filed for transmission. The stipulation does not bind the plaintiff where without fault on his part, he does not become aware of the wrong until after the expiration of the prescribed period;² but it seems that if he is late in discovering the wrong, but still has a reasonable time within which to present his claim before the end of the period of limitation, he is bound by it, although the lateness of his discovery was due to the company's negligence.³

The institution of a suit is ordinarily equivalent to a demand, but, in the cases under consideration, if a party commences his action against the company and serves process against it within the prescribed period, he does not thereby sufficiently comply with the stipulation, since a proper presentation is a condition precedent to his right of action;⁴ nor can the presentation properly be made after the institution of such a suit, even though it is 116, the stipulation was held void as to the receiver because the stipulated period (thirty days) was too short, and cases might readily occur in which the period would be past before he could become aware of the injury. See Gray on Telegraphs, § 34.

1. When Limitation Begins to Run.—The old forms provided for a presentation within "sixty days after sending the message." Western Union Tel. Co. v. Way, 83 Ala. 542; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Trumbull, 1 Ind. App. 121; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Yopst, 118 Ind. 248; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 527. ("The limitation is for the benefit of the company and is of its own creation. It has no right, therefore, to ask that the contract be extended for its benefit beyond the letter of the instrument.") See also supra, this title, Stipulations as to Repeating Messages, where the rule is laid down that the stipulation as to repeating messages is never upheld where the injury is one which a compliance with the stipulation would not have prevented.

2. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Reynolds, 77 Va. 173; 5 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 192; 46 Am. Rep. 715.

3. A delay in receiving the message, though occasioned by the mistake of the company, will not modify the condition or extend the time, if a reasonable time is left, after knowledge of the mistake, to present the claim. Heimann v. Western Union Tel. Co., 57 Wis. 562; Massengale v. Western Union Tel. Co., 17 Mo. App. 258. It is therefore error to instruct the jury that the sixty days does not begin to run until the plaintiff has discovered the company's breach of duty. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Phillips, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 608. But where the complaint shows that the message was never delivered, the action having been instituted by the receiver, it is not demurrable merely because it fails to allege that the claim was made within the sixty days. Sherrill v. Western Union Tel. Co., 109 N. Car. 527. Whether any particular time is reasonable is a question for the jury. Heimann v. Western Union Tel. Co., 57 Wis. 562; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Phillips, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 608.

4. This stipulation is a condition precedent to appellee's right to recover any damages. Until he has performed it, he has no cause of action. Western Union Tel. Co. v. McKinney, 5 Tex. Law Rev. 173; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 125. And in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Yopst (Ind. 1887), 11 N. E. Rep. 16; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 88, aff'd on hearing in 118 Ind. 248; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 526, the same view is taken. The court, by Elliott, C. J., after quoting from the McKinney case and from Cole v. Western Union Tel. Co., 33 Minn. 227; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 46, said: "These cases do no more than apply a long settled rule to new instances; for, in the case of insurance companies and common carriers, it has often been held that where the contract requires that a claim shall be presented within a limited time, its done within the stipulated time.¹ A proper compliance with the stipulation requires that the claim must be presented to an agent of the company authorized to attend to such matters,² and one who is an operator merely is not necessarily such an agent. The claim must be presented in writing, though the company may expressly or impliedly waive its right to demand a written notice.³

presentation must precede the action." See FIRE INSURANCE, vol. 7, p. 1048; Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Harmon, 2 Tex. Law Rev. 216; Wolf v. Western Union Tel. Co., 62 Pa. St. 83; 1 Am. Rep. 387.

The Alabama court in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Henderson, 89 Ala. 510; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 615; 18 Am. St. Rep. 148, after referring to the Pennsylvania case just cited, said: "Our own rulings, on a question not distinguishable from this in principle, have been different;" citing East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Bayliss, 74 Ala. 150; 19 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 480; South, etc., R. Co. v. Morris, 65 Ala. 193; South, etc., R. Co. v. Bees, 82 Ala. 340.

1. Claim Must be Presented Before Commencement of Suit.—"At the time plaintiff instituted this suit, he had not performed the stipulation and, therefore, no cause of action had accrued to him and this suit is not maintainable. We think the institution of this suit, it being based upon a claim in writing for damages, which had been presented to the company, is a sufficient compliance with said stipulation to fix the liability of the company for damages in another suit, or in this suit upon proper amendment and notice thereof to appellant; but that the trial court erred in holding that such claim, made after the institution of the suit (but within the sixty days) was sufficient for the purposes of this suit." Western Union Tel. Co. v. McKinney, 5 Tex. Law Rev. 173; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 123.

2. Claim Must be Presented to Authorized Agent.—The agent or manager of the company's office at the station from which the message was sent, is a proper person to whom claims may be presented. Hill v. Western Union Tel. Co., 85 Ga. 425; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 590; 21 Am. St. Rep. 166; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Blanchard, 68 Ga. 299; 45 Am. Rep. 480; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Yopst (Ind. 1887), 11 N. E. Rep. 16; 21 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 88. In Bennett v. Western Union Tel. Co. (Supreme Ct.), 2 N. Y. Supp. 365, the plaintiff informed the operator of a mistake made in sending the message, and was referred by him to the main office, where a clerk told him that the manager was busy, took down his complaint in writing, and handed it to a person in another room, whom he introduced as attorney of the company, which attorney promised to investigate the matter, and afterwards, in reply to plaintiff's inquiry, wrote a letter rejecting the claim, using paper and envelope with printed headings representing him to be the attorney of the company. Held, that it sufficiently appeared that the complaint was made to proper authorities.

See also Young v. Western Union Tel. Co., 65 N. Y. 163, where the plaintiff's agent presented an imperfect statement of his claim to an operator, who after examination returned it, stating that he had no authority to attend to it, referring him at the same time to the proper officers. Plaintiff, upon going to their offices and finding them absent, left, and presented no other claim until after the sixty days had passed. It was held that he had not properly complied with the stipulation.

Where the party aggrieved serves upon the agent of the company a written demand for damages, and gives the agent a copy thereof, but keeps the original, on which the agent accepts service in writing, he may prove the contents thereof by parol where the loss of the original is shown. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Collins, 45 Kan. 88.

3. Notice in Writing—Waiver by Company.—Thus where the plaintiff presented an oral claim within sixty days, whereupon the company entered into a correspondence with him and made an offer in settlement in sixty days, the company's right to insist on a written notice was waived. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Stratemeyer (Ind. App. 1892), 32 N. E. Rep. 871.

A promise by an agent, to whom oral complaint is made, to look into the matter, is no waiver of the company's right to a written presentation of claims. Massengale v. Western Union Tel. Co., 17 Mo. App. 257.

It should set forth clearly the nature and extent of the complainant's demand, and it seems that the recovery will be limited to matters set out in the claim presented.¹

(4) Limiting Liability to a Specified Amount—Night Messages.—In sending night messages, for which reduced rates are charged, the telegraph companies have sometimes put into the contract of sending, a stipulation to the effect that "in consideration of the reduced rate for which this message is sent, the company shall not be liable beyond the amount paid for transmission," or a small multiple of the same. The cases are unanimous in holding that such a stipulation is unreasonable, and, so far as it seeks to limit the liability of the company for the consequences of its own negligence, is contrary to public policy and cannot be enforced.²

(5) Other Stipulations.—The company may, by special contract, limit its liability for failure or delays due to unavoidable inter-

In Hill v. Western Union Tel. Co., 85 Ga. 425; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 590; 21 Am. St. Rep. 166, the complaint was made orally, but the agent, instead of objecting to the oral complaint, requested time for investigating the merits of the claim, and after investigation, put the company's refusal to pay, not upon the grounds of the insufficiency of the demand, but upon the non-liability of the company. It was held that this constituted a waiver of the right to demand a written notice. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Yopst (Ind. 1887), 11 N. E. Rep. 16; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 88.

Written Contract as Changed by Oral Agreement.—An oral agreement with the company's agent, that a message written and paid for as a night message, should be forwarded the next morning instead of at night, changes the contract merely in that particular, and does not affect the printed stipulation in the night message blank that any claim for damages must be presented within thirty days, although on the day messages, the time is sixty days. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Culberson, 79 Tex. 65.

1. Contents of Claim.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Brown, 84 Tex. 54. In this case it was held that a notice stating the amount of the claim, that it was for damages for the non-delivery of the dispatch, and stating also the loss from the increased price of mules and from expenses incurred, is sufficient to include the loss of profits upon mules sold and contracted for by the complainant.

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Morris, 77 Tex. 173; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 633, the sender presented to the company a claim for damages, classifying the damages as "fifty dollars actual damages and five thousand dollars exemplary damages." At the trial, the jury returned a verdict for five hundred dollars based upon the issue of actual damages alone. It was held that the verdict would stand; the plaintiff was not prejudiced by his own classification of the damages he claimed. "The claim presented was for five thousand and fifty dollars in the aggregate, and served in all respects to give the defendant the information stipulated for."

2. In Sending Night Messages.—Such a stipulation has been held void where it limits the liability of the company to the amount paid for transmission. American Union Tel. Co. v. Daugherty, 89 Ala. 191; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 589; Bartlett v. Western Union Tel. Co., 62 Me. 209; 16 Am. Rep. 437; True v. International Tel. Co., 60 Me. 9; 11 Am. Rep. 156; *Fowler v. So is a stipulation limiting a company's liability to ten times the amount ruption in the working of its lines, as, for example, where peculiar climatic conditions prevent the proper operation of the instruments.¹ But such a stipulation would not embrace cases where the delay is due to the exclusive use of the wire for the time, in sending out train orders.² So also, it seems that the company may stipulate against liability for delay for a reasonable time, where its business is much hampered by a strike of the operators.³ It seems that the company may stipulate that it will not be responsible for errors occurring on connecting lines;⁴ or for messages which are written in cipher, or are otherwise obscure.⁵

c. EVIDENCE OF ASSENT OF SENDER OR ADDRESSEE TO PRINTED STIPULATIONS.—Ordinarily a party is not bound by any rule or regulation, by which a carrier seeks to limit his liability, unless the same has been brought to his notice.⁶ But in the case paid for transmission. Harkness v. Western Union Tel. Co., 73 Iowa 190; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 182; 5 Am. St. Rep. 672; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Harris, 19 Ill. App. 347. Or to fifty times such amount where the message is repeated. American Union Tel. Co. v. Daughtery, 89 Ala. 191; Brown v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 111 N. Car. 187; 39 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 583. Compare Bennett v. Western Union Tel. Co. (Supreme Ct.), 2 N. Y. Supp. 365, where the sender of repeated message was limited to recovery of fifty times the amount paid for sending message. See also Western Union Tel. Co. v. Young, 93 Ind. 118 (contract limiting company's liability to twenty-five cents invalid); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Fontaine, 58 Ga. 433; Thompson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 64 Wis. 531; 54 Am. Rep. 644; Thompson on Electricity, § 201. Such a contract is void because its terms are repugnant in assuming to impose an obligation, and by the same act to release from all obligation. Bartlett v. Western Union Tel. Co., 62 Me. 209; 16 Am. Rep. 437. That part of the regulation that the company will receive messages to be sent without repetition during the night, for delivery not earlier than the morning of the next day, at reduced rates, is valid. Fowler v. Western Union Tel. Co., 80 Me. 381; 6 Am. St. Rep. 211. In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Neill, 57 Tex. 289; 44 Am. Rep. 589, a somewhat different conclusion is reached. The court, by Bonner, J., said: "We fail to perceive on principle, why, in such cases, the parties may not, as they did here, agree upon a sum certain in the nature of liquidated damages for an error or delay arising from a cause other than misconduct, fraud or the want of proper care." Aiken v. Western Union Tel. Co., 5 S. Car. 358 (such a stipulation held valid); Jones v. Western Union Tel. Co., 18 Fed. Rep. 717; Schwartz v. Atlantic, etc., Tel. Co., 18 Hun (N. Y.) 157.

3. A Strike of Operators.—At one time while a strike prevailed, the company had all of its blanks stamped, "Accepted subject to delay." The validity of such a stipulation must depend upon whether or not the delay was reasonable. In Marvin v. Western Union Tel. Co. (N. Y.), 15 Chic. Leg. N. 416, it was considered that the company had no right to insist upon the sender's assent to such a provision.

of telegraph companies, where the message blanks are so arranged that a party in affixing his signature to the message signs a printed contract, it is conclusively presumed that he thereby assents to the terms of such contract, and is bound by them, although he may not have read or noticed them,¹ or even been able to read them.² In the absence of fraud or imposition, a party to a contract which has been voluntarily signed and executed by him, with full opportunity for information as to its contents, cannot avoid it on the ground of his own negligence or omission to read it.³ The use of very small type for printing the stipulations in the blank, where there are letters in large type, directing attention to the stipulations, is not such fraud or imposition as will affect the validity of the implied assent.⁴

In Illinois, however, it is held that the question of assent is for the jury to determine from the evidence; that the mere fact that the sender affixes his signature does not of itself make the contract binding upon him, unless it is actually brought to his notice, and he signs with full knowledge of it.⁵ But although this view has received countenance in some other jurisdictions, it is clearly opposed to the weight of authority on the subject.¹

Where Operator Writes Out Message.—In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Edsall, 63 Tex. 668; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 70, the sender told the operator that he knew nothing about the business and asked him to write the message for him, which the operator did, and the sender signed his name on the operator's pointing out the place. It was held that the operator was, for that purpose, the sender's agent, and the stipulations were binding upon the sender, notwithstanding his failure to notice them. Compare Beasley v. Western Union Tel. Co., 39 Fed. Rep. 181, where dispatch was copied on a message blank by operator, without his being requested to do so.

Where the message is not written on the blanks provided by the company, and yet is received for transmission by the company's agent, the sender is not bound by the stipulations printed on the usual message blanks,² unless it can be shown that he had

Union Tel. Co., 60 Ill. 421; 14 Am. Rep. 38. The court said: "Whether he (the sender) had knowledge of its terms and assented to its restrictions, is for the jury to determine, as a question of fact upon evidence alimunde; and all the circumstances attending the giving of the blank are admissible in evidence to enable the jury to decide that fact." See also Brown v. Eastern R. Co., 11 Cush. (Mass.) 97; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Frankenburg, 54 Ill. 88; 5 Am. Rep. 92; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Stevenson, 128 Pa. St. 442; 15 Am. "Slight evidence of acceptance of, or assent to, such regulations, would no doubt suffice, but it is for the jury to determine." Tyler v. Western Union Tel. Co., 60 Ill. 421; 14 Am. Rep. 45.

1. In Baldwin v. U. S. Tel. Co., 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 125 (obiter), and in Harris v. Western Union Tel. Co., 9 Phila. (Pa.) 88, it is held that the sender must have actual notice of the stipulations in order to be bound by them. But this, it seems, is not the view of the higher courts of those states. See Thompson on Electricity, § 210. And the decided weight of authority, both that of text writers and that of decided cases, is the other way. See Grinnell v. Western Union Tel. Co., 113 Mass. 299; 18 Am. Rep. 485; Becker v. Western Union Tel. Co., 11 Neb. 87; 38 Am. Rep. 356; Young v. Western Union Tel. Co., 65 N. Y. 163; Gray on Telegraphs, § 28; Thompson on Electricity, § 212.

In Birney v. New York, etc., Tel. Co., 18 Md. 341; 81 Am. Dec. 607, it is held that a telegraph company being authorized by law to make rules for the government of its transactions, any one employing the company will be supposed aware of such regulations, and will be presumed to have engrafted them upon his contract, and no proof of their having been actually brought home to his knowledge will be required.

2. Where Message Blanks Are Not Used.—Pearsall v. Western Union Tel. Co., 124 N. Y. 256; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 31; 21 Am. St. Rep. 662.

This rule applies, although a regulation of the company forbids its employés to transmit messages unless they are written on the printed blanks. Beasley v. Western Union Tel. Co., 39 Fed. Rep. 181. In this case, the message was written by the sender on plain paper and after it was handed to him, the operator, without the sender's request or permission, copied it on a regular blank; it was held that the sender's assent to the stipulations was not shown, and he was therefore not bound by them. The same ruling is made in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Shumate, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 429.

In Pearsall v. Western Union Tel. Co., 124 N. Y. 256; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 31, aff'd 44 Hun (N. Y.) 532; 21 Am. St. Rep. 662, the company proved that for a long time it had required messages to be written on a blank which contained a printed stipulation limiting its liability for mistakes. Plaintiff admitted that he was familiar with the appearance of the blanks; had frequently written messages on them; that a parcel of them was always lying on the table in his office; but averred that he had never read the stipulation and had no knowledge of its terms. It was held that, in the absence of a showing that the terms of the stipulation were brought home to the plaintiff, it was not error to exclude the blank from the consideration of the jury. And compare also Kiley v. Western Union Tel. Co., 109 N. Y. 231; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 107; Becker v. Western Union Tel. Co., 11 Neb. 93; 38 Am. Rep. 356.

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Stevenson, 128 Pa. St. 442; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 590; 15 Am. St. Rep. 687, it appeared that the defendant, a broker, had contracted with the telegraph company to be furnished with accurate market quotations, and his business being too urgent to admit of written messages, those delivered and received by both parties were verbal; that on account of plaintiff's mistake in sending a message, one of defendant's agents bought, instead of selling, causing defendant serious loss; that a rule, printed at the top of plaintiff's actual knowledge of the rules of the company in regard to them.¹ But if the message is written on a mutilated blank which contains language sufficient to put the sender upon inquiry as to what the full agreement is, his assent will be presumed, just as in cases where a perfect blank was used.² Where the stipulations were printed in conspicuous type and posted in the company's office where the sender wrote his message, they were held to be binding on him, although not incorporated into the printed contract on the blank.³

The question whether the addressee or receiver is bound by the stipulations entered into between the company and the sender, depends upon the ground upon which the court bases the right of recovery. Some cases consider that the receiver's right to recover rests entirely upon the contract of sending and upon the principle that where two parties contract for the benefit of the third, such third party may maintain an action for the breach of the agreement in his own right.⁴ Where this view is taken, it necessarily follows that the receiver can assert no rights except under the contract as made by the sender; he is therefore bound by the stipulations.⁵ But other authorities hold that the receiver's message blanks, declared that plaintiff would not be liable for mistakes of any unrepeatd messages, and it did not appear that defendant's messages had been repeated. Held, that it was for the jury to say, from the evidence, whether plaintiff, by dispensing with the use of its blanks in its transactions with defendant, intended to relieve him from the stipulations printed thereon.

The fact that the sender was a shareholder in the company does not charge him with notice of the printed stipulations, or of a resolution adopted by the board of directors that it would not thereafter be liable for mistakes in unrepeatd messages, and it is not error to exclude a copy of such resolutions when offered in evidence. Pearsall v. Western Union Tel. Co., 124 N. Y. 256; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 31, aff'g 44 Hun (N. Y.) 532; 21 Am. St. Rep. 662.

Knowledge of Agent.—In the case of Clement v. Western Union Tel. Co., 137 Mass. 483; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 66, an agent with knowledge of the regulations of the company concerning repeating messages, sent a dispatch to his principal. In action by the principal for negligent delay in delivery, it was held that he could recover only the price paid for transmission, as the stipulation as to repeating was binding upon him.

2. Where Mutilated Blank is Used.—Kiley v. Western Union Tel. Co., 109 N. Y. 231; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 107. The court, by Earl, J., said: "The plaintiff must be held to have assented to this stipulation. He was familiar with the defendant's blanks, having used them extensively for several years, and he had frequently read the words at the bottom of them: 'Read the notice and agreement at the top.' Therefore, although he may not have known what the precise terms of the stipulations contained in the blank were, yet he knew that some stipulations were therein contained, and he must be held, by the use of the blank and its delivery to the defendant, to have assented to them."

Illinois, etc., Tel. Co.*, 27 Iowa 433; 1 Am. Rep. 285 (in this case, and in the one immediately preceding, the sender was the addressee's agent).

In a number of cases, the stipulation action is not on the contract, but for the tort, i. e., for the breach of the company's public duty.¹ Under this view of the rule, the stipulations in the original contract can have no binding effect upon the receiver's action.² As a matter of fact, the telegraph companies endeavor to incorporate the stipulations into the message as delivered, but as the receiver does not attach his signature thereto, they are of no effect unless it can be shown that they were brought to his notice and assented to by him.³

3. Negligence.—Any failure on the part of the company to exercise proper care in the performance of its duties, constitutes negligence,⁴ and it seems that the fact that a message was delayed or erroneously transmitted is sufficient evidence of negligence, unless the company is able to show that the error or delay was due to causes beyond its control.⁵

4. Contributory Negligence.—In order to warrant a recovery, the plaintiff must be able to show that he himself was not guilty of a want of care, or that his negligence did not contribute to the injury.⁶ Thus, the message as offered to the company, must be as to the presentation of claims has been enforced against the addressee. But it may have been that in those cases the stipulation was regarded as a regulation, which having been duly published, was binding upon all patrons of the company. See Massengale v. Western Union Tel. Co., 17 Mo. App. 257; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Culberson, 79 Tex. 65.

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. McKibben, 114 Ind. 511; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 137, it is held that the addressee cannot be bound by the stipulation requiring claims for damages to be presented within sixty days, as there is no evidence of his assent, although the message was written out and delivered to him on the regular blanks containing the stipulation. In this case, however, there was a complete failure to deliver, and it does not appear at what time the addressee became aware of the company's breach of duty and of his right of action.

4. See NEGLIGENCE, vol. 16, p. 389;

5. See infra, this title, Presumption of Negligence—Burden of Proof. The rule is stated in the case of Western Union Tel. Co. v. Griswold, 37 Ohio St. 313; 41 Am. Rep. 500, where it is said by Boynton, C. J.: "If the error or mistake is attributable to atmospheric causes or disturbances, or to any cause for which the company is not at fault, it is entirely within its power to show it. To require the sender of the message to establish the particular act of negligence, or ferret out the particular locality where the negligent act occurred, after showing the mistake itself, would be to require in many cases an impossibility not unfrequently resulting in enabling the company to avoid a just liability."

Nor can the company be released from liability for damages resulting from an erroneous transmission, merely by showing that its line was in good order, that approved instruments were used, and that faithful and competent servants were employed, if the particular act complained of shows a negligent performance of the duty to transmit. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Meek, 49 Ind. 53; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Scircle, 103 Ind. 227; 10 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 611.

6. See CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE, vol. 4, p. 15 et seq. Where the company accepts a message for transmission, and undertakes to deliver it written legibly, and the company cannot be held liable where the mistake in transmission was due to the indistinct writing of the sender.¹ And the address of the person to whom the message is sent must be definitely given; the company cannot be expected or required to make extended searches in large cities in order to find the addressee.²

It is the duty of the plaintiff, on discovery that a mistake has occurred, to use all reasonable diligence to render the injury to himself as light as possible.³ What this duty requires in particular cases must of course depend upon the peculiar circumstances involved; the criterion is always what a reasonably prudent business man, of ordinary sagacity, would have done under similar circumstances, and it is usually for the jury to say whether the injured party has so acted.⁴

about 9 o'clock at night, the fact that the sender of the telegram might have filed it earlier in the evening, so that it could have reached plaintiff, to whom it was addressed, in time to prevent the injury complained of, does not make plaintiff guilty of any contributory negligence. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Bruner (Tex. 1892), 19 S. W. Rep. 149.

1. Message Must Be Written Out Clearly.—In Koons v. Western Union Tel. Co., 102 Pa. St. 164, the sender, H., intending to order by telegraph the sale of "two thousand" cases, wrote what more nearly resembled "ten thousand" and sent the message to the telegraph office by a small boy. The operator transmitted the dispatch "ten thousand," and, in accordance with the regulations of the company, added in parenthesis the figures "10,000" which were not in the written message. In an action by the addressee against the company for damages sustained by reason of the sale of ten thousand instead of two thousand cases, it was held that the cause of the loss was the negligence of the sender, and there could be no recovery. See also Western Union Tel. Co. v. Liddell, 68 Miss. 1.

2. Definite Address Must Be Given.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. McDaniel, 103 Ind. 294. In this case the only address given was "Mrs. LaFountaine, Kankakee," although the operator asked to have it made more definite. K. proving to be a city of more than twelve thousand inhabitants, the company was not held liable for failing to find Mrs. L. Compare Beasley v. Western Union Tel. Co., 39 Fed. Rep. 181.

In Deslottes v. Baltimore, etc., Tel. Co., 40 La. Ann. 183; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 158, the message was addressed to "291 Rampart St." without designating north or south, and after inquiry, the messenger delivered it at 291 North Rampart, where nobody would receive it; it appeared afterwards that the addressee lived at South Rampart. Had the address been definite, the message would have been properly delivered. It was held that such contributory negligence would bar recovery.

3. Duty of Plaintiff to Make Injury as Light as Possible.—The law, for wise reasons, imposes upon a party subjected to injury from a breach of contract, the active duty of making reasonable exertions to render the injury as light as possible. Public interest and sound morality accord with the law in demanding this; and if the injured party, through negligence or willfulness, allows the damages to be unnecessarily enhanced, the increased loss justly falls upon him. Hamilton v. McPherson, 28 N. Y. 76; 84 Am. Dec. 331. See also Western Union Tel. Co. v. Way, 83 Ala. 542; Daughtery v. American Union Tel. Co., 75 Ala. 168; 5 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 205; 51 Am. Rep. 435; 89 Ala. 191; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Reid, 83 Ga. 401; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hoffman, 80 Tex. 420.

4. See NEGLIGENCE, vol. 16, pp. 402-3; CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE, vol. 4, p. 22.

The plaintiff sent a telegram directing certain building plans to be sent to him at C., in order that he might conclude contracts for the material to be used in the building. In an action by him against the company for a delay in delivering the message, it was held error to refuse to instruct the jury that it was plaintiff's duty to use reasonable efforts to avoid or lessen his damage,

If the message is intelligible and not doubtful in its terms, the addressee cannot be considered negligent in acting in accordance with its requirements, although he may have reason to suspect that a mistake has been made.¹ But he assumes all responsibility if he guesses at the intended meaning and acts upon it, and it turns out that his interpretation was wrong.²

and if a reasonably prudent business man would have sent another telegram for the plans, and if such telegram had been sent, the plans would have reached plaintiff in time to have consummated his contract, then plaintiff is only entitled to compensation for the value of his time and expense during the extra time he would have been kept at C. on account of the delay. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Loonie, 82 Tex. 823.

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Wisdom, 85 Tex. 261, it appeared that A engaged B to telegraph in case A's child should become dangerously ill. A dispatch sent in due time was not delivered. In the action, the telegraph company requested an instruction, that if B could have so notified A that he might have reached his child before it died, there could be no recovery. It was held that the request for this instruction was properly refused.

In another case, through the negligence of the company in delaying a message sent to the plaintiff, other creditors attached the property of his debtor, thereby postponing his claim to theirs. The property when sold by the sheriff brought less than the amount of these prior claims. It was held that the fact that the estimated value of the real estate sold by the sheriff was greater than the amount realized at the sale, and was sufficient to include plaintiff's claim, did not impose upon the plaintiff the duty of buying it and discharging the prior liens. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Sheffield, 71 Tex. 570; 10 Am. St. Rep. 790. See also Leonard v. New York, etc., Tel. Co., 41 N. Y. 544; 1 Am. Rep. 446; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Stevens (Tex. 1891), 16 S. W. Rep. 1095; Washington, etc., Tel. Co. v. Hobson, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 122; Thompson on Electricity, §§ 411, 414; Smith v. Independent Line of Telegraph (N. Y. 1864), reported in Scott & Jar. on Tel., § 412, note.

A message from plaintiff to his agent instructing the latter to buy shares, was made to read "buy five hundred" instead of "five Hudson," as the plaintiff intended. The agent purchased according to the message received by him, and notified his principal, who immediately took steps to remedy the error as far as possible, without notifying the telegraph company. It was held that plaintiff had discharged his duty, and was not bound to notify defendant of the error; the damage had been done before he knew of it, and his right of action vested immediately. Rittenhouse v. Independent Line of Tel., 1 Daly (N. Y.) 474; 44 N. Y. 263; 4 Am. Rep. 673.

1. Tyler v. Western Union Tel. Co., 60 Ill. 433; 14 Am. Rep. 38; Gray on Telegraphs, § 75.

Thus where a message requesting plaintiff's presence, is received, which purports to come from South Carolina instead of from Staten Island, and plaintiff, though in expectation of a message from the latter place, without making inquiry of any of defendant's agents, goes to South Carolina, he is not guilty of contributory negligence. Tobin v. Western Union Tel. Co., 146 Pa. St. 375; 39 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 565; 4 Am. St. Rep. 248.

In Texas, however, it is held that a party who acts upon information conveyed by a telegram which has been erroneously transmitted, cannot recover of the company for losses sustained by reason of the erroneous message, if before acting, he had reason to doubt its accuracy, and failed to have it verified by repetition. And this, notwithstanding the declarations made to him by the operator that the message was correct. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Neill, 57 Tex. 283; 44 Am. Rep. 589.

Thus in Hart v. Direct U. S. Cable Co., 86 N. Y. 633, a message from plaintiff to his agent, in reply to a previous one asking instructions as to the sale of certain bonds, concluded "H says hold undoubted;" the company negligently transmitted it so as to make it read "H says hold undoubted." The plaintiff's agent, interpreting this as an order to sell, sold the bonds at a loss, without

Where the sender requests the operator to write out or to correct the message for him, the operator acts, not as agent of the company, but as that of the sender, and if a mistake is occasioned through his having written it erroneously, the company is not chargeable with damages for the consequences.¹

5. Liability Where Company Acts Under Contract to Furnish Market Reports and Other News.—It is no part of the duty of a telegraph company to collect and transmit news of any kind unless it contracts to do so.² But it may enter into contracts to furnish news reports and may make the collection and transmission of market reports, stock quotations, and other news, a special department of its business.³ In such cases it becomes liable for all damages occasioned to its patrons through its furnishing incorrect information, and this whether the error occurred in the process of transmission or existed in the information as originally received by it. The company in such cases assumes duties beyond those incumbent upon it as a mere carrier of reports, and cannot escape liability by showing a mere correct transmission.⁴

In some instances telegraph companies are organized for the express purpose of distributing news reports; such companies are making any inquiry or having the message verified. It was held that the damages occasioned by the improper sale were the result of the negligence of plaintiff's agent as he should have made some inquiry; recovery was therefore denied.

Although the stipulations in the contract of sending, which insist that the company will not be liable for unrepeatd messages, are invalid and not binding (see supra, this title, Stipulations as to Repeating Messages), yet where the plaintiff, the addressee, has reasonable ground to suspect a probable error, it is his duty to have the message repeated in order to avoid possible injury, and he cannot recover for damages occasioned from his acting on the doubtful message. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Neill, 57 Tex. 292; 44 Am. Rep. 589.

Construction of Contract.—In Good- sell v. Western Union Tel. Co., 130 N. Y. 430, aff'g 9 N. Y. Supp. 425, it appeared that a telegraph company contracted to deliver certain news reports of an average number of words per day, one-third to be transmitted in the daytime and two-thirds at night, to all the places named in a certain schedule, for a gross sum per month, the other party to have the right to substitute other places for those named; and, if the reports were transmitted to "any greater number of places" than were enumerated in such schedule, then an additional payment should be made. The schedule contained 38 different places. It was held that the company was bound, without additional payments, to transmit the day reports to 38 places and the night reports to 38 places, although the latter places were different from the former.

4. Obligation to Transmit Correct Information.—Gray on Telegraphs, § 31; Turner v. Hawkeye Tel. Co., 41 Iowa 458; 20 Am. Rep. 605; Bank of New Orleans v. Western Union Tel. Co., 27 La. Ann. 49. In this last case, the company's defense was that the error in the reports was caused by the working of the gold stock indicator in their office in New York from which they received their information. It was held that this did not release them from possessed of the same general powers and are subject to the same obligations as ordinary telegraph companies. Thus they may provide reasonable regulations as to the use of their instruments ("tickers") by subscribers, and require that they shall not allow non-subscribers to have copies of the reports furnished to them.¹ But they cannot make unjust discriminations; they are of a public character and must serve all alike, and may be enjoined from refusing to continue serving a subscriber who has complied with all their reasonable regulations.² They have a right, however, to refuse to furnish reports to a gambling place, even though they have contracted to do so, as they can be under no obligation to forward an illegal undertaking.³

6. Immoral Messages—Gambling Transactions.—A telegraph company is not bound to receive or transmit messages which are immoral or otherwise improper to be sent. Thus, it cannot be made liable for a failure to transmit a message containing inde-liability, since they had contracted to deliver to plaintiffs correct information which they should have obtained, without relying wholly on the indicator.

1. "Tickers"—Stock Indicators—Reasonable Regulation.—In Shepard v. Gold, etc., Tel. Co., 38 Hun (N. Y.) 338, the subscriber's contract with the company provided that "these reports are furnished to subscribers for their own private use in their own business exclusively. It is stipulated that subscribers will not sell or give up copies of the reports in whole or in part, nor permit any outside party to copy them for use or publication. Under this rule, subscriptions by one party for the benefit of himself and others at their joint expense will not be received." It was held that this stipulation was a reasonable one and did not conflict with any duty the company owed to the public. And where the subscriber violated the stipulation by furnishing copies to another firm, although he was a member of such firm, the company was justified in removing its machine from his office.

2. Must Serve all Impartially.—Friedman v. Gold, etc., Tel. Co., 32 Hun (N. Y.) 4; Smith v. Gold, etc., Tel. Co., 42 Hun (N. Y.) 454; Metropolitan, etc., Exchange v. Mutual Union Tel. Co., 11 Biss. (U. S.) 531; Bradley v. Western Union Tel. Co. (Ohio, 1883), 27 Alb. L. J. 363; Gray on Telegraphs, p. 35, note.

The company cannot stipulate that they shall have the right to discontinue the service to any subscriber without notice, whenever in their judgment he has violated the contract; such a provision is unreasonable in making the company the sole judge in their own case. Smith v. Gold Stock, etc., Tel. Co., 42 Hun (N. Y.) 454.

3. Not Obligated to Serve Gambling Institutions.—Smith v. Western Union Tel. Co., 84 Ky. 664; 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 231. In this case, the court, by Bennett, J., said: "These reports were the essence, the very sinew, of appellant's gambling business, and without the prompt supply of which, his business was a failure. Can the appellee be compelled to continue the supply? We think not. Not upon the ground that the appellee is the innocent victim of an illegal enterprise; not that it has been entrapped into aiding a gambling business, for it says that it was willing to furnish the reports as long as the terms of the contract suited it; but upon the ground that appellant was engaged in a gambling enterprise, which is contrary to law, good morals and public policy. It is for the sake of the law and the best interests of society that we relieve the appellee from continuing to furnish to appellant the reports. The appellant is engaged in running a bucket shop."

Complainants being in the business of gambling, equity will not compel a company to furnish them with a "ticker," giving quotations of prices ruling in the Chicago Board of Trade, and this although they are members of that board. Bryant v. Western Union Tel. Co., 17 Fed. Rep. 825. See also infra, this title, Immoral Messages—Gambling Transactions.

cent language or intended to forward a libidinous purpose.¹ But it cannot refuse to send a message merely on the ground that the language is equivocal and the operator suspects that it is intended for improper purposes.²

The principal question involved in this connection is the right of a sender or other party aggrieved to recover damages where the company is guilty of negligence in transmitting a message, whereby the message is lost or delayed or becomes changed in its terms so as to mislead the receiver, when such message relates to a gambling transaction. Undoubtedly the company rests under no obligation whatever to undertake to transmit such messages, and it may refuse to receive them.³ Thus, where the company chooses to discontinue furnishing to a "bucket shop" the stock reports and quotations, the courts will not enjoin such discontinuance, for the reason that they decline to extend their

A telephone company may provide that no indecent or profane language shall be used over its line, and may refuse to serve a subscriber who uses such language in speaking through its line. Pugh v. City, etc., Teleph. Co. (Ohio, 1883), 27 Alb. L. J. 163. In this case the subscriber, being annoyed because unable to get the number he wished to call up, said: "If you don't get the party I want, you can shut up your damned old telephone." One judge dissented from a decision in favor of the telephone company on the ground that "damn" was not profane or obscene. See FRANCHISES, vol. 8, p. 613.

2. In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ferguson, 57 Ind. 495, this message was offered for transmission to a neighboring town: "Send me four girls on first train to tend fair." The company refused to receive it on the ground that it was indecent, as the "four girls," it had reason to believe, referred to prostitutes. The plaintiff's action was sustained, evidence to prove that the message was, in fact, immoral in its purposes, being held inadmissible. The court, by Hawk, J., said: "We know of no provision of law which would authorize the appellant or any of its agents to inquire into or impugn the motives of anyone who might desire to transmit a message, couched in decent language, over the appellant's telegraph lines. If the message offered is expressed in decent language, on payment or tender of the usual charge, the duty of the telegraph company is fixed by law and it has no discretion. If, however, the message is expressed in indecent, obscene or filthy language, then, in our opinion, the telegraph company will be excused from the transmission of any such message." Mr. Gray very justly dissents in a measure, from this view, on the ground that if the company's agent is aware of the real character of the message, it is immaterial that he did not derive his knowledge from the message itself. He holds that evidence of the real character of the message should have been admitted. In Gray v. Western Union Tel. Co., 87 Ga. 350; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 50, the court, by Bleckley, C. J., speaking of this case, said: "It seems to us that this decision is correct. . . .

When a dispatch is ambiguous, the law would give the benefit of the ambiguity to the company dealing with it, either civilly or criminally, for transmitting the dispatch, and hence it would be the duty of the company, in deciding whether to transmit or not, to give the benefit of the doubt to the sender."

3. Messages Relating to Gambling Transactions.—"Of course a telegraph company, in assuming to refuse to send a message because it is illegal or immoral, acts upon its peril. If it is mistaken, or has misjudged the tenor or purpose of the message, it will be held responsible to the injured party for any damage sustained." Smith v. Western Union Tel. Co., 84 Ky. 664; 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 231; Gray on Telegraphs, § 15.

aid to promote any such illegal device.¹ And in extension of this principle, the better rule seems to be, that where the message relates to a gambling or similar illegal transaction, neither the sender nor receiver can maintain an action for damages on the ground that the company refused to transmit the message.² If, while attempting to transmit such a message, the company failed to exercise proper care, whereby an erroneous message was sent, the sender may recover the price paid for transmission,³ but neither he nor the receiver can invoke the illegal contract or the gain or loss resulting from it to measure the damages sustained by him in consequence of an erroneous transmission.⁴

1. Smith v. Western Union Tel. Co., 84 Ky. 664; 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 231; Bryant v. Western Union Tel. Co., 17 Fed. Rep. 825.

2. The principle is the same here as in the case of the "bucket shops;" the courts will not compel the telegraph company to assist in the promotion of a transaction so opposed to public policy. See Cothran v. Western Union Tel. Co., 83 Ga. 25; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 533; Bryant v. Western Union Tel. Co., 17 Fed. Rep. 825.

3. Cothran v. Western Union Tel. Co., 83 Ga. 25; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 533; Gray v. Western Union Tel. Co., 87 Ga. 350; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 47. According to these cases, the contract of transmission is valid, having been voluntarily entered into by the company; but the court will not allow as damages for the breach of such contract, any injury sustained in relation to the illegal gambling contract which was the subject of the message.

4. In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Blanchard, 68 Ga. 299; 45 Am. Rep. 480, this message was offered for transmission: "W. & Co.: Cover two hundred September, one hundred August, B." The company improperly transmitted the message so that as delivered to the addressee it read: "Cover two hundred September, two hundred August." The meaning of the dispatch was an order by the sender to his New York broker to sell two hundred bales of cotton to be delivered in September, and one hundred to be delivered in August. In August, cotton had advanced so that the sender, in complying with his contract, incurred a loss of one hundred and fifty dollars more than he would have suffered had only one hundred bales been sold, as his message ordered. He brought an action against the company to recover this amount, together with twenty-five dollars paid his broker for buying the extra one hundred bales. The recovery was allowed, the court holding that although speculation in cotton futures was illegal, still the sender, having sustained damage from the erroneous transmission, in that he was compelled to pay the expenses incurred by his agent, who had acted on the erroneous message, he was entitled to recover of the company the amount of his actual damage which resulted as a proximate consequence of the company's negligence.

But in a later case in the same jurisdiction, a different view is taken, and the foregoing case to some extent overruled. See Cothran v. Western Union Tel. Co., 83 Ga. 25; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 533. The dispatch in this latter case, from which the company negligently omitted a word in transmission, was concededly, one relating to dealings in "futures." The holding is stated in the opinion of the court, by Bleckley, C. J.: "The plaintiffs claimed their full damages, and sought to measure the same by the market changes; thus resorting to the fluctuations in 'futures' in order to arrive at the amount of their recovery. We think this standard cannot be invoked, for the reason that contracts relating to 'futures' are illegal and we cannot see how an illegal contract can be called in to measure the damages sustained by reason of the breach of a legal contract. It is true that, according to Western Union Tel. Co. v. Blanchard, 68 Ga. 299; 45 Am. Rep. 480, a recovery in this case might be had. But that decision was made at a time when contracts between brokers and their principals were considered obligatory, notwithstanding the vitiating element of speculation in 'futures'; but since the case of National Bank v. Cunningham, 75 Ga. 366, the principle of the former case has stood virtually overruled."

It seems, however, that where the action against the company is to recover the statutory penalty, the company cannot defend on the ground that the message, which it was negligent in transmitting, related to a gambling transaction.¹ As to what are illegal or gambling transactions, within the meaning of the rules just stated, reference must be had to a previous article. The cases decided have generally been in connection with the buying and selling of "futures," or with the gambling device known commonly as a "bucket shop."²

7. Sunday Messages.—(See also SUNDAY, vol. 24, p. 528 et seq.).—The telegraph company has a right to make reasonable regulations as to office hours and this embraces the right to close its offices on Sunday, except where the character of the locality of the office would necessitate a different rule.³ The agent or operator, however, may undertake to transmit a message at any hour on Sunday, but in assuming such an undertaking he does so conditionally, and the company does not become liable for his failure to transmit promptly, when it appears that transmission was impossible, owing to the fact that the office at the point of destination was closed. The agent is not obliged to know the office hours at other stations,⁴ and in accepting a message for transmission, there is always an implied condition that the office

The "future" contract being illegal and void, the sender of the message who is a party to it is not bound to fulfil it, and if he does so voluntarily and thereby suffers injury, he cannot set up such injury as damage resulting from the company's negligence in transmitting the telegram. Melchert v. American Union Tel. Co., 11 Fed. Rep. 194.

1. In Actions for Statutory Penalty.—Under the Georgia statute which required that telegraph companies should receive all dispatches, either from other lines or from individuals, and "shall transmit the same with impartiality and good faith, and with due diligence under penalty of," etc., the court holds that the telegraph company is denied any power of selection or discrimination. "A dispatch cannot be rejected on account of its subject-matter, unless by sending it, the company would or might subject itself or its servants either to indictment or civil action. This is a rational test and one that may fairly be presumed to coincide with legislative intention. . . . Now, in this state, it is neither a crime nor a tort to speculate in futures. It is gross immorality, and conflicts with public policy; but it is not indictable nor actionable." The court then goes on to say that the company may refuse to send an indecent message because it is within the exception mentioned. Further on it is said: "Doubtless it is true that a telegraph company is not bound, even when it contracts to do so, to furnish 'bucket shops' with reports of the market prices of stock and provisions, nor to allow 'tickers' for the purpose to remain in the offices of these immoral establishments. But were the supplying of market reports and 'tickers' to all applicants, 'with impartiality and good faith' enjoined by statute, a different question might arise." Gray v. Western Union Tel. Co., 87 Ga. 350; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 47; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ferguson, 57 Ind. 495.

at the receiving station is open.¹ Ordinarily, contracts entered into on Sunday or to be performed on that day are void,² therefore a contract of sending, made with the telegraph company on Sunday, is void and no action can be based upon it.³ But there is always an exception in favor of messages which are a matter of necessity or charity, and if the party complaining can show that his message is of this character, he may recover for a negligent failure or delay in sending it, though the contract was made on Sunday.⁴ The difficulty is to determine when the message is of such a character. If it is to relieve the sick or suffering, to prevent great or irreparable injury to life or property, or if it is intended to secure the presence of relatives at the funeral of their kinsman, or is intended for any similar purpose, it may be regarded as one of necessity or charity. But each case must be governed by its own peculiar facts.⁵

4. It has never been questioned that where matters of necessity or charity are concerned, the law makes no distinction between Sunday and the other days of the week; they are all regarded alike both as regards the validity of contracts and the right to engage in work or labor. SUNDAY, vol. 24, p. 528; Troewert v. Decker, 51 Wis. 46; 37 Am. Rep. 808; Edgerton v. State, 67 Ind. 588; 33 Am. Rep. 110; Pate v. Wright, 30 Ind. 476; 95 Am. Dec. 705.

5. In this connection, consult the article on SUNDAY, vol. 24, p. 528, where numerous instances of what have been held works or contracts of necessity are set out. In McGatrick v. Wason, 4 Ohio St. 566, the court observes: "Nor will it do to limit the word 'necessity' to those cases of danger to life, health or property which are beyond human foresight or control. On the contrary, the necessity may grow out of, or indeed be incident to, a particular trade or calling, and yet be a case of necessity within the meaning of the rule." Flagg v. Millbury, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 243; Doyle v. Lynn, etc., R. Co., 118 Mass. 195; 19 Am. Rep. 431.

Telegrams of Necessity.—A message addressed to a physician, notifying him of the illness of the sender's daughter, and requesting him to come at once, sufficiently shows the necessity of its being sent at once. A contract for its transmission is valid, though made on Sunday. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Griffin, 1 Ind. App. 46; Brown v. Western Union Tel. Co. (Utah, 1889), 21 Pac. Rep. 988.

A message to a person notifying him of the death of his father, and requesting his attendance at the funeral, involves such a moral necessity, that a contract for its transmission may be valid, though made on Sunday. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Wilson, 93 Ala. 32.

A husband absent from home, sent to his wife a message by telegraph, explaining his protracted absence, and announcing the time of his return. It was held that the sending of such a message involved a moral necessity, and the contract was therefore valid; nor was such contract rendered illegal by the fact that the sender might as well have sent it on the preceding Saturday, but failed to do so through inadvertence. Burnett v. Western Union Tel. Co., 39 Mo. App. 599.

So also a message reading "Bettie and baby dead. Come to C. to-night to my help. Tell her mother," sent by a person whose wife and child had just

The principle is well settled that where a passenger is injured through the negligence of a common carrier, the fact that the injury was done on Sunday or that the contract of carriage was made on Sunday is no defense to an action for damages sustained from the injury.¹ From analogy to this principle it would seem that, in those jurisdictions where the addressee's right of action is regarded as resting in tort and not as arising out of the contract of sending, the fact that the message was sent on Sunday would be no defense. The company may refuse to accept on Sunday any message not of necessity or charity; but having accepted it for transmission, it cannot escape liability for the injury to the addressee by setting up the invalidity of the contract.² And where a message offered for transmission on Sunday is retained by the company until the following Monday, such retention constitutes a ratification of the contract of sending, and renders the died, asking his father to come to his assistance, is one of necessity, and shows such necessity on its face, and the telegraph company must respond in damages for a failure to send it, although the contract of sending was made on Sunday. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Levy, 59 Tex. 543; 12 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 96; 46 Am. Rep. 278.

But a message: "Come up in the morning, bring all," does not indicate any matter of necessity, and having reference to nothing more than a social visit, a contract for its transmission is void if made on Sunday. Rogers v. Western Union Tel. Co., 78 Ind. 169; 41 Am. Rep. 558 (action by sender to recover statutory penalty).

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Yopst (Ind. 1887), 11 N. E. Rep. 16; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 89; 118 Ind. 248; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 520, it appeared that the sender, the plaintiff in the case, was a stenographer, who had been engaged to make a report of a certain trial and to furnish notes of the evidence for a bill of exceptions. The time for filing such bill was limited, and plaintiff, after working assiduously, finished the report on the 18th, two days before the expiration of the time limited. It was necessary that the attorney managing the case should at once be informed, so that he might secure the signature of the judge before the term expired. He therefore sent to the attorney this message, "Bring forty dollars if you want record," offering it for transmission on Sunday. The court allowed plaintiff to recover, holding that the message related to a matter of necessity, and there being a complete failure to send, the company could not urge that the message did not exhibit on its face the necessity.

2. See infra, this title, Character of the Action.

It may admit of question whether the sender's right of action should not be governed by the same principle. The contract made with a telegraph company is not unlike that made with a carrier of passengers; it creates a duty on the part of such carrier, a failure to properly discharge which, is a tort. The doctrine is stated by Stayton, A. J., in Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Levy, 59 Tex. 548; 12 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 96; 46 Am. Rep. 278: "Telegraph companies exercise a public employment, which imposes upon them duties to the public, which give to every person the right to have their services in the transmission of proper messages, upon payment of the requisite consideration; and this public duty creates an obligation honestly and faithfully to perform that duty whenever it is fixed in a given case. The purpose of a contract, express or implied, in reference to anything falling within the line of that duty, is to make it obligatory in the given case, rather than to create the duty or to fix the measure of damages in the case of non-performance. Such duties do not stand solely upon special contract, as do duties which arise between individuals, who owe no duty to each other nor to the public in reference to the subject matter of the contract." See Cooley on Torts, p. 91; Courtenay v. Earle, 10 C. B. 83; 70 E. C. L. 83; New Orleans, company liable for a complete failure to send.¹ In order to make it the duty of the company to send the message on Sunday, it should bear on its face evidence that it relates to a matter of necessity or charity, or the company should be otherwise informed of the fact.²

8. Interstate Messages.—The fact that the initial and terminal points of a message sent by telegraph are not in the same state, is not material in an action against the company to recover damages for a breach of its common-law duty to use proper care to secure a correct and prompt transmission and delivery, since such fact can have no effect upon the right of recovery of either the sender or receiver.³ The cases are numerous in which the sender has been allowed to recover damages, although the message was sent to another state and the breach of duty occurred in such state.⁴ The same is true of actions by the person to whom a message has been addressed.⁵ And it seems that the fact that a state statute exists, declaratory of the common-law duty of the company, and providing further that the company shall not by contract limit its liability for the consequences of its negligence, does not create a different case or necessitate a different rule of law.⁶

But a state cannot extend its penal laws beyond its own boundaries, and an action cannot therefore be maintained to recover the statutory penalty where the breach of duty relied on as the basis of the action occurred in another state.⁷ This, however, does not prevent the maintenance of an action for the penalty where the company's breach of duty occurred within the state, although it was in relation to an interstate message.¹

Where the initial and terminal points are in the same state, but in the course of transmission the message is sent to a point without the state and thence to its destination, it does not thereby come within the term interstate transportation and become subject to the rules governing interstate messages.²

9. Forged or Fraudulent Messages.—Where a telegraph company, by its agent, receives and transmits a forged and fraudulent message, it is responsible to the addressee for damages sustained by him in consequence of the fraud, if it can be made to appear that the company's agent, by the exercise of ordinary care, might

The legislature of Indiana passed a statute declaring the duties of telegraph companies as to the transmission and delivery of dispatches, and provided a penalty for every failure to perform such duties. The state courts held that the penalty might be recovered where the message was sent to another state, and although the breach of duty occurred in such other state. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hamilton, 50 Ind. 181; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pendleton, 95 Ind. 12; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 56; 48 Am. Rep. 692; supra, this title, State Regulation and Control, where this latter case is set out. But the Supreme Court of the United States reversed these decisions on the ground that such a penal statute could not be extended to cases where the breach of duty occurred without the state; that the Indiana statute could not control the conduct of the company in Iowa. The later Indiana statute (Rev. Stat. Indiana, 1881, § 4176), is held not to apply to messages sent from another state to a person in Indiana. Rogers v. Western Union Tel. Co., 122 Ind. 395; 17 Am. St. Rep. 373; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Reed, 96 Ind. 195; Carnahan v. Western Union Tel. Co., 89 Ind. 526; 46 Am. Rep. 175. In this last case the court said: "Unless we adopt the view that the statute only applies to contracts made in this state, we shall be involved in endless difficulty. Any other rule would make the telegraph company amenable to different punishments for the same wrong, for it is quite clear that if the wrong is punishable by the laws of the place where contract is made, it would be no answer to a prosecution there to plead a judgment rendered in another forum under a different law."

The Mississippi statute (Rev. Stat. 1889, § 2725), making it the duty of every telegraph company to provide sufficient facilities for the dispatch of the business of the public, to receive dispatches from and for other telegraph lines and from or for any individual, and, on payment or tender of their usual charges for transmitting dispatches, to transmit the same promptly and with impartiality, under a penalty of $200 for every neglect or refusal so to do, does not render a telegraph company liable for negligent failure to deliver a message to a person in another state, but only for failure to receive and transmit it. Connell v. Western Union Tel. Co., 108 Mo. 459; 39 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 594.

1. Thus where the company fails to deliver a telegram, the penalty may be recovered, although the message was sent from a point without the state. Western Union Tel. Co. v. James, 90 Ga. 254. So where there is a refusal or failure to transmit, the sender may enforce the penalty, although the point of destination of the message is in another state. Connell v. Western Union Tel. Co., 108 Mo. 459; 39 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 594.

2. What Is an Interstate Message.—The point has never been directly decided, but it seems that the rule of the text follows by analogy from that laid down in Campbell v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. (Iowa, 1892), 53 N. W. Rep. 351, where it is held that "the continuous transportation of freight from one point in the state to another point in the same state, does not come within interstate transportation merely because it passes through part of another state on its route." See also INTERSTATE COMMERCE, vol. 11, p. 559.

have detected and prevented such fraud.¹ And if the circumstances attending the request to transmit the message are such as would give the agent reasonable cause to suspect the fraud, his negligence in failing to prevent it will be conclusively presumed.² It was held in one case that where an impostor requests money to be sent by telegraph, the company is not liable for a bona fide payment to him, it appearing that there was nothing connected with the transaction to create suspicion.³

The liability of the company for damages caused by the sending of forged messages extends to cases where the operator himself is the author of the forged dispatch.⁴ It extends also to cases where the authorized agent of the company employs, with-

The negligence must be shown to be proximate cause of the injury. Thus, in Lowery v. Western Union Tel. Co., 60 N. Y. 198; 19 Am. Rep. 154, it appeared that B. sent a message by telegraph to the plaintiff, asking for five hundred dollars. By mistake the message was transmitted as asking for five thousand dollars. The money was sent and B., overcome by cupidity, absconded with it. It was held that the company was not liable, since the injury did not result as a proximate consequence of its negligence. See NEGLIGENCE, vol. 16, p. 436.

2. Elwood v. Western Union Tel. Co., 45 N. Y. 549; 6 Am. Rep. 140. In this case it appeared that the plaintiff, B. & Co., were bankers, doing business at P. in Pennsylvania. On August 12th they received this telegram: "From Erie, Pa. Dated Aug. 12th. Forwarded from Titusville, 12 M. Received Aug. 12th. To P. & Co., P., Pa.:—Keystone Bank will pay the checks of T. F. McC., to the amount of twenty thousand dollars ($20,000). Keystone Bank."

The plaintiffs observed that name of the officer of the bank had been omitted, and a second message was then received with the addition of the words "J. J. Town, cashier of Keystone Bank." Near the close of the day, McC. presented himself at the plaintiff's banking house and drew ten thousand dollars on the faith of the telegram, leaving an equal sum to his credit. It appeared that the telegram was fraudulent; that McC. himself had presented the telegram at Titusville for transmission; that the operator knew McC. by that name; and that he showed no authority from the cashier when he offered the message for transmission. It was held that the company was liable to the plaintiffs for the loss sustained by them, since the operator had been guilty of negligence in not detecting so palpable a fraud.

3. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Meyer, 61 Ala. 158; 32 Am. Rep. 1. In this case an impostor in Cincinnati sent a dispatch in B's name to C at Selina, requesting C to send a telegraphic money order to him (B). C complied and sent the money order, taking from the company this receipt: "Received from C forty dollars to be paid to B at Cincinnati." On the same day the company handed over the money to the impostor who personated B, without having him identified. In an action by C, it was held that the company could not be held liable, as there was nothing connected with the transaction to excite suspicion.

4. In McCord v. Western Union Tel. Co., 39 Minn. 181; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 578; 12 Am. St. Rep. 636, the local agent of the telegraph company, who was also the local agent for an express company, sent a dispatch to merchants in a neighboring city requesting them to forward money to their correspondent at the former place to be used in buying grain; he forged the name of the agent employed by the addressees to purchase wheat for them. The dispatch was duly received, and the money in good faith forwarded by express; but the local agent intercepted the package and converted the money. It was held that the telegraph company must answer to the addressees for the loss, the proximate cause thereof hav-out authority, a sub-agent to receive and transmit messages, and such sub-agent forges and sends a message whereby he obtains money.¹ Where the dispatch is concerning the payment of a forged draft, the fact that the plaintiff, the addressee, has a remedy ex contractu against a solvent indorser is no bar to his action ex delicto against the telegraph company; nor is it necessary in such a case to sue the indorser first.²

10. Libelous Messages.—To transmit over its lines to an addressee, a message libelous on its face, is a publication of a libel for which the company can be held responsible,³ since in such a case not only the addressee, but also all of the company's agents through whose hands the dispatch must pass, are made acquainted with its contents.⁴

11. Liability Where Message Passes Over Connecting Lines.—Following the principle of law governing the liability of common carriers of goods,⁵ the rule is adopted that a telegraph company which has received a message for transmission beyond its own lines, is not, in the absence of special agreement, liable for losses

ing been the willful wrong of the company's agent. The court, by Vanderbilt, J., said: "If the corporation fails in the performance of its duty (as to sending messages) through the neglect or fraud of the agent whom it has delegated to perform it, the master is responsible. It was the business of the agent to send dispatches of a similar character. Such acts were within the scope of his employment, and the plaintiff could not know the circumstances that made the particular act wrongful and unauthorized. As to him, therefore, it must be deemed the act of the corporation. Booth v. Farmers', etc., Bank, 50 N. Y. 400." McCord v. Western Union Tel. Co., 39 Minn. 181; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 582; 12 Am. St. Rep. 636.

1. Forgery by Sub-agent.—In Bank of California v. Western Union Tel. Co., 52 Cal. 280, the sub-agent sent a false message purporting to come from the cashier of a bank, directing another bank to pay a fictitious person a sum of money; he then personated the fictitious person and obtained the money. No negligence on the part of the bank was shown. It was held that the company was responsible to the bank for the amount thus obtained. The court reasoned that, although a principal is not bound by a contract made in his name by a sub-agent appointed by his agent without authority, yet he is responsible for the negligence and torts of such sub-agent, if the agent who appointed him was at the time acting in the business of his principal and the sub-agent was transacting such business.

2. In laying down the rule stated in the text, Gresham, J., said, by way of illustration: "If a railroad train is wrecked by the carelessness of a drunken engineer, the injured passengers have two remedies, one against the engineer for the tort, and the other against the company on the contract. In an action by the passenger in such a case against the engineer, the latter would not be allowed to plead against all but nominal damages that the passenger had a remedy against the solvent carrier." Strause v. Western Union Tel. Co., 8 Biss. (U. S.) 104.

caused by the negligence of a connecting carrier; its undertaking is only to transmit the message promptly and correctly over its own line to the connecting line.¹ The fact that the original company usually receives in advance the whole price for transmission does not alter the rule.² To insure protection from such liability, it is generally stipulated in the contract of sending that the company will not be liable for errors or delays occurring beyond its lines, but that it acts merely as the agent of the sender to forward the message over the lines of other companies.³ Such a stipulation is reasonable and valid, since it merely secures to the company that immunity which the law itself extends.⁴ In several of the states, however, the English rule as to the liability of connecting carriers is recognized, and it seems that the courts of these states will be inclined to apply the same rule to telegraph companies.⁵ Any one of the connecting lines may be held liable where it can be shown that its negligence was the proximate cause of the injury resulting from error or delay.⁶ And it has been held that

3. The exact language of the stipulation now used is this: "And this company is hereby made the agent of the sender, without liability, to forward any message over the lines of any other company when necessary to reach its destination."

4. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Carew, 15 Mich. 525; note by A. C. Freeman, Esq., in 71 Am. Dec. 471; McCarn v. International, etc., R. Co., 84 Tex. 352.

Although such a stipulation may not state where the company's lines end, the sender of the message is nevertheless put upon inquiry and cannot claim damages for errors occurring on another line, on the ground that he was ignorant of the fact that defendant company's line did not extend to the point of destination of his message. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Carew, 15 Mich. 525.

Where two of several connecting lines are both negligent, that one will be held responsible whose negligence was the proximate cause of the loss complained of. Thus, in the case of Western Union Tel. Co. v. Munford, 87 Tenn. 190; 10 Am. St. Rep. 630, the defendant company received from the sender a message to be sent to a point on a connecting line. In the course of transmission over defendant's line, the address became changed from "Sam. T." to "Wm. T." The agent of the connecting line at the point of destination believed the

in a suit against the last company, the burden of proof lies upon such company to show that the error did not occur on its line, since it lies peculiarly within its power to make such proof by showing that the message delivered by it to the addressee was the same as that received by it from the connecting line.¹

The fact that one company receives messages to be sent over its own line and that of another company, is of itself no evidence of a partnership arrangement between the two companies, whereby each company becomes liable for the negligence or defaults of the other.² A company may, of course, enter into a special agreement with the sender or receiver by which it undertakes to insure the correctness of all messages delivered by it; and where such an agreement exists, the negligence of a connecting line constitutes no defense.³ The connecting lines are all bound by the terms of the original contract of sending, where the parties to it have not exceeded their powers; and it would seem that all stipulations in the original contract limiting the liability of the first company would inure to the benefit of all the other lines; though there may be cases in which the language of the stipulation would not warrant such a construction, as, for example, where the limitation was expressly confined to the first company.⁴ The duty to receive for transmission all messages properly tendered, is imposed telegram to be intended for "Sam. T." and on being informed (erroneously) that he was in another town, mailed it to him at such town. The transmission by defendant having been prompt, and its error having been cured, it was held not liable for the delay in delivery, since its negligence in changing the address was not the proximate cause of the complainant's injury.

Where the evidence is conflicting as to whether defendant delivered the message to a connecting line, or itself operated the entire line to the point of destination of the message, a verdict for plaintiff will not be disturbed. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Jones, 81 Tex. 271.

3. Thus, where a company undertakes to furnish market reports from a point beyond its own line, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the report was correctly delivered to it at the place where its own line commences. The burden is upon it to show that a mistake in the report occurred from causes which would relieve it from liability. Turner v. Hawkeye Tel. Co., 41 Iowa 458; 20 Am. Rep. 605.

4. In Squire v. Western Union Tel. Co., 98 Mass. 232; 93 Am. Dec. 157, the second company undertook to take advantage of the stipulation made with the sender by the original company that the latter would not be liable for unrepeatd messages. The court held, however, that the stipulation inured only to the benefit of the original company. The holding was based on the ground that the language of the stipulation confined its operation to the original company.

It seems that the contract of sending made with the original company within its authority is binding on the connecting lines; and exceptions in an agreement between the two companies unknown to the sender are not available as against him. Baldwin v. U. S. Tel. Co., 6 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 405.

It is a recognized rule that a contract limiting the liability of the first carrier inures to the benefit of the connecting carriers. CARRIERS OF GOODS, vol. 2, p. 871.

on telegraph companies by the common law, and extends to messages tendered by a connecting line; in some jurisdictions this duty is specifically declared by statute, though these statutes are usually merely affirmative of the law already existing.¹ But this duty does not extend to cases where the message is directed to a point beyond the company's line, unless the company undertakes as a part of its business the transmission of such messages; in accepting such a message the company is entitled therefore to affix reasonable conditions and limitations to its liability.² An action for delay in delivery can of course be maintained only against the last line.³

IX. ACTIONS FOR DAMAGES RESULTING FROM NEGLIGENT TRANSMISSION OR DELAY—1. Parties to the Action—a. RIGHT OF SENDER TO SUE.—Where the sender can show that through the negligence of the company in transmitting or delivering a message he has suffered a legal injury, there can be no question as to his right to sue for damages, and this whether the right of action be regarded as resting in contract, or in tort for the breach of public duty.⁴ The only difficulty arising in this connection is as to who is to be deemed the sender; he is not always the party who signs the message or delivers it to the company.⁵ Such a party may act as agent in so doing, and where this is true, his principal is to be regarded as being the real sender.⁶

b. RIGHT OF ADDRESSEE.—In England, the rule has always been that the right of action against a telegraph company for negligently transmitting or delaying a message is founded upon the contract of sending, and that therefore the addressee, not being a party to the contract, cannot maintain the action; that

1. U. S. Tel. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 56 Barb. (N. Y.) 46; Gray on Telegraphs, § 55 et seq.

Under a statute requiring connecting telegraph companies to receive and forward messages, transmitted for the purpose upon each other's lines, a company receiving a message to be forwarded, in part, over such a connecting line, is to be regarded as authorized to make the contract respecting its transmission for such other line; and the receipt by the former company, of an entire price for the message, is a sufficient consideration for the express or implied obligation resulting against such connecting company. Baldwin v. U. S. Tel. Co., 6 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 405.

2. Duty to Receive Dispatches for Points Not on Its Line.—Gray on Telegraphs, § 55; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Way, 83 Ala. 542; Pitlock v. Wells, 109 Mass. 452; U. S. Tel. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 56 Barb. (N. Y.)

46 (duty to receive dispatches from connecting lines prescribed by statute). In the case of Western Union Tel. Co. v. Strateimer (Ind. App. 1892), 32 N. E. Rep. 871, plaintiff asked the agent whether it had a line and receiving station at a certain point, and upon being informed that it had, he delivered to the agent a message directed to such point, relying entirely on the operator's representations. In an action for failure to deliver such message, it was held that the company was estopped to deny that it had no line or receiving station at the point named.

the right belongs to the sender alone.¹ It is intimated, however, that in case of fraud on the part of the company the receiver might sue.² So also he has a right of action where the sender was in fact his agent in sending the message.³ But this view has never been adopted in this country, and the receiver or addressee has always been allowed to maintain his action when he could prove actual damage.⁴ The courts have stated various grounds for this doctrine. It is considered by some that while the addressee is not an actual party to the contract of sending, yet his case comes within the rule that where two parties contract for the benefit of a third, such third party may sue for damages resulting from a breach of the contract. The addressee is the beneficiary of the contract of sending and is entitled to sue in his own right for damages when, by the negligence of the company, he is deprived of the benefit he would otherwise have derived.⁵

The message purported to be from the plaintiffs' Liverpool house, and to be a large order for barley; but in fact it was not from the Liverpool house, nor intended for the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs executed the supposed order, and, having suffered a heavy loss in consequence, claimed damages against the telegraph company. Held, that they were not entitled to maintain their action, as there was no contract between them and the company.

This view is particularly applicable and is correct where the sender acted as the agent of the addressee in making the contract of sending,¹ though in such a case there is nothing to prevent the agent from suing in behalf of his principal.² Other authorities base the addressee's right to recover upon the ground that the company, being in the exercise of a public employment, has assumed the duty correctly to transmit and promptly to deliver messages intrusted to it, and is therefore liable to any party to whom this duty is owing, for damages resulting as a proximate consequence of its negligence. And this seems to be the more correct view.³

St. Rep. 530, a son, for the benefit of his father, left with the company a message addressed to his father, with instructions to forward it immediately, at the same time paying the fee. Subsequently, the father returned to the son the amount paid, and fully ratified his act. It was held that the contract was made for the benefit of the father, and that he was entitled to sue for damages for the failure to deliver.

1. Where Sender Is Addressee's Agent.

—In Milliken v. Western Union Tel. Co., 110 N. Y. 403, it was held that a principal may avail himself of the obligation of the contract made by his agent with the company, to transmit a message addressed to himself, and may recover damages sustained by him because of an incorrect transmission or a delayed delivery. The court, by Reyer, C. J., said: "The rule that a principal is entitled to maintain an action upon a contract made by his agent with a third person, although the agency is not disclosed at the time of making the contract, has many illustrations in the reported cases, and is elementary law. Coleman v. First Nat. Bank, 53 N. Y. 388; Briggs v. Partridge, 64 N. Y. 357; 21 Am. Rep. 617; Ford v. Williams, 21 How. (U. S.) 288; Dykens v. Town- send, 24 N. Y. 57. This principle has been frequently applied in actions against telegraph companies, and is now the settled law of this country in respect to such corporations. De Rutte v. New York, etc., Tel. Co., 1 Daly (N. Y.) 547; 30 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 403." See also Kennon v. Western Union Tel. Co., 92 Ala. 399. Compare Gray on Telegraphs, § 69.

3. Ground that Company Owes a Public Duty.—In Illinois, it is held distinctly that the addressee's only remedy is in tort for a breach of the company's public duty; the addressee is considered to sustain no contractual relation with the company. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Dubois, 128 Ill. 248; 15 Am. St. Rep. 109 (message negligently altered in course of transmission).

In 3 Suth. on Dam. 314, after stating the English rule, the author observes: "In this country a different doctrine prevails. The company's employment is of a public character and it owes the duty of care and good faith to both the sender and receiver." Western Union Tel. Co. v. Longwill (N. Mex. 1889), 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 559 (in this case the message was addressed to a physician, who lost a fee by the company's failure to deliver it); Milliken v. Western Union Tel. Co., 110 N. Y. 403; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Fenton, 52 Ind. 1; Abraham v. Western Union Tel. Co., 11 Sawy. (U. S.) 28.

Mr. Bigelow suggests as a satisfactory ground for the American rule, the

* The company is also regarded as sustaining to the addressee the relation of agent, and as being therefore liable to its principal for the consequences of its negligence.¹ In still other cases, the right of the addressee to sue is based upon the statutory provision declaring the duties and obligations of telegraph companies.² The question as to who paid the price of transmission is considered immaterial; the fact that the message was paid for in advance by the sender is not regarded as affecting the addressee's right of recovery.³ In one jurisdiction it has been considered that the telegraph company, in delivering to the addressee a message which through its negligence has become changed, is liable on the ground that the delivery of a false message is a misrepresentation, for the consequences of which the company must be held responsible.⁴ But in order for the addressee to sustain the action he must be able to prove that he himself sustained some injury through the negligence of the company. Therefore, where a message from a dealer to his broker is erroneously transmitted, by reason of which the broker makes losing contracts for his principal, the broker cannot maintain an action for damages, fact that telegraphic communication is usually resorted to only in matters of importance, from which the company ought to infer the necessity of correct and prompt transmission, and that "a mistake in its transmission will be likely to produce damage to the receiver by causing him to do what he would otherwise not do. Knowing, then, the probable evil consequences of transmitting an erroneous message, they owe a duty to the receiver of refraining from such act; and if (by negligence) they violate this duty, they must, on plain legal principles, be liable for the damage produced." Bigelow on Torts, 602. Practically the same view is taken in Young v. Western Union Tel. Co., 107 N. Car. 370; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 62; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Adams, 75 Tex. 531; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 594; 16 Am. St. Rep. 920; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Reynolds, 77 Va. 173; 5 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 183; 46 Am. Rep. 715; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Allen, 66 Miss. 549; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 535, though in this last case it is intimated that no satisfactory reason can be given.

1. Company as Agent of Addressee.— "It seems reasonable that for all purposes of liability, the telegraph company shall be regarded as much the agent of him who receives, as of him who sends the message. In point of fact, the fee is often paid on delivery; and I am inclined to think that the company ought to be regarded as the common agent of the parties at either end of the wire." New York, etc., Print Tel. Co. v. Dryburg, 35 Pa. St. 298; 78 Pa. St. 338.

2. Wadsworth v. Western Union Tel. Co., 86 Tenn. 695; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 161; 6 Am. St. Rep. 864.

3. Immaterial as to Who Paid Fee.— Wolfskehl v. Western Union Tel. Co., 46 Hun (N. Y.) 542 (prepaid message); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Allen, 66 Miss. 549; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 535; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Feebles, 75 Tex. 537; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Beringer, 84 Tex. 38 (addressee allowed to recover, although fee was paid by sender and afterwards returned by the company); Aiken v. Western Union Tel. Co., 5 S. Car. 358. See also cases cited in preceding notes.

4. Altered Message a Misrepresentation.— May v. Western Union Tel. Co., 112 Mass. 90; Gray on Telegraphs, § 73. A physician, who negligently administers a wrong medicine, is responsible to his patient for the injury resulting therefrom, if he takes it in the belief that he is taking the right medicine. Norton v. Sewall, 106 Mass. 143; 8 Am. Rep. 298; Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397; 57 Am. Dec. 455; Ayers v. Russell (Supreme Ct.) 3 N. Y. Supp. 338. And it has been suggested that by analogy, a telegraph company must answer to an addressee for delivering to him a message, which, through its own negligence, has become false. Allen's Tel.

because, as he is not responsible on the contracts, he cannot claim to have suffered any damage.¹

c. RIGHT OF THIRD PARTY.—The right to recover damages does not extend to every one who has an interest in the correct and prompt transmission of the message and who sustains an injury from the company's failure properly to discharge its duty. The plaintiff must show that the company owed a duty to him in the particular instance involved. Therefore a stranger, of whose connection with or interest in the message the company is ignorant, and who is only remotely connected with the transaction, cannot maintain an action for damages by merely showing that in consequence of the incorrect transmission he sustained injury.² Where, however, he can show that either the sender or the addressee or both, acted merely as his agents, he is entitled to maintain the action in his own name.³ Where the message is

Cas. 455; Gray on Telegraphs, § 73, note.

1. Addressee Must Prove Damage to Himself.—Rose v. U. S. Tel. Co., 6 Robt. (N. Y.) 305; 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 408; 34 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 308. The broker had received by telegraph an order from his principal to sell five thousand barrels of petroleum to be delivered at a future day; the order was executed without plaintiff's disclosing his principal. It appeared that the order as sent by the principal was for only five hundred barrels, the message having become changed in the process of transmission. The broker was not allowed to maintain the action for damages against the telegraph company because the contracts made were not his and he was not liable upon them; he could not, therefore, be said to have suffered any damage.

2. Thus, in Elliott v. Western Union Tel. Co., 75 Tex. 18; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 613, it appeared that the saw in plaintiffs' mill having broken, plaintiffs engaged S., of the firm of G. & S., to order a new one from St. Louis by telegraph. S. wrote a dispatch in the name of his firm to a St. Louis concern to send a saw to the plaintiffs, and handed the dispatch to a salesman of the St. Louis concern, who, however, wrote another dispatch ordering the saw to be sent to S.'s concern; but neither dispatch was delivered. It was held that plaintiffs had no right of action against the telegraph company.

In Deslottes v. Baltimore, etc., Tel. Co., 40 La. Ann. 183; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 158, the plaintiff ordered goods of a country merchant who, acting as a merchant and not as agent, though at the plaintiff's request, telegraphed for the goods. The message was never delivered to the addressee, and in consequence, the plaintiff failed to get the goods, thereby sustaining injury. It was held that there was no privity of contract between him and the company to authorize a recovery by him.

3. Where Sender or Addressee is Agent of Third Party.—Thus, when two attorneys in different cities are acting in a suit on behalf of the same party, the client can maintain an action in his own name for any damage sustained by him through the negligence of the company in transmitting a message sent by one attorney to the other; and this, although the company was not aware that the message was sent on his behalf. Harkness v. Western Union Tel. Co., 73 Iowa 190; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 182; 5 Am. St. Rep. 672. See Gage v. Stimson, 26 Minn. 64; Story on Agency, § 418. The fact that the company had no knowledge that plaintiff was in fact the principal, is immaterial, except that the company might set up in defense any matter which occurred prior to the disclosure of the principal, that would constitute a defense if the suit were brought by, and in the name of, the agent. Harkness v. Western Union Tel. Co., 73 Iowa 190; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 182; 5 Am. St. Rep. 672. For a similar case, see Leonard v. New York, etc., Tel. Co., 41 N. Y. 544; 1 Am. Rep. 446. Compare *Rose v. sent on behalf of a wife, the husband is the proper person to sue, whether or not he was a party to the contract of sending.¹

d. UNDER SPECIAL STATUTES.—The Mississippi statute, imposing a penalty upon telegraph companies for every failure to properly discharge its duty as to transmitting and delivering messages, provides that the penalty may be recovered by the "party aggrieved;" this is considered to embrace either the sender or receiver.² A similar rule prevails in *Tennessee*³ and Missouri.⁴ But under the Indiana statute, providing for a penalty, it is considered that only the sender has a right of action,⁵ though under

In Sherrill v. Western Union Tel. Co., 109 N. Car. 527, it was held that a right of action was shown by a complaint which alleged that the dispatch was sent by plaintiff's sister, who had charge of his house, and that the price was paid out of the plaintiff's money, the dispatch being directed to plaintiff's father, where plaintiff was, and it being alleged further that the dispatch was sent for plaintiff's use and benefit.

See the rule of the text upheld in a peculiar state of facts in U. S. Tel. Co. v. Gildersleeve, 29 Md. 232; 96 Am. Dec. 519.

1. Husband and Wife.—See generally HUSBAND AND WIFE, vol. 9, p. 828; NEGLIGENCE, vol. 16, p. 469. The husband of the wife for whose benefit the message was sent, and who was injured by the delay, may sue irrespective of the questions of agency and of payment of the fee. The fact that the company had no notice that she was plaintiff's wife, or that the contract was made for her, is immaterial. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Adams, 75 Tex. 531; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 594; 16 Am. St. Rep. 920; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Fugles, 75 Tex. 537; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cooper, 71 Tex. 507; 10 Am. St. Rep. 883.

Parent and Child.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hoffman, 80 Tex. 420; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 733, was an action by a father and his son against the telegraph company for failure to deliver a message sent to a physician. The son, a boy of fifteen years, had broken his arm and on the same day his mother, in his father's absence, telegraphed for the physician. Through the conceded negligence of the company the message was not delivered for nine days, but it appeared that the parents made no further effort to secure a physician until it was too late to save the boy's arm. It was held that the father's contributory negligence in not sending for another physician would bar recovery on his own account, but that a judgment in favor of the son was proper, as the negligence of the father could not be imputed to him. 3. In Tennessee.—The code (1884), section 1542, provides that upon a failure by the company to perform the duties prescribed, it shall be liable in damages to the "party aggrieved"; this includes the receiver. Wadsworth v. Western Union Tel. Co., 86 Tenn. 695; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 161; 6 Am. St. Rep. 864.

4. In Missouri.—Markel v. Western Union Tel. Co., 19 Mo. App. 80. The statute provided for the recovery of special damages. Rev. Stat. of Missouri (1879), § 887.

5. In Indiana, under Rev. Stat., § 4176, the right of action for the penalty was limited to the sender. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pendleton, 95 Ind. 12; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 56; 48 Am. Rep. 692; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Meek, 49 Ind. 53; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hopkins, 49 Ind. 223. And one who directs his clerk to forward to him in his absence, an expected message from another statute, authorizing the recovery of special damages, the addressee is allowed to sue.¹

Under the New York statute, prescribing the duties of telegraph companies, a company may maintain an action against a connecting telegraph line which refuses to receive for transmission a message sent over the line of the company tendering it,² although in such case the original sender of the message might properly have maintained the action.³

2. Matters of Pleading, Practice, and Evidence.—(See also SERVICE OF PROCESS, vol. 22, p. 107 et seq.)—a. CHARACTER OF THE ACTION.—The action is properly one ex contractu, and based on the contract of sending, though it differs in some degree from ordinary actions for breach of contract, owing to the public character of the defendant company.⁴ There is authority, however, for the view that where the addressee is complainant, the action must be in tort, since there is no contractual relation existing between him and the defendant company.⁵ It has also been held that there is a distinction between an action brought for the loss sustained by the addressee in acting upon a message which the company altered in the course of transmission, and an action for a failure to transmit or deliver; in the first of these cases the a third person, is not a "sender" within the meaning of the statute. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kinney, 106 Ind. 468. Nor is one a sender who merely shows that he delivered to the company for transmission a message signed by another, but paid for by himself. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Brown, 108 Ind. 538; 14 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 139. Compare Western Union Tel. Co. v. Buskirk, 107 Ind. 549.

The latter statute of 1885, giving a right of action for the penalty to the "party aggrieved," is also considered to limit the right to the sender. This construction is placed upon the ground that the statute, being penal, is to be construed strictly. Hadley v. Western Union Tel. Co., 115 Ind. 191; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 72.

1. Special Damages in Indiana.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. McKibben, 114 Ind. 511; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 133; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Fenton, 52 Ind. 1.

3. See supra, this title, Liability Where Message Passes Over Connecting Lines; Thompson on Electricity 261, note; Leonard v. New York, etc., Tel. Co., 41 N. Y. 544; 1 Am. Rep. 446.

Quare, as to right of the original sender to sue in such a case. Thurn v. Alta Tel. Co., 15 Cal. 472.

4. There are few, if any, cases directly adjudicating this question. But it is a universally accepted rule that in actions against telegraph companies, only such damages are recoverable as were in contemplation of the parties at the time of making the contract. See infra, this title, Measure of Damages. But the rule of damages in actions ex delicto is more extensive than this. See DAMAGES, vol. 5, p. 13; NEGLIGENCE, vol. 16, p. 476. The courts seem therefore to have virtually held such actions to be ex contractu. The case is somewhat analogous to that of actions against carriers of passengers; in such cases the action is in tort for a breach of the public duty created by the contract of carriage. See CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS, vol. 2, p. 742; NEGLIGENCE, vol. 16, pp. 419, 424-5; TICKETS AND FARES.

5. In Western Union Tel. Co. v. DuBois, 128 Ill. 248; 15 Am. St. Rep. 109, an action by an addressee, the court held that his remedy was in tort only. The same view has been taken in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Richman (Pa. 1887), 8 Atl. Rep. 172; 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 265; Harris v. Western Union Tel. Co., 9 Phila. (Pa.) 88.

On the other hand, in an action by an addressee for the loss on certain goods caused by their being shipped to the wrong place, owing to an erroneous telegram, the Louisiana court has held action sounds in tort, and is different from that where the sender sustains injury from a non-delivery.¹

b. PRESUMPTION OF NEGLIGENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF—(See also BURDEN OF PROOF, vol. 2, p. 649; OPEN AND CLOSE, vol. 17, p. 195).—In ordinary actions for damages resulting from negligent personal injury there is properly no presumption of negligence against either party; the mere fact that the injury has occurred creates no such presumption, except where, from the peculiar circumstances involved, the familiar maxim of res ipsa loquitur is applicable.² But in actions against telegraph companies for negligently transmitting or delivering a dispatch, it is universally held that proof of an improper transmission or of a delay in delivery raises a presumption of negligence against the company and casts upon it the burden of proof to show that the incorrectness or delay was due to other causes.³ In one instance, however, it has been held that such proof alone will not authorize the recovery of more than the price paid for transmission, that the action being ex contractu, the limitation of one year against action ex delicto had no application. De La Grange v. Southwestern Tel. Co., 25 La. Ann. 383.

1. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Richmond (Pa. 1887), 8 Atl. Rep. 172; 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 265. But this distinction has been made in very few, if in any, cases besides the one cited. Nor does it seem to be well founded. In support of its view the court cited New York, etc., Tel. Print. Co. v. Dryburg, 35 Pa. St. 298; 78 Am. Dec. 338.

Compare Breese v. U. S. Tel. Co., 48 N. Y. 132; 8 Am. Rep. 526 (erroneous transmission; the holding of this case is criticised in the Pearsall case as being mere obiter); U. S., etc., Tel. Co. v. Gildersleeve, 29 Md. 232; 96 Am. Dec. 519; Thompson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 106 N. Car. 549; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 634 (plaintiff cannot recover price of transmission merely upon proof of non-delivery of the message).

This presumption was considered to be rebutted in Fowler v. Western Union Tel. Co., 80 Me. 381; 6 Am. St. Rep. 211, where a night message which was, according to the usual agreement, to be transmitted the next morning, was burned with the telegraph office where the contract of sending contained special limitations of the company's liability. The effect of these special limitations is said to be to shift the burden of proof of negligence upon the complainant.¹

c. PLEADING—(1) In Actions for Damages.—There is nothing peculiar in the pleadings in actions against telegraph companies for damages, and all that can be said here is to apply recognized rules to this particular class of cases.² The declaration or complaint must of course allege the facts necessary to sustain the action; thus it must aver that the message was delivered to the company for transmission, that the usual charges were paid or tendered (though this latter averment is not indispensable);³ and that the failure of the message to reach its destination promptly or correctly was caused by the negligence of the company in during the night without any negligence on the part of the company.

In De La Grange v. Southwestern Tel. Co., 25 La. Ann. 383, the defendant company contended that it was not the first carrier, and that the plaintiff failed to prove that the error in transmission occurred on its line, and showed an express provision in its printed blanks that it would not be liable for errors occurring on connecting lines. It was held that whether defendant was the first carrier or not, it was peculiarly within its power, and it was its duty to prove that the error did not occur on its line. Being engaged in the transmission of messages over the country, it was easily able to show that the message delivered by it to the plaintiff was the same as that received by it from the connecting line.

The plaintiff makes out a prima facie case by proof of the undertaking, error or delay, and damage, and throws the burden of proof upon the company to show that the error was caused by some agency for which it was not responsible. Bartlett v. Western Union Tel. Co., 62 Me. 209; 16 Am. Rep. 437. "It was not necessary that plaintiff should show affirmatively that the failure to deliver happened through any omission of duty by the company or its officers, or from some defect in the instrumentalities employed by the company. The failure to deliver being shown, the legal presumption is that it was caused by one or the other of these causes, or of all combined." Fowler v. Western Union Tel. Co., 80 Me. 381; 6 Am. St. Rep. 216.

1. Womack v. Western Union Tel. Co., 58 Tex. 180; 44 Am. Rep. 614. In this case the court upheld the validity of a stipulation which relieved the company from liability for unrepeatd messages, except where there was fraud, misconduct or want of due care on the part of the company or its agents; and the message being an unrepeatd one, the court held that the plaintiff must affirmatively prove such misconduct, fraud or want of due care. It is not intimated, however, in what possible way such misconduct, etc., whereby the message became changed in the process of transmission, is to be proved. Aiken v. Western Union Tel. Co., 69 Iowa 31; 58 Am. Rep. 210; 13 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 585, is a similar case; the same conclusions were reached. See also Western Union Tel. Co. v. Neill, 57 Tex. 283; 44 Am. Rep. 589; Sweatland v. Illinois, etc., Tel. Co., 27 Iowa 433; 1 Am. Rep. 285. See also Western Union Tel. Co. v. Bennett, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 558. It is difficult to comprehend the exact meaning in these cases. They hold that where such stipulations exist, the company is not liable unless gross negligence can be proved. But there is no method of proof except from the fact and the character of the error. And in numerous cases "gross" negligence was considered to have been established upon a mere showing of the difference between the message as offered for transmission and as delivered to the addressee.

2. See DECLARATION, vol. 5, p. 349 et seq.; PLEADING, vol. 18, p. 467 et seq.; Ferguson v. Anglo-American Tel. Co., 15 Pa. St. 211; Kenyon v. Western Union Tel. Co., 92 Ala. 399.

3. The complaint need not allege that the message as offered to the company was in writing, although there is a val-

transmitting it.¹ It is not necessarily demurrable because it claims special damages as well as the statutory penalty, although the case was one in which the penalty was not recoverable.² The amount and character of the damages claimed should be set out,³ though it is held that under a claim of general damages, the plaintiff may recover for mental suffering.⁴ It must also allege such damages as are recoverable, and if on its face only remote or consequential damages appear to be claimed, it is demurrable.⁵

Where the complaint, after setting out the words of the message, has a copy of it attached and asks that such copy be made a part of the complaint, the entire copy, including the printed contract, becomes a part of it.⁶

(2) In Actions for Statutory Penalty—(See also PENALTIES, vol. 18, p. 269).—The rules of pleading are usually enforced with more strictness in actions of this character than in ordinary actions for damages. The complaint must allege all the facts necessary to bring the case within the letter of the statute as well as its spirit.⁷ It must therefore allege that the usual charges were paid or tendered,⁸ and that the defendant company is one included within the terms of the statute.⁹ It need not, however, set out a copy id regulation by the company that all messages must be in writing. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Wilson, 93 Ala. 32.

1. Washington, etc., Tel. Co. v. Hobson, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 122.

2. Alexander v. Western Union Tel. Co., 67 Miss. 386. In this case the penalty was not recoverable, because the negligent act was committed in a foreign state.

3. McAllen v. Western Union Tel. Co., 70 Tex. 243; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 195 (must allege whether actual or exemplary damages are demanded).

A complaint alleging an error in the transmission of a telegram whereby the plaintiff was prevented from buying certain goods, and asking a certain sum as special damages without alleging any facts going to show such damage, will not sustain a judgment for more than nominal damages. Acheson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 96 Cal. 235.

4. So Relle v. Western Union Tel. Co., 55 Tex. 308; 40 Am. Rep. 805.

5. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Smith, 76 Tex. 253; Erie Tel., etc., Co. v. Grimes, 82 Tex. 39; infra, this title, Measure of Damages. Compare Alexander v. Western Union Tel. Co., 67 Miss. 386.

6. Sherrill v. Western Union Tel. Co., 109 N. Car. 527.

A complaint may be good on general demurrer, though it might have been considered insufficient in certain particulars if they had been specially excepted to. For example, see Loper v. Western Union Tel. Co., 70 Tex. 689; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 191; 16 Am. St. Rep. 864.

7. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kinney, 106 Ind. 468; Greenberg v. Western Union Tel. Co., 89 Ga. 754 (complaint set aside).

8. Necessity of Alleging Payment of Charges.—In proceedings under a penal statute, the party plaintiff must bring his case within the letter of the statute, and therefore he must aver and prove that he paid or tendered the usual charges. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Mossler, 95 Ind. 32; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ferguson, 57 Ind. 495.

But when the action is not under penal statute, but under the common-law right of recovery of damages, it is not necessary to allege in the complaint the payment or tender of charges. If complaint shows that plaintiff engaged the defendant and that the defendant undertook to transmit the message, the mutual obligation of the parties is sufficiently shown. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Meek, 49 Ind. 53; Milliken v. Western Union Tel. Co., 110 N. Y. 403, reversing 52 N. Y. Super. Ct. 232; 53 N. Y. Super. Ct. 111.

9. Under Indiana Statute.—The complaint is required to allege that the defendant was, in the words of the statute, "engaged in telegraphing for the pub-of the message,¹ nor is it necessary that it should negative matters of defense,² nor does the requirement that the allegations must not vary from the proof avoid the complaint, where the inconsistency is merely an immaterial difference in dates.³

d. EVIDENCE.—It is not proper to admit evidence to show that the defendant company is a wealthy corporation; such evidence is admissible only where there has been a willful injury, and exemplary damages are claimed;⁴ nor is evidence of the embarrassed financial condition of the sender of the message admissible, as bearing on the question of damages for the loss of a valuable bargain in consequence of the company's negligence.⁵ So where the message was to a physician requesting his professional attendance, evidence on behalf of the company that the doctor's charges had not been paid and that he did not usually make such visits without prepayment, is inadmissible.⁶ Evidence cannot be ad-

lic;" and an allegation that defendant was "engaged in the business of transmitting telegraphic dispatches for hire," is insufficient. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Axtell, 69 Ind. 199. See also, as to sufficiency of such allegations, Western Union Tel. Co. v. Roberts, 87 Ind. 377; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Adams, 87 Ind. 598; 44 Am. Rep. 776.

Under the statute of 1885, the courts seem to have insisted less than previously upon exactness. Thus it is held that a complaint which states that a message was not transmitted until more than 27 hours after it was received, and that the company did not transmit it with impartiality and in good faith without delay, and in the order of time in which it was received, sufficiently shows a violation of the statute, though it does not refer to the statute, or state that the message was offered and accepted upon the usual terms. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Griffin, 1 Ind. App. 46.

Where the message appears to have been sent on Sunday, the complaint is bad unless it shows that the sending of such message was a matter of necessity or charity. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Yopst, 118 Ind. 248; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 519. As to sufficiency of such a complaint, see Western Union Tel. Co. v. Griffin, 1 Ind. App. 46.

1. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Meredith, 95 Ind. 93; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 54.

2. Allegations as to Residence of Addressee within Delivery Limits.—Thus, where the statute required messages to be delivered in cases where the addressee lived within one mile of the receiving station or in the same city with it, the complaint need not aver that the addressee lived within delivery distance, since whether he did or not was a matter of defense. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Buskirk, 107 Ind. 549; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Gougar, 84 Ind. 176 (Rev. Stat. 1876, p. 868 construed); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lindley, 62 Ind. 371. See also SUNDAY, vol. 24, p. 528. Under the statute of 1885, however, a different rule is set up, and the complaint must allege that the addressee resided within delivery distance of the receiving office. Reese v. Western Union Tel. Co., 123 Ind. 294.

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Henderson, 89 Ala. 510; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 615; 18 Am. St. Rep. 148, the rule is stated to be that in an action for failure to deliver a message within a reasonable time, where the defense is that the person to whom it was addressed lived outside of the free delivery limits, and that plaintiff (the sender) failed to comply with the regulation of the company requiring a deposit to pay for delivery in such case, the burden is on plaintiff to prove that such person lived within the limits.

3. Thus, where the complaint alleged that the message was sent in March, the plaintiff might still show it to have been sent in January. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kilpatrick, 97 Ind. 42.

4. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Henderson, 89 Ala. 510; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 615; 18 Am. St. Rep. 148.

mitted to show that, because of the alleged negligence, a deduction had been made from the pay of the operator by one of his superior officers.¹ Statements or declarations of the company's agent who received the message, are inadmissible, except where they can be shown to be a part of the res gestæ.² But the complainant may introduce evidence that other messages, sent on the same day as his, were transmitted correctly and delivered promptly;³ and where the action was for mental suffering caused by the plaintiff's being kept away from the bedside of his dying mother, the court allowed evidence to be introduced to show that plaintiff was his mother's favorite child.⁴ Where his good faith in making certain purchases in pursuance of the erroneous telegram is in question, the plaintiff may show his understanding of the message and that he acted on the basis of such understanding.⁵ And in general all evidence pertinent to the substantial issues involved, and tending to throw light on the whole transaction, is admissible.⁶

2. Declarations and Admissions of Operators.—Thus, where the operator made a mistake in transcribing a message received at his office and delivered the next day, his admission of the error, made several days afterwards, is not evidence against the company, being no part of the res gestæ. Aiken v. Western Union Tel. Co., 5 S. Car. 358. Such statements are not competent as against the company to prove the negligence of the company, when they are not made in the performance of any duty relating to the transmission of the message. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Way, 83 Ala. 542. Where the action is for a failure to deliver a message summoning a physician to attend at a child-birth, correspondence by wire between the operators sending and receiving the message, not communicated to plaintiff or his wife, is not admissible to show that the physician had gone into the country so that the message could not be delivered to him. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cooper, 71 Tex. 507; 10 Am. St. Rep. 772.

In an action for mental suffering, declarations of the company's agents, made to the sender of the message, that it had been delivered at the other end of the line, are properly admitted in evidence. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lydon, 82 Tex. 364. company. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Bennett, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 558.

Generally where the company seeks to excuse non-delivery on the ground that the receiver was an obscure person whom the messenger could not find, specimens of printed cards and letter-heads which he had used in his business as grocer are pertinent to the issue and admissible, especially after he had testified without objection that he so used them. Defendant sent a dispatch by plaintiff's telegraph line for purchase of stock, which did not reach New York, its destination; at the same time he mailed a letter. At the trial, a letter from the parties in New York was admitted, and defendant testified as to the reasons why the New York parties did not buy directly on receipt of letter. Held, that the letter and the statements by the parties in New York were inadmissible. U. S. Tel. Co. v. Wenger, 55 Pa. St.

3. Measure of Damages—a. GENERAL RULE.—The rule as to the measure of damages in the class of cases under consideration was first clearly laid down in the well-known case of Hadley v. Baxendale; ² the rule as there stated has been so often quoted as to have become a proverb in law, and it is universally recognized and accepted as a fundamental principle in the law of damages for negligent breach of contract. The exact statement of the rule is that "when two parties have made a contract which one of them has broken, the damages which the other party ought to receive in respect of such breach of contract should be such as may

The meaning of a dispatch sent from a live stock broker to a shipper, couched in such terms as to be readily understood by the shipper, but which is ambiguous or unintelligible to persons not engaged in the stock business as shippers, may be explained by the testimony of the broker who sent it. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Collins, 45 Kan. 88.

Where the company failed to deliver a message summoning a physician to assist at a confinement, proof was admissible that the child was still-born, if such fact tended to show that the mother's labor was thereby prolonged, and her suffering so increased. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cooper, 71 Tex. 507; 10 Am. St. Rep. 772.

In Erie Tel., etc., Co. v. Grimes, 82 Tex. 39, the plaintiff G., on returning home after an absence of several days, found awaiting him a message dated two days previous, announcing that an important surgical operation was about to be performed on his mother, and asking him to come. He telegraphed immediately to know whether it was too late for him to come, but his message was never transmitted. He waited a few hours for a reply and then left home, not returning for several days. The question was raised on the trial as to his wish to see his mother. He testified that, not having received a dispatch, he supposed that the operation had not been performed. It was held that his supposition as to the matter was a fact to be considered by the jury.

1. In Particular Cases.—On the question of negligence, a charge that "the question of diligence is one to be determined by the jury from all the facts and circumstances, and if you believe from the evidence that defendant used such care and diligence as a prudent man, under like circumstances, would use in his own behalf to deliver the message, and failed through no fault of defendant company or its agents or employes, then you will find for defendant," is sufficient. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Wilson, 69 Tex. 739; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 80.

Where the action was for delay in delivering a message, whereby a son was prevented from reaching the bedside of his dying mother, the court properly refused to charge the jury that plaintiff could not recover if he failed to take certain trains by which he would have reached the bedside of his mother before her death, it being the province of the jury to say whether or not plaintiff's delay was accounted for or excused. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lydon, 82 Tex. 364. In this same case it appeared that the plaintiff had replied to the message announcing his mother's illness at a time when it would be several hours before any train would leave his place, hoping to receive an answer in the meanwhile. The court properly refused to instruct the jury that he should have acted on the first dispatch instead of trusting to receive another.

The subject of instructions in particular cases is considered at some length in Erie Tel., etc., Co. v. Grimes, 82 Tex. 39; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cooper, 71 Tex. 507; 10 Am. St. Rep. 772.

fairly and reasonably be considered, either as arising naturally, i. e., according to the usual course of things, from such breach of contract itself, or such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties, at the time they made the contract, as the probable result of the breach of it."¹ The effect and operation of this rule is to exclude the consideration of remote and speculative damages; the rule itself is a definite statement of what damages the breach of contract is the proximate cause.² The law regards only such damages as are the proximate consequence of the injury complained of; the accepted maxim, causa proxima non remota spectatur, excludes the recovery of all damages of which the alleged wrong was not the proximate cause.³ The subject of proximate and remote cause, as connected with cases involving a recovery for negligent injury,

1. Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341. Alderson, B., delivering the opinion in this case, went on to say: "Now, if the special circumstances under which the contract was actually made were communicated by the plaintiffs to the defendants and thus known to both parties, the damages resulting from the breach of such a contract, which they would reasonably contemplate, would be the amount of injury which would ordinarily follow from a breach of contract under these special circumstances so known and communicated. But, on the other hand, if these special circumstances were wholly unknown to the party breaking the contract, he at the most could only be supposed to have had in his contemplation the amount of injury which would arise generally, and in the great multitude of cases not affected by any special circumstances, from such a breach of contract. For, had the special circumstances been known, the parties might have specially provided for the breach of contract by special terms as to the damages in that case, and of this advantage it would be very unjust to deprive them." See all this language quoted in Mackey v. Western Union Tel. Co., 16 Nev. 226; Gray on Telegraphs, § 80; Thompson on Electricity, § 311. The facts in the Hadley v. Baxendale case were that the plaintiff broke a shaft in his mill, and in order to get it replaced, left the broken shaft with defendant, a carrier, to be taken to the manufacturer as a model, at the same time informing the carrier's clerk that he desired the shaft to be sent forward immediately, as his mill must remain idle until a new shaft could come. The carrier delayed forwarding the broken shaft and the new one was consequently delayed. In an action against the carrier for this negligent delay, the plaintiff sought to recover as damages, the loss of the profits caused by his mill being kept idle. The court held, however, that since the carrier had not been informed that the want of the shaft and that alone would keep the mill idle, the plaintiff could not recover of him for such loss of profits; the loss could not have been in contemplation at the time the contract of carriage was made.

The courts adopt this rule universally, although it has been laid down in some cases that an action by the addressee is not ex contractu, but ex delicto. See supra, this title, Character of the Action. And see DAMAGES, vol. 5, p. 13.

2. Smith v. Western Union Tel. Co., 83 Ky. 104; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 15; 4 Am. St. Rep. 126.

3. Other Statements of the Rule.—In Squire v. Western Union Tel. Co., 98 Mass. 232; 93 Am. Dec. 157, the court, by Bigelow, C. J., laid down a similar rule as follows: "A rule of damages which should embrace within its scope all the consequences which might be shown to have resulted from a failure or omission to perform a stipulated duty or service, would be a serious hindrance to the operations of commerce and to the transaction of the common business of life. The effect would often be to impose a liability wholly disproportionate to the nature of the act or service which a party had bound himself to perform, and to the compensation paid and received therefor. The practical rule, founded on a wise policy, and at the same time consistent with good sense and sound has been considered at length in a previous article;¹ it must be observed, however, that where the action is for a breach of contract, the damages are restricted to a more narrow limit than in actions in tort.² But, aside from what has been said, general statements of the law regulating the measure of damages are of little value; the difficulty in most cases is not to determine the correctness of any rule of law, but to ascertain whether such rule applies to the particular case under consideration and to determine the effect of its application. For this reason the remainder of this section may best be devoted chiefly to illustrative decided cases, in which an application of the foregoing recognized principles has been made to peculiar states of facts.³

b. WHAT ARE REMOTE OR SPECULATIVE DAMAGES.—Remote or speculative damages are those which do not result directly or necessarily from the wrong complained of, and which depend for their existence upon the operation of an additional cause; equity, is that a party can be held liable for a breach of a contract only for such damages as are the natural or necessary, and the immediate and direct results of the breach—such as might properly be deemed to have been in contemplation of the parties when the contract was entered into—and that all remote, speculative, and uncertain results, as well as possible profits and advantages and other like consequences which might have arisen from the fulfillment of the contract, must be excluded as forming no just or legitimate basis on which to determine the extent of the injury actually caused by a breach. Fox v. Harding, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 516; Cutting v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 13 Allen (Mass.) 381." In the case quoted from, it appeared that the company failed to deliver a message containing an agreement to accept an offer to sell goods at a certain price, in consequence of which the bargain was lost. The court held that the measure of damages was the additional sum which the plaintiff would have been compelled to pay at the same place to obtain the same quantity of similar goods, but that "any profit which the plaintiffs might have realized by the sale of the goods which were the subject of the message was not an element of damage and nothing could be recovered on that account."

In Leonard v. New York, etc., Tel. Co., 41 N. Y. 544; 1 Am. Rep. 446, the court, by Earl, J., said: "The damages must flow directly and naturally from the breach of contract and they must be certain, both in their nature and in respect to the cause from which they proceed. Under this rule, speculative, contingent, remote damages which cannot be directly traced to the breach complained of, are excluded. . . . It is not required that the parties must have contemplated the actual damages which are to be allowed. But the damages must be such as the parties may be fairly supposed to have contemplated when they made the contract. A more precise statement of the rule is that a party is liable for all the direct damages which both parties would have contemplated as flowing from its breach, if, at the time they entered into it, they had bestowed proper attention upon the subject, and had been fully informed of the fact." See these statements of the rule quoted, or similar language employed in Griffin v. Colver, 16 N. Y. 489; 69 Am. Dec. 718; First Nat. Bank v. Western Union Tel. Co., 30 Ohio St. 565; 27 Am. Rep. 285; Baldwin v. U. S. Tel. Co., 45 N. Y. 744; 6 Am. Rep. 165; Bartlett v. Western Union Tel. Co., 63 Me. 209; 16 Am. Rep. 437; Pepper v. Western Union Tel. Co., 87 Tenn. 554; 25 Am. & Eng. 3. In Louisiana Mut. Ins. Co. v. Tweed, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 44, Justice Miller observes that "If we could deduce from them (the cases) the best possible which are uncertain or contingent;¹ and which no man of ordinary care and forethought would have contemplated as a probable result of a breach at the time the contract was made.² Thus, the probability that if the message had been properly transmitted a certain trotting horse would have won a race and his owner secured a large purse, or that a painting or other article to be exhibited would have won a premium, is not a proper element of damage, being too remote and entirely speculative.³ So the loss of a valuable note, which the plaintiff alleged his father would have given him had he been able to see him at his death, is too remote to be considered in a claim for damages for a failure by the company to deliver a message announcing the father's extreme illness.⁴ The reported cases afford numerous other instances of similar claims.⁵

expression of the rule, it would remain after all to decide each case largely upon the special facts belonging to it and often with the nicest discriminations."

1. "The party injured is entitled to recover all his damages, including gains prevented as well as losses sustained, and this rule is subject to but two conditions: The damages must be such as may fairly be supposed to have entered into the contemplation of the parties when they made the contract, that is, such as might naturally be expected to follow its violation; and they must be certain, both in their nature and in respect to the cause from which they proceed." 4. Chapman v. Western Union Tel. Co., 90 Ky. 265; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 627. The court said: "Perhaps his father would have given him the note. It would not, however, have been a natural consequence of his going to see him. He might, and he might not, have done so. No such loss could have been contemplated by the parties to the sending of the message, had their minds at the time been drawn to the contingency of its not being delivered. . . . As well might one claim from a railroad company the amount of a stake in a race upon the ground that if the train had not been negligently delayed, his horse would have arrived in time and won the race." A man was found in Kansas, however, who earnestly insisted that he should be allowed to recover the stake money which he alleged his steed would have won had he not been kept away from the race by the negligence of the telegraph company. See Western Union Tel. Co. v. Crall, 39 Kan. 580; 5 Am. St. Rep. 795.

5. Illustrative Cases—Remote Damages.—Plaintiff S. signed and delivered to the company a message: "R. Meet me in C. Saturday night." It was not delivered to R. and plaintiff brought an action against the company, alleging that by its negligence he was put to expense in hiring a conveyance to go from C. to R.'s home and back again; that by loss of time he failed to meet important engagements; and that, by reason of exposure, his health was greatly impaired. Held, that the petition was bad on demurrer, the damages being too remote, conjectural and not in contemplation of the parties when the contract was made. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Smith, 76 Tex. 253.

Damages for bruises received in consequence of being obliged to take a rough vehicle, instead of the family carriage which he had telegraphed for, are too remote for a claim against the telegraph company for failure to transmit a message ordering the carriage. McAllen v. Western Union Tel. Co., 70 Tex. 243; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 195.

cient cause. Even though the company's negligence may have some causal connection with the damage complained of and may have exerted a material influence in producing the final result, still the company cannot be held liable as being, through its negligence, a proximate cause, where a subsequent intervening cause took advantage of such negligence and brought about the ultimate result which is the subject of complaint.¹ If the company's default is made mischievous to the party complaining, only by the operation of some other intervening cause, then the maxim causa

Cas. 202, owing to a delay of thirty hours in the delivery of a telegram, the plaintiff was unable to take a barge up the river, upon which to load a large lot of staves, and the staves were swept away by a flood. The message read, "Barge at Mobile Bridge. Get them above as soon as possible." It was held that the loss of the staves was too remote; an efficient cause (the flood) having intervened between the company's negligence and the loss complained of.

Message Asking Information—Loss on Sale of Property.—In Baldwin v. U. S. Tel. Co., 45 N. Y. 744; 6 Am. Rep. 165, the plaintiff telegraphed to his agent, "Telegraph me at Rochester what that well is doing;" the message was undelivered and did not reach the agent for several days. The agent on receiving it replied by wire, "Well flowing eighty barrels; can sell your interest for $5,000. Telegraph refusal," etc. In the meantime, however, plaintiff, having received no answer after waiting some days, sold his interest for $3,800. He sued to recover of the company the difference in the price received and that which he would have secured had there been no delay in delivering the first message, and introduced some evidence to show that the operator had knowledge of the circumstances connected with the message. The court held that there could be no recovery; the damages were regarded as "quite too remote, and depending upon too many contingencies. Had the message been received (promptly) the agent might or might not have answered it; and what the answer would have been cannot certainly be known. The answer might or might not have been received by the plaintiffs at Rochester, and if received, it is conjectural what might have been the action of the plaintiffs thereon."

Proximate Consequences.—On the other hand, where a wife, about to be confined, sends a message summoning her husband, and through a negligent delay in delivery of it he did not arrive, and in consequence she suffered more physical pain, anxiety of mind and alarm on account of her condition, and sustained permanent injury for want of her husband's presence, such damages are not remote, but are a proximate consequence of the company's negligence, the message having shown on its face the necessity of its immediate transmission and delivery. *Thompson v. In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Edsall, 74 Tex. 329; 15 Am. St. Rep. 835, plaintiff, having bought a flock of sheep, sent a dispatch to his servant to "Bring Shep," this being the name of his dog; but the message as delivered directed the servant to "bring sheep." It was held in an action against the company that there was notice of the object of the dispatch, and attendant details.

1. Effect of Intervening Efficient Cause.

—See NEGLIGENCE, vol. 16, pp. 444-5; Scheffer v. Washington, etc., R. Co., 105 U. S. 252; 8 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 59; Crain v. Petrie, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 522; 41 Am. Dec. 765. In this last case the doctrine was stated by the court that "to maintain an action for special damages, they must appear to be the legal and natural consequences arising from the tort and not from the wrongful act of a third person induced thereby. In other words, the damages must proceed wholly and exclusively from the injury complained of."

The case of Lowery v. Western Union Tel. Co., 60 N. Y. 198; 19 Am. Rep. 154, is an application of the rule of the text. B. delivered to the tele-

c. EFFECT OF SPECIAL CIRCUMSTANCES—(See also DAMAGES, vol. 5, pp. 14, 15).—Special circumstances involved in the case cannot be considered in estimating the damages, unless it can be made to appear that the company was informed as to them at the time the contract of sending was made.² But it is immaterial how this information is conveyed to the company; it may appear on the face of the message, or may be communicated by the sender or his agent at the time of offering the dispatch for trans-graph company a message addressed to one L., asking him for a remittance of five hundred dollars. Through the negligence of the company's agent, the message was made to ask for five thousand dollars. The latter amount was sent to B., who, upon receiving it, absconded with it. It was held that L. could not hold the company responsible for the loss. The embezzlement by B. was not a proximate consequence of the erroneous transmission, but was produced by an intervening cause, i. e., B.'s dishonesty.

First National Bank v. Western Union Tel. Co., 30 Ohio St. 555; 27 Am. Rep. 485, was a similar case. The plaintiff, a bank at B., sent a letter to its agent in New York, asking as to the financial standing of certain parties who had presented drafts, and concluding, "If everything is all right, you need not dispatch. If not right, answer by Saturday evening (13th)." On Monday at 4:55 p. m. the agent delivered to the telegraph company in reply to the letter a message reading: "Parties will accept if bill of lading accompanies draft. Parties stand fair." This message was never transmitted. Before three o'clock on the same day the bank, having received no reply, cashed the drafts to L., which amount was eventually lost, since L.'s drafts proved worthless. The bank brought an action against the telegraph company, alleging that if the company had promptly delivered the dispatch, the money paid to L. could have been recovered from him, and that as a consequence of the company's negligence, the bank was defrauded of the amount paid on the drafts. The court held that only nominal damages were recoverable; that had it not been for the intervening cause, the dishonesty of L., the company's negligence would not have produced the result complained of. "The loss was occasioned by two causes—the shortcoming of the telegraph company in not delivering the message, and the still shortercoming of L. in appropriating to himself what belonged to somebody else." L. had testified that he would have returned the money if the request had been made on the said Monday; but this was a mere contingency, as there was no proof of his solvency or honesty.

"But, on the other hand, if these special circumstances were wholly unknown to the party breaking the contract, he, at the most, could only be supposed to have had in contemplation the amount of injury which would arise generally, and in the great multitude of cases not affected by any special circumstances, from such a breach of contract." Message Announcing Date of Trial of a Case.—Thus in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Short, 53 Ark. 434, a message was sent to plaintiff-informing him that his case was set for Aug. 17th. The company negligently changed it to read Aug. 7th, thereby causing plaintiff to make an unnecessary journey to the place where trial was expected. It was held that the defendant company was liable for plaintiff's reasonable expenses in going to and from the trial, and the value of his time; but that, there being no evidence that the company had notice of special circumstances connected with the sending of the message, it was mission; it is only requisite that the company shall have been informed of such circumstances at the time it contracted with the sender.¹ Special circumstances, however, even when communicated to the company, cannot control the measure of damages, where the damage complained of is essentially remote or speculative in its character, as, for example, where the sender loses the opportunity to conduct a profitable speculation or to secure contingent profits.²

d. WHERE MESSAGE IS IN CIPHER OR IS OTHERWISE UNINTELLIGIBLE—(1) The General Doctrine.—The rule already set out as to the measure of damages, confines the plaintiff's recovery in actions against the company for negligence, to such damages as may fairly be supposed to have been in contemplation of the parties at the time of making the contract.³ This being true, it follows as a logical and necessary sequence that where the message as delivered for transmission is unintelligible, except to the sender or the addressee, and the company has no information otherwise as to its character and purport, nor of its importance and urgency, the party injured can recover of the company nothing more than nominal damages or at most the price paid for transmission.⁴ And this is the rule which has been not liable for loss to plaintiff resulting from the necessity of shutting down his mill, idleness of his teams, etc., during his absence.

In Sprague v. Western Union Tel. Co., 6 Daly (N. Y.) 200; aff'd 67 N. Y. 590, a similar message was lost in transmission, and, in consequence, the plaintiff and his counsel went to the place of trial and found that his case would come up later. He was allowed to recover the expenses of himself and counsel in making this unnecessary trip, and also the fee paid to his counsel for going the second time and attending to the case then.

There can be no question that operators or agents who receive dispatches for transmission, are agents of the company to receive information of such special circumstances. From the nature of the case, in no other practicable way could the company have knowledge of the circumstances involved. Thompson on Electricity, §§ 315, 316; *Western Union Tel. Co. v. 4. In Candee v. Western Union Tel. Co., 34 Wis. 471; 17 Am. Rep. 452, the message was in cipher, and the company was not informed as to its importance. The court, in holding that only nominal damages were recoverable for a failure to deliver it promptly, said, by Dixon, C. J.: "It cannot be said or assumed that any amount of damages or any pecuniary loss or injury will naturally ensue or be suffered, according to the usual course of things, from the failure to transmit a message, the meaning and import of which are wholly unknown to the operator. The operator who receives, and who represents the company, and may for this purpose be said to be the other party to the contract, cannot be supposed to look upon such a message as one pertaining to transactions of pecuniary value and importance, and in respect of which, pecuniary loss or damages will naturally arise in case of his failure or omission to send it. It may be a mere item of news, or some other communication of trifling and unimportant character. Ignorant of its real nature and importance, it cannot be said to have been in his contemplation, at the time of making the adopted by the English and American courts almost without exception.¹ The rule is analagous to, and derives support from, the principle in the law of common carriers which exempts the carrier from responsibility where the owner of goods shipped over its road conceals their nature and value.²

contract, that any particular damage or injury would be the probable result of a breach of the contract on his part." Div. 326; 17 Moak's Rep. 286, a collector of telegraph messages, who, for reward, undertook to receive messages for transmission, and to transmit them by telegraph to places abroad, received such a message written in a cipher (which he had no means of understanding or reading), and negligently transmitted it wrongly, so that the sender of the message lost a profitable contract. It was held that only nominal damages could be recovered by him in an action against such collector. See also Horne v. Midland R. Co., 7 C. P. 583.

Effect of Stipulation against Liability for Errors or Delay in Cipher Messages.

—The telegraph blanks contain a stipulation to the effect that the company will not be liable for errors in cipher or obscure messages. Such a stipulation is reasonable and will be upheld. Cannon v. Western Union Tel. Co., 100 N. Car. 300; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 121; 6 Am. St. Rep. 590. But as a rule, the courts have not regarded this stipulation, and have decided the cases on other grounds, though in their decisions it is practically upheld. See Gray on Telegraphs, § 92, n; Thompson on Electricity, § 370.

2. Analogy to Rule in Case of Common Carriers.—See CARRIERS OF GOODS, vol. 2, p. 796; Angell on Carriers, § 264; Redman on Carriers (2d ed.), p. 52.

In Candee v. Western Union Tel. Co., 34 Wis. 471; 17 Am. Rep. 452, where a case involving a cipher message was under consideration, the court, after intimating that where the sender used no means to conceal the character of his message, he would not be bound to disclose the meaning except upon inquiry by the company, said: "But in regard to these messages in cipher, the signification and purport of which are wholly unknown to the operators, the question would still arise whether they should not be looked upon as a means of artifice adopted by the sender to conceal the nature and importance of the communication and thus have brought such messages within the operation of

In several of the states, however, a different view has been taken. In Virginia, Georgia, Florida, and Alabama, the courts have laid down the doctrine that the measure of damages recoverable by the plaintiff is not to be affected by the character of the message and the knowledge of the company as to its urgency or importance;¹ that while the company might with some reason refuse to accept a cipher dispatch for transmission without having its meaning explained, yet, after having accepted it and undertaken to transmit and deliver such dispatch, it cannot escape responsibility for its negligence by setting up its ignorance as to another principle which exempts the common carrier from responsibility. Angell on Carriers, §§ 258, 263. The principle which relieves the common carrier on the ground of concealment by the owner of the goods, in respect to the nature, amount and value of them, seems to be that which is most nearly suited to the case or transaction in hand; and as it is the one which has been thus far acted upon and applied by other courts, we feel no hesitation in adopting it." "It can safely be said that the larger part of all messages sent are of a commercial or business nature which suggests value. The requirements of friendship or pleasure can await other means of less celerity and less expense. If this be true, why should the law assume that as a rule all messages sent (by telegraph) are unimportant and that an important one is an exception, of which the operator is to be informed. . . . The common carrier charges different rates of freight for different articles, according to their bulk and value and their respective risks of transportation, and provides different methods of transportation for each. It is not shown here that the defendant company had any scale of prices which were higher or lower, as the importance of the dispatch was great or small. It cannot be said, then, that for this reason the operator should be informed of its importance, when it made no difference in the charge of transmission. It is not shown that if its importance had been disclosed to the operator, he was required by the rules of the company to send the message out of the order in which it came to the office with reference to other messages awaiting transmission; that he was to use any extra degree of skill, and a different method or agency for sending it from the time or the skill used, the agencies employed, or the compensation demanded for sending an unimportant dispatch, or that it would aid the operator in its transmission. For what reason, then, could he demand information that was in no way whatever to affect his manner of action, or impose on him any additional obligation?" Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hyer, 22 Fla. 637; 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 236; 1 Am. St. Rep. 225. In this case, the message was in cipher and in response to a previous cipher dispatch; it was transmitted, but never delivered, and in consequence, the plaintiffs had an idle chartered vessel on their hands. The court held that actual damages could be recovered. Rayney, J., dissenting, considered that the recovery should have been of nominal damages only. See also Bowen v. Lake Erie Tel. Co. (Ohio, 1853), 1 Am. L. Reg. 685; Gray on Telegraphs, § 87.

the contents or importance of the telegram.¹ The perplexing question in this connection is as to whether the company was actually informed or had any means of knowing the importance and urgency of the dispatch. Such information may be derived from the message itself, or from external evidence, or from both of these sources.²

(2) Where the Message Itself Contains the Only Evidence of Its Importance.—In such cases, if the message is in cipher, there can be no question as to the application of the rule, and the plaintiff can recover no more than nominal damages, together with the price paid for transmission.³ But where ordinary language is employed, the meaning and purport of which may or may not be understood without the aid of other information, it is a question for the jury to determine in each particular case whether or not it was sufficient to indicate to the company's agent the importance of the message; no absolute rule can be stated.⁴ By some authorities, it is considered that the message is sufficiently plain

1. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Reynolds, 77 Va. 173; 5 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 182; 46 Am. Rep. 715; Daugherty v. American Union Tel. Co., 75 Ala. 168; 5 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 211; 51 Am. Rep. 435. In the first of these cases, there was a complete failure to transmit, although the message was accepted for transmission; the case was affected by the fact that a statute of Virginia prescribed specifically the duties incumbent upon telegraph companies in transmitting messages.

2. Messages may be divided into several classes, according to the degree of intelligibility which they bear on their faces, and according to the amount and extent of the external evidence given by the sender when the message was offered for transmission. These can best be considered under the two headings following. See Gray on Telegraphs, §§ 83-93.

3. Daniel v. Western Union Tel. Co., 61 Tex. 452; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 118; 48 Am. Rep. 305; Western Union Tel. Co. v. McKinney, 5 Tex. Law. Rev. 173; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 123. In Mackey v. Western Union Tel. Co., 16 Nev. 227, the message was in cipher, though the agent admitted he thought it related to stocks, since a large proportion of the messages sent from his office to San Francisco were of that character; he admitted also that plaintiff inquired whether it would reach S. in time for the two o'clock meeting of the board of brokers. But it was considered that the agent was not informed of the importance of the message.

4. Whether or Not Message Is Intelligible.—In Pepper v. Western Union Tel. Co., 87 Tenn. 557; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 544; 10 Am. St. Rep. 699, the telegram sent to produce dealers, read: "Car cribs six sixty, c. a. f., prompt." The word "cribs" meant in the meat trade clear ribs and "c. a. f." meant cost and freight. These terms, it appeared, were well understood in the trade and by the defendant company. It was held that the importance of the message was sufficiently disclosed and that the company was liable for the damages caused from its substituting the words "six thirty" for "six sixty." See also Mowry v. Western Union Tel. Co., 51 Hun (N. Y.) 126; Martin v. Western Union Tel. Co., 1 Tex. Civ. App. 143.

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Griswold, 37 Ohio St. 303; 41 Am. Rep. 500, the plaintiff delivered this message to the company: "Will you give one fifty for twenty-five hundred at London? Answer at once as I have only till night." It related to the sale of seed. As delivered to the addressee it read "one five," instead of "one fifty." It was held that the importance of the message was sufficiently disclosed; "the company were apprised of the fact that a pecuniary loss might result from an incorrect transmission. Where this appears, there is no such obscurity as relieves the company from liability for negligently failing to transmit and if its language is such as to put the company upon inquiry.¹ Certainly the message is not required to show on its face all the minute details of the transaction of which it is a part.² Thus a message announcing the serious illness of a named person and requesting the immediate presence of the addressee, cannot be considered obscure because it does not reveal the relationship of the parties concerned.³

(3) Where the Company Has External Evidence of the Importance of the Message.—It is not essential that the message itself shall disclose its importance and the necessity for prompt and deliver the message in the language in which it was received." Compare King-horne v. Montreal Tel. Co., 18 U. C. Q. B. 60; Landsberger v. Magnetic Tel. Co., 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 530.

In U. S. Tel. Co. v. Wenger, 55 Pa. St. 262; 93 Am. Dec. 751, the message was: "Buy fifty (50) North Western, fifty (50) Prairie du Chien, limit forty-five (45)." There was a delay in delivery, causing a loss to the sender on account of the advance in price of the stocks ordered to be purchased. The court held that the sender might recover such loss; "the dispatch was such as to disclose the nature of the business to which it related, and that a loss might be very likely to occur if there was a want of promptitude in transmitting the order." So in Tyler v. Western Union Tel. Co., 60 Ill. 421; 14 Am. Rep. 38; 74 Ill. 168; 24 Am. Rep. 279, the message read: "Sell one hundred Western Union;" by the company's negligence it was made to read: "Sell one thousand," etc. It was intended as an order to sell one thousand shares of stock in the Western Union. The agent, obeying the order as delivered to him, sold one thousand, and to fill the order was obliged to buy nine hundred shares more than was intended. The court held that the plaintiff could recover the difference between the price for which the nine hundred extra shares were sold and that which he was compelled to pay for those purchased. Compare U. S. Tel. Co. v. Gildersleeve, 29 Md. 232; 96 Am. Dec. 519 ("sell fifty gold" considered unintelligible).

In Marr v. Western Union Tel. Co., 85 Tenn. 530; 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 243, a dispatch: "Buy one hundred shares Memphis and Charleston" was made to read: "Buy one thousand," etc. It was held that the language was clear and the company was liable for the loss occasioned. Also, in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Blanchard, 68 Ga. 299; 45 Am. Rep. 480, a telegram "Cover two hundred September, one hundred August," was so changed as to read "two hundred August." The terms were well understood in the cotton trade, and the court held that it was not such an obscure message as to authorize the recovery of nothing more than nominal damages. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lowrey, 32 Neb. 732. See also Squire v. Western Union Tel. Co., 98 Mass. 232; 93 Am. Dec. 157; 3 Suth. on Dam. 301; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Sheffield, 71 Tex. 570; 10 Am. 1. Thompson on Electricity, § 365, citing Lodge v. Simonton, 2 Pen. & W. (Pa.) 439; 23 Am. Dec. 36, 47, note. A message, "G. is dead. Answer," sufficiently suggests its importance and puts the company on inquiry; and notice of the relationship of the deceased to addressee is unnecessary. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Carter (Tex. 1892), 20 S. W. Rep. 834.

2. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Loonie, 82 Tex. 323; Pepper v. Western Union Tel. Co., 87 Tenn. 554; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 542; 10 Am. St. Rep. 699.

Cas. 594; 16 Am. St. Rep. 920. Compare Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kirkpatrick, 76 Tex. 217; 18 Am. St. Rep. 37.

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Broesche, 72 Tex. 654; 13 Am. St. Rep. 843, a message was sent announcing to a relative the bringing of a corpse. There was evidence tending to show that the telegraph operator knew that correct transmission; if the company is informed of these facts by any other means, it becomes charged with notice of the loss that is likely to follow from a negligent transmission or delivery, and is responsible for such loss if it occurs.¹ Whether the circumstances in any particular case warrant a finding that the company was so informed, must be determined by the jury from the evidence, unless the case is so plain as to justify the court in holding as matter of law that the information was sufficient.²

unless the message was sent promptly it would be too late. The court charged that the plaintiff could recover only for the direct and natural result of the failure to send the message. It was held that an instruction to the effect that plaintiff could not recover for a failure to accomplish anything not shown on the face of the message, unless defendant had knowledge of plaintiff's purpose, was properly refused.

1. Sprague v. Western Union Tel. Co., 6 Daly (N. Y.) 200; Rittenhouse v. Independent, etc., Tel. Co., 44 N. Y. 263; 4 Am. Rep. 673; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Edsall, 74 Tex. 329; 15 Am. St. Rep. 835; Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Lathrop, 131 Ill. 575; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 600; 19 Am. St. Rep. 55. Thus an instruction that "if the agent knew of the importance of the prompt delivery of the message or could have discovered it from the terms of the telegram or from other telegrams in relation to the same matter," the defendant company would be chargeable with such knowledge, is a correct statement of the law. Erie Tel., etc., Co. v. Grimes, 82 Tex. 39. Compare Pope v. Western Union Tel. Co., 14 Ill. App. 531; Baldwin v. U. S. Tel. Co., 45 N. Y. 744; 6 Am. Rep. 165, reversing 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 505; 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 125. See Thompson on Electricity, § 364.

2. See generally NEGLIGENCE, vol. 16, p. 463; QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT, vol. 19, pp. 646, 656. In Cannon v. Western Union Tel. Co., 100 N. Car. 300; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 124; 6 Am. St. Rep. 590, a telegram was sent reading "if market is firm and advancing Narrator," followed by another several hours later containing the single word "Narrator." They were sent by a cotton merchant to his broker, and on delivering the first one he told the operator he wished it to be delivered "before the cotton market opens." The delivery of the first message was delayed so that it did not reach the ad-ressee until after the second one. In an action for the loss sustained it was held that the company could not be charged with notice of the importance of the message and that nominal damages only were recoverable, it appearing that the delay was short and that no gross negligence was shown.

In Candee v. Western Union Tel. Co., 34 Wis. 471; 17 Am. Rep. 452, the message ordering the purchase of certain stock was wholly in cipher, but the plaintiff testified that the operator to whom he handed it and the other persons engaged in the office at the time, knew "that it pertained to stock," because they knew that to be his business, and also testified that he informed the office boy that it required attention and promptness in the sending, and left under the belief that his request would be complied with. Held, that the facts, however they might tend to show negligence in the operator or other employé, did not show such a communication of the meaning and character of the message that the operator could reasonably be supposed to have contemplated a rise in the value of the stock named, by which the plaintiff would become a loser, as one of the probable or possible results of a failure to promptly transmit the message.

So in Landsberger v. Magnetic Tel. Co., 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 530, it was held that the message, "Get ten thousand dollars of the Mail Company," was too obscure to charge the telegraph company with more than special damages. Since it did not indicate that the money was needed to save a valuable contract for stock, damages caused by loss of the contract were not recoverable. Measure of damages in such a case would be merely the lawful interest on the money which should have been obtained. On the other hand, it is said that the negligent transmission of a message, "Buy in addition to 1,000 August, 1,000 cheapest month,"

c. LOSS OF EXPECTED PROFITS IN TRANSACTIONS OF SALE.¹—Where the negligence of the company in transmitting or delivering a message prevents a sale by the plaintiff, which would otherwise have been consummated, the measure of damages in an action against the company is the difference between the market value of the goods or other property to be sold, and the price which the plaintiff would have secured had the sale taken place,² together with expenses necessarily incurred;³ in other words, the plaintiff may recover the profits he would have reaped from the bargain had it been perfected.⁴ So where the plaintiff directs his agent to sell certain property and the message is delayed and the price of such property falls meanwhile, the company is responsible for the difference between the price actually secured and that which would have been secured had there been no delay in delivering the message.⁵ The company is also liable for the decrease in and "Put stop order on 5,000 Dec. at 17 cents," will authorize the recovery of substantial damages where it appears in evidence that from previous messages relating to similar transactions by the same party, the company might, with reasonable diligence, have understood the message. Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Lathrop, 131 Ill. 575; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 600; 19 Am. St. Rep. 55.

Property in Telegraph Ciphers.—See in this connection, Reuter's Tel. Co. v. Byron, 43 L. J. Ch. 661, where a "telegram company" in London made an arrangement with defendants, two individuals in Australia, for the transmission of messages in which certain words were used as a short expression of the names and addresses of the principal customers; and defendants were described as agents of the "telegram" company. Afterwards, the parties quarreled, and one of the defendants came to England to carry on an independent telegram business with his partner in Australia, and sent circulars to the customers of the telegram company, mentioning that he had their ciphers. In a suit to restrain him from using the ciphers, it was held that there was nothing confidential in the ciphers and that he was entitled to use them.

1. As to the general right to recover loss of profits, see Masterton v. Brooklyn, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 61; 42 Am. Dec. 38; Fox v. Harding, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 516; Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Howard, 13 How. (U. S.) 307; Wilson v. Lancaster, etc., R. Co., 9 C. B. N. S. 632; 99 E. C. L. 632.

2. Consummation of Sale Prevented—Plaintiff Being Vendor.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. James, 90 Ga. 254; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lindley, 89 Ga. 484; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Brown, 84 Tex. 54. Compare Kinghorne v. Montreal Tel. Co., 18 U. C. Q. B. 60 (quantity of goods to be sold uncertain—no recovery).

In Manville v. Western Union Tel. Co., 37 Iowa 214; 18 Am. Rep. 8, the message to plaintiff, "Ship your hogs at once," was delayed four days; in consequence, plaintiff had to keep his hogs four days longer than he would have done, thus incurring expense for feeding, etc., and had to sell at a decreased price. It was held that he might recover the difference, at the place of delivery, between the market value of the hogs on the day when they would have been delivered, had the message been delivered promptly, and the market value on the day when plaintiff was able to deliver them after the receipt of the message. The reason and importance of the message were "evident on its face. It clearly imported that to meet a good market the hogs must be shipped at once, and that by delay a good market would be lost."

price obtained at a sale, occasioned by the erroneous transmission of a message announcing prices.¹ For similar reasons, where the company fails to deliver a message ordering the purchase of certain goods, it is responsible to the plaintiff for the increase in price which he is compelled to pay for such goods;² but not for profits

Corp. Cas. 203; 51 Am. Rep. 435; Hadley v. Western Union Tel. Co., 115 Ind. 191; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 72; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Stevens (Tex. 1891), 16 S. W. Rep. 1095; Compare Cahn v. Western Union Tel. Co., 48 Fed. Rep. 810; 39 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 552, aff'd 46 Fed. Rep. 40.

Where plaintiff had contracted to sell certain live stock, and, owing to his failure to receive a message promptly, the other party to the contract had rescinded it, it was held that the measure of damages was not the difference between the contract price and the price at which the stock could have been sold if the message had been delivered promptly, but such difference less the expense of transportation. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Brown, 84 Tex. 54.

1. Message Announcing Prices.—Peper v. Western Union Tel. Co., 87 Tenn. 554; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 542; 10 Am. St. Rep. 699; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Dubois, 128 Ill. 248; 15 Am. St. Rep. 109.

A telegraph company failing to deliver a message to a shipper of live stock as to the state of the market, the result being that the shipper sends his stock to another market and gets less than he might have got had he received the message, is liable for the difference between the market price at the two places with the difference in freight added. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Collins, 45 Kan. 88; Garrett v. Western Union Tel. Co., 83 Iowa 257; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Stevens (Tex. 1891), 16 S. W. Rep. 1095; Turner v. Hawkeye Tel. Co., 41 Iowa 458; 20 Am. Rep. 605.

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Landis (Pa. 1888), 12 Atl. Rep. 467; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 206, plaintiff's agent wired him that he (the agent) had two car-loads of sheep at five dollars and sixty cents per hundred; the company erroneously transmitted it so as to read five dollars and "six" cents. Plaintiff sold the sheep before arrival, at six dollars per hundred. It was held that plaintiff might recover the difference between the amount for which the sheep were sold and their actual value, although the price obtained was greater than the cost. The message, having enough on its face to show that it related to the price of goods shipped to the addressee, was sufficiently plain to put the company on its guard against errors in transmission.

A wrote to B, asking what price the latter would pay for turkeys, and received in reply a telegram, "thirty-three cents for good, young turkeys," but the message as written by B was "twenty-two cents," etc. A shipped turkeys to B, but B refused to pay more than twenty-two cents for them. A having paid twenty-five cents a pound for them and incurred an expense amounting to one cent per pound, it was held that he was entitled to recover of the company an amount equal to four cents per pound for all the turkeys shipped to B. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Richman (Pa. 1887), 8 Atl. Rep. 171; 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 263.

But where the party sending the message was under no obligation to keep the plaintiff informed of prices, and it appears that plaintiff did not rely on him for such information, plaintiff cannot recover for the decrease in price obtained for his cotton in consequence of the erroneous transmission of a message announcing prices. Frazer v. Western Union Tel. Co., 84 Ala. 497.

Consult, in this connection, infra, this title, Contracts by Telegraph—Telegraph Company Ordinarily Agent of Sender; Pegram v. Western Union Tel. Co., 100 N. Car. 28; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 150; 6 Am. St. Rep. 557.

2. Message Offering to Purchase—Plaintiff a Purchaser.—The measure of damages is the difference between the price offered and that which plaintiff was obliged to pay at the same place in order, by due diligence, after knowing of the company's failure, to purchase a like quality and quantity of goods. True v. International Tel. Co., 60 Me. 9; 11 Am. Rep. 156; Squire v. Western Union Tel. Co., 98 Mass. 232; 93 Am. Dec. 157; U. S. Tel. Co. v. Wenger, 55 Pa. St. 262; 93 Am. Dec. 751; Turner v. Hawkeye Tel. Co., 41 which he might have made or expected from a resale.¹ The same is true where there has been a mere delay in delivery.² And where there is an erroneous transmission of such a message, the measure of damages recoverable is the increase in the loss sustained by the plaintiff above that which he would have sustained had the error not occurred.³ The plaintiff must be able,

Iowa 458; 20 Am. Rep. 605; Mowry v. Western Union Tel. Co., 51 Hun (N. Y.) 126; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Loonie, 82 Tex. 323; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Graham, 1 Colo. 230; 9 Am. Rep. 136 (may recover money paid for transmission, any advance in freight, and any expense incurred, but not contingent or anticipated profits); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Way, 83 Ala. 542; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Harris, 19 Ill. App. 347.

Thus in Alexander v. Western Union Tel. Co., 67 Miss. 386, through the negligence of the company in failing to deliver a message, the plaintiff, A, lost the opportunity to buy for three thousand dollars, land worth five thousand, and which he had instructed his agent to purchase for him. The court held that he could recover the difference, such damages not being remote or conjectural. It appeared also in this case, that another person had also sent a message instructing the same agent to buy the same property for him. If both messages had been transmitted without delay, the latter message would have reached the agent first and A would have lost the opportunity to secure the property. It was held that this afforded no defense to the company.

Where the telegram which the company fails to send contains an acceptance of an offer to buy from plaintiff certain cotton, and also to purchase for his account certain contracts for future delivery, losses which would have been sustained on the latter purchases must be deducted from the amount of the damage from the loss of the contract to sell; nor can plaintiff extend from month to month on a falling market his contract of sale, and recover the loss from the company; he must make an effort to sell. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Way, 83 Ala. 542.

In Washington, etc., Tel. Co. v. Hobson, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 122, an order sent by telegraph from plaintiff to his factors to purchase five thousand bales of cotton was made, through an erroneous transmission, to read "twenty-five thousand bales." Immediately on discovering the mistake, the telegraph company notified the factors. It was held that it was the duty of the plaintiffs, on ascertaining the mistake, to notify the company that it would be held responsible.

1. Expected Profits from a Resale Not Recoverable.—Such profits are entirely too contingent and conjectural to come within the recognition of the law. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Graham, 1 Colo. 230; 9 Am. Rep. 136; Hubbard v. Western Union Tel. Co., 33 Wis. 558; 14 Am. Rep. 775; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hall, 124 U. S. 444; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 211; Squire v. Western Union Tel. Co., 98 Mass. 232; 93 Am. Dec. 157.

2. Where There Is a Delay Merely.—The measure of damages for a failure to properly deliver a message containing on its face an instruction to buy certain stock, which in consequence was not bought until twenty-four hours later, is the difference between the market value of the stock when the message should have been received and that when it was actually received. Pearsall v. Western Union Tel. Co., 124 N. Y. 256; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 31; 21 Am. St. Rep. 662, aff'd 44 Hun (N. Y.) 532.

3. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Blanchard, 68 Ga. 299; 45 Am. Rep. 480; U. S. Tel. Co. v. Wenger, 55 Pa. St. 262; 93 Am. Dec. 751.

In Rittenhouse v. Independent Line of Tel., 44 N. Y. 263; 4 Am. Rep. 673, the plaintiff sent a message instructing his broker to "buy five Hudson," which the company erroneously transmitted so as to read "buy five hundred." Learning of the error, the plaintiff immediately telegraphed to his broker, but owing to the delay, plaintiff lost, by the advance in the price of the stock ordered, thirteen hundred dollars. It was held that he was entitled to recover this sum. Likewise in the case of Marr v. Western Union Tel. Co., 85 Tenn. 529; 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 243, the plaintiff ordered by wire the purchase of one thousand shares of stock, but the message as transmitted however, to show an actual loss; the courts will not presume that a loss has occurred merely from the fact of the negligence of the company.¹

Other instances of liability for mistake or delay in transmitting messages concerning contemplated sales are found in the reported cases. Thus, where the company erroneously transmits an order for goods so that more goods are sent than the original order called for, it is responsible to the party suffering a loss thereby,² though in such cases the injured party is bound to use reasonable diligence in order to render the injury as light as possible.³ So where the negligence of the company in transmitting such an order causes the goods to be sent to the wrong place, it is liable to the party injured, and the measure of damages is the difference be-called for only one hundred shares. He knew of the error the day after the one hundred shares had been purchased, but did not renew his order until several days afterwards, the stock having meanwhile advanced in price. It was held that he could recover for the advance in the price of nine hundred shares up to the time he became aware of the mistake, but not for the advance occurring after that. See also Turner v. Hawkeye Tel. Co., 41 Iowa 458; 20 Am. Rep. 605.

1. Plaintiff Must Prove Loss.—Pennington v. Western Union Tel. Co., 67 Iowa 631; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 115; 56 Am. Rep. 367.

The sender cannot recover of the company for the alleged loss of a bargain caused by its negligence in failing to transmit a message ordering goods, if there is no evidence that the goods could or would have been shipped if the message had been promptly sent. Meggett v. Western Union Tel. Co., 69 Miss. 198. See also Levy v. Western Union Tel. Co., 35 Mo. App. 170:

2. Where Negligent Transmission Causes Excess of Goods to be Sent to Purchaser.—The measure of plaintiff's recovery in such a case is the difference between the market values of the excess at the place of shipment and that at the place to which they were sent, together with the expense of transportation. Leonard v. New York, etc., Tel. Co., 41 N. Y. 544; 1 Am. Rep. 446. See also Washington, etc., Tel. Co. v. Hobson, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 122.

In Bowen v. Lake Erie Tel. Co. (Ohio, 1853), 1 Am. L. Reg. 685, the original message ordered one shawl, but as delivered it ordered one hundred. They were shipped back to their starting point, the vendee refusing to receive them. The measure of damages recoverable by the shipper was held to be the freight on the shawls both ways, together with the depreciation in price during their absence.

In a similar case, the message ordered "one hand bouquet" and the company made it read "one hundred bouquets," mistaking the word "hand" for "hund." The bouquets were accordingly prepared, but were refused. The florist who had the perishable property on his hands was allowed to recover the expense of making up the bouquets as well as the price paid for the flowers of which they were composed. New York, etc., Print. Tel. Co. v. Dryburgh, 35 Pa. St. 298; 78 Am. Dec. 338.

In the case of Elsey v. Postal Tel. Co. (C. Pl.), 3 N. Y. Supp. 117, a party, wishing to order oysters from "P. Ellsworth," and being unable to recall the name exactly, sent a message addressed to "P. Elsey." The message, when received at the office of its destination, read "H. Elsey." The operator, finding no H. Elsey in the city directory, delivered the message to John Elsey, who forwarded the oysters. The sender, however, refused to receive them on the ground that his order was not intended for John Elsey, and the oysters, being spoiled, were lost. It was held that the telegraph company was liable for the value of the oysters and the cost of transportation.

3. See supra, this title, Contributory Negligence; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Way, 83 Ala. 542.

But in such cases, the party is not bound to transport the goods to a more favorable place of sale. Leonard v. New York, etc., Tel. Co., 41 N. Y. 544; 1 Am. Rep. 446.

tween the price which would have been obtained, had the goods gone to the proper place, and the market value or best price which the party could obtain at the place to which they were actually sent.¹ But there can be no recovery for a loss of profits which were purely speculative and contingent, particularly where the transaction bears a taint of gambling. The bargain prevented must have been free from such a taint,² and the profits anticipated therefrom must have been certain and not conjectural.³ Nor can there be a recovery of any damages which fail to come within the rule that they must be such as were in contemplation of the parties at the time the contract of sending was made.⁴

f. LOSS OF EXPECTED EMPLOYMENT OR OF PROFESSIONAL FEES.—Where the negligence of the telegraph company in failing to promptly deliver a message, causes the complainant to lose a situation or employment, he is entitled to recover of the

1. Goods Sent to Wrong Place.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Reid, 83 Ga. 401; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Stevens (Tex. 1891), 16 S. W. Rep. 1095.

2. Bargain Prevented Must not Have Been Immoral or Purely Speculative.—See supra, this title, Immoral Messages—Gambling Transactions; Cannon v. Western Union Tel. Co., 100 N. Car. 300; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 124; 6 Am. St. Rep. 590; Kiley v. Western Union Tel. Co., 39 Hun (N. Y.) 158; Reliance Lumber Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 57 Tex. 395; 44 Am. Rep. 620.

Thus when the message ordered the sale of two hundred shares of the stock of a certain company, and the telegraph company failed to deliver it to the vendors for several days after it should have been delivered, and the plaintiff did not in fact own any stock in said company, and no transaction was made, he is not entitled to recover the difference between the market value of said stock on the day when the telegram should have been delivered and the day when it was actually delivered. Cahn v. Western Union Tel. Co., 46 Fed. Rep. 40; aff'd 48 Fed. Rep. 810; 39 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 522.

3. Loss of Opportunity to make a Lucrative Speculation.—In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hall, 124 U. S. 444; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 211, it appeared that the plaintiff sent a message by the telegraph company to an agent instructing him to buy on his (plaintiff's) behalf ten thousand barrels of petroleum. Petroleum was selling on the exchange at $1.17 per barrel at the time when the addressee ought to have received the message, and the evidence showed that the agent would have bought at that figure. But the telegram having been delayed through the negligence of the defendant company and the price having advanced to $1.35 per barrel at the time of receipt of the message, the agent did not buy. The plaintiff brought action to recover the difference in the prices of the oil, claiming that but for the defendant's negligence he would have made that sum. The court held that he could not recover anything more than the price of transmission. The damages were purely speculative; had the oil been purchased in time plaintiff might possibly have resold next day at the same price or might have held it until the price had decreased. The court recognized that the case is different where the message is erroneously transmitted, and the plaintiff, acting on the faith of it, incurs expense and trouble. See also Smith v. Western Union Tel. Co., 83 Ky. 104; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 15; 4 Am. St. Rep. 126.

4. Damages Must Have Been in Contemplation of Parties.—In Beaupré v. Pacific, etc., Tel. Co., 21 Minn. 155, the plaintiffs, merchants in S, wrote to R, a wholesale dealer in pork, asking whether he had a certain kind of pork, and the price of it. R replied by wire, acknowledging the receipt of letter and saying he had a certain grade of pork. On receiving this dispatch, the plaintiffs, on July 15th, delivered to the defendant company at S, about six o'clock p. m., the following message addressed to R, with a request to forward it without delay: "Dispatch received. Will take two hundred extra mess, price named." The transmission of the message was delayed, and the price company the actual damage sustained by him in consequence of the loss. The exact amount of the recovery will of course depend upon the circumstances involved, the character of the employment, etc.¹ The recovery will be limited to such damages as have accrued before the institution of the action.² The same right of recovery exists where a contractor loses, through the negligence of the company, the opportunity to secure a valuable contract.³ And where a professional man, through the negligence of the company, loses a fee, which he would otherwise have secured, by being deprived of the opportunity of attending a patient or client in a professional capacity, he may recover the actual damages sustained.⁴ But the general rule already stated applies here as well as in other cases, of pork advanced; plaintiffs bought at an advanced price. It was held that they could not recover for such loss.

1. Loss of Situation.—In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Valentine, 18 Ill. App. 57, through the negligence of the company, the plaintiff failed to obtain a salaried position. It was held that he could recover the difference between the amount of such salary and the amount actually earned by him. Owing to the company's failure to deliver a message, the plaintiff claimed that he was thrown out of employment in which he could have made two dollars per day. The court properly granted an instruction that plaintiff's damages would be two dollars per day from date of sending the message to the institution of the suit, excluding Sundays, and deducting such amount as he had earned or might have earned by reasonable diligence in seeking other work. Western Union Tel. Co. v. McKibben, 114 Ind. 511; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 133. (The action was under the statute providing for the recovery of special damages, Rev. Stat. Indiana, § 4177.)

Y.) 542. Compare Merrill v. Western Union Tel. Co., 78 Me. 97 (nominal damages only allowed where plaintiff lost opportunity to work by the day for an uncertain period).

3. Plaintiffs were threshers and their agent at V. wired them, "Have 30,000 bushels for you, if you can come at once." Plaintiffs answered, "Will ship machinery at once." This latter message was not delivered and the parties for whom the threshing was to be done, not knowing that the offer was accepted, employed other contractors. It was held that the company was liable, although there was no delay in getting the machinery to V.; that complainant, being able to show the amount of grain to be threshed and the rate of toll per bushel contracted for, the damages claimed could not be considered contingent, uncertain, or speculative. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Bowen, 84 Tex. 476.

The company's agent by whom the first message in the above case was received and to whom the second was delivered for transmission, testified that she knew at the time that plaintiffs owned and operated a threshing machine. The company were therefore precluded from complaining that the damages resulting from the loss of the contracts were not in contemplation of the parties when the contract of sending was made. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Bowen, 84 Tex. 476.

4. Loss of Fees.—In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Longwill (N. Mex. 1889), 21 Pac. Rep. 339; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 565, the plaintiff, a physician, was telegraphed for to attend to a gunshot wound; the message was delivered too late to enable him to respond to the call. There was evidence to show that a reasonable fee for the operation to be performed was five hundred dollars; the parties sending were shown to be solvent. It was held that the case came within the rule of Griffin v. Col- and if it appears that the company had no information, from the face of the message or otherwise, of the consequences which would follow an incorrect transmission or a delayed delivery, only nominal damages are recoverable.¹

g. LOSSES WHICH MIGHT HAVE BEEN PREVENTED BUT FOR THE NEGLIGENCE OF THE COMPANY.—The rule of damages includes not only "gains prevented," but also "losses sustained." Wherever a party sustains a loss which he could and would have prevented but for the negligence of the company, he is entitled to hold the company responsible for it.² But in all such cases he must be able to show that the loss would have been prevented;³ therefore, where the action is for a failure to deliver a message summoning a physician to see plaintiff's wife, the plaintiff cannot recover for a loss of his wife's services, there being no evidence to show that the arrival of the physician would have saved her life.⁴ Where a party telegraphs to his attorney to attach the property of a certain debtor, and through the company's negligence in delaying the message, the property is attached by other creditors and the debt is thereby lost, the company can be held responsible for the amount of the debt together with interest thereon to the date of the trial of the action.⁵ So where the company's agent, in order to secure himself and others, will-ver, 16 N. Y. 489; 69 Am. Dec. 718, allowing damages for "gains prevented;" that the plaintiff should recover five hundred dollars, less the amount he made at home during the time he would have been away.

A cable message for a ship broker in Savannah was delayed one hour and a half after reaching that city, when it should have been delivered in five minutes. Because of the delay the broker lost a commission of $500. Held, that the company was liable therefor. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Fatman, 73 Ga. 285; 54 Am. Rep. 877.

1. In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Clifton, 68 Miss. 307, a party in W. telegraphed to his attorney to meet him at that place to arrange an assignment. The attorney replied by wire that he would come immediately, but the agent failed to deliver this latter message and the party secured a local attorney, so that when plaintiff arrived his services were not needed. The only information the company had of the circumstances was from the message, which read: "Send Eckford on first train. Am here. Answer," and the reply to the effect that he (Eckford) would come at once. It was held that no more than nominal damages were recoverable. See Clay v. Western Un- ion Tel. Co., 81 Ga. 285 (message asking undertaker to meet remains at a train, not delivered, whereby undertaker lost the fees). See also Vicksburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Ragsdale, 46 Miss. 458.

fully withholds a message to a branch bank, announcing the assignment of its principal, until some time after the bank has opened, the company is liable for all money paid out by the bank between the time when the message should have been delivered and the time when it was actually delivered.¹ And if the company, by an erroneous transmission, cause a party to undergo useless expense and trouble, it is liable therefor.²

h. RECOVERY FOR MENTAL ANGUISH.—Until a recent date it has been a recognized rule of law that mental anguish and suffering, alone and unaccompanied by actual pecuniary damage or personal injury, could not afford a ground for the maintenance of an action, or be considered as an element of damages, even though the negligence or wrongful act of the defendant were established.³ Isolated exceptions to this rule were allowed in case of breach of promise suits and in cases where the injury was willful or malicious.⁴ But the courts of Texas, following the suggestion made

1. Stiles v. Western Union Tel. Co. (Arizona, 1887), 15 Pac. Rep. 712. In this case a banker made an assignment, and the assignee telegraphed notice thereof to a branch establishment. In the assignee's suit against the telegraph company to recover for damages caused by delay in sending this message, it appeared that it was received at the office in the town of the branch establishment after nine at night and delivered an hour later than it should have been the next morning, and that money was paid out which, had the message been received, should have been withheld. It was held that the company was liable for money thus lost, but not for money paid out after the delivery of the message.

2. In Wolfskehl v. Western Union Tel. Co., 46 Hun (N. Y.) 542, a party who was applying for a certain situation, having received a message in which the word "not" had been negligently omitted, was induced to believe that the sender desired to employ him and so incurred much expense, loss of time, etc., in further efforts to secure the situation. It was held that he could recover compensation for such loss, in an action against the company.

3. General Rule as to Damages for Mental Suffering.—Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Stables, 62 Ill. 313; Wyman v. Leavitt, 71 Me. 227; 36 Am. Rep. 303; Bovee v. Danville, 53 Vt. 190; DAMAGES, vol. 5, p. 42; Lynch v. Knight, 9 H. L. Cas. 577.

In an action for damages for the death of a relative, damages are invariably restricted to pecuniary loss; the consideration of the plaintiff's mental suffering is excluded in every instance, with a few exceptions, which depend upon the peculiar language of the statute. See DAMAGES, vol. 5, p. 45; DEATH, vol. 5, p. 128; RAILROADS, vol. 19, p. 942.

4. An exception to the general rule was made in cases of actions of breach of promise. But while the damages are denominated compensatory, it may well be questioned whether they are not rather punitive. The fact that evidence of the defendant's wealth is admissible and that defendant may give in evidence the motive from which he refused to consummate the contract, shows how shadowy is the line which separates such damages from those which are purely punitive. See Western Union Tel. Co. v. Rogers, 68 Miss. 748; 24 Am. St. Rep. 300; Harrison v. Swift, 13 Allen (Mass.) 144; Kurtz v. Frank, 76 Ind. 594; 40 Am. Rep. 275; Thorn v. Knapp, 42 N. Y. 474; 1 Am. Rep. 561; Johnson v. Jenkins, 24 N. Y. 252.

Another exception is said to be made in cases of slander or libel; but in such cases, malice and willful wrong are essential elements, and the ordinary rules of damages for negligent injury do not apply to cases of willful wrong. Moreover, special damage must always be shown except where, from the nature and character of the libel, the law conclusively presumes actual damage. See LIBEL AND SLANDER, vol. 13, p. 445; NEGLIGENCE, vol. 16, pp. 393, 435; Chapman v. Western Union Tel. Co., by a leading text writer,¹ have adopted and steadily adhered to a rule by which a party who has undergone mental suffering in consequence of the negligence of a telegraph company, may recover compensatory damages, although he has sustained no other injury.² And this rule has been followed to a greater or less extent

88 Ga. 763; 39 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 567.

1. In Shear. & Red. on Neg. (4th ed.), § 605, it is said that "in case of delay or total failure of delivery of messages relating to matters not connected with business, such as personal or domestic matters, we do not think the company in fault ought to escape with mere nominal damages, on account of the want of strict commercial value in such messages. Delay in the announcement of a death, an arrival, the straying or recovery of a child, and the like, may often be productive of an injury to the feelings which cannot be easily estimated in money, but for which a jury should be at liberty to award fair damages." This passage has no authority to sustain it, but it has been quoted in almost every case upholding a similar rule. The cases of Phillips v. Hoyle, 4 Gray (Mass.) 568, and Roberts v. Graham, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 578, were also relied on.

2. Rule Adopted in Texas.—So Relle v. Western Union Tel. Co., 55 Tex. 308; 40 Am. Rep. 805; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Levy, 59 Tex. 563; 12 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 90; 46 Am. Rep. 278; Stuart v. Western Union Tel. Co., 66 Tex. 580; 13 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 590; 59 Am. Rep. 623; Loper v. Western Union Tel. Co., 70 Tex. 689; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 191; 6 Am. St. Rep. 864; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cooper, 71 Tex. 507; 10 Am. St. Rep. 772; aff'd 20 S. W. Rep. 47; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Broesche, 72 Tex. 654; 15 Am. (interment of plaintiff's relative delayed twenty-four hours through delay in delivering message).

"The law will not permit anyone to impose with impunity upon another, by his willful default or neglect, such injury to his feelings as is the natural result from the disappointment shown by the allegations of the appellant's petition, and then protect himself under the plea damnum absque injuria. Injury to the feelings, resulting from such disappointment, in our opinion, constitutes general damages, recoverable under a general averment of damage." So Relle v. Western Union Tel. Co., 55 Tex. 308; 40 Am. Rep. 805.

In Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Levy, 59 Tex. 563; 12 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 90; 46 Am. Rep. 278, this telegram was sent to the plaintiff by his son: "Betty and baby dead. Come to Cleburn to-night train to my help. Wade meet you. Tell her mother." The company negligently failed to deliver it for more than a whole day, so that it was received too late, and the complainant was subjected to much annoyance and mental suffering. The complainant's right to recover was denied, and the opinion of the court constitutes a vigorous argument in favor of the old rule of law that mental suffering could not be considered except when accompanied with physical injury or actual damage. The Relle case was overruled, the court saying, "The opinion in that case does seem to maintain the proposition necessary to sustain this action, but we are of the opinion that it cannot be sustained upon principle nor upon the authority of the adjudicated cases." The doctrine of this Levy case, however, is repudiated in a subsequent case. Stuart v. Western Union Tel. Co., 66 Tex. 580; 13 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 590; 59 Am. Rep. 623, though the case is not overruled outright, but merely "explained" and "distinguished," principally on the ground that in the Levy case the action was by the addressee. "In that case the company had no contract with Levy; had broken no engagement with him, nor violated any contract it had made with in several other states.¹ The messages involved in the cases sustaining this rule, are almost invariably those announcing the serious illness, or the death of a relative, or some similar circumstance,² and the courts proceed on the ground that since the any one else for his benefit. It owed him no duty and violated no right of his, and though its conduct may have outraged his sensibilities, it had done him no wrong." Stuart v. Western Union Tel. Co., 66 Tex. 580; 13 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 590; 59 Am. Rep. 623. But in the Stuart case, the action was by the addressee, and it seems that the two cases are entirely irreconcilable, notwithstanding the explanations of the learned court; the Levy case must therefore be regarded as overruled, and the original doctrine of the So Relle case established. There is a second case having the style of Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Levy, 59 Tex. 542; 12 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 96; 46 Am. Rep. 278, in which the action was by the sender, the son of the addressee who was plaintiff in the first case. Recovery was allowed in this second case and the two are thus apt to be confused.

In Loper v. Western Union Tel. Co., 70 Tex. 689; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 191; 6 Am. St. Rep. 864, the plaintiff, suing in behalf of his wife, proved that her son, being dangerously ill, sent her a message: "Come immediately. I am very sick," and caused the agent to be informed of his relationship to the addressee. The message was negligently delayed for more than twenty-four hours after it should have been delivered. Plaintiff's wife immediately on receiving the message started to her son, but on reaching an intermediate station was informed of his death and that his body had been sent to E. for burial. She attempted to go to E., but was subjected to hardships on the way and arrived there after the funeral. The court held that plaintiff had a right to damages, and the fact that much of the mental anguish of the wife could have been averted but for the negligence of the railroad company in operating its trains, was no excuse for the breach of duty on the part of the telegraph company.

1. In Kentucky, Tennessee, Indiana and Alabama.—In Kentucky, Tennessee and Indiana, the Texas rule seems to have been adopted to its fullest extent. Chapman v. Western Union Tel. Co., 90 Ky. 265; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 626; Wadsworth v. Western Union

Tel. Co., 86 Tenn. 695; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 161; 6 Am. St. Rep. 864; Reese v. Western Union Tel. Co., 123 Ind. 294; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Stratemeier (Ind. App. 1892), 32 N. E. Rep. 871.

"If in matters of mere trade it (the company) negligently fails to do its duty, it is responsible for all the natural and proximate damage. Is it to be said or held that as to matters of a greater interest to a person, it shall not be, because feelings or affections only are involved? . . . Such a rule, at first blush, merits disapproval. It would sanction the company in wrong doing. . . . It seems to us that both reason and public policy require that it should answer for all injury resulting from its negligence, whether it be to the feelings or the purse, subject only to the rule that it should be the direct and proximate consequence of the act. The injury to the feelings should be regarded as a part of the actual damage, and the jury be allowed to consider it." Chapman v. Western Union Tel. Co., 90 Ky. 265; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 626.

In Alabama, the question has never been considered at length, but in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Henderson, 89 Ala. 510; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 615; 18 Am. St. Rep. 148, it was ruled that damages for mental suffering might be recovered, provided the complainant had an independent right of action. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Wilson, 93 Ala. 32.

In Illinois, the doctrine is laid down that "nominal damages at least," are recoverable in such cases, but it is nowhere intimated that mental suffering can alone constitute the basis of an action for substantial damages. Logan v. Western Union Tel. Co., 84 Ill. 468. The message in this case was by a father, the plaintiff, to his son, summoning him to the death bed of his mother.

2. Character of Cases in which Such Damages are Allowed.—As a matter of fact, every breach of contract for transmission, occasions some degree of mental suffering in the way of annoyance to the disappointed party; but the recovery of such damages has been restricted to cases where the message related to the death, burial or serious illness of a relative, or to some similar circumstance. Thus in Beasley v. Western Union Tel. Co., 39 Fed. Rep. 181, the message was: "Dell is worse, come at once." Owing to the company's negligence, the dispatch was delayed and the addressee was prevented from being at the bedside of his dying wife. In Stuart v. Western Union Tel. Co., 66 Tex. 580; 13 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 590; 59 Am. Rep. 623, the message was: "John is very low, come on first train." It was delayed two days and the addressee was deprived of the privilege of being with his brother when he died, and of attending his funeral. Very similar cases are Chapman v. Western Union Tel. Co., 90 Ky. 265; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 626; Loper v. Western Union Tel. Co., 70 Tex. 689; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 191; 6 Am. St. Rep. 864 (two messages, one informing sister of her brother's illness, another of his death); Young v. Western Union Tel. Co., 107 N. Car. 370; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 60; 22 Am. St. Rep. 883 ("Come in haste, your wife is at the point of death"); Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Wilson, 69 Tex. 739; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 80. In other cases, damages have been allowed where the plaintiff was merely kept away from the funeral of his relative. So Relle v. Western Union Tel. Co., 55 Tex. 308; 40 Am. Rep. 805; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Erwin (Tex. 1892), 19 S. W. Rep. 1002; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Nations, 82 Tex. 539 (message announcing death). Compare Western Union Tel. Co. v. Brown, 71 Tex. 723. In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Broesche, 72 Tex. 654; 13 Am. St. Rep. 843, the dispatch sent by plaintiff to his brother-in-law read: "Mrs. Broesche dead, will bring corpse on train to-night." It was delayed for some time, so that the addressee did not receive it until after the arrival of the corpse. One thousand, one hundred and sixty-eight dollars were allowed by the court as a balm to soothe the wounded feelings of the plaintiff. But in another case, it is said that the fact that the funeral of plaintiff's mother took place in his absence, does not entitle him to recover for a delay by the company of six hours in delivering a message to those in charge of the funeral, announcing that plaintiff would be there that evening, where the message was actually delivered before the burial took place and where those in charge knew that it was impossible for plaintiff under any circumstances to arrive until several hours after the time of burial. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Andrews, 78 Tex. 305.

In other cases the message was one requesting the immediate presence of a physician. Thus in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Henderson, 89 Ala. 510; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 615; 18 Am. St. Rep. 148, the plaintiff telegraphed to his physician, "Come first train to see my wife. Very low." Owing to a delay by the company the physician came twelve hours later than he would otherwise have done; he could not say whether his arrival earlier would have saved the plaintiff's wife. It was held that in computing the damages, the increase of the plaintiff's mental suffering caused by the delay in the physician's arrival, should be considered.

In North Carolina, in Young v. Western Union Tel. Co., 107 N. Car. 370; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 60; 22 Am. St. Rep. 883, it appeared that this message was sent to the plaintiff: "Come in haste; your wife is at the point of death." The company delayed delivering it for eight days, although the addressee's place of business was well known and within a short distance of the company's office; as a consequence of the delay, plaintiff, the addressee, was prevented from being at his wife's bedside when she died and from attending her funeral. The court held that the evidence showed gross negligence on the part of the company, and that the plaintiff was entitled to damages for the agony of mind occasioned by his being kept away from his wife's death bed and burial. The opinion discusses the question at length, and quotes from the cases; it concludes: "It seems to us that this action is in reality in the nature of a tort for the negligence, and that, as is usually the case in such actions, the plaintiff is entitled to recover, in addition to nominal damages, compensation for the actual damage done him, and that mental anguish is actual damage. It is very truthfully and appropriately remarked by a learned author that 'the mind is no less a part of the person than the body, and the sufferings of the former are sometimes more acute and lasting than those of the latter. Indeed, the sufferings of each frequently, if not usually, act recipro-message bore on its face evidence that a failure or delay to deliver it would cause mental distress and anguish, damages arising from such a cause must have been in contemplation of the parties at the time the contract of sending was made.¹ It is considered that by virtue of the negligent breach of contract to which the plaintiff was a party, or by virtue of the statutes declaring the duties of telegraph companies, the plaintiff has a cause of action; and having thus secured a standing in court, he is entitled to have damages assessed for all the injury suffered by him as a proximate consequence of the defendant's wrongful act.² But the correctness of this general rule of law is at least doubtful, and has led to such an abnormal increase in litigation and to so cally on the other.' 3 Suth. on Dam. 260.⁵

Various cases were relied on as upholding, by analogy, the rule applied. Terwilliger v. Wanda, 17 N. Y. 54; 72 Am. Dec. 420 (action for libel); Fisher v. Hamilton, 49 Ind. 341 (action for malicious arrest and prosecution); Stewart v. Maddox, 63 Ind. 51 (false imprisonment); Byrne v. Gardner, 33 La. Ann. 6 (action for illegally suing and attachment); Craker v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 36 Wis. 657 (female passenger kissed by railroad official—damages allowed); 3 Suth. on Dam. 259; Scott & Jar. on Telegraphs, § 418.

In another case damages for mental suffering were allowed, but there was actual physical suffering involved. Thompson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 106 N. Car. 549; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 634; 107 N. Car. 449; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 53.

Evidence of Mental Suffering.—"The natural utterances and expressions indicative of pleasure, displeasure, pain or suffering, are competent original evidence that may be received in proof of the physical or mental state they indicate, whenever that state is a pertinent inquiry. Wood Pr. Ev., § 147." Western Union Tel. Co. v. Henderson, 89 Ala. 510; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 615; 18 Am. St. Rep. 148. See also 1 Greenleaf on Ev. (14th ed.), § 102; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lydon, 82 Tex. 364 (evidence that plaintiff was favorite son of his dead mother, admitted); infra, this title, Evidence. Conduct of plaintiff's wife showing grief at being unable to attend her father's funeral, may be shown by bystanders as evidence of damage by mental suffering. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Carter (Tex. App. 1892), 20 S. W. Rep. 834.

1. Basis of the Rule Allowing Recovery.—So Relle v. Western Union Tel. Co., 55 Tex. 308; 40 Am. Rep. 805; Reese v. Western Union Tel. Co., 123 Ind. 294.

2. Thus in Chapman v. Western Union Tel. Co., 90 Ky. 265; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 628, the court, by Holt, J., said: "If a telegraph company undertakes to send a message, and it fails to use ordinary diligence in doing so, it is liable for some damage. It has violated its contract; and, whenever a party does so, he is liable, at least to some extent. Every infraction of a legal right causes injury, in contemplation of law. The party being entitled in such a case to recover something, why should not an injury to the feelings, which is often more injurious than a physical one, enter into the estimate? Why, being entitled to some damage by reason of the other party's wrongful act, should not the complaining party recover all the damage arising from it? It seems to us that no sound reason can be given to the contrary."

And in Wadsworth v. Western Union Tel. Co., 86 Tenn. 695; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 161; 6 Am. St. Rep. 864, the allowance of such damages was put upon the ground, that the statute declaring the duties of telegraph companies and making them "liable in damages to the party aggrieved," conferred a right of action and the plaintiff thus having a standing in court, might have all the injury suffered by him considered in the computation of damages.

In Alabama, in a similar case, damages for mental anguish were allowed in an action by the sender, on the ground that he had an "independent right of recovery, to which distress of feeling can become an aggravating incident." It is clearly implied that an addressee would, in such case, have no

many inconsistencies that the courts are not inclined to extend its operation.¹ Thus it is required in every case that the dispatch shall have shown on its face its character and importance, or that the company shall have been otherwise informed of the results likely to flow from an incorrect transmission or delayed delivery,² though it is not necessary that the relationship of the parties should appear.³ So also the injury suffered, and for which right of action. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Henderson, 89 Ala. 510; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 623; 18 Am. St. Rep. 148; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Wilson, 93 Ala. 32. See also Thompson on Electricity, § 381, where such distinctions as are made in these cases are considered unsound.

In Reese v. Western Union Tel. Co., 123 Ind. 204, the court, by Berkshire, J., said: "Some of the authorities seek to draw a distinction as to the right to recover damages for mental suffering between cases where there may be a recovery for pecuniary loss and cases where there is or can be no pecuniary loss, to which class the present action belongs."

Are not Punitive or Exemplary.—It must be observed that the damages given in these cases are given as compensatory, and not by way of punishment to the negligent company. In several cases allowing damages for mental anxiety, it was expressly held that punitive damages were not recoverable, no malice or willful wrong being shown. See Stuart v. Western Union Tel. Co., 66 Tex. 580; 13 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 590; 59 Am. Rep. 623. Compare Scott & Jar. on Telegraphs, § 418; EXEMPLARY DAMAGES, vol. 7, p. 448.

1. The great increase in the number of cases of this character in Texas has been the subject of frequent comment; and as seen from the cases examined herein, the courts have been under the necessity of more than once making distinctions of the most refined character in order to avoid a hurtful extension of their doctrine. See Western Union Tel. Co. v. Rogers, 68 Miss. 748; 24 Am. St. Rep. 300; McAllen v. Western Union Tel. Co., 70 Tex. 243; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 195.

2. Dispatch Must Show on its Face the Importance of its Being Sent Promptly.—In McAllen v. Western Union Tel. Co., 70 Tex. 243; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 195, it appeared that the plaintiff sent a message addressed to his father at E., directing the family carriage to be sent to P. to meet him in order to convey him to his father's house, he having been informed that his father was sick. It turned out that there was no office at E., so the dispatch was never delivered, and plaintiff after waiting six days was obliged to go to his father by a circuitous route in a most uncomfortable conveyance. He claimed to have suffered much mental anguish, fearing that his father was seriously ill, if not dead. The court refused to allow any damages on the ground that the company had no means of knowing and no reason for suspecting that such consequence would follow a delay or failure to deliver the message. See also infra, this title, Where Message is in Cipher or is Otherwise Unintelligible; Shear. & Red. on Neg. (4th ed.), § 605; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Simpson, 73 Tex. 423. In this case the plaintiff, Mrs. Simpson, having been informed of the death of her husband in San Francisco, sent a message from Los Angeles, where she then was, to her agent C. in Galveston, Texas, at 4 o'clock on January 12th, telling him of her husband's death, and requesting him to send her two hundred dollars immediately; that she would remain at L. A. until 2 p. m. the next day. The company transmitted the message promptly, but as delivered to C. it purported to come from San Francisco. C. thereupon sent the money by telegraph to San Francisco, but upon hearing from Mrs. S. that she had not received it, sent her more money by express, which she received on the 14th and in time to leave Los Angeles with her husband's body. She averred that the delay in receiving the money prevented her from going to San Francisco, and caused her to suffer much anguish of mind. A verdict of one thousand dollars in her favor was not disturbed.

3. It is sufficient if the company is put on inquiry, and the message shows from its language the necessity of its prompt transmission. "To require the family pedigree to be inserted in telegrams announcing serious illness or compensation is given, must be real, not imaginary, and not the result of a too sensitive and excitable mental constitution, nor of a distorted imagination.¹ And it is the duty of the court, upon request, to caution the jury that the damages are to be confined to the injury directly resulting from the company's breach of duty, and that the plaintiff's mental anguish occasioned by other indedeath, would deprive the greater part of the public of the benefits of telegraphy" and only serve "to increase the revenue of the company." Therefore, where the telegram was "Emma died last night; will be buried this evening," the court held that the company could not escape liability merely because the message failed to show that the plaintiff was a near relative of Emma. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Rosentreter, 80 Tex. 406; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 77. So where the message ran "Clara, come quick, Rufe is dying," it was held that the plaintiff was not barred from recovery although the message did not indicate that the parties interested were brother and sister; the message was sufficient to inform the company that prompt transmission and delivery were necessary. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Adams, 75 Tex. 531; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 594; 16 Am. St. Rep. 920. See the same principle upheld in Potts v. Western Union Tel. Co., 82 Tex. 545; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Nations, 82 Tex. 539; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Moore, 76 Tex. 66; 18 Am. St. Rep. 25; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Carter (Tex. 1892), 20 S. W. Rep. 834 ("G. is dead, answer"); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Feegles, 75 Tex. 537. See also Reese v. Western Union Tel. Co., 123 Ind. 294, where message read "My wife is very ill; not expected to live," it was held that the company was not released from liability merely because the relationship of the addressee to the wife spoken of was not apparent.

But in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kirkpatrick, 76 Tex. 217; 18 Am. St. Rep. 37, where a message was addressed by a wife to her husband requesting him to come with "Ferdinand" to her father who was very low, and the company negligently delayed its transmission and delivery, it was held that the company was not liable to the husband in damages for the mental suffering occasioned to the wife in the absence of other notice than that contained in the message itself that the parties were related. The message read: "C. S. Kirkpatrick, H. Station: Come on first train; bring Ferdinand. His father very low." Signed, "J. L." And in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Brown, 71 Tex. 723, it was held in an action by the addressee for delay in delivering this message: "Willie died yesterday evening at six o'clock; will be buried at M. Sunday evening," that damages cannot be recovered for injury to fraternal feelings from failure to hear of his brother's death in time to attend the funeral and condole with his sister, as the message contained nothing to put defendant on notice that the deceased was plaintiff's brother.

1. Suffering Must Not Be Merely Sentimental or Imaginary.—In McAllen v. Western Union Tel. Co., 70 Tex. 243; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 195, a case set out in the note immediately preceding, the court, by Maltbie, J., said: "In this case it seems that the plaintiff's mental anguish was not the result of any real or adequate cause. It does not appear that the father was dead or in such condition as demanded the personal presence or attention of his son. On the contrary, the sorrows of the plaintiff were imaginary, and were caused by the failure on the part of the father to send the carriage to P., which the affectionate son attributed to the fact that the father was dead, or too dangerously ill to attend to ordinary business, when in truth the failure was due solely to the fact that no request to send the carriage had been sent. The deduction of the son was not logical, or, at all events, the occurrence might have been well accounted for on other hypotheses than the disability of the father. If grief or sorrow, produced by things unreal, mere figments of the brain, are held to give a cause of action for a breach of a contract or a tort, an individual of a somber, gloomy imagination would often be entitled to large damages on account of mental suffering, while others of a buoyant fancy, for the same breach of duty would not be entitled to anything; and damages, instead of being measured by the rules of law as applied to the facts, would largely depend upon the fertility of the imagination of the suitor." It seems pendent circumstances, e. g., the death or illness of a relative, cannot be considered.¹

A rule that is more consistent with recognized legal principles and that is supported by better authority, is that mental suffering, alone and unaccompanied by other injury, cannot sustain an action for damages or be considered as an element of damages. Anxiety of mind and mental torture are too refined and too vague in their nature to be the subject of pecuniary compensation in damages, except where, as in case of personal injury, they are so inseparably connected with the physical pain that they cannot be distinguished from it, and are therefore considered a part of it.²

Conspicuous instances under this latter rule are seen in cases where a message is sent to a physician requesting his immediate attendance, and, through the company's failure to transmit the dis-that this language is a complete answer to any claim for damages for mental suffering and is a refutation of the arguments advanced in other cases in favor of the recovery of such damages.

1. In the first case allowing damages for mental suffering, So Relle v. Western Union Tel. Co., 55 Tex. 308; 40 Am. Rep. 805, in which the company's negligence prevented a son from attending the funeral of his mother, the court said: "It should be remarked that great caution ought to be observed in the trial of cases like this, as it will be so easy and natural to confound the corroding grief occasioned by the loss of the parent or other relative with the disappointment and regret occasioned by the default or neglect of the company; for it is only the latter for which a recovery may be had, and the attention of juries may well be called to the fact." And the necessity of this distinction has been considered so important, that the language quoted has been reiterated in many of the subsequent cases. See Wadsworth v. Western Union Tel. Co., 86 Tenn. 695; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 161; 6 Am. St. Rep. 864; Beasley v. Western Union Tel. Co., 39 Fed. Rep. 181; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Levy, 59 Tex. 543; 12 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 96; 46 Am. Rep. 278; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cooper, 71 Tex. 507; 10 Am. St. Rep. 772. So also, where the message is sent by a father to his physician, stating that his child is sick and requesting him to come at once, the recovery by the father must be limited to his own distress and mental suffering, and cannot include compensation for the death or sufferings of the child. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Richardson, 79 Tex. 649.

2. Doctrine that Damages Are Not Recoverable for Mental Anguish Alone.

—Russell v. Western Union Tel. Co., 3 Dakota 315; 5 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 218; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Rogers, 68 Miss. 748; 24 Am. St. Rep. 300; Crawson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 47 Fed. Rep. 544; Chase v. Western Union Tel. Co., 44 Fed. Rep. 554; West v. Western Union Tel. Co., 39 Kan. 93; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 185; 7 Am. St. Rep. 530; Chapman v. Western Union Tel. Co., 88 Ga. 763; 39 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 567; Burnett v. Western Union Tel. Co., 39 Mo. App. 599; Wyman v. Leavitt, 71 Me. 227; 36 Am. Rep. 303; Lynch v. Knight, 9 H. L. Cas. 577; Wood's Mayne on Dam. 74; Cooley on Torts, p. 271; 2 Thomp. on Neg. 849. See also Johnson v. Wells, 6 Nev. 224; 3 Am. Rep. 245; Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Stables, 62 Ill. 313. In Wood's Mayne on Dam., p. 74, the author, after discussing the allowance of mental damages in particular cases, says: "But we do not apprehend that the rule has any such force as to enable a person to maintain an action where the only injury is mental suffering, as might be thought from a reading of the loose dicta and statements of the court in some of the cases. So far as I have been able to ascertain the force of the rule, the mental suffering referred to is that which grows out of the sense of peril or the mental agony at the time of the happening of the accident, and that which is incident to and blended with the bodily pain incident to the injury, and the apprehension and anxiety thereby induced." In the same connection Mr. Cooley says: "But in this country as well as in England, the ground of recovery must be something besides an injury to the feelings and affections, or the loss of the pleasure and comfort of the society of the person killed. There must be a loss to the claimant that is capable of being measured by a pecuniary standard." Cooley on Torts, p. 271.

In Russell v. Western Union Tel. Co., 3 Dakota 315; 5 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 218, the message read: "Libby died last night; funeral tomorrow. Come. Answer quick." In consequence of the negligence of the telegraph company in failing to deliver this message, the plaintiff, to whom it was addressed, was prevented from attending the funeral of his sister. The court, in denying recovery, said by Hudson, J.: "No case can be found where a person has been allowed to recover damages for a shock, injury or outrage to the feelings and sensibilities arising from and caused by the breach of a contract, except it is a marriage contract. Such damages can enter into and become a part of the recovery when the plaintiff has sustained, by the negligence or willful act of another, some corporal or personal injury; they can never be recovered independently and alone, and, if recoverable at all, only in actions of tort. Masters v. Warren, 27 Conn. 293; Stewart v. Ripon, 38 Wis. 584." See also Civil Code of Dakota, section 1287.

In West v. Western Union Tel. Co., 39 Kan. 93; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 190; 7 Am. St. Rep. 530, the delay in delivering the message announcing the death of plaintiff's mother, prevented plaintiff from attending the funeral. The court held that while mental anguish might constitute an element of damages in some cases, yet "in an action of this kind, we do not think that damages for mental anguish or suffering can be allowed. Such damages can only enter into and become part of the recovery, where the mental suffering is the natural legitimate and proximate consequence of the physical injury. Salina v. Trosper, 27 Kan. 544."

In Crawson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 47 Fed. Rep. 544, the same doctrine was applied to a similar case. So in Chase v. Western Union Tel. Co., 44 Fed. Rep. 554.

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Rogers, 68 Miss. 748; 24 Am. St. Rep. 300, the plaintiff's mental suffering was caused by the negligence of the company's agent in failing to deliver a telegram informing him of the death of his brother, and of the time and place of burial, until after the last train by which plaintiff could have traveled to attend the funeral had left. Recovery was denied, no other damages being alleged or proven. The opinion of Cooper, J., constitutes a valuable discussion of the subject. It reviews the classes of cases in which mental suffering has been allowed to constitute an element of damage, and shows that they cannot be relied upon as authorizing such damages, when no other damage is shown. It also points out the inconsistencies and harmful results which have followed the adoption of a different rule. The opinion in the case of Chapman v. Western Union Tel. Co., 88 Ga. 763; 39 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 567, is equally valuable and even more exhaustive. Every ground upon which the cases allowing such damages rest, is examined, and its inapplicability to the case under consideration, exposed. Referring to the ground that the plaintiff, having a right to nominal damages, may thus get into court and have all his injuries considered, it is said: "To speak of the right to nominal damages as a condition for giving substantial damages, is a palpable contradiction. To give nominal damages, necessarily denies any further recovery. . . . Throwing away the lame pretense of basing recovery for mental suffering upon an otherwise harmless transgression and stripping it of all false form and confusing technicality, it is manifest that to allow such a recovery is, in real substance, an effort to protect feeling by legal remedy. If mental suffering be a self-sufficient element of damage, as in reason it must be to recover when no other damage is claimed, why is not the causing of mental suffering itself, an infraction of a legal right? Why should the law of torts lag behind the law of damages? Can it do so in a sound system?" This case is of the more weight in that it was decided in the face of George's Code, section 3067, providing that "in some torts, the entire injury is to the peace, happiness or feelings of the plaintiff. In such cases, no measure of damages can be prescribed except the enlightened conscience of impartial jurors." It was considered that this section was intended merely to declare the existing law, and not to create new torts or patch with diligence, the physician's arrival is delayed, and mental anxiety and physical suffering are occasioned to the plaintiff for whom his attendance was desired. It is apparent that the allowance of damages in such cases affords no support to the rule that mental suffering alone will authorize a recovery.¹

i. EXEMPLARY AND EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.—Exemplary or vindictive damages are given by way of punishment to the wrongdoer and in excess of what is deemed a proper compensation to to change the law of damages. Central R., etc., Co. v. Kelly, 58 Ga. 107; Cox v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 87 Ga. 747.

Obligations to Rule Allowing Damages for Mental Suffering.—The objections to the rule allowing damages for mental suffering are well exhibited in several Texas cases. Thus in McAllen v. Western Union Tel. Co., 70 Tex. 243; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 195, it was insisted that the plaintiff's grief must be logical and not the result of "things unreal, mere figments of the brain." The fact that the amount of suffering, hence of damages, would vary with the character of plaintiff's mental make up, was also recognized. In Rowell v. Western Union Tel. Co., 75 Tex. 26, a distinction was drawn between the negligence of failing to deliver a dispatch which causes mental pain and suffering, and failing to deliver one which, if delivered, would relieve such suffering. The plaintiff and his wife had received information of the dangerous illness of her mother. Subsequently, a dispatch was sent informing them of her mother's improved condition, which message the company failed to deliver. The court held that plaintiff could not recover for the anguish of mind which he and his wife suffered, and which the message would have relieved. The manifest effect of this decision is to deny to a party injured, redress for "mental sufferings contemplated by the parties to the contract, as a probable consequence of its breach;" and it is well said by Cooper, J., in reviewing this case in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Rogers, 68 Miss. 748; 24 Am. St. Rep. 300, that "the distinction drawn by the court is so unsubstantial that it was evidently resorted to for the purpose of obstructing the tide of intolerable litigation flowing from previous decisions."

In Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Levy, 59 Tex. 563; 12 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 90; 46 Am. Rep. 278, the opposition to the rule laid down in the So Relle case is shown to be overwhelming in point of both principle and authority; and this case, though it has been "distinguished," has never been overruled. See Stuart v. Western Union Tel. Co., 66 Tex. 580; 13 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 590; 59 Am. Rep. 623.

Wadsworth v. Western Union Tel. Co., 86 Tenn. 695; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 161; 6 Am. St. Rep. 864, is deprived of much of its weight by the fact that two of the five justices dissented, while a third justice concurred as special grounds. Lurton, J., delivered a dissenting opinion which constitutes one of the strongest defenses of the better rule of law as stated in the text. See also Blake v. Midland R. Co., 18 Q. B. 93; 83 E. C. L. 93; Canning v. Williamstown, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 451; Walsh v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 42 Wis. 23; 24 Am. Rep. 376; NEGLIGENCE, vol. 16, p. 476, note 1.

1. Messages Requesting Physician's Presence.—In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cooper, 71 Tex. 507; 10 Am. St. Rep. 772; aff'd 20 S. W. Rep. 47, a message of this kind was sent by the plaintiff, whose wife was very sick. It appeared that, owing to the delay in the arrival of the physician, caused by the company's negligence, the wife's sufferings in confinement were prolonged and greatly increased, and that she and her husband suffered great mental anguish. The court held that the recovery must be limited to compensation for the wife's sufferings and that the mental agony which the plaintiff himself underwent could not be included. It was also said that if by reason of the company's negligence "the pain and suffering of Mrs. C. were aggravated and prolonged, she could only recover for such aggravated and prolonged suffering, as distinguished from the suffering she would have encountered in case there had been no such negligence and the doctor had arrived in time to have waited on her."

the injured party; they are only recoverable when there is proof of a willful or malicious injury, or where the negligence of the defendant has been of so culpable a character that the law conclusively presumes a willful wrong;¹ therefore, where the proof shows nothing more than mere want of ordinary care on the part of the defendant, exemplary or punitive damages cannot be allowed.²

Nor could there be any recovery at all in such a case, if the use of due care on the part of the company would not have prevented the delay in the physician's arrival. See also Western Union Tel. Co. v. Henderson, 89 Ala. 510; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 615; 18 Am. St. Rep. 148; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kendzora, 77 Tex. 257.

In Thompson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 106 N. Car. 549; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 634; 107 N. Car. 449; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 53, it appeared that T.'s wife being about to be confined, her son, at her instance, telegraphed to his father in another state, "Father, come at once. Mother is sick." The message was not delivered and T.'s wife was obliged to undergo confinement without her husband's presence. The court did not instruct the jury as to whether they could award damages for mental suffering alone, but left them to determine for themselves from the evidence whether the injuries complained of were the proximate consequence of defendant's negligence, and the amount to be recovered by her as compensation. Upon evidence showing great mental and physical suffering by T.'s wife in consequence of her husband's absence, her recital making up a pitiful story, three thousand dollars were awarded. On the first consideration of the case in the supreme court, it was held that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury as to the right of recovery for mental suffering purely; but on rehearing, a different view was taken and the decision of the trial court affirmed.

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Shumate, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 429, the action was for a failure by the telegraph company to send a message summoning a physician to attend the sick child of plaintiff until several days after it was ordered to be sent, and until after the child was beyond help. It was held that the father might recover, not for the mental suffering which resulted from the sickness and death of his child, but only for the superadded pain and anguish which resulted from the physician's absence until it was too late. A verdict for one thousand dollars damages was sustained.

But as to recovery of exemplary damages for "gross negligence," compare NEGLIGENCE, vol. 16, p. 477, where the better doctrine is stated, and in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Godsey (Tex. 1890), 16 S. W. Rep. 789, it is said that an allegation of "gross negligence" will not entitle plaintiff to exemplary damages.

The petition should allege whether actual or exemplary damages are claimed, McAllen v. Western Union Tel. Co., 70 Tex. 243; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 195, though it seems that this is not absolutely essential. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Morris, 77 Tex. 173; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 633.

In McAllen v. Western Union Tel. Co., 70 Tex. 243; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 195, the plaintiff was informed by the operator that there was a telegraph office at the station to which he sent the message, and the agent, soon after sending the message, discovered that the office had been closed, but concealed this knowledge from plaintiff. The agent was not informed that the message, which in form was an ordinary telegram, was of great importance. It was held that exemplary damages could not be recovered.

Georgia Code, § 2943, provides that "exemplary damages can never be allowed in cases arising on contract." Under this it is held that no damages of any kind can be recovered where no willful wrong on the part of the company is shown and the only damage suffered was the mental anguish of plaintiff. Chase v. Western Union Tel. Co., 44 Fed. Rep. 554.

Nor can such damages be recovered except where there is proof of actual damage to the complainant.¹ As to excessive damages, the rule is well settled that the verdict of the jury assessing the damages will not be disturbed as being excessive unless the amount is so large as to indicate that it was the result of passion or prejudice.²

2. Excessive Damages.—Thurston v. Martin, 5 Mason (U. S.) 497.

Six hundred dollars is said not to be excessive where the delayed message was one requesting the presence of a physician, and in consequence of the delay, the sufferings of plaintiff's wife in confinement were prolonged about two hours. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cooper (Tex. 1892), 20 S. W. Rep. 47, aff'd 71 Tex. 507; 10 Am. St. Rep. 772.

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Rosentreter, 80 Tex. 406; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 77, the message announced the death of plaintiff's sister; by its being delayed, he was prevented from attending his sister's funeral, and from being able to "give comfort and consolation to his aged mother in her hour of great trouble." An award of one thousand dollars was considered not excessive.

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Broesche, 72 Tex. 654; 3 Am. St. Rep. 843, one thousand, one hundred and sixty-eight dollars was held not to be excessive compensation for the mental anguish suffered.

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Simpson, 73 Tex. 423, one thousand dollars was considered not excessive for mental anguish.

In Stuart v. Western Union Tel. Co., 66 Tex. 580; 13 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 590; 59 Am. Rep. 623, the company's negligence prevented plaintiff from being at the bedside of his dying brother and from attending his funeral. Twenty-five hundred dollars as actual damages for the mental sufferings was held to be not excessive.

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Erwin (Tex. 1892), 19 S. W. Rep. 1002, where, by the delay in delivering the telegram, plaintiff was kept away from his father's funeral, two hundred dollars were allowed.

In Davis v. Western Union Tel. Co., 1 Cinc. Super. Ct. 100; Thompson on Electricity, § 400, it appeared that the plaintiff was a commercial news agent in Cincinnati, engaged in furnishing to customers financial news and reports from New York City as to the state of the market. The plaintiff alleged a willful and malicious breach of contract on the part of the telegraph company. The verdict was for three thousand dollars, though the actual damage appeared to be not more than five hundred. The court ordered the amount to be reduced by a remittitur of two thousand dollars; holding, however, that plaintiff had a right to more than the actual damages sustained.

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Evans, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 297, the company failed to promptly deliver a message to a mother asking her to come to her sick son, and by reason of the delay, she did not see him until after his death, whereas she would have been able to see him fully twenty-four hours before death if the message had been promptly delivered. It was held that a verdict of five thousand dollars in favor of plaintiff was so excessive as to shock a sense of justice, and to indicate clearly that the jury were influenced by passion or prejudice. So in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Piner, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 301, owing to the non-delivery of a message, a son was prevented from reaching his father in the latter's sickness, until his father was unconscious. He was with him, however, for several days before his death. The father was seventy-three years old, and his son fifty, and an unusually strong affection was shown to have existed between them. It was held that a verdict of four thousand, seven hundred and fifty dollars was excessive. Each of these last two cases cited and approved the case of Western Union Tel. Co. v. Houghton, 82 Tex. 562; 39 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 577, where a verdict of forty-five hundred dollars was held excessive, the evidence showing that a

X. STATUTORY PENALTIES—1. Generally.—In order to secure the easier and more complete enforcement of the recognized obligations of telegraph companies as to transmitting and delivering messages offered for transmission, the legislatures of many of the states have enacted statutes providing a fixed money penalty to be recovered of the company for every negligent failure to discharge its duties.¹ The duty designed to be enforced by these statutes is threefold: first, to transmit messages tendered for that purpose with the charges established by the rules of the company; second, to receive and transmit such messages with impartiality as to the order of transmission; and third, to transmit such messages in good faith and with due diligence.²

Such statutes are regarded as penal and are therefore to be construed strictly, but not so strictly as to defeat the intention and purpose of the legislature.³ The statute generally provides by whom the action may be brought, but where it does message sent to a boy's father was delayed, and by reason of the delay the father was kept away from the bedside of his dying son.

1. Most of the statutes prescribe at length the duties of telegraph companies operating lines within the state, and prescribe specifically for the manner of recovering the penalty. See some of them set out in Scott & Jar. on Telegraphs, §§ 419-446.

2. Burnett v. Western Union Tel. Co., 39 Mo. App. 607.

3. Such Statutes Are Penal and To Be Strictly Construed.—Frauenthal v. Western Union Tel. Co., 50 Ark. 78; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 70; Thurn v. Alta Tel. Co., 15 Cal. 472; Langley v. Western Union Tel. Co., 88 Ga. 777; Greenberg v. Western Union Tel. Co., 89 Ga. 754; Hadley v. Western Union Tel. Co., 115 Ind. 191; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 72; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Axtell, 69 Ind. 199. Compare Little Rock, etc., Tel. Co. v. Davis, 41 Ark. 79; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 102; Thompson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 32 Mo. App. 191 (Sunday message).

Thus where the proof was that the plaintiff contracted with the State Telegraph Company for the transmission of a message to Jackson, and that this company, whose line terminated at Sacramento, took the message to the office of the defendant there and asked to have it forwarded, tendering a price which the defendant refused, it was held that the plaintiff could not maintain his action, under the statute, for the refusal. Thurn v. Alta Tel. Co., 15 Cal. 472.

The statute being strictly construed, a company is not liable in an action to recover the penalty, unless the charges on the message were prepaid or tendered by the sender, or unless there was failure to deliver, or delay in delivering, on or after payment or tender by the person to whom the message was sent, or his agent. Langley v. Western Union Tel. Co., 88 Ga. 777; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Mossler, 95 Ind. 29 (complaint must allege such payment of charges); Macpherson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 52 N. Y. Super. Ct. 232.

Arkansas Statute.—The Arkansas statute provides that every telegraph and telephone company in the state must, under penalty of five hundred dollars, transmit over its wires to localities on its lines every message tendered to it, for the customary charges, without discrimination as to charges or promptness. It was held that there could be no recovery of this penalty where the company made a bona fide effort to transmit the message, and acted without impartiality, although the message was lost, and this, no matter how culpable was the negligence of the company by reason of which the loss was caused. Frauenthal v. Western Union Tel. Co., 50 Ark. 78; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 70; Baltimore, etc., Tel. Co. v. State (Ark. 1888), 6 S. W. Rep. 513.

Nor does this statute fixing the penalty for "refusal to transmit," impose a penalty for the company's refusal to deliver a message after it has been transmitted over its wires to the locality on not, the rules applicable in an ordinary action for damages apply.¹ The plaintiff is not bound to show any general or special damage in order to recover the penalty,² but, as in other cases, must establish the fact of the company's negligence or breach of duty.³ It is held in some cases that the complainant must not only prove the negligence of the company, but must show that it acted willfully and in bad faith;⁴ but these cases are confined to particular instances, as where the wrong consisted in unduly postponing the complainant's message in favor of some other, and do not apply where there is a breach of the ordinary duty to send; in this latter class of cases proof of the negligence of the company is sufficient.⁵

its line to which it is addressed. Brooks v. Western Union Tel. Co., 56 Ark. 224.

But under the former statute (Gault's Ark. Dig., § 5271), imposing a penalty of one hundred dollars for a failure by the company to transmit messages "with impartiality and good faith," a recovery might be had where the agent at the receiving office failed to deliver the message. Little Rock, etc., Tel. Co. v. Davis, 41 Ark. 79; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 102.

1. See infra, this title, Parties to the Action. Code of Mississippi (1892), § 4326; Hadley v. Western Union Tel. Co., 115 Ind. 191; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 72.

2. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Allen, 66 Miss. 549; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 535 (recovery by addressee); Little Rock, etc., Tel. Co. v. Davis, 41 Ark. 79; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 102.

3. Must Establish Company's Breach of Duty.—In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Wilson, 108 Ind. 308; 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 257, which was an action brought under the Rev. Stat. Indiana (1881), § 4176, for the recovery of the penalty therein prescribed, it appeared that the telegraph company had two offices in the town of G., about eighty yards apart, one on a direct line to B., the other on a line from which B. could be reached only by a circuitous route, and by repetition of the message. The plaintiff presented a message at the latter office to be sent to B., offering at the same time to pay for it; the agent refused to receive it, explaining the difficulty of sending it from that office, but offered to send or take it immediately to the other office, whence it could be sooner or more easily sent to its destination. The plaintiff declined the offer, and notifying the agent that he would sue the company, took the message to the other office himself and had it sent from there. It was held that there was no proof of a breach of duty on the part of the company, and there could be no recovery of the penalty.

It is a valid defense, where the basis of the action is the failure to deliver, to show that the addressee did not live within the limits prescribed for free delivery. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lindley, 62 Ind. 371.

Where a person asks the operator whether his message can be sent immediately, and is informed that it can, and he pays the charges demanded, and the sending of the message is postponed until the next morning, when it is too late to transmit it, he can recover the penalty, unless the company is able to prove that the delay was caused by some derangement of the lines, or the message was postponed for just cause. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ward, 23 Ind. 377; 85 Am. Dec. 462.

4. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Swain, 109 Ind. 405; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Brown, 108 Ind. 538; 14 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 139.

Where a company receives a message and the money paid for charges for its transmission from a person other than the sender without objection, it cannot, in an action by the sender for the statutory penalty, question the authority of such person to sign the sender's name to the message. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Buskirk, 107 Ind. 549.

A delay of several hours by a company, to transmit a message requiring only from five to fifteen minutes, is

The statutes imposing the penalty are not to be construed as awarding liquidated damages for a failure to discharge the duty enjoined, but as affixing a penalty; the right of the sender or addressee to recover damages sustained by the company's neglect of duty remains unaffected.¹ These statutes extend to cases where the dispatch is tendered by a company over whose line it has been partly sent, but whose lines do not extend to the point of destination; and this, notwithstanding there is a provision that no company shall be required to receive dispatches from a competing company owning parallel lines.² The penalty may also be recovered although the message was one relating to a gambling transaction.³

The fact that the telegraph company tenders and pays to the plaintiff his expenses incurred by reason of the delay or non-delivery of a message will not affect his right of action for the statutory penalty unless it appears that he accepted such payment in full settlement of his claims or by way of accord and satisfaction.⁴

There is no vested right in a penalty; an action to recover it cannot be maintained after the act providing for it has been repealed, although the penalty was incurred before the repeal, unless the repealing act contains a clause saving the right to recover penalties already incurred.⁵ The effect of such penal statutes where the message is sent from one state into another is the subject of a preceding section.⁶

2. Particular Statutes.—The statutes vary in their extent and effect in the several states, each having its peculiar incidents.

unreasonable, and when shown to exist in an action for the statutory penalty, places the burden of explaining it upon the company. The fact that an operator could not attend to the message in less time would constitute no explanation, since in such case the company should have employed more operators. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Scircle, 103 Ind. 227; 10 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 610.

The right of action for a penalty is one that survives, and may be enforced by the representative of the person in whom the right existed before his death. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Scircle, 103 Ind. 227; 10 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 610.

2. U. S. Tel. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 56 Barb. (N. Y.) 46. But, in a California case, it was held that the original sender of the message could not maintain an action for the penalty against the connecting line refusing to receive a dispatch for further transmission. Thurn v. Alta Tel. Co., 15 Cal. 472. It will be observed that in the New York case the action was by the telegraph company, and not by the sender of the message.

The general language of the statutes and the interpretation given by the courts are set out in the note.¹

1. Georgia Statute.—By Act November 12, 1889 (Georgia Acts, 1888-89, p. 176), telegraph companies are required, under penalty, to receive messages from and for any other telegraph company, and properly to transmit the same. They are forbidden to make unjust discriminations, or to divulge the contents or nature of any private communications intrusted to the company for transmission. This act is held not to apply to companies whose lines were constructed before its passage, and since it cannot be construed to embrace more than one subject, it is considered not to repeal Acts of 1886-87, p. 111, regulating telegraph companies. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cooledge, 86 Ga. 104. An action for the penalty under Act of 1887, for failure to deliver a dispatch in due time, is barred by section 2925 of the code, within one year from the time the company's liability thereto was discovered, or by reasonable diligence might have been discovered. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Nunnally, 86 Ga. 503.

A "resident," within the meaning of the statute, does not include a transient visitor to the town or city, and a company does not incur the penalty by failure to deliver message to such transient, unless it acted willfully. Moore v. Western Union Tel. Co., 87 Ga. 613. But the residence of the addressee is not involved where the negligence of the company is in not transmitting the dispatch with due diligence, and in such case the penalty is incurred, although the addressee lived far beyond the limits of the town in which the receiving office was. Horn v. Western Union Tel. Co., 88 Ga. 538.

The statute applies even when the message relates to gambling transactions. Gay v. Western Union Tel. Co., 87 Ga. 350; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 47.

Indiana Statutes.—Indiana Rev. Stat., § 4176, provided that telegraph companies, engaged in telegraphing for the public, should, during the usual office hours, receive dispatches, and, on payment of the proper charges, transmit the same with impartiality and good faith, and in the order of time in which they were received (with certain exceptions in favor of news reports, etc.), under penalty, in case of a failure to transmit, or if postponed out of proper order, of one hundred dollars, to be recovered by the party whose dispatch was neglected or postponed. This statute was a mere continuation of the statute of 1852 (1 Gav. & H. 611). Under its provisions the penalty was recoverable upon proof that through the negligence of the company there was a failure to transmit or an undue delay. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hamilton, 50 Ind. 181; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ward, 23 Ind. 377; 85 Am. Dec. 462; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Buchanan, 35 Ind. 429; 9 Am. Rep. 744.

This act does not apply to messages sent from another state to a point in Indiana. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Reed, 96 Ind. 195; Rogers v. Western Union Tel. Co., 122 Ind. 395; 17 Am. St. Rep. 373; infra, this title, Interstate Messages. Nor does it apply where the breach of the statute occurs in another state, the message having been sent from a point in Indiana. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pendleton, 122 U. S. 347; 18 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 18, reversing 95 Ind. 12; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 56; 48 Am. Rep. 692. Compare Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hamilton, 50 Ind. 181.

The penalty having been fixed by statute, the company cannot change the degree or measure of the statutory liability, by the adoption of rules and regulations. Nor will paying back the amount paid for sending a dispatch, and acceptance of the same (unless it is agreed to be accepted in full of all that the party has a right to recover by virtue of the statute), bar an action for full penalty. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Buchanan, 35 Ind. 429; 9 Am. Rep. 744.

See as to pleading and proof in actions under the statute, Western Union Tel. Co. v. Axtell, 69 Ind. 199 (declaration must allege that defendant was "engaged in telegraphing for the public," sufficiency of allegations); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Roberts, 87 Ind. 377 (same); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Adams, 87 Ind. 598; 44 Am. Rep. 776; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kilpatrick, 97 Ind. 42; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Buskirk, 107 Ind. 549 (complaint need not negative matters of defense).

XI. TAXATION—1. Of Telegraph Companies.—A telegraphic message sent from one state to another is commerce between the states, and the telegraph line is thus an instrument of interstate commerce.¹ A tax imposed by a state upon all messages sent

The company has a right to provide reasonable office hours, and the agent at one station is not bound to know the office hours at another. Givin v. Western Union Tel. Co., 24 Fed. Rep. 119; 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 107; supra, this title, Regulations as to Office Hours. Therefore, where a message was received in office hours, and promptly transmitted to another office where it was received after office hours, and so not delivered till noon of the next day, the company was not liable, if the office hours at the last office were reasonable. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Harding, 103 Ind. 505; 10 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 617.

But the Act of 1885 (Acts, Indiana, 1885, p. 151) by implication repeals the former statute (Rev. Stat. Indiana, § 4176), and under this new act the penalty can be recovered only when there is proof of bad faith, partiality or unjust discrimination; proof of mere negligence in transmission is insufficient. Hadley v. Western Union Tel. Co., 115 Ind. 191; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 76; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Brown, 108 Ind. 538; Western Union Tel. Co. v. State, 108 Ind. 163; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Swain, 109 Ind. 405; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Jones, 116 Ind. 361. The remedy of the aggrieved party for mere negligence is in an action for special damages under § 4177 of Rev. Stat. Hadley v. Western Union Tel. Co., 115 Ind. 191; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 76; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Meek, 49 Ind. 53.

The Act of 1885 does not, however, by implication or otherwise, repeal § 4178 of the Rev. Stat. requiring telegraph companies to deliver by messenger all dispatches to the persons to whom they are addressed, "provided such persons reside within one mile of the telegraph station or within the city or town in which such station is." Reese v. Western Union Tel. Co., 123 Ind. 294.

Mississippi Statute.—The Mississippi statute (Code of Mississippi (1892), § 4326), imposes a penalty of twenty-five dollars upon every company that "shall neglect, fail, or refuse to transmit and deliver within a reasonable time, without good and sufficient excuse, any message," etc. Under this, either party may recover and without proof of special or other damage. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Allen, 66 Miss. 549; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 535. The first statute had no application, however, to cases of erroneous transmission merely; in such a case the party's only remedy is an action for damages. The penalty is not to be regarded as the part of an entire demand for damages. Wilkins v. Western Union Tel. Co., 68 Miss. 6; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 53, note. But under the latter statute the rule is different, and the penalty may be recovered for an incorrect transmission. Code of Mississippi (1892), § 4326.

Missouri Statute.—The statute does not render a telegraph company liable for negligently failing to deliver a message to persons in another state, but only for failure to receive and transmit it. Connell v. Western Union Tel. Co. (Mo. 1892), 18 S. W. Rep. 883; Rev. Stat. Missouri (1889), § 2725.

Rev. Stat., § 885, imposes a penalty for the giving of false information as to the time within which a dispatch may be sent. On an application to send a telegram, made on Sunday, on which day telegraph companies are prohibited from transmitting messages, the company does not, by giving false information that the dispatch can be sent on that day, incur the penalty of § 885. Thompson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 32 Mo. App. 191.

Virginia Statute—Jurisdiction of Magistrate.—Under section 2939 of the code providing that a justice of the peace shall have jurisdiction of any claim to any fine if the amount thereof does not exceed twenty dollars, and of other claims where the amount thereof does not exceed one hundred dollars, a justice has no jurisdiction of an action to recover the penalty of one hundred dollars imposed upon telegraph companies by section 1292, for failure to deliver a dispatch, since such penalty is a "fine" within the meaning of section 2939. *Western Union Tel. from points within the state is therefore invalid, as an interference with interstate commerce, except as to messages sent between points wholly within the state; and this whether it is in the form of a tax upon the gross receipts, or of a license or privilege tax, or otherwise.¹ The tax will be valid as to local messages although it is assessed and returned upon all receipts in gross, and without being separated or apportioned.² Such general taxes, in so far as

Views of the State Courts.—The state courts have frequently upheld the validity of such taxation. Thus in Pennsylvania, a tax on the gross receipts of a telegraph company from messages between points within and points without the state, and from messages between points in other states, which pass over lines partly within the state, was upheld as not being an interference with interstate commerce. But these cases have all been reversed in the federal Supreme Court. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Com., 110 Pa. St. 405, rev'd in 128 U. S. 39; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 577. In Illinois, it is held that the legislature has power to impose taxation upon foreign corporations to whatever extent it may in its discretion choose, as the condition upon which they may exercise their franchises and privileges in the state. The state tax law of 1872, empowering the board of equalization to assess the capital stock of corporations created by or under the laws of the state, is construed, however, as giving such board no authority to assess the stock of foreign corporations doing business in the state. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lieb, 76 Ill. 172.

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Richmond, 26 Gratt. (Va.) 1, the rule is recognized, that Congress may exempt from taxation a state corporation employed as its agent for certain services; but it is held that such exemption must be confined to such taxation as will really prevent or impede such services, and, in the absence of legislation by Congress, indicating that exemption is deemed essential to the performance of governmental services, it cannot be claimed on the mere ground that the corporation is employed as an agency of the government.

The constitutionality of such assessment on interstate messages may be considered by a court of chancery. But such a court has not the power to go beyond this and set the assessment aside; this can only be accomplished by a resort to a legal tribunal. In re Pennsylvania Tel. Co., 48 N. J. Eq. 91; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 26.

they affect messages sent by the government or on government business, are open to the further objection that they interfere with a governmental agency, where the company has accepted the privileges conferred by the federal statute.¹ A privilege license tax imposed on all telegraph companies doing business within the state is also invalid, as being an interference with the exclusive power of Congress over commerce between the states.²

The property of a telegraph company within a state is subject to state taxation like all other property. The fact that the company is engaged in interstate commerce, or that it is an agent of the government, can afford no immunity from the taxation of its property.³ Thus, a statute is not invalid which provides that

Corp. Cas. 26, the whole law was declared unconstitutional; it appeared, however, that the tax was not in the separate messages, but was a privilege license tax on the business of sending them.

1. In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 466, the court, by Waite, C. J., said: "As to the government messages, it is a tax by the state on the means employed by the government of the United States to execute its constitutional powers, and therefore, void. It was so decided in McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 316, and has never been doubted since." Leloup v. Mobile, 127 U. S. 640; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 26; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Richmond, 26 Gratt. (Va.) 1.

2. Privilege License Tax.—Leloup v. Mobile, 127 U. S. 640; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 26. The Western Union Telegraph Company established an office in the city of Mobile and was required to pay a license tax under a city ordinance imposing an annual tax of two hundred and twenty-five dollars on every telegraph company in the city. The agent of the company was fined for non-payment of the tax. In an action to recover the amount of the fine, it was held, reversing the decision of the state supreme court, that such a tax affected the entire business of the company, interstate as well as domestic, and was unconstitutional. The state court relied mainly on the case of Osborne v. Mobile, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 479, which held that an ordinance of the city of Mobile was not unconstitutional, which required every express company or railroad company doing business there, and having a business extending beyond the limits of the state, to pay an annual tax of five hundred dollars; if the business was confined within the limits of the state, a tax of one hundred dollars; if confined within the city, of fifty dollars. The decision of the state court, however, was reversed, the court, by Bradley, J., referring to the ordinance in the Osborne case, said: "This was in December, 1872. In view of the course of decisions which have been made since that time, it is very certain that such an ordinance would now be regarded as repugnant to the power conferred upon Congress to regulate commerce among the several states." Leloup v. Mobile, 127 U. S. 640; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 33.

In a more recent case, a city ordinance imposing a license tax on telegraph companies has been upheld, Moore v. Eufaula (Ala. 1892), 11 So. Rep. 921, on the ground that the ordinance differed materially from that declared void in the Leloup case.

3. Property of Company is Taxable.—"Its property in the state is subject to taxation the same as other property; and it may undoubtedly be taxed in a proper way on account of its occupation and its business." Western Union Tel. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 464. See, in support of the proposition of the text, Western Union Tel. Co. v. Massachusetts, 125 U. S. 530; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 13; 33 Fed. Rep. 129; 141 U. S. 40; Taylor v. Secor, 92 U. S. 575; Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 232; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 19 Fed. Rep. 710; 16 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 1; Western Union Tel. Co. v. State, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 509; 40 Am. Rep. 99.

We may repeat here what we have so often said before, that this exemption of interstate and foreign commerce from state regulation does not prevent the state from taxing the property of those engaged in such commerce located every telegraph company owning a line in the state shall be taxed in such proportion of the whole value of its capital stock as the length of its line in the state bears to the whole length of its line.¹

A message sent from one state to another, being commerce between the states, cannot be prohibited or regulated in either state by injunction against the corporation sending it, merely because such corporation has failed or refused to pay the taxes levied against it, even though the tax may be legal and valid.²

As to the details of the subject of taxation of telegraph companies, the same rules of law apply as in case of ordinary property within the state, as the property of other citizens is taxed, nor from regulating matters of local concern which may incidentally affect commerce, such as wharfage, pilotage and the like. Leloup v. Mobile, 127 U. S. 640; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 34, citing with approval, Western Union Tel. Co. v. Massachusetts, 125 U. S. 530; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 13.

Thus a state statute (Laws of New York, 1886, ch. 659), authorizing the taxation, by the several towns of the state, of the portions of telegraph lines in such towns, including the interest on the value of the land occupied by the line, all poles, insulators, wires, apparatus, etc., is valid, though such lines may run into other states. People v. Tierney, 57 Hun (N. Y.) 357; People v. Dolan, 126 N. Y. 166.

And the fact that the company has paid a privilege tax does not release it from liability for taxes assessed on its property, such as its poles, wires, instruments, etc. Western Union Tel. Co. v. State, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 509; 40 Am. Rep. 99.

Compare, in this connection, Com. v. Smith (Ky. 1891), 17 S. W. Rep. 187, holding that a statute imposing upon telegraph companies operating in the state a tax of $1 per mile of wire, and an additional sum for each additional wire, and a penalty of $500 upon its agent for failure to pay the tax, is unconstitutional, as attempting to regulate interstate commerce.

1. Tax on Capital Stock of Company.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Massachusetts, 125 U. S. 530; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 13; 33 Fed. Rep. 129 (right of state not affected by Rev. Stat. U. S. §§ 5263–5266). Union Pac. R. Co. v. Peniston, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 5; Thompson v. Pacific R. Co., 9 Wall. (U. S.)

579; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lieb, 76 Ill. 172. See also Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Barnard, 37 Ill. App. 105.

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Massachusetts, 141 U. S. 40, the court, in sustaining the note of the text, said: "The tax, though nominally upon the shares of the capital stock of the company, is in effect a tax upon that organization on account of the property owned and used by it in the state, and the proportion of the length of its lines in that state to their entire length throughout the whole country is made the basis for ascertaining the value of the property. Such a tax is not forbidden by the acceptance on the part of the telegraph company of the rights conferred by section 5263 of the Revised Statutes or by the commerce clause of the constitution. The statute of Massachusetts is intended to govern the taxation of all corporations doing business within its territory, whether organized under its own laws or under those of some other state; and the rule adopted to ascertain the amount of the capital engaged in that business within its boundaries on which the tax should be assessed, is not an unfair or unjust one, and the details of the method by which this was determined have not exceeded the fair range of legislative discretion."

2. Tax Cannot be Collected by Injunction.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Massachusetts, 125 U. S. 530; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 13; In re Pennsylvania Teleph. Co., 48 N. J. Eq. 91; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. erty, and it is sufficient to refer to the treatment of the general subject.¹

2. Of Telephone Companies.—The subject of the taxation of telephone companies involves nothing peculiar, and is embraced in the general subject of corporate taxation.² In so far as the general rule is affected by the fact that the company is engaged in

New York Statute—Mode of Assessment.—New York Laws (1886), ch. 659, provide that telegraph lines shall be assessed "in the manner provided by law for the assessment of lands," and that the word "line" shall include "the interest in the land on which the poles stand, the right or license to erect such poles on land, and all poles, arms, insulators, wires, apparatus, instruments, or other things connected with or used as a part of such line." It is held that, in making the assessment, the property is not to be regarded as a whole, nor as a complete telegraph line in operation, but that the true value is obtained by taking the cost of production of poles, wires, and other apparatus which are in their nature personalty, and adding thereto the value of the company's interest in the land on which the poles stand, and of the right to erect the poles thereon. People v. Dolan, 126 N. Y. 166. In the same case it is held that in arriving at the value of the interest in the land on which the poles stand and of the right to erect such poles, it is to be considered that so far as the line is erected upon the highway, the only interest the company has is a mere license revocable at the will of the legislature, of which license any other company may avail itself. The expense which the company incurred in obtaining the interest is the correct criterion by which to judge of its value.

Interest Where Payment Is Delayed.—Under a statute providing that interest shall be charged upon all taxes not paid on or before a specified date, a telegraph company is liable for interest from the date prescribed, on the amount of taxes payable by it, notwithstanding the fact that payment was delayed pending the decision of an appeal taken from the assessment, in which a reduction of the assessment was obtained. Western Union Tel. Co. v. State, 64 N. H. 265; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 23. See Cooley on Taxation (2d ed.) 456.

2. See TAXATION (CORPORATE), vol. 25.

In People v. American Bell Telephone Co., 117 N. Y. 241; 29 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 616, this state of facts appeared: the American Bell Telephone Company was a Massachusetts corporation, with its home in Boston; it owned the telephone patents. Its practice was to organize sub-corporations in the various states, who became its licensees and operated a telephone system in the various localities, and to lease its instruments to them. The entire business of furnishing telephone service was carried on by these local companies, who operated their lines independently, each having the entire management and control of its own business, and paid to the parent company a monthly rental for all instruments furnished to them. The parent company had no offices or place of business outside of its native state. The New York statute imposed a tax on the gross earnings of all telephone companies "doing business" within the state. It was held that the parent company, i. e., the American Bell Telephone Company, was not a corporation "doing business" in New York, and its receipts were not taxable under the statute. Nor did the fact that the parent company was a stockholder in the local companies of the state, render its local stock taxable under the statute taxing the stock of all corporations "doing business" in the state.

So in Pennsylvania, it is held that the Bell Telephone Company did not render itself liable to taxation under the state statute by having an office within the state, and contracting with local corporations for the introduction and operation of its patents, which contracts provided that it should have the reserved right to take possession of the instruments and use them, upon a breach of the agreement therein provided. Com. v. American Bell Telephone Co., 129 Pa. St. 217. See also Thompson on Electricity, §§ 129-130, where the methods of taxation in the several states is given.

interstate commerce, the rules previously stated as to telegraph companies apply.¹

XII. TELEGRAMS IN EVIDENCE—1. Admissibility.—Ordinarily the general rules of law relative to the admission of letters in evidence apply to telegrams.² A telegram is not admissible as evidence in the absence of proof of its authenticity, either by proof of the handwriting where the original message is offered, or by other evidence of its genuineness.³

Telegraphic dispatches delivered to the company for transmission are admissible as declarations of the sender when proven to be in his handwriting;⁴ and such dispatches, in the form in which they are received by the party to whom they are sent, are evi-

2. U. S. v. Babcock, 3 Dill. (U. S.) 571; Coupland v. Arrowsmith, 18 L. T. N. S. 755; LETTERS, vol. 13, p. 258 et seq.

3. Authenticity of Telegram Must Be Proven.—Burt v. Winona, etc., R. Co., 31 Minn. 472; Chester v. State, 23 Tex. App. 577.

Thus a paper offered in evidence, purporting to contain a dispatch received at a telegraph office, is not admissible as evidence when no proof is given that it was in the handwriting of any person employed in the telegraph office where it purports to have been received, and no other proof of its authenticity is given. Richie v. Bass, 15 La. Ann. 668.

The authenticity of certain telegrams is sufficiently proved prima facie, where one was in an agreed cipher proved to a certainty; others were referred to in exhibits of the other party; and others contained directions to draw drafts, which were drawn and paid. Oregon Steamship Co. v. Otis, 100 N. Y. 446; 14 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 338; 53 Am. Rep. 221.

"Ordinarily the usual course is to show the delivery of the original message of the party sought to be charged, at the office from which it is to be telegraphed, and then show that it was transmitted and delivered at the place of its destination. But even where the original is produced, its authenticity must be established, and this either by proof of the handwriting or by other proof establishing its genuineness. The destruction of all messages sent from the office on the day named is sufficient foundation for the admissibility of secondary evidence. But this secondary evidence can only be admitted upon proof that the copy offered is a correct transcript of a message actually authorized by the party sought to be affected by its contents." Smith v. Easton, 54 Md. 138; 39 Am. Rep. 355.

Upon the trial of an action for the rent of rooms, which defendant denied having finally hired, alleging she merely had the refusal of them, the defendant testified that she sent a telegraphic despatch to one H. at Hartford, stating that if she could find rooms in B. she would stay there; that this telegram was written in ink; and that it was the only one sent by her that day. The plaintiff afterwards offered in evidence a paper taken from the files of the telegraph company dated the day in question, purporting to be an original message from the defendant to H. at Hartford, written in pencil, informing him that she had hired rooms in B.; and called the defendant as a witness to show that the handwriting was hers. The defendant testified that the handwriting was not hers, and that the message sent by her to the telegraph office was written by herself. Held, that the paper, without other evidence to show that it was written or sent by the defendant, was inadmissible. Lewis v. Havens, 40 Conn. 363.

4. Com. v. Jeffries, 7 Allen (Mass.) 548; 83 Am. Dec. 712.

Evidence that a telegram was sent by the defendant to the drawee of an order which he had given to the plaintiff, directing the drawee to withhold a part of the amount specified, and pay the remainder, is competent and relevant, as tending to show an admission by the defendant of indebtedness to the amount, at least, of such remainder. Griggs v. Deal, 30 Mo. App. 152. See also Benford v. Sanner, 40 Pa. St. 9; 80 Am. Dec. 545.

dence of the communication between the parties,¹ and also of the information upon which the addressee may have acted, where his good faith is in question.² The admissibility of telegrams in other particular instances is governed by the usual rules of evidence concerning the admission of documentary evidence.³

2. Primary and Secondary Evidence—(See also LOST PAPERS, vol. 13, p. 1059; SECONDARY EVIDENCE, vol. 21, p. 984).—The principal question arising in this connection is what is the primary or

1. Com. v. Jeffries, 7 Allen (Mass.) 548; 83 Am. Dec. 712; Taylor v. The Robert Campbell, 20 Mo. 254. In this latter case the telegraphic dispatch in reply to one delivered to a boat at Lexington on the Missouri river, agreeing to transport freight, was allowed to be read to the jury as evidence of a contract by the master to the transport to St. Louis.

2. Telegrams transmitted to plaintiffs in attachment by telephone, and reduced to writing by the person who received them, and in that form acted upon by plaintiffs, are admissible as showing the information upon which the attachment was sued out; and it is not necessary that the dispatches should be verified by comparing them with the originals on file with the telegraph company. Deere v. Bagley, 80 Iowa 197.

3. In Particular Cases.—A police officer at the station-house in conversation with a prisoner under arrest for larceny, stood by and saw the prisoner receive and read a telegram, which he afterwards passed to the officer to be read aloud. This the officer did, when the prisoner denied all knowledge of the message or its writer. Held, that the telegram was admissible in evidence for the purpose of enabling the jury to understand the conversation of which it was a part. Com. v. Vosburg, 112 Mass. 419.

Letters and telegrams as to the cancellation of an insurance policy sent by the insurance company to its agent, after a loss, are properly excluded in an action on the policy. Brownfield v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 35 Mo. App. 54; 26 Mo. App. 390. See also Larminie v. Carley, 114 Ill. 196.

In an action for a conspiracy, telegraphic dispatches from the wife of one of the defendants, being neither written nor sent by either of them, are not admissible as evidence against them, for, as declarations of the wife, they could not affect even her husband. Benford v. Sanner, 40 Pa. St. 9; 80 Am. Dec. 545.

In an action for the price of goods sold, a telegram countermanding the order for such goods, though sent to one not a party to the suit, is admissible where it appears that it was intended to be delivered to the plaintiffs, who did in fact come into possession of it and recognized it by replying thereto. Eldridge v. Hargreaves, 30 Neb. 638.

And in an action for breach of an oral contract, all letters and telegrams which passed between the parties in reference to the terms of contract are admissible in evidence. Hammond v. Beeson (Mo. 1891), 15 S. W. Rep. 1000. Compare Richmond v. Sundburg, 77 Iowa 255.

In a prosecution against a person charged with stealing horses, a telegraphic dispatch sent by him offering to sell horses, taken in connection with other circumstances, is evidence tending to show his preparations for flight. State v. Espinozei, 20 Nev. 209. See also Meinert v. Snow, 2 Idaho 851.

Where copies of telegrams relating to a matter about which there is no dispute, have been filed on notice, it is no error to permit the operator who received them to state their contents, where his statement does not materially differ from the copies filed. International, etc., R. Co. v. Prince, 77 Tex. 560.

A telegram from a debtor to persons who have consigned goods to him, informing them of the seizure of the goods by the sheriff under a fiery facias upon chattel mortgages, is inadmissible in their behalf on the trial of their claim to the property. Powell v. Brunner, 86 Ga. 531.

A telegram from the seller of goods to the broker who made the sale, which is partly in cipher and which the buyer is not shown to have read, even if he could, is not admissible to show the terms of the sale, although the tel-best evidence of the communication sent by telegraph. In such communications there are two distinct messages, the one delivered to the telegraph company by the sender, and the one delivered by the company from its receiving office to the sendee; these are ordinarily identical, but not always or necessarily so, though there may be a presumption that they are.¹ The company is employed as the agent of the party sending the message,² and the inquiry usually is as to what message was sent, not what was intended or directed to be sent;³ the general rule, therefore, may be stated to be that the message delivered at the receiving station to the person addressed is the original and is the best evidence of the communication between the parties.⁴ Where, however, the telegraph company acts as the agent of the addressee, egram was placed upon the desk before the buyer during the negotiation of the sale. J. K. Armsby Co. v. Eckerly, 42 Mo. App. 299.

Letters and telegrams from a witness to one party, relating to business and not connected with the question involved, are not competent. Richmond v. Sundburg, 77 Iowa 255.

Correspondence by wire between operators sending and receiving a message, which was not communicated to the sender, is not admissible to show that the person to whom the message was sent was absent from the place of delivery. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cooper, 71 Tex. 507; 10 Am. St. Rep. 772. Nor is the answer of an operator to an inquiry why a message has not been delivered, admissible in an action against the company for failure to deliver it. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Henderson, 89 Ala. 510; 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 615; 18 Am. St. Rep. 148. See also supra, this title, Evidence.

1. The delivery of a message to the company for transmission, properly directed and paid for, creates a presumption that it was received by the addressee as sent. Oregon Steamship Co. v. Otis, 100 N. Y. 447; 53 Am. Rep. 221; U. S. v. Babcock, 3 Dill. (U. S.) 575; *Matte-son v. 3. The rule as to what is original evidence of the message, must depend in a measure upon the subject concerning which evidence is sought. Thus the dispatch delivered to the addressee is original evidence of the communication which passed between the parties, while it may not be original evidence as a declaration of the sender. See Com. v. Jeffries, 7 Allen (Mass.) 548; 83 Am. Dec. 712; Benford v. Sanner, 40 Pa. St. 9; 80 Am. Dec. 545.

The language of the court, by Redfield, C. J., in Durkee v. Vermont Cent. R. Co., 29 Vt. 127, is pertinent here: "In regard to the particular end of the line where inquiry is first to be made for the original, it depends upon which party is responsible for the transmission across the line, or in other words, whose agent the telegraph is. The first communication in a transaction, if it is all negotiated across the wires, will only be effective in the form in which it reaches its destination. In such case, inquiry should first be made for the very dispatch delivered. In default of that, its contents may be shown by the next best proof."

Where telegrams are sent by an em-

the message delivered to it for transmission is 'original evidence of the communication.'¹ In an action against the telegraph company for improperly transmitting a message, the inquiry is necessarily as to the contents of both messages, and in such case each message is original evidence of its own contents.²

Secondary evidence of the contents of a telegram, as, for example, the testimony of a witness, a letter-press or other copy, is admissible only after proof that the original telegram has been lost or destroyed,³ or is beyond the jurisdiction of the court.⁴

ployer to his servant, directing him as to the performance of his duties, the copies thereof delivered from the receiving office must be considered originals, and are admissible in evidence in an action to recover for the services of the servant. Anheuser-Busch Brewing Assoc. v. Huttmacher, 29 Ill. App. 316; aff'd 127 Ill. 652.

The sendee is entitled to put the delivered message in evidence without accounting for the one sent. Saveland v. Green, 40 Wis. 431.

In an action by the assignee of the landlord against a tenant, who has held over after the expiration of his year, in which plaintiff claims that the tenant has become liable to pay a certain increased rent, the copy of a telegram received by the tenant, showing upon its face that it was in response to a letter written by him to the landlord asking for the terms of a renewal, and confirmed by a subsequent letter of the landlord containing the same propositions, is admissible, without producing the original. Thorp v. Philbin, 15 Daly (N. Y.) 155.

1. It has been already seen that the company is generally regarded as the agent of the party proposing it as a medium for correspondence. In such cases, the message as delivered to the company for transmission to such party is original evidence of the communication. See infra, this title, Telegraph Company Ordinarily Agent of Sender. Durkee v. Vermont Cent. R. Co., 29 Vt. 127; Pegram v. Western Union Tel. Co., 100 N. Car. 28; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 150; 6 Am. St. Rep. 567; Magie v. Herman (Minn. 1892), 52 N. W. Rep. 909. See also Whilden v. Merchants', etc., Nat. Bank, 64 Ala. 1; 38 Am. Rep. 1; 2 Rice on Ev., pp. 1017-18.

Thus where a message is sent to a telegraph office to be transmitted in reply to one received which requested an answer by telegraph, the company in transmitting it, acts as the agent of the party requesting the reply, and the message delivered to the company is the original and primary evidence. Smith v. Easton, 54 Md. 138; 39 Am. Rep. 355.

2. The message delivered by the sender is the original wherever the inquiry is as to what words the company was authorized and agreed to deliver. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hopkins, 49 Ind. 223; Reliance Lumber Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 58 Tex. 394; 44 Am. Rep. 620; Com. v. Jeffries, 7 Allen (Mass.) 548; 83 Am. Dec. 712. And where the inquiry is as to what words were actually transmitted by the company to the addressee, the message delivered to the addressee is original evidence. Gray on Telegraphs, § 129, citing Morgan v. People, 59 Ill. 58; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Mahoney, 82 Ill. 73.

3. When Secondary Evidence Admissible.—This is in accordance with an accepted rule of evidence. See 1 Greenleaf on Ev. (14th ed.), §§ 82, 85; Prather v. Wilkins, 68 Tex. 187; McCormick v. Joseph, 83 Ala. 401; Whilden v. Merchants', etc., Nat. Bank, 64 Ala. 1; 38 Am. Rep. 1; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hopkins, 49 Ind. 223; Williams v. Brickell, 37 Miss. 682; 75 Am. A letter-press copy of a letter or telegram is secondary evidence. Anglo-American Packing, etc., Co. v. Cannon, 31 Fed. Rep. 313.

On proof of the destruction of the original, an uncertified copy of a telegram was held to be admissible upon a trial for forgery to show that the respondent, at a certain time, knew of a material fact therein stated. State v. Hopkins, 50 Vt. 316.

4. Pensacola Railroad Company v. Schaffer, 76 Ala. 233; Whilden v. Planters' Bank, 64 Ala. 1; 38 Am. Rep. 1.

But where it is not shown that the message was ever reduced to writing, either at the sending or receiving office, there is no ground for the exclusion of parol evidence of its contents.¹ What constitutes sufficient proof of the loss or destruction of the original telegram and of proper effort to secure it on the part of the party offering secondary evidence, must depend upon circumstances, and, like other matters of proof, varies with particular cases.² The testimony of the clerk who sent the message, that all telegrams were destroyed, is sufficient proof to admit secondary evidence of the message actually delivered to the company for transmission.³ The testimony of the person to whom a telegram is directed is inadmissible to establish its contents as delivered, without proof accounting for the absence of the original and that the alleged writer sent it.⁴

It has been laid down that, in an action against a telegraph company for damages caused by a failure to transmit a message, the original dispatch offered for transmission must be given in evidence, or, if secondary evidence of its contents is offered, its absence must be accounted for, and notice to produce it must have been given.⁵ The better doctrine seems to be that in such case the company is, from the nature of the suit, bound to know that it is charged with possession of the document and will be required to bring it into court; the plaintiff may therefore introduce parol evidence of its contents without previously giving notice to the company to produce it.⁶ Where the action is by the addressee for a failure to deliver the message within a reasonable time after its receipt at its destination, the copy written out at the receiving office and eventually delivered to the addressee, is admissible in evidence without

In an action against the company, the operator in charge of the office from which the telegram was sent, testified that he had sent away all the papers found there shortly after the telegram in question had been sent, and that he had been informed that they had been destroyed. It was held that such testimony was not competent to show the destruction of the telegram for the purpose of proving its contents by parol. American Union Tel. Co. v. Daughtery, 89 Ala. 191.

4. In Williams v. Brickell, 37 Miss. 682; 75 Am. Dec. 88, it was said, however, that the admission of the alleged writer of his sending it and of its contents, is competent without proof of the loss or destruction of the original.

accounting for the original message written by the sender, particularly where there is no claim that the message received by the addressee differed from that offered by the sender for transmission.¹

3. Presumptions Arising from the Sending of a Telegram.—The rule that the deposit of a properly stamped and directed letter in the post office, creates a presumption that it was received in due course of the mail by the person to whom it was addressed, applies also to dispatches delivered to a telegraph company for transmission over its lines.² The presumption, however, is one of fact only and is therefore open to contradiction; it consists merely of the inference which may be drawn from the experienced certainty of transmission.³

While the rule which permits a letter to be admitted in evidence against a party where there is no proof of the handwriting, except that in due course it had been received in reply

v. Hopkins, 49 Ind. 227, the point does not seem to have been pressed in the argument by counsel, or to have been much considered by the court, nor do the authorities cited in support of the position sustain the view taken." The court quotes with approval the language of Mr. Wharton (1 Wharton on Ev. (2d ed.), § 159), to the effect that: "Notice to produce is not necessary in respect to a document described in the pleadings as that on which the suit is brought; nor where, from any reason connected with the form of the suit, the party is bound to know that he is charged with the possession of the document, and will be required to bring it into court." In an action for failure to deliver a message, it is not error to admit a copy of the message properly identified fourteen months after its receipt for transmission by the company, where it is first shown by the manager at the transmitting office that the original is not in his office or under his control, and that by the rules of the company, original messages are retained in the transmitting office for six months and then sent to Chicago, where they are destroyed. *Western Union Tel. 3. Oregon Steamship Co. v. Otis, 100 N. Y. 451; 53 Am. Rep. 221. In this case the court, by Finch, J., after laying down the rule stated in the text, said: "It may be that the presumption of correct delivery agreeing in kind with that raised upon delivery to the post office, should be deemed weaker in degree, but in view of the wide extension of telegraph facilities and of their increasing use in business correspondence, and the difficulty of tracing a dispatch to its destination, we think it should be held that upon proof of the delivery of a message for the purpose of transmission, properly addressed, a

to a letter which had been addressed to the same party, applies to a dispatch in answer to a communication by letter, but is inapplicable to a dispatch sent in reply to a communication by telegraph.¹ Nor is the fact that a dispatch was forwarded to a person at a certain place, and that an answer purporting to be from him was received in due course, evidence that such person was at that place at that particular time.² The receipt of a message over the wires at the point of destination creates a presumption that the message was sent from the office from which it purports to come.³

4. Telegrams as Privileged Communications.—In most of the states statutes exist which forbid, under penalty, the disclosure of the contents of any message by the company receiving it for transmission.⁴ But these statutes do not, it seems, establish a principle of public policy similar to that which exists in favor of letters sent through the mail.⁵ While there is some conflict of opinion as to whether they have the effect of making telegrams privileged communications, the weight of authority is in favor of presumption of fact arises that the telegram reached its destination, sufficient at least to put the other party to his denial and raise an issue to be determined." See also Home Ins. Co. v. Marple, 1 Ind. App. 411.

2. That Sender Was at Place From Which Message Was Sent.—"The fact that an answer is received to a letter, may raise such presumption (1 Greenl. Ev. (14th ed.), § 578). But in the case of a telegraphic communication, the ground of belief amounts merely to this: that the operator at one end of the line has informed the operator at the other end, of the presence of the sender of the answer. This is mere hearsay." Howley v. Whipple, 48 N. H. 487.

4. Statutes Forbidding Disclosure of Telegrams by Company.—Thus the Code of Tennessee, §§ 1541-2, provides that all messages, including those received from other companies, "shall be kept strictly confidential," and that any officer or agent of the company who willfully violates this provision is "guilty of a misdemeanor, and he and the telegraph company or proprietor are also liable in damages to the party aggrieved." See also Code of Mississippi (1892), § 1301; Laws North Carolina (1889), ch. 41, p. 61; Pub. Acts, Connecticut (1889), ch. 30, p. 18; Wisconsin Rev. Stat., § 4557; Iowa Code, § 1328; 18 Am. L. Reg. 65 (article by Mr. Cooley); Gray on Telegraphs, § 120.

Where the contents of a telegram were disclosed by the agent who received it, the sender is entitled to damages sustained thereby, notwithstanding his failure to comply with a stipulation by presenting a claim therefor within 60 days, the disclosure having been fraudulently concealed until after the expiration of such time, and then discovered by accident. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Todd (Tex. 1892), 19 S. W. Rep. 761. In such a case the jury is to judge as to what is a reasonable time within which presentation must be made. Thorp v. Western Union Tel. Co., 84 Iowa 190.

5. Ex p. Brown, 72 Mo. 91; 37 Am. Rep. 426. In this case the court, by Henry, J., said: "There is no such analogy between the transmission of communications by mail, and their transmission by telegraph, as would justify the application to the latter of the principles which obtain with respect to the former; and certainly penal statutes in relation to the one, cannot by the courts be declared applicable to the other." Wharton on Ev. (3d ed.), § 595.

the rule that under such statutes telegrams are not privileged, and their production into court may be compelled under a subpoena duces tecum or other appropriate process, even at the instance of one not a party to the communication.¹ The authorities which favor a different rule do so on the ground that telegraphic correspondence is analogous to that conducted by mail,

Mr. Cooley insists, however, that such statutes are not restricted in their force to the imposition of penalties for disobedience, but they announce and establish a principle of public policy which is violated as distinctly when a telegram is brought into court for public exposure as when it is privately shown to persons having no right to see it. 18 Am. L. Reg. 72.

In State v. Litchfield, 58 Me. 269, the court said: "Nor can telegraphic communications be deemed any more confidential than any other communications. They are not to be protected to aid the robber or assassin in the consummation of their felonies, or to facilitate their escape after the crime has been committed. . . . Telegraphic companies cannot rightfully claim that the messages of rogues and criminals, which they may innocently or ignorantly transmit, should be withheld whenever the cause of justice renders their production necessary." Compare 18 Am. L. Reg. 72.

"The facts that railroad train orders are generally communicated by telegraph, that a vast amount of trade and traffic is transacted through this medium, that it has become of almost equal importance in the commerce of this country with the postal system, and that in a business sense men are compelled to communicate by telegraph, are for the consideration of the legislative branch of the government in determining the propriety of placing telegraphic communications on the same footing with correspondence by mail, or declaring them privileged; but the annunciation of such a doctrine by the court would be an assumption of power which belongs to the legislative department. Ex p. Brown, 72 Mo. 91; 37 Am. Rep. 426."

In Henisler v. Friedman, 2 Pars. Sel. Cas. (Pa.) 274, it is said in ordering the production of a telegram: "The telegraph may be used with the most absolute security for purposes destructive to the well-being of society, a state of things rendering its usefulness at least questionable. The correspondence of the traitor, the murderer, the robber and the swindler, by means of which their crimes and frauds could be the more readily accomplished and their detection and punishment avoided, would become things so sacred that they could never be accessible to public justice, however deep might be the public interest involved in their production." Mr. Cooley, in answer to this, suggests that the same correspondence of the traitor and murderer are already made so "sacred" by the laws of the United States that they are not accessible; that "the same law that protects the correspondence of offenders against the laws, protects that between the husband and wife, the parent and child, the lover and his mistress, the principal and his agent, the partner and his associate, the official and his constituent; in short, the correspondence in every relation of life. To protect the correspondence of the criminal is not the purpose of the post office laws; it is protected incidentally in protecting the general correspondence of the country and because no possible method could be devised of discovering that which is meretricious without disclosing the infinitely larger quantity which is innocent." 18 Am. L. Reg. 72.

and that the policy of the law which protects letters from the process of the courts should extend to telegrams.¹

Under the constitutional provisions for the protection of private papers from unreasonable searches and seizures, the subpoena or other process for the production of the telegrams must specify with exactness the particular dispatches to be produced; a general description, as for example, all the dispatches which passed between certain parties during a time specified, is too indefinite.²

1. Cooley's Const. Lim. (5th ed.), p. 372.

In 18 Am. L. Reg. 65 et seq., Mr. Cooley discusses the subject and ably contends for a rule opposed to that of the text. He announces, in conclusion, that the doctrine that telegraph authorities may be required by legal process to produce private messages upon the application of third persons, is objected to on the following grounds:

"1. That it defeats the policy of the law, which invites free communication, and to the extent that it may discourage correspondence, it operates as a restraint upon industry and enterprise, and, what is of equal importance, upon intimate social and family correspondence.

"2. It violates the confidence which the law undertakes to render secure, and makes the promise of the law a deception.

"3. It seeks to reach a species of evidence which, from the very course of the business, parties are interested to render blind and misleading, and which, therefore, must often present us with error in the guise of truth, under circumstances which preclude a discovery of the deception.

"4. It renders one of the most important conveniences of modern life susceptible at any moment of being used as an instrument of infinite mischiefs in the community."

In England, in a contested election case, the court held that telegrams were not subject to a subpoena from the court. This case is explainable, however, on the ground that in England the telegraph service, like that of the mails, is under governmental control. See Wharton on Ev. (3d ed.), § 595, note.

2. Sufficiency of Description in Subpoena Duces Tecum.—In Ex p. Brown, 72 Mo. 83; 37 Am. Rep. 426, reversing 7 Mo. App. 484, the subpoena duces tecum, commanding the production of certain telegrams before the grand jury, described them as follows: "Dispatches between Dr. J. C. N. and A. B. W., and W. L. and J. C. N., and W. L. and Dr. N., between W. McC. and A. B. W., between W. McC. and J. C. N., between the latter and J. S. P., between A. B. W. and J. S. P., between the latter and W. L. and between G. W. A. and A. B. W., sent or received by or between any or all of said parties within fifteen months last past." In the lower court it was held that the description was sufficiently definite, Lewis, J., dissenting in an opinion which was adopted as the correct view by the supreme court. This court considered that to allow the seizure and search of private papers under such a subpoena would be unwarrantable and a gross violation of the constitutional provisions against the invasion of private property, and said: "A compliance with the order might have resulted in the production of confidential communications between husband and wife, client and attorney, confessor and penitent, parent and child. Matters which it deeply concerned the parties to keep secret from the world, and of no importance or value as evidence in any cause, might thus be disclosed, to the annoyance and shame of the only persons interested. Nor is it any answer to this that the obligation of secrecy imposed by law on grand juries would prevent such exposure." It is also said, "To permit an indiscriminate search among all the papers in one's possession, for no particular paper, but for some paper which may throw some light on some issue involved in the trial of some cause pending, would lead to consequences that can be contemplated only with horror, and such a process is not to be tolerated among a free people." XIII. TELEPHONIC COMMUNICATIONS AS EVIDENCE.—Conversations conducted through the medium of a telephone do not differ in their essential characteristics from any other verbal communications; their admissibility and effect as evidence are therefore governed by the same legal principles which apply in case of ordinary oral declarations. The instrument merely enables the parties to carry on their conversation at a greater distance than under ordinary circumstances.¹ There may be cases, however, in which the fact that the voice is not recognizable and that neither party can be absolutely sure of the identity of the person conversing with him, may necessitate the application of exceptional rules.²

(5th ed.), p. 372. See also U. S. v. Hunter, 15 Fed. Rep. 712.

The rule for specification and description in subpoenas for such cases is thus laid down by Dillon, J., in U. S. v. Babcock, 3 Dill. (U. S.) 570: "The papers are required to be stated or specified only with that degree of certainty which is practicable, considering all the circumstances of the case, so that the witness may be able to know what is wanted of him, and to have the papers on the trial, so that they can be used if the court shall then determine that they are competent and relevant evidence." The conclusion of this case is considered incorrect in Ex p. Brown, 72 Mo. 96; 37 Am. Rep. 426. See Gray on Telegraphs, § 125.

In Re Smith, L. R., 7 Ir. 286, a subpoena from the Irish bankruptcy court ordered the production of all telegrams sent by the bankrupt after a certain date. The secretary of the post office was required by the court to produce the documents described.

In Oskamp v. Gadsden, 35 Neb. 7, defendant at the public telephone station at S. asked the operator to call up plaintiff at his place of business in O. Plaintiff answered the call, but owing to peculiar atmospheric conditions then prevailing they were unable to communicate directly with each other. The operator at F., an intermediate station, offered to and did transmit to plaintiff, defendant's message offering to sell him goods, and repeated plaintiff's reply. In an action for a breach of contract it was held that the conversation was admissible in evidence and that the defendant might state the contents of plaintiff's answer as repeated to him by the operator at F. See also Sullivan v. Kuykendall, 82 Ky. 483; 56 Am. Rep. 901; Globe Printing Co. v. Stahl, 23 Mo. App. 458.

In an action against a carrier for goods received, a witness testified over objection that he demanded the goods of the defendant's agent through the telephone, but did not remember the name of the person of whom he made the demand. It was held that the objection was properly overruled, as the witness's failure to remember the name affected only the weight of the evidence, and not its competency. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Heidenheimer, 82 Tex. 195.

"The use of this instrument (the telephone) facilitates business to such an extent that it would be very prejudicial to the interests of the business community, if the courts were to hold that business men are not entitled to act upon the faith of being able to give in evidence replies which they received to communications made by them to persons at their usual places of business in this way." Globe Printing Co. v. Stahl, 23 Mo. App. 451; Thompson on Electricity, § 125.

2. Recognising Voice of Speaker.—The fact that the witness, testifying as to a conversation between himself and another, did not recognize the speaker's voice, does not affect the admissibility of the evidence, but only its weight. *Wolfe v. A notice by telephone is verbal and is, therefore, insufficient under a statute requiring all notices to be in writing.¹

XIV. CONTRACTS BY TELEGRAPH—1. In General.—Communication by telegraph does not differ essentially from correspondence through the mails, and contracts may be made by it as well as by letter.² The written message given for transmission is a sufficient writing to constitute a memorandum within the meaning of the Statute of Frauds,³ and it seems that the same is true of a message dic-person over the telephone, and recognized his voice, he may give in evidence the communication which the latter made to him. People v. Ward, 3 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 483.

In Sullivan v. Kuykendall, 82 Ky. 483; 56 Am. Rep. 901, it appeared that appellee, K., being unaccustomed to the telephone, asked the operator at M. to converse with appellant S. through the telephone for him. The operator consented and conducted a conversation with S. repeating to K. what S. had to say, and replying as K. dictated. It was held that the operator must be regarded as K.'s agent, and that it was competent to prove by him the messages sent by S.

"A message, so far as the responsibility of its sender is concerned, may be deemed equivalent to a letter, or, rather, since it is open to the inspection of the telegraph company, to a postal card coming from the same person and containing the same intelligence. For instance, such a message may satisfy the Statute of Frauds or may be a libel." Gray on Telegraphic Communication, § 103, citing Coupland v. Arrowsmith, 18 L. T. N. S., 755; Beach v. Raritan, etc., R. Co., 37 N. Y. 457; Williamson v. Freer, L. R., 9 C. P. 393.

A telegram from an employer to one whom he has employed to render certain services, that he will leave at a certain time direct for the mine, is admissible against the former's estate as evidence of the employment. Meinert v. Snow, 2 Idaho 851.

A telegram sent by C. to R. saying: "You can lease Glen Allen for ten thousand dollars," with a response accepting the proposition by saying: "Satisfactory, will take Glen Allen," in connection with a previous letter proposing to lease the premises, shows a specific proposition accepted by one of the parties, and constitutes a contract. Calhoun v. Atchison, 4 Bush (Ky.) 261; 96 Am. Dec. 299.

3. As to Statute of Frauds.—Smith v. Easton, 54 Md. 146; 39 Am. Rep. 355; Watson v. Baker, 71 Tex. 739; Little v. Dougherty, 11 Colo. 103; Ex p. Brown, 7 Mo. App. 487; McBlain v. Cross, 25 L. T. N. S. 804; Godwin v. Francis, L. R., 5 C. P. 295; Gray on Telegraphs, § 138 et seq. B. having contracted with C., defendant's brother, for the sale of hay, brought an action against defendant for not accepting. At the trial, the judge admitted letters and telegrams signed by C., as evidence against defendant, and the jury found for the plaintiff. Held, that there was sufficient evidence of the authority, and that the two telegrams, of which one was signed in C.'s name, and in the other the name of the defendant was not mentioned as buyer, together constituted a sufficient memorandum of the contract to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, on the ground that

Contracts made by telegraph are governed by the same rules applying in the case of contracts by letter, the details of which have been examined in a previous article.² The contract in the latter case becomes complete when the party to whom the offer was made deposits his acceptance of the offer in the mail; the post office is made the agent of the party making the offer, to communicate the offer to the offeree and to receive his acceptance.³ A revocation of the offer can have no effect unless com-the defendant might be treated as the undisclosed principal of C., who appeared on the telegrams to be liable as principal. McBlain v. Cross, 25 L. T. N. S. 804.

A telegram sent in pursuance of a previous correspondence by letter, may constitute "an unconditional promise in writing to accept a bill before it is drawn," and amount to an actual acceptance under the statute, so as to preclude the necessity of presentment for acceptance or payment. Whilden v. Merchants', etc., Nat. Bank, 64 Ala. 1; 38 Am. Rep. 1.

Telegrams, however, which are signed by a person and relate to a contract, but do not state its terms or conditions, are not sufficient to take the contract out of the Statute of Frauds. 2 Rice on Ev., p. 1020; Hazard v. Day, 14 Allen (Mass.) 487; 92 Am. Dec. 790; Allen Tel. Cas. 319.

A defective memorandum of sale cannot be helped out by a telegram from one of the parties with which the other is in no wise connected. J. K. Armsby Co. v. Eckerly, 42 Mo. App. 299.

So also telegrams between a sheriff and a third person are inadmissible to show an agreement between a sheriff and a county in relation to their subject-matter. Yavapai County v. O'Neil (Arizona, 1892), 29 Pac. Rep. 430.

Telegrams concerning the sale of property are not a sufficient memorandum under the statute, where it is impossible to tell from them exactly what property is intended to be included, and the parties disagree as to what property is meant. Breckinridge v. Crocker, 78 Cal. 529.

1. In the greater number of cases, the telegraph company is the agent of the sender, and he is therefore bound by the message it delivers, whether correct or not. In such cases it is apparent that the real telegram is that delivered to the sendee and it has all the binding effect of the one actually signed by the sender, the party to be charged. See infra, this title, Telegraph Company Ordinarily Agent of Sender. Magie v. Herman (Minn. 1892), 52 N. W. Rep. 909; Saveland v. Green, 40 Wis. 431; Henkel v. Pape, L. R., 6 Exch. 7.

This rule applies, of course, only where the acceptance is forwarded within a reasonable time. Maclay v. Harvey, 90 Ill. 525; 32 Am. Rep. 35; SALES, vol. 21, p. 444.

The rule of the Massachusetts courts is contrary to that generally adopted, and is recognized by that court as being opposed by the weight of authority. It is there held that where a party makes an offer by mail, and afterwards revokes it, the letter of revocation takes effect as a revocation at the time it is municated to the offeree before his acceptance.¹ The same rules apply where the telegraph, instead of the postal service, is made the means of communication.² The fact that the message, unlike the letter, is liable to become materially changed in the process of transmission by negligence on the part of the operators of the telegraph, introduces no element of difference; the message as handed to the addressee is the real message and any damage sustained by either party is to be redressed by an action against the negligent company.³ Nor does the fact that the telegraph, unlike the post office, is a private institution, owned and operated by private individuals, create any distinction between the effect of correspondence conducted through them.⁴

It will be observed that in the case of contracts by telegraph the telegraph company is the agent of the party who proposes it as a means of communication; this is usually, though not always, deposited in the mail, and not at the time it was received by the addressee. So that where an offer is made on Monday, by letter, and revoked by another mail on Tuesday, and the acceptance is mailed on Wednesday (before receipt of revoking letter), there is no contract. McCulloch v. Eagle Ins. Co., 1 Pick. (Mass.) 278; Lewis v. Browning, 130 Mass. 173. In this latter case, an offer was made by letter, in which the offerer requested an answer by telegraph, "yes" or "no," and stated that unless he received the answer by a certain day he would conclude "no." It was held that the offer was made dependent upon the actual receipt and not the mere sending of the telegram. In Langdell on Contracts, §§ 6, 11, 15, it is contended that a contract by mail is not made until the offerer reads the letter of acceptance. See Gray on Telegraphs, p. 197, note.

A necessary result of the rule of the text is the principle that the contract takes place where the acceptance is deposited in the mail; its formation is complete at that time and place, without regard to the place of performance. SALES, vol. 21, p. 444; Perry v. Mt. Hope Iron Co., 15 R. I. 380; 2 Am. St. Rep. 902.

Browning*, 130 Mass. 175; McCulloch v. Eagle Ins. Co., 1 Pick. (Mass.) 278; Holmes on Com. Law 305-307. A debtor offered his creditor's agent a certain amount in discharge of all his indebtedness, with the agreement that the creditor's acceptance or rejection should be telegraphed to him. It was held that an acceptance so telegraphed completed the contract and became binding upon the debtor, notwithstanding the fact that a few minutes after it was delivered to the telegraph company for transmission, and before it reached him, the debtor telegraphed to the creditor his revocation of the offer. Cobb v. Foree, 38 Ill. App. 255.

4. "This distinction is immaterial, it seems, upon the question whether either a telegraph company or the post office is the agent of a private individual to complete a contract in his behalf. A telegraph company is employed to communicate a certain message. It neither undertakes, nor is authorized to go further, and effect as an agent, the purposes for which the communication of that message is desired by the employer. It is simply a forwarder of messages." Gray on Telegraphs, § 113, citing Dickson v. Reuter's Tel. Co., 2 C. P. Div. 62; 19 Moak's Rep. 313; aff'd 3 C. P. Div. 1; 30 Moak's Rep. 1.

the sender of the first dispatch in the transaction. Such party, by sending a telegram, impliedly invites a continuance of the correspondence by the same means. He is, therefore, bound by the terms of the messages as delivered to the addressee and as delivered by the addressee to the company for transmission to himself; he assumes responsibility for errors both ways.¹ A party by acceding to the proposition made by another to correspond by telegraph does not thereby impliedly warrant that his communication will be received as sent or received at all.²

The ordinary rules of law, as to the character of the offer and the acceptance, prevail where the contract is by telegraph; and a party cannot claim that the negligence of the company prevented the consummation of an important contract, and recover damages accordingly, when the communication would not have completed the contract if it had been delivered.³

1. Telegraph Company the Agent of Party Proposing It as the Means of Communication.—In the case of Trevor v. Wood, 36 N. Y. 307; 93 Am. Dec. 511, reversing 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 255, the parties mutually agreed to correspond by telegraph on January 30th, 1860. T. telegraphed to W. to know at what price he would sell a given number of Mexican dollars. On the 31st W. answered, "Will deliver fifty thousand" at a price named. On the same day, T. replied, "Your offer accepted," and again to the same effect on February 1st. In consequence of a derangement of the lines, it did not reach W. until February 4th. On the 3d of February, W. telegraphed, "No answer to our dispatch of the 31st. Dollars sold." It was held that the correspondence showed a valid acceptance and the contract was binding upon W. See also Magie v. Herman (Minn. 1892), 52 N. W. Rep. 909; Wilson v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 31 Minn. 483; Durkee v. Vermont Cent. R. Co., 29 Vt. 127. In Pegram v. Western Union Tel. Co., 100 N. Car. 28; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 150; 6 Am. St. Rep. 567, a broker sent a telegram to plaintiff asking information as to certain stocks, concluding: "Answer." Plaintiff sent a telegram in reply, but it was incorrectly transmitted. The court held in substance, that the telegraph company was not the plaintiff's agent.

Co., 67 Miss. 386, it appeared that plaintiff's agent wrote to him, stating that he had "hit on" a desirable piece of property which could be bought on certain terms, and advising him to respond by wire if a purchase was desired. Plaintiff replied instructing the agent to close the contract, but the message was not delivered for several days and the opportunity to make the purchase was lost. It was held that the correspondence did not constitute a contract, there having been no distinct offer. So in the case of Ford v. Gebhardt, 114 Mo. 298, A made B an offer to purchase his land, to which B replied by telegraph, "Will accept $900 if not sold otherwise." Soon afterwards B sold the land to a third party with whom he had been negotiating before he sent the telegram. It was held that the message did not constitute an absolute agreement to sell.

In reply to a proposition by letter to sell from three to five thousand bales of cotton on stated terms, a cablegram was sent: "We offer firm for 1,000 bales," etc. In response, the following telegram was delivered by plaintiff for transmission and was lost, "Accept the offer. How much?" It was held that the trial court should have held as a matter of law, without submitting the question to the jury, that had the contract been consummated by the delivery of the telegram, it would only have been for the sale of 1,000 bales, and damages should have been allowed accordingly. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Way, 83 Ala. 542. See also Breckinridge v. Croker, 78 Cal. 529 (correspondence held not to constitute a contract).

2. Telegraph Company Ordinarily Agent of Sender.—Ordinarily, in communication by telegraph, the telegraph company is to be regarded as the agent of the party sending the dispatch.¹ An exception prevails, however, where a continued correspondence is conducted by telegraph; in such case the company acts as the agent of the party proposing it as a means of communication.² The effect of this rule of law is to make the telegram delivered to the addressee original evidence of the communication,³ and to make the sender bound by the terms of the message delivered to the addressee, however much it may have become changed in the process of transmission.⁴

1. Company is Sender's Agent.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Shotter, 71 Ga. 760; Wilson v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 31 Minn. 481; Magie v. Herman (Minn. 1892), 52 N. W. Rep. 909; *Howley v. In Ayer v. Western Union Tel. Co., 79 Me. 493; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 145; 1 Am. St. Rep. 353, the plaintiff sent by the telegraph company a message offering to sell to the addressee "800 M laths, two ten net." The message as delivered to the addressee read "two net," the word "ten" being omitted. The addressee replied by telegraph accepting the offer. The plaintiff at his insistence shipped the laths at two dollars per thousand and brought an action against the telegraph company to recover the difference in the prices, ten cents per thousand. It was held that he might recover such difference on the ground that the company acted as his agent; and that he was bound by the terms of the message as delivered by the addressee.

Western Union Tel. Co. v. Shotter, 71 Ga. 760, is a parallel case. The sender wrote his message, "Can deliver hundred turpentine at sixty-four;" as delivered to the addressee it read "sixty" instead of "sixty-four." The addressee having sent an acceptance of the offer, the court held that the sender was bound by the terms of the incorrect message and was bound to ship the hundred at "sixty," but that he might recover of the company for the loss sustained.

In Dunning v. Roberts, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 463, the plaintiff, D., requested R., who was not an employé of the telegraph company, to send a message to the effect that he would guarantee the payment of a bill for certain goods. R., having by mistake sent an original instead of a collateral promise, it was held that he acted as D.'s agent and D. thereby became liable as an original promisor.

In Pegram v. Western Union Tel. Co., 100 N. Car. 28; 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 150; 6 Am. St. Rep. 567, S., a broker in Richmond, sent to plaintiff a letter: "If your customer will offer 100 shares C. stocks at 43, please wire us at our expense." Shortly afterward

In England, a different rule is adopted, in that the sender is held to be not bound by the terms of a message incorrectly transmitted, even though the addressee incurs trouble and expense acting upon the faith of the message delivered to him.¹ In view of another rule prevailing in this jurisdiction, to the effect that the addressee of a message has no right of action against the telegraph company for incorrectly transmitting a message,² it seems that cases might not infrequently occur in which an injured party plaintiff addressed this message to B.: "Party offer 100 shares C. stock at forty-three. Answer quickly;" but the company in transmitting this message left out the word "three." B. on receiving the message (incorrectly transmitted) answered: "Will take the hundred shares," etc. Thereupon the plaintiff purchased one hundred shares, made his draft on B. for their price at "forty-three" (i. e. $43.00 per share), and sent it to a Richmond bank with stock attached to be delivered to B. upon payment of the draft. B. sold the stock while in transitu at forty-one seventy-five; but when the draft was presented, refused to pay it because it was at forty-three instead of forty. B. was compelled to purchase other stock to fulfill his contract of sale, and he afterwards brought suit in Richmond and recovered of the plaintiff the amount lost by him from his being compelled to discharge his contract with other stock purchased at higher prices. The plaintiff then brought his action in North Carolina against the telegraph company to recover as damages the amount recovered of him by B. The court held that he had a cause of action and might recover the price paid for the transmission of the message, but that beyond that he could recover nothing. Merrimon, J., said: "But he could not recover damages for any injury sustained by the persons—the brokers—to whom his message was falsely transmitted, by reason thereof, because the injury done to them was not an injury to him. He had no cause of action on that account; they had, if they so sustained injury. Nor was the plaintiff liable to the brokers for any such injury sustained by them, or on account of the breach of any contract with them, created by the message as transmitted, because he did not send, or direct the defendant to transmit, the message it transmitted. He did not offer or agree to sell to the brokers the stock at 'forty.' They had no contract with him. . . .

It (the company) transmitted the false message to them in its own wrong, and it alone was answerable to them for any injury they sustained thereby. . . . The plaintiff had done them no injury." It appeared that when the suit in Richmond was begun against plaintiff, he notified the company to defend, which it declined to do. In Thompson on Electricity, § 484, note, this decision is considered wrong. See Trevor v. Wood, 36 N. Y. 307; 93 Am. Dec. 511, where a party sending an offer by telegram, was held bound by an acceptance which the company wholly failed to transmit. Compare Washington, etc., Tel. Co. v. Hobson, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 122.

1. Doctrine in England.—Thus in the case of Henkel v. Pape, L. R., 6 Exch. 7, the defendant wrote a message for transmission by telegraph to the plaintiffs, ordering three rifles. By mistake the telegraph clerk telegraphed the word "the" for "three," and the plaintiffs thereupon, acting upon a previous communication with the defendant to the effect that he might perhaps want as many as fifty rifles, sent that number to him. He declined to take more than three. In an action against him to recover the price of the fifty rifles, held, that he was not responsible for the mistake of the telegraph clerk, and that therefore the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the price of more than three rifles. Verdin v. Robertson, 10 Sc. Sess. Cas. (3d Series) 35. See Western Union Tel. Co. v. Shotter, 71 Ga. 760, in which the English rule is accounted for by the fact that over there the telegraph is a governmental institution. But it seems that this was not the case at the time these decisions were made. See 8 Jac. Fish. Dig., "Telegraphs."

would be without redress.¹ In at least one state in the Union the English rule is adopted and the company is not regarded as being the sender's agent, but as an independent contractor.²

1. Of the holding of English cases in this regard, Mr. Thompson says: "The result is, that he (the addressee) acts on the message at his peril, and if there is a mistake in it, in consequence of which he suffers loss, he cannot recover damages of anyone. Such a condition of the law illustrates an obtuse sense of justice on the part of the judges by whom it has been formulated." Thompson on Electricity, § 480.

2. Tennessee Doctrine.—In Pepper v. Western Union Tel. Co., 87 Tenn. 554; 25 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 542; 10 Am. St. Rep. 699. B., merchants of Birmingham, sent to plaintiff by the defendant company, asking for quotation of prices of certain meats; plaintiff replied that for the meat specified, their price was "six sixty," meaning six dollars and sixty cents. The telegraph company transmitted the message "six thirty," instead of "six sixty." B. thereupon ordered a carload of the meat, amounting to twenty-five thousand pounds, but after it was delivered refused to pay for it at a greater rate than six thirty (i. e. six dollars and thirty cents per hundred weight). The plaintiff accepted payment at six thirty, and brought an action against the telegraph company for the loss sustained from the difference in prices. The court held that, ordinarily, the loss would not be the difference in the price at which the sender was willing to sell and the price at which, in consequence of the error, he was obliged to sell; but under the circumstances of this particular case the difference in the prices should be taken as the proper measure of damages. It was held however, that the plaintiff was not bound to sell at six thirty merely because the incorrect message so stated; that the telegraph company was not the plaintiff's agent nor was he bound by its acts. In defense of this holding, the court, by Folkes, J., said: "Ordinarily there is no relation of master and servant between the sender of the telegram and the company. Where this relationship does not exist the principal is not responsible for the torts of the agent, and the negligent delivery of an altered message, when acted on by the receiver to his detriment, is a tort for which the telegraph company alone is responsible. The company retaining exclusive control of the manner of performance and of its own employes and instrumentalities, the sender of the message being absolutely without voice in the matter, it seems to us that the position of the company to its employer is that of 'independent contractor,' as defined and understood in the well-settled class of cases, where the employer is held to be not responsible for the negligence of the contractor in the performance of his work or undertaking. The many and marked differences between the employment of such companies to transmit a dispatch and the employment of a private person to deliver a verbal message, are so manifest that we cannot assume the liability of the sender in the first instance from his conceded liability in the last, for the negligence of the instrumentality employed. Such a holding not only does violence to the well-settled principles of the law of agency, but may lead to the absolute ruin of the party employing this useful and now necessary public medium of rapid transmission of intelligence." The court then proceeds to a criticism of the American authorities holding the other way. It seems that this case is justly pronounced "self-contradictory." Thompson on Electricity, § 480. It laid down one rule of damages as correct, but applied another; moreover, it affirmed the judgment of the lower court, which was based on the principle that the company acted as the sender's agent.

Texas Rule.—The view taken by the English and the Tennessee courts has also been adopted to some extent in Texas. It is held in Harrison v. Western Union Tel. Co. (Tex. 1885), 10 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 600, that one who uses the telegraph as a mode of communication, is not responsible for, nor bound by, the errors of the operator, and any sums which such party pays to the addressee in consequence of such errors are voluntary and gratuitous, and cannot be recovered of the company. The case does not seem to have been thoroughly considered, however; nor was it a decision of the supreme court.

And this view is deemed the correct one also and has received the countenance of a leading text writer.¹

XV. DISTRICT TELEGRAPH COMPANIES.—Companies of this kind exist in all cities; their business is principally, if not exclusively, the furnishing of messenger boys to perform such services as delivering or calling for messages or parcels or attending to other similar matters. Such companies are subject to the same general duties as ordinary telegraph companies; they are liable for damages caused by the negligence of their servants to whom the performance of any service is intrusted.²

TELLER—(See also BANKS AND BANKING, vol. 2, p. 120; NATIONAL BANKS, vol. 16, p. 204; SAVINGS BANKS, vol. 21, p. 716).—The office of a teller is implied in the word used to designate it—to tell or count the moneys of the bank which are received or paid out. The office is often divided into two branches: that of receiving teller and of paying teller, where the business of the bank is large and the duties cannot conveniently be united in one person.³

TEMPERATE; TEMPERANCE—(See also LIFE INSURANCE, vol. 13, pp. 636, 639).—The word temperance has no fixed legal meaning as contradistinguished from its usual import. Webster defines it as “habitual moderation in regard to the indulgence of the natural appetites and passions; restrained or moderate indul-

1. In Gray on Telegraphs, § 104, note, the English rule is strongly contended for. The cases are all examined by that authority, and the conclusion reached is that “as a matter of fact it has been decided in a single instance only (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Shotter, 71 Ga. 760), that the sender is bound by the terms of a message incorrectly transmitted.” The expressions used in the other cases are pronounced to be dicta and uncalled for.

2. In American Dist. Tel. Co. v. Walker, 72 Md. 454; 35 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 90; 20 Am. St. Rep. 479, the plaintiffs had hired a buggy and horses, and on returning, stopped at the office of the district telegraph company, and asked for a boy who could drive the horses back to the livery stable. A boy was sent out who took charge of the horses, but owing to his negligence and incompetence, the horses ran away and injured themselves and the vehicle. It was held, that the company was liable for the damages thus occasioned; also that the plaintiffs, though they were only bailees for hire, could maintain the action to recover such damages. See also Newton v. Pope, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 109; Brind v. Dale, 2 M. & Rob.

90; 8 Car. & P. 207; 34 E. C. L. 355; Searle v. Laverick, L. R. 9 Q. B. 122; Harker v. Dement, 9 Gill (Md.) 13; 52 Am. Dec. 670. This latter case involved the question of plaintiff's right to maintain the action.

So, also, such a company is liable for a loss occasioned by the delivery, by its messengers, of a parcel, contrary to the instructions of the sender. Feiber v. Manhattan Dist. Tel. Co., 22 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. C. P.) 121.

Although such companies are called telegraph companies, and are organized under the statute providing for the incorporation of telegraph companies, it may well be questioned whether they are like telegraph companies in the character of their liability. It would seem that in serving the public as carriers of parcels, their liability would be that of an insurer. See Feiber v. Manhattan Dist. Tel. Co., 22 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. C. P.) 121; CARRIERS OF GOODS, vol. 2, pp. 782-3; supra, this title, Legal Status of Telegraphs and Telephones.

TEMPEST.—An extensive current of wind rushing with great velocity and violence; a storm of extreme violence.²

TEMPORARY.—That which is to last for a limited time, as a temporary statute, or one which is limited in its operation for a particular period of time after its enactment; the opposite of perpetual.³

In Meacham v. New York State Mut. Ben. Assoc., 120 N. Y. 237, it was said: "This court said in Van Valkenburgh v. American Popular L. Ins. Co., 70 N. Y. 605, that the question, 'Do you use intoxicating liquors or substance?' did not direct the mind to a single or incidental use, but to a customary or habitual use. Much less, therefore, does an inquiry as to whether an applicant be temperate call his attention to occasional use. The word 'temperate' suggests moderation, not abstinence, and the warranty is to the effect that his habit is to refrain from excessive indulgence in the use of intoxicants, and not that he abstains from all use."

In that case it was held that damage done by the action of ice at the time of unusually high water, but in ordinary wind and weather, is not the result of a "tempest." The court said: "The word 'tempest' has an undoubtedly plain, popular meaning and significance, however varying that may be, from its apparent root, 'tempus,' 'temps,' 'tempestive,' 'intempestive,' 'tempestus,' time, weather generally, seasons and seasonable, etc., the modern meaning being universally, 'an extensive current of wind, rushing with great velocity and violence. A storm of extreme violence. We usually apply the word to a steady wind of long continuance; but we say also of a tornado, it blew a tempest. The currents of wind are named according to their respective degrees of force or rapidity, a breeze, a gale, a storm, a tempest; but gale is also used as synonymous with storm, and storm with tempest.' TENANT.—One who holds or possesses lands or tenements by any kind of title, either in fee, for life, for years, or at will.²

In the popular sense, he is one who has the temporary use and occupation of lands or tenements which belong to another, the

The word means holders, from the word teneo, to hold. Stevens v. Enders, 13 N. J. L. 280. The word "tenant," when taken in its largest sense, includes everyone who holds lands, whatever may be the nature or extent of his interest.

The word "tenant" conveys a much more comprehensive idea in the language of the law than it does in its popular sense. In popular language, it is used more particularly as opposed to the word landlord, and always seems to imply that the land or property is not the tenant's own, but belongs to some other person to whom he immediately holds it. In the language of the law, every possessor of landed property is called a tenant with reference to such property, and this, whether such landed property is absolutely his own or whether he merely holds it under a lease for a certain number of years. Brown's L. Dict. (Sprague's ed.).

Under the feudal system, all real property was supposed to be holden of some superior lord, by and in consideration of certain services to be rendered to the lord by the tenant or possessor of this property. The thing holden is therefore styled a tenement, the possessors thereof tenants, and the manner of their possession a tenure. 2 Bl. Com. 59. And this nomenclature still obtains, although the system from which it is derived has been abolished. See also REAL PROPERTY, vol. 19, p. 1028.

"A tenant is a person who holds of another; he does not necessarily occupy. In order to occupy, a party must be personally resident by himself or his family." Rex v. Ditchheat, 9 B. & C. 176; 17 E. C. L. 355.

The word "tenant," as used in the Van Ness Ordinance, is not restricted in its meaning to a mere conventional tenant, as was intimated in Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal. 366; but applies to any party who holds the actual possession in subordination to another party under or by virtue of an agreement, either express or implied. Irvine v. Adler, 44 Cal. 559.

Tenant in Possession.—As used in a statute providing that notice in eject-duration and other terms of whose occupation are usually defined by an agreement called a lease, while the parties thereto are placed in the relation of landlord and tenant.¹

TENANTABLE.—See note 2.

TENANT'S FIXTURES.—(See also FIXTURES, vol. 8, p. 41).—Tenant's fixtures, in its strict legal definition, is understood to signify those things which are fixed to the freehold of the demised ment must be served upon the "tenant in possession," it was held, that the term "tenant in possession" did not include a soldier of the United States claiming to be in charge, under superior officers, of real property of the United States. The court said: "A tenant in possession is simply one who holds the lands in possession or occupancy." People v. Ambrecht, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 97. See also OCCUPANT, vol. 17, p. 29.

In California, it is provided by the Code of Civil Procedure, § 707, that the purchaser of real property at a sheriff's sale from the time of the sale until a redemption is entitled to receive "from the tenant in possession" the rents of the property sold. In Harris v. Reynolds, 13 Cal. 514; 73 Am. Dec. 600, it was held that a judgment debtor was a tenant in possession, and required to pay the rents and profits to the purchaser. The court said: "The phrase 'the tenant in possession' is a generic term, intended to designate the class of persons from whom the purchaser was to receive the rents. The language is not that, when a tenant of the debtor is in possession, the tenant shall pay the purchaser, or that the debtor, when in possession, shall not; but the phraseology designed evidently to fix a general right, applying to all cases of tenancy, for none are excluded." And, further, "The owner in fee in possession is no less, in legal contemplation, a tenant, than the man who occupies under him. The definition of tenant is: 'One that holds or possesses lands or tenements by any kind of title, either in fee, for life, years, or at will.'"

In Walker v. McCusker, 71 Cal. 594, it was held, that where real property is sold at a foreclosure sale, a party to the foreclosure suit, who thereafter remains in possession under a claim of title which is subject to the mortgage, is "a tenant in possession" within the meaning of the section. See also SHERIFFS' SALES, vol. 22, p. 570.

The assignee of a lessee, or a sub-lessee, is a "tenant." Whitfield v. Roe, 3 Taunt. 402; Williams v. Bosanquet, 1 B. & B. 238; Doe v. Byron, 1 C. B. 623; 50 E. C. L. 623. To occupy "as tenant," within the English acts conferring the parliamentary franchise, involves the idea of some permanent occupation and independent interest, and "excludes some occupation of less independence, such as of servants for their service—e. g., the porter to a lodge, the gardener at a dwelling in the garden, and also such as that of a surgeon to a hospital of rooms therein (Dobson v. Jones, 5 M. & G. 112; 44 E. C. L. 68); also the occupation of premises by objects of a charity, occupying under the permission of the charity, as in Heartley v. Banks (28 L. J. C. P. 144), and Davis v. Waddington (7 M. & G. 37; 49 E. C. L. 37)." Cook v. Humber, 11 C. B., N. S. 33; 103 E. C. L. 31. See also Smith v. Seghill, L. R., 10 Q. B. 422; *Hughes v. Plea of Tender.—A plea that defendant has always been ready to pay the debt demanded, and before action was begun had tendered the amount to the plaintiff, which amount, with interest and accrued costs, the defendant brings into court for the plaintiff. And. L. Dict.

A fuller definition would be thus: A plea that the party setting it up has always been ready to pay the amount or perform the act required, and before action was begun had offered so to do, and if the act to be done is the payment of money, the plea must also contain an averment that the amount with interest and accrued costs is brought into court for the benefit of the other party.

It is held in West Virginia, that it is unnecessary in a bill for specific performance of a contract to purchase land, to tender a deed, even though the execution of the deed and the payment of the purchase-money are dependent covenants. Vaught v. Cain, 31 W. Va. 424.

Where a bill to cancel a conveyance procured by fraud, is filed, it is not necessary to make a prior tender of the consideration received; it is sufficient that the complaint contains an offer to return the amount of such consideration. *Maloy v. In action to recover damages incurred by reason of a fraudulent purchase, it is not necessary that the vendor should tender back the money received. Gaunt v. Taylor (Supreme Ct.), 15 N. Y. Supp. 589.

Where action is brought to recover the amount paid for worthless stock, a return of the certificate need not be tendered, if the plaintiff has it at the trial and offers to surrender it. Lewis v. Andrews (Ct. App.), 38 N. Y. St. Rep. 808.

Where a note is executed for the price of stock, tender of the stock is a prerequisite to a maintenance of an action on the note, if the stock was to be delivered to the maker of the note; Holmes, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Morse, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 58. But not if the delivery was to be made to a third person. Holmes, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Holmes, etc., Metal Co., 53 Hun (N. Y.) 52.

A corporation is not bound to tender a certificate of stock before it can maintain an action on the subscription for the stock. Columbia Electric Co. v. Dixon, 46 Minn. 463.

It is not necessary, before bringing suit to redeem from the incumbrance of a mortgage, that the plaintiff should tender the amount due on the mortgage, or even that he should offer to pay it. It is not even necessary that he should make such offer in his bill of complaint. Cassery v. Wetherbee, 119 N. Y. 522. Compare Franklin v. Ayer, 22 Fla. 654.

Where the mortgagee, in a chattel mortgage, has taken possession of the property upon default, and has fraudulently bought it in at the sale, for much less than its actual value, and has then disposed of it so that it cannot be redeemed by the mortgagor, the latter may, without payment or tender of the amount of the debt, maintain an action to recover the excess of the value of the property over the amount of the debt. *Wygol v. Where the defendant has put it out of his power to comply with his agreement, a tender on the part of the plaintiff is not necessary to support the action. Davis v. Van Wyck (Supreme Ct.), 18 N. Y. Supp. 885.

Where a party repudiates the contract, and absolutely denies all liability thereunder, a tender by the other party, before bringing suit, is not necessary. Mattocks v. Young, 66 Me. 459; Davenport v. Jennings, 25 Neb. 87; Eddy v. Davis, 116 N. Y. 247; Baumann v. Pinckney, 118 N. Y. 604.

Where goods were manufactured to order, and the party ordering refuses to accept them, a tender of the goods is not necessary. Howe v. Moore (Supreme Ct.), 14 N. Y. Supp. 236.

Where a mortgagee claims absolute ownership of a chattel, a tender by the mortgagor of the amount of the debt accrued by the chattel mortgage before suing to recover the chattel, is unnecessary. Soell v. Haddon, 85 Tex. 182.

It is held, however, by the supreme court of Iowa, that while this is the equitable rule, it does not obtain in actions at law. There plaintiff sought to recover a balance due on the purchase price of his interest in a certain piece of land. He did not, before bringing the action, execute and tender the writing contracted for, nor did he at any time do so. He proved, however, that he offered to execute and deliver any instrument which should be deemed sufficient for the purpose intended, and which should be satisfactory to defendant, but the latter was advised that no instrument could be executed which would have the effect intended, and declined either to pay the money or proceed further in the matter. Upon this state of facts the court, by Reed, J., says: "The district court instructed the jury that plaintiff would be entitled to recover upon proof of an offer by him to execute the release. This we think is erroneous. The covenants are mutual and dependent. The execution of the release is what the defendant contracted for. That is, he agreed to pay the money, in part at least, for it; and plaintiff's undertaking, or, rather, the covenant in the agreement which he is seeking to enforce, was that he would execute and deliver it upon the payment of the money. Now plaintiff is seeking by this action to enforce the contract, but he will not be entitled to recover the money until he has done the particular thing which he agreed to do as the consideration for its payment. Any offer on his part to perform, short of a tender of the thing he agreed to deliver, is insufficient. It makes no difference that defendant declared in advance that he would not accept the release; for, as plaintiff's covenant was to execute and deliver it, and defendant was bound to pay the money only when that was done, he would not be put in default by anything short of that, or, at least, until a tender of performance was ready. This is the doctrine of Courtright v. Deeds, 37 Iowa 503, and it is the rule when relief is sought in actions at law. When relief is sought in equity, a different rule obtains. But in actions in equity, the court can by the decree grant the plaintiff such relief as he shows himself entitled to, upon such conditions as will fully protect the rights of the defendant." Nelson v. Wilson, 75 Iowa 710.

On the other hand, the United States court of claims holds that, even in an action at law, a tender is not necessary, where the defendant is in default, and knows that plaintiff is ready and willing to perform his part of the contract. Cole v. U. S., 23 Ct. of Cl. 341.

The accommodation maker of a note paid it to the bank which was the owner of it at maturity. The payee of the note had deposited with the bank certain securities to protect it against loss by reason of his dealings with the bank. Plaintiff brought suit to have the amount which the payee owed the bank, ascertained and subrogated to the rights of the bank in the securities. Held, that a tender of the amount due the bank from the payee was not necessary. Koehler v. Farmers', etc., Nat. Bank, 6 N. Y. Supp. 470; 53 Hun (N. Y.) 637; Farquhar v. Iles, 39 La. Ann. 874; Nelson v. Wilson, 75 Iowa 710.

demand, the owner, after waiting a reasonable time for the repairs to be completed, is not bound to tender the money agreed to be paid for the repairs as a condition precedent to making the demand. Phillips v. McNab (C. Pl.), 9 N. Y. Supp. 526.

Where a note is given as conditional payment, no recovery can be had on the original cause of action, unless the note is produced at the trial, and tendered for cancellation. *McMurray v. The supreme court of Texas held that it is not necessary for the state to tender back the purchase-money paid for its lands, before it can maintain a suit under the act of April 14th, 1883, to cancel sales fraudulently procured. State v. Snyder, 66 Tex. 687.

Where a vendee is indebted to the vendor in a sum greater than the amount of the part payment made, the vendor may rescind the sale without offering to return the money so paid. Ware v. Berlin, 43 La. Ann. 534.

Where an electrical company is entitled to use a subway for its wires, upon payment of a fair rental, it cannot maintain a suit in equity to fix the amount of the rental, and to enjoin the collection of any rental until it is so fixed, unless it first tenders or brings into court some amount which it deems to be a fair rental. Brush Electric, etc., Co. v. Consolidated Tel., etc., Co. (Supreme Ct.), 15 N. Y. Supp. 477.

Tender is not a prerequisite to a suit by residents and taxpayers of a township to set aside the sale of the school section; the price having been paid by the purchaser into the state treasury. Telle v. St. Tammany, 44 La. Ann. 365.

A tutor may not demand a tender of the amount received by a minor, under a former settlement, as a condition precedent to a suit for an account by the minor, in which the prior settlement is attacked as unlawful, and for concealment on the part of the tutor. Rist v. Hartner, 44 La. Ann. 430.

A tender of the price paid is not a prerequisite to an action to set aside a deed for fraud, although the purchaser is entitled to be restored to his former condition as far as possible. Saxton v. Seiberling, 48 Ohio St. 554.

But under the Kansas statute (Civ. Code Kansas, § 523), if a defendant, in his answer, offers to confess judgment for a certain sum, and the plaintiff does not recover more, the costs accruing after filing the answer, and those which accrued before its filing against the defendant, should be taxed against the plaintiff. Kaw Valley Fair Assoc. v. Miller, 42 Kan. 20.

There can be no valid tender, where the damages are unliquidated, and are incapable of being made definite except by the judgment of a court. McDowell v. Keller, 4 Coldw. (Tenn.) 258; Lawrence v. Gifford, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 366; Hodges v. Lichfield, 3 M. & S. 201; 9 Bing. 713; 23 E. C. L. 434; 2 Dowl. P. C. 741. Even though they grow out of breach of contract. Roberts v. Beatty, 2 P. & W. (Pa.) 63; 21 Am. Dec. 410.

In Illinois, in order to maintain replevin for animals taken damage-feasant, a tender of unliquidated damages for injuries done by them, must be kept good by bringing the money into court. Dunbar v. De Boer, 44 Ill. App. 615.

A bill to enjoin a water company from shutting off water for non-payment of an excessive charge for water wasted, may not be maintained without a tender, approximately, of the amount due. McDaniel v. Springfield Waterworks Co., 48 Mo. App. 273. But see Breaux v. Negrotto, 43 La. Ann. 426, in which it was held that a tender is unnecessary where the amount is uncertain.

III. WHAT CONSTITUTES A VALID TENDER—1. Generally.—To make a valid tender of money, the debtor must produce the precise sum due, in current money such as is by law made legal tender, and must actually offer it to the creditor; to make a valid tender of goods, the specific articles agreed for must be produced at the place agreed upon, and offered to the other party.¹

received it if it had been made. Bluntzer v. Dewees, 79 Tex. 272.

Actual tender is dispensed with, where the one to whom the money is due makes any declaration or demand equivalent to a refusal to accept it if tendered. Root v. Johnson (Ala. 1891), 10 So. Rep. 293. But in Arkansas, it was held that a tender of the amount legally due for freight charges, is not waived by a statement that not less than a certain amount would be accepted, though through an error in computation, that amount exceeds the legal rate. Loewenburg v. Arkansas, etc., R. Co., 56 Ark. 439.

When a person absolutely and unqualifiedly refuses to accept an assignment of a patent right, to which he is entitled as a condition to the liabilities sued for, his refusal is regarded as a waiver of tender, and the liability may be enforced without tender. MacDonald v. Wolff, 40 Mo. App. 302.

Where the tender of a check is refused, not because of the form of the tender, but because of a refusal to accept the agreement upon which the tender is made, a tender in specie is waived. Walsh v. St. Louis Exposition, etc., Assoc., 101 Mo. 534.

Joining issue on a replication to a plea of accord and satisfaction, is a waiver of tender. Knoxville, etc., R. Co. v. Acuff (Tenn. 1892), 20 S. W. Rep. 348.

Supér. Ct. 23; Parmenter v. Fitzpatrick (Supreme Ct.), 14 N. Y. Supp. 748; Breed v. Hurd, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 356; McJilton v. Sinizer, 18 Mo. 111.

The tender must be made in good faith, and if it be shown that the party making the tender did not intend to deliver the money or property, if the tender had been accepted, the tender is invalid. Fisk v. Holden, 17 Tex. 408. See also, infra, this title, Keeping Tender Good.

The debtor must be ready to pay, and must actually offer to pay. Sands v. Lyon, 18 Conn. 18; Holmes v. Holmes, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 137. And the money must be actually present. Pinney v. Jorgenson, 27 Minn. 26.

It is not a legal tender to say, "Here, I am ready." The party making the tender must have the money ready also. North v. Mallett, 2 Hayw. (N. Car.) 151; 2 Am. Dec. 622. Nor is a proposition to get the money in five minutes, sufficient. Breed v. Hurd, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 356.

Where the debtor's agent pulled out his pocket-book, at the same time offering to pay the whole sum demanded by the creditor, if the latter would go into a public house near by, this was held to be a sufficient tender. Read v. Goldring, 2 M. & S. 86.

It is essential to the validity of a tender, that the debtor have the money ready to deliver. It is not enough that a third person has the money on the spot, and would loan it, unless he actually consents to loan it for the purpose of the tender. Breed v. Hurd, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 356; Sargent v. Graham, 5 N. H. 440; 22 Am. Dec. 469; Bakeman v. Pooler, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 637; Eastland v. Longshore, 1 Nott. & M. (S. Car.) 194.

The money must be in the power, or within the immediate control, of the party making the tender. Steele v. Biggs, 22 Ill. 643.

If the money is in an envelope, it is not sufficient to show the envelope; the money must be taken out so that the creditor may see it. Strong v. Blake, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 227.

But it is held in Mississippi, that an offer of money in bags is a legal tender, and it is the business of the party to whom it is tendered to count it and see that there is enough to satisfy him. Behaly v. Hatch, Walker (Mich.) 369; 12 Am. Dec. 570. See Finch v. Brook, 1 Bing. N. Cas. 253; 27 E. C. L. 378. And compare Wade's Case, 5 Co. Rep. 115.

If the money is in a purse which the debtor holds in his hands, and when he is about to take it out, the creditor declares that he will not receive it, this excuses an actual tender. Thorne v. Morber, 20 N. J. Eq. 257; Hanna v. Phillips, 1 Grant Cas. (Pa.) 253.

But when the party making the tender has the money in his pocket, and asks the other party if he will take it, telling him the money is ready for him, but does not take the money out of his pocket, this is of itself not sufficient to constitute a valid tender, unless the other party, by some positive act or declaration, dispenses with its production. 3 Bl. Com. 304; Thomas v. Evans, 10 East 101; Douglas v. Patrick, 3 T. R. 683; Bakeman v. Pooler, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 637; Thorne v. Mosher, 20 N. J. Eq. 257; Appleton v. Donaldson, 3 Pa. St. 381. See infra, this title, When Actual Production of the Money is Excused.

Mr. Greenleaf says that great importance is attached to the production of the money, as the sight of it might tempt the creditor to yield and accept it. 2 Greenl. Ev., § 602, citing Finch v. Brook, 1 Bing. N. Cas. 253; 27 E. C. L. 378.

Where the creditor refuses to take or count the money, but does not dispute that the money actually offered him is, in amount, what it is claimed to be by the debtor, the tender is a good one. Brewer v. Fleming, 51 Pa. St. 102; Pinney v. Jorgenson, 27 Minn. 26.

So where the tender is refused, but the debtor leaves the money with the creditor, who afterwards refuses to give it up, this is a good tender. Rogers v. Rutter, 11 Gray (Mass.) 410.

A mere offer to the plaintiff, of the amount due, made by defendant's counsel in the progress of the argument of the case, is not a valid tender. Keys v. Roder, 1 Head (Tenn.) 19.

Where separate claims are held by the same person, the tender need not be divided to meet each claim. Johnson v. Cranage, 45 Mich. 141; Thetford v. Hubbard, 22 Vt. 440.

So if the creditor makes one demand, based on several accounts, some of which are legally due and others are illegal, he cannot compel the debtor at his peril, to separate the legal from the illegal demands. Johnson v. Cranage, 45 Mich. 14.

As a tender admits absolutely that the amount tendered is due, and an offer by way of compromise admits nothing, an offer of money in compromise is not a legal tender, though no greater amount than that offered is ultimately recovered. Latham v. Hartford, 27 Kan. 249; Elderkin v. Fellows, 60 Wis. 339.

Where one who was indebted to his firm, tendered his check in payment, and the partner to whom the check was tendered, refused to receive it unless it was made payable to him individually, whereupon the debtor tore up the check, it was held that there had been no tender. Murphy v. Gold, etc., Tel. Co. (City Ct.), 3 N. Y. Supp. 804.

The payor of a note must be at the place of payment, at the time it matures, ready and willing to pay the same, and must deposit the amount due in some bank or other place to be paid, or must keep it intact, and if suit be commenced, carry it into court, and deposit it there when he files his answer. Adams v. Rutherford, 13 Oregon 78.

Where one seeking to redeem a mortgage, tendered the principal and interest alone, without including the costs which had been properly incurred in connection with a sale, the sale having been enjoined by the party seeking to redeem, and the mortgagee declined either to accept or refuse the tender, because of his apprehension as to the effect which his acceptance of it might have upon a pending suit which had been brought against him by the party seeking to redeem to set aside the mortgage for alleged fraud, and also because he was unwilling to accept the tender without the advice of his counsel, this was held to constitute a sufficient tender. Lambert v. Miller, 38 N. J. Eq. 117.

At maturity of a mortgage, the mortgagor offered to the mortgagee, accounts against the latter which he had paid at the latter's request, and upon the agreement that they should be credited on the mortgage debt, and tendered the balance of the debt in cash. It was held by the Michigan court that the costs of a proceeding to foreclose, should not be taxed against the mortgagor. Castle v. Castle, 78 Mich. 298.

An offer to buy a note and mortgage, does not constitute a tender of the amount due on the debt. Magnusson v. Williams, 111 Ill. 450. See also Chielovich v. Krauss (Cal. 1886), 11 Pac. Rep. 781.

The rules governing tender are so clearly stated by the supreme court of New Hampshire, in an early case arising in that state, that it seems not out of place to give the opinion of the court, by Green, J., at length. "It is clearly settled," says that court, "as a general rule, that in order to constitute a legal tender, he who makes it must be ready to pay, or at least must have within his immediate reach, the means to pay, and must actually offer to pay. French v. Watson, 2 Wil. 74; Co. Lit. 208, a; Thomas v. Evans, 10 East 101; Leatherdale v. Sweepstone, 3 C. & P. 342; 14 E. C. L. 338; Glascott v. Day, 5 Esp. 48. But it is not necessary, in all cases, in order to constitute a legal tender, that the money should be actually brought forward, as well as offered. If, when there is an offer to pay, the party to whom the offer is made, refuses absolutely to receive the money, the objection that the money was not brought forward, is waived. Read v. Goldring, 2 M. & S. 86; Glascott v. Day, 5 Esp. 48; 19 Ves. 381; Breed v. Hurd, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 356. And it is not necessary that the person making the tender, should have the money in his own possession on the spot. If the sum offered is absolutely refused, it is enough that the money was upon the spot and ready for the purpose. Harding v. Davis, 2 C. & P. 77; 12 E. C. L. 35. It is not necessary, in all cases, that the party making a tender should be ready to pay in money which is a legal tender. Bank bills are not a lawful tender. Grigley v. Oakes, 2 B. & P. 526; Warren v. Mains, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 476; Hallowell, etc., Bank v. Howard, 13 Mass. 235; 4 Stark. Ev. 1391. Yet a tender in bankbills is well enough, if there be no objection to the tender at the time, on that account. Wright v. Read, 3 T. R. 554; Alexander v. Brown, 1 C. & P. 288; 11 E. C. L. 395. In such a case, the person who makes the tender is not prepared to make a tender that can avail him anything, if an objection is made to the money offered. But as bank bills pass current as money, if, when bills are offered, no objection is made on that account, all objection is presumed, with great propriety, to be waived. So when a man goes with the money in his pocket, and offers to pay, and the other, to whom the offer is made, absolutely refuses to receive the money, it is not necessary to take the money and actually offer it, in order to constitute a tender, because that would be an idle ceremony. In this case, the person who made the tender had not the money to pay, had the tender been accepted. But it was proved there was money on the spot which he might have borrowed. We were strongly inclined at first, to think this case came within the principle of Harding v. Davis, 2 C. & P. 77; 12 E. C. L. 35, but a more attentive consideration of the subject has convinced us that we were mistaken in this. In that case, the money was not only in the house where the tender was made, but the person who owned the money actually offered to go to the room above and produce it for the purpose of the tender. In this case, there was no attempt to borrow. There was no offer to lend. It was not known to either party that the money could be borrowed. In the case of Harding v. Davis, 2 C. & P. 77; 12 E. C. L. 35, the money may be considered as ready to be tendered, because the owner of it offered to produce it and deliver it to the person to whom the tender was made. But in this case, how can the money of Mr. Currier be considered as ready to be applied to the purpose of the tender, when no mortal thought, at the time, of thus applying his money? In the case in Carrington and Payne, the owner had assented that his money should be applied to the purposes of the tender. In this case there was no such assent. And this is a most material difference. How could his money be considered as ready for the tender before he assented that it should be so applied? We are, on the whole, of opinion that to hold the tender made in this case a legal one, would be going much beyond any adjudged case to be found in the books. Indeed, it would be to hold that an offer of the money absolutely refused is a legal tender, although he who makes the offer has not the money to pay. This would be contrary to a principle of law perfectly well settled, that he who makes a tender must be ready to pay in all cases." Sargent v. Graham, 5 N. H. 440; 22 Am. Dec. 469.

Place of Tender.—Where a note is made payable at the counting room of E. L., the placing of funds in his hands for the purpose of paying the note, with authority given him by the promisor to pay the note when due, from those funds, and the readiness of E. L. to make payment if the promisee had attended to receive payment, constitutes a good tender, if such readiness to pay continues. Carley v. Vance, 17 Mass. 389.

If the creditor is at the window of his own house, and will not admit the debtor into the house, it is sufficient to make the tender at the window. Wing v. Davis, 7 Me. 31.

As to place of tender of specific articles, see infra, this title, Tender of Specific Property.

Statutory Offer.—An offer in writing, under a statute, to pay a definite sum of money, or to deliver a specific article of property, takes the place of, and is equivalent to, a tender; but it does not dispense with the necessity of a readiness and ability on the part of the person making the offer, to pay or deliver at the time the offer is made. Ladd v. Mason, 10 Oregon 308. See Cassidy v. Bosler, 11 Iowa 242; Herberger v. Husman, 90 Cal. 583.

Where defendant makes an offer of judgment for a specific sum, "and accrued costs," this is sufficient, under the Minnesota statute. Petrosky v. Flanagan, 38 Minn. 26.

An oral offer made before a justice, and entered by him in his docket, is sufficient under the Wisconsin statute. Williams v. Ready, 72 Wis. 408.

Under the Iowa code, the fact that money tendered, but refused, was kept in the possession of the party making it, until its payment into court, does not invalidate the tender. Loughridge v. Iowa Life, etc., Assoc., 84 Iowa 141.

A tender essential to the maintenance of an action, will not be allowed to be made on a motion for judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit of defendants, where the statement does not allege a tender, and the affidavit of defendants sets up as a defense, the fact that no tender has been made. Scott v. Patterson, 1 Pa. Dist. Ct. Rep. 603.

The provision of the New York code (Code Civ. Proc., § 738), does not apply to joint debtors; where there is more than one debt, it is expressly limited to cases in which the action can be served. Heckemann v. Young, 55 Hun (N. Y.) 406. These provisions of the New York code apply to equitable as well as to legal actions. Singleton v. Home Ins. Co., 121 N. Y. 644, reversing 9 N. Y. Supp. 947.

While the actual production of the money to be paid is essential, unless the creditor dispense with it, either by an express declaration, or other equivalent act, Brown v. Gilmore, 8 Me. 107; 22 Am. Dec. 223; yet the creditor may, by express declaration, as well as by act, relieve the debtor from actually producing it, Cromwell v. Burr (C. Pl.), 12 N. Y. St. Rep. 132; Koon v. Snodgrass, 18 W. Va. 320; Hall v. Norwalk F. Ins. Co., 57 Conn. 105; McKnight v. Watkins, 6 Mo. App. 118; as where the party to whom the tender was made, says: "There have been costs made, and you have got to settle with my attorney," Ashburn v. Poulter, 35 Conn. 553; or says, where the tender is in legal-tender notes, that he will take nothing but coin, Hanna v. Ratekin, 43 Ill. 462; for courts do not require an offer of money to be made, when, from the facts and circumstances of the case, it is apparent that such offer would be useless, and the receipt of the money refused by the opposite party. Wright v. Young, 6 Wis. 127; 70 Am. Dec. 453; Chinn v. Bretches, 42 Kan. 316.

In a case declaring the law to be as stated in the text, the court, by Lurton, J., says: "The refusal of defendant, when approached by the attorney of complainants, to even consider the question of a repurchase, and his contention that he was not bound by his agreement, rendered a formal tender of the purchase-money, a meaningless form." Bradford v. Foster, 87 Tenn. 11.

When the party to whom the offer is made, refuses to receive the money, before it is actually produced, and bases his refusal, not on the ground that it is not produced, nor on the ground that the amount produced was not the exact sum offered, but on some collateral and entirely distinct ground, this will dispense with the actual production of the money. Koon v. Snodgrass, 18 W. Va. 320.

A lessee went to a lessor with the money in his hand, and a receipt which he proceeded to read to the lessor; whereupon the lessor refused the payment, and told the lessee that it would be altogether unnecessary to show the money. It was held that the tender was good. Westmoreland, etc., Natural Gas Co. v. DeWitt, 130 Pa. St. 235; 25 W. N. C. (Pa.) 103.

But a hesitating refusal does not dispense with the actual production of the money. Dunham v. Jackson, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 22.

Where the purchaser at a tax sale named as the sum which he was willing to receive in redemption of the property, an amount larger than he was entitled to by law, this would relieve the owner from the necessity of producing the money at the time of making the tender. But it would not dispense with the necessity of his being fully ready to pay at the time of offering to redeem. Lamar v. Sheppard, 84 Ga. 561.

But the New York courts have held that the mere statement by the creditor that he will not receive the amount due, accompanied by a demand of a larger sum, will not excuse the debtor from actually producing the money. Dunham v. Jackson, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 22; 1 Greenl. Ev. (10th ed.), § 603.

Where the creditor, upon the offer being made, referred the debtor to his attorney, saying that his office was open and that it was but a step there, but did not in terms refuse to receive the money, nor interpose any objection to the production of the money, nor intimate that its production was not required, this would not excuse the failure to produce the money. Strong v. Blake, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 227.

If the creditor absents himself from home, so that a tender cannot be made, and the debtor does all in his power to make the tender, the creditor cannot object to want of tender, and it would seem that this is so, whether the absence was or was not for the express purpose of avoiding the tender. Southworth v. Smith, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 391; Tasker v. Bartlett, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 359; Judd v. Ensign, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 258; Smith v. Smith, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 405; 2 Hill (N. Y.) 351; Howard v. Holbrook, 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 237; Houbie v. Volkening, 49 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 169; Trimble v. Williamson, 49 Ala. 525; Barton v. McKelway, 22 N. J. L. 165; Watson v. Sawyers, 54 Miss. 64; Thomas v. Mathis, 92 Ind. 560; Kling v. Childs, 30 Minn. 366.

And the debtor is not bound to go to another state to make the tender. Gill v. Bradley, 21 Minn. 15.

If the creditor purposely avoids a tender, and brings his action so soon thereafter that a tender could not be made, the debtor is thereby excused from making the tender. Gilmore v. Holt, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 257; Fisk v. Williams, 75 Me. 217; Shroeder v. Laubenheimer, 50 Wis. 480.

In an early case, decided by the court of appeals of Virginia, this question of constructive tender was passed upon. There, Harris offered to repair a mill for Dandridge, and to receive payment for it either in money or in property, and if in property, the same was to be valued by two men. On the day the work was finished, the parties settled their accounts and fixed the balance due Harris at £48. Harris called upon Dandridge to sign this account, which he refused to do unless Harris would state that the payment was to be made in property. Dandridge then desired Harris to join in naming persons to value the property and to receive it, which Harris promised to do, but did not. Dandridge then wrote a letter to Harris requesting him to come and have the property valued. Harris did not make the objection that the property ought to be carried to him, but declared that he would not receive property, and in forty-one days after the work was finished and before Dandridge would probably have had time to make a legal tender, brought suit on the account. The court held that Dandridge was excused from making the tender. Dandridge v. Harris, 1 Wash. (Va.) 326; 1 Am. Dec. 465.

In the case of Sands v. Lyon, 18 Conn. 18, the defendant was proceeding in a wagon to the house of the plaintiffs, having in his pocket a bag containing specie sufficient to pay a legacy, due the female plaintiff. On his way to the house, he saw Sands, the husband of the legatee, and one of the plaintiffs, coming towards him on foot. When they met, defendant stopped his wagon and said to Sands: "I have got the money here to pay you the legacy my father, Joshua Lyon, left your wife in his will," at the same time putting his hand into his pocket to draw therefrom the bag containing the money. While he was so doing, Sands, who was at that time walking rapidly, said to him: "I want nothing to do with such cut-throats as you," and without stopping or slackening his pace, walked by and away from the defendant. Immediately afterwards, and on the same day, defendant proceeded to the residence of Sands, and there tendered to his wife, the legatee, the amount of the legacy, which she positively refused to receive. This was held to be a sufficient tender. And so, the supreme court of Vermont held, in a very similar case. Knight v. Abbott, 30 Vt. 577. In Meserole v. Archer, 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 376, the party to whom the offer to pay was made, said: "Get away, I will have nothing to do with it." And this was held to dispense with an actual production of the money, it being shown that the party making the offer had the money with him at the time.

If the creditor refuses to remain till the money can be counted, the tender is good. Raines v. Jones, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 490; Knight v. Abbott, 30 Vt. 577; Leatherdale v. Sweetstone, 3 C. & P. 342.

But where the debtor offered bank bills which were not legal tender, and while the creditor was counting them, having made no objection on the ground of their being bank bills, the debtor made an insulting remark to him which caused him to leave the room, it was held that the tender was insufficient. Harris v. Mulock, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 402.

Where plaintiff stated to defendant that he was willing to give him £10, and a witness who stood by stated that she had the money up stairs, and she would go up stairs and fetch it, but plaintiff said she need not trouble herself, he could not take it, this was held to be a good tender. But, says the court, by Best, C. J.: "It would not do if a man said, 'I have got the money, but must go a mile to fetch it.'" Harding v. Davies, 2 C. & P. 77; 12 E. C. L. 35.

And the same view is taken by the supreme court of Tennessee, though the English case is not cited. Farnsworth v. Howard, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 215.

Where the creditor has assigned the claim, and refuses not only to receive the money himself, but to give the name of the assignee, the debtor is excused from making the tender. Strafford v. Welch, 59 N. H. 46; Fritz v. Simpson, 34 N. J. Eq. 436; Noyes v. Clark, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 179; 32 Am. Dec. 620.

It would seem that in admiralty, the question will not be considered whether the money was actually produced or not, if a real offer to pay it was made without condition, by one ready and willing to pay, and the offer is renewed in the answer or upon the record, at some time during the litigation. Boulton v. Moore, 14 Fed. Rep. 922.

Where the creditor told the debtor's agent that he need not make a formal tender, as he would not accept it, this excused the failure to actually produce the money at the time of making tender. Hall v. Norwalk F. Ins. Co., 57 Conn. 105.

Where there is an express refusal to receive notes which were to be delivered in part payment of land, a formal tender of them is unnecessary. Ware v. Berlin, 43 La. Ann. 534.

If a party offers to deliver a bond which the other party expresses his intention not to accept, though admitting its sufficiency, this is a good tender, though the bond is not exhibited, and there is no proof that it has been prepared and executed. Abrams v. Suttles, Busb. (N. Car.) 99.

Where the holder of a note refuses to receive the amount, on the ground that it had been attached at the suit of a third person, this will not excuse the actual production of the money. Bacon v. Smith, 2 La. Ann. 441; 46 Am. Dec. 549.

Where an antecedent tender is required, a written communication demanding the cancellation of a contract, and expressing a willingness to return what had been paid, when not answered or expressly declined, is not a substitute for a tender, and does not constitute an excuse for not making it. Adams v. Friedlander, 37 La. Ann. 350.

A subscriber to the capital stock of a corporation is not excused from making a tender, by reason of a statement to him by the secretary of the company, that he has no stock for him. Ohio Ins. Co. v. Nunemacher, 10 Ind. 234.

In an English case, where a debtor, on leaving home, left ten pounds with his clerk for the creditor, and the creditor was informed of this when he called, but demanded a larger sum and said he would not receive anything less than the whole demand, and the clerk did not offer the ten pounds, it was held that there was no valid tender. Thomas v. Evans, 10 East 101. See also Dickinson v. Shee, 4 Esp. 68.

A deed made while the Pennsylvania Act of 1793 was in force, making Spanish dollars legal tender, provided that ground rent should be payable in Spanish milled dollars. It was held by the common pleas court, that tender in those coins is good. Perot v. Eichholz, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 191.

A promissory note executed subsequent to the act of Congress of Feb. 25th, 1862, known as the "Legal-Tender Act," which note is, by its express terms, payable in American gold, is not discharged by the tender of United States treasury notes. McGoon v. Shirk, 54 Ill. 408; 5 Am. Rep. 122. This case overrules the earlier decisions of the Illinois supreme court, as found in Hull v. Kohlsaat, 36 Ill. 130; Whit- stone v. Colley, 36 Ill. 328; Humphrey v. Clement, 44 Ill. 299, and follows the decision of the United States Supreme Court, as announced in Bronson v. Rodes, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 229, and Butler v. Horwitz, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 258.

The case first cited, that of Bronson v. Rodes, was originally decided by the New York court of appeals, in harmony with the decisions of the supreme court of Illinois, and will be found reported in 34 N. Y. 649. It is interesting, not only because it contains a full discussion of the coinage laws, but because the opinion of the majority of the court was rendered by Mr. Chief Justice Chase, who had been the secretary of the treasury at the time when the legal-tender act was adopted.

In both Bronson v. Rodes, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 229, and Butler v. Horwitz, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 258, the court held that the judgment should be for the sum agreed to be due with interest in coin, and not for the value in treasury notes, assessing as damage the value in treasury notes of the coin to be paid under the terms of the note.

In cases already cited from the United States Supreme Court, the notes, in express terms, provided that the amount should be payable in coin. A case afterwards came before that court, in which the note, while executed prior to the passage of the legal-tender act, was not made payable expressly in coin. The question was therefore squarely presented to that court, whether a note executed prior to the passage of the legal-tender acts could be discharged by a tender of treasury notes made legal tender by those acts. This is the case of Hepburn v. Griswold, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 603. In this case, the legal-tender acts were declared void and unconstitutional as to contracts made prior to their passage. But in the next year, the supreme court reversed this decision, and held the acts to be constitutional, even when applied to contracts executed before their passage. Knox v. Lee, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 457.

It was held, however, in New York, that, after the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Hepburn v. Griswold, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 605, which declared the act void as to contracts made prior to its passage, a tender by the mortgagor or his grantee, of payment of the mortgage debt in legal-tender notes, was not valid where the mortgage was executed before the passage of the act; and the validity of this tender was not affected by the fact that the United States Supreme Court subsequently reversed, in Knox v. Lee, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 457, its decision in Hepburn v. Griswold, and held the act to be constitutional and valid, even as to debts contracted prior to its passage. Harris v. Jex, 55 N. Y. 421; 14 Am. Rep. 285. See also Hart v. Flynn, 8 Dana (Ky.) 190; MONEY, vol. 15, p. 701.

It is interesting to note in this connection, that it has been held by the courts of North Carolina and Georgia, that a tender in 1863 of Confederate money, in payment of debts contracted before the war, was not a valid tender. Love v. Johnston, 72 N. Car. 415; Phillips v. Gaston, 37 Ga. 16.

Where the contract is expressly or impliedly to pay money, a tender of bank-notes is insufficient, Donaldson v. Benton, 4 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 435. Compare Keyes v. Jasper, 5 Ill. 305; except where the objection is expressly put on some other ground. Jennings v. Mendenhall, 7 Ohio St. 257; Keyes v. Jasper, 5 Ill. 305; Ewing v. Anderson, 3 Tenn. Ch. 364; Koehler v. Buhl, 94 Mich. 496; Hortssock v. Mort, 76 Md. 281.

As between a bank and its debtors, a tender by the latter, in notes of the bank, is sufficient. Northampton Bank v. Balliet, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 311; 42 Am. Dec. 297.

The offer of a check is not a sufficient tender, where objection is made to the form of tender. Collier v. White, 67 Miss. 133; Larsen v. Breene, 12 Colo. 480; Martin v. Clover (Supreme Ct.), 17 N. Y. Supp. 638; Grussy v. Schneider, 50 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 134; 55 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 188; Sloan v. Petrie, 16 Ill. 262; *Harding v. But if no such objection is made, a tender by check is sufficient. Dale v. Richards (D. C.), 21 Wash. L. Rep. 86; McGrath v. Gegner (Md. 1893), 26 Atl. Rep. 502; Jones v. Arthur, 8 D. P. A tender of a certified check is no more effectual than of one not certified. Thorne v. San Francisco, 4 Cal. 127; Larsen v. Breene, 12 Colo. 480.

Where a certified check is tendered, and is afterwards deposited in court, the failure pending the suit of the bank on which it was drawn, does not relieve the party depositing it, from payment. Larsen v. Breene, 12 Colo. 480.

A bank certificate of deposit is not a lawful tender, Dougherty v. Hughes, 3 Greene (Iowa) 92; nor is a postal order. Gordon v. Strange, 1 Exch. 477.

But if no objection is made on the ground that it is not lawful money, a certificate of deposit is a sufficient tender. Gradle v. Warner, 140 Ill. 123.

Where, on rescission of a contract, the money received thereunder is tendered back, it is not necessary that the identical money received should be offered back. Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Dunham, 30 Mich. 128. See also Mayo v. Knowlton, 134 N. Y. 250.

Where a railroad company receives a passenger into its cars, and allows him to commence his journey, it is not necessary that the passenger should offer legal tender in payment of his fare; the company is bound to receive payment in any good and lawful money which the passenger may offer. *Farbell v. A tender of past-due paper of the party to whom the tender is to be made, is not a tender of a payment which, by the contract, is required to be made in cash. Hughes v. Daniels (Mich. 1891), 49 N. W. Rep. 542. Compare Northampton Bank v. Balliet, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 311; 42 Am. Dec. 297.

Where payment is to be made in collaterals, the party making the tender must aver and prove that the collaterals tendered were of the kind contracted for. Mason v. Croom, 24 Ga. 211.

A tender of goods in satisfaction of a note payable in money, will not avail. Wilson v. McVey, 83 Ind. 108.

An offer in a complaint, to deliver up a draft received in settlement of a claim, is a sufficient tender, in an action to rescind the settlement. Berry v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 132 N. Y. 49.

4. Election to Pay in Money or Property.—Where the debtor has the election to pay either money or property, if he fails to make tender on the day fixed for payment, he thereby loses his election, and the obligee has the right to demand money.¹

5. Premature Tender.—A premature tender is of no avail.²

On the question of the delivery of property in payment of a note, the supreme court of Maine, by Mellen, C. J., uses the following language: "The defense is placed on two facts: 1. That at the time the note became due, the defendant had, at the place agreed upon, a large quantity of lumber, and that, before and after the note was given, he informed the plaintiff that such would be the fact. The plaintiff did not attend at the time and place agreed on for payment. The general principle is, that he who would avail himself of the benefit of a tender, must do all in his power, and he will then be excused. Lancashire v. Killingworth, 1 Ld. Raym. 687; Chipman on Spec. Con. 211. It is contended by the counsel for the plaintiff, that, as he did not attend on the day the note became due, it was his duty to do all in his power towards paying it; that is, that he should have caused a sufficient quantity of the lumber, then at the place, to be set apart and surveyed to and for the use of the plaintiff, and so separated from the residue of the lumber and distinguished as that it might be taken by the plaintiff, without any danger of mistake; or, in other words, he should have done all those acts which would have vested in the plaintiff the property of the portion so set apart and appropriated. It is not denied that there is an essential difference between a tender of money and of cumbersome specific articles of property." And the court held that the defendant had not made a legal tender of the lumber, inasmuch as he had not designated any particular property which could vest in the plaintiff, concluding the opinion with this language: "Notwithstanding everything which the defendant did, and which has been relied on as a tender, it is evident that the plaintiff could not have taken and appropriated any portion of the lumber at the place agreed upon, without being chargeable as a trespasser." Wyman v. Winslow, 11 Me.

In a New York case, one Galbraith sued one Newton, on notes payable in produce at the latter's residence. On the trial, Newton proved that on the day the notes became due, he had hay in his barn, and was then ready to pay in hay, but that no particular quantity was set apart, and the court held that the tender was insufficient. Newton v. Galbraith, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 119. To the same effect are Barns v. Graham, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 452; 15 Am. Dec. 394; Smith v. Loomis, 7 Conn. 110; Rix v. Strong, 1 Root (Conn.) 55; Nichols v. Whiting, 1 Root (Conn.) 443; McConnell v. Hall, Brayt. (Vt.) 223.

2. Abshire v. Corey, 113 Ind. 484.

A case of some interest, involving this question, was decided by the New York court of appeals not long since, the opinion being by Andrews, C. J. The maker of a promissory note made tender of the amount on the day the note matured on its face, without allowing any days of grace. The holder of the note made no objection on this ground, but refused to receive the tender, and deliver up the note and collaterals which he held, on the ground that he was entitled to hold the latter as security for another claim which he had against the maker of the note. On this state of facts, the court decided that the tender was good. "There is no doubt," says the court, by Andrews, C. J., "of the general principle, that the tender of a debt before it is due is ineffectual. The debtor cannot be compelled to pay the debt before maturity, and the creditor is not bound to accept payment before that time. But the circumstances in this case are peculiar. Both parties, in respect to the tender, treated the debt as due when the tender was made, and the refusal to accept it was put by the defendants solely upon the ground that they were entitled to hold the bonds as security for the loss in the transaction of January 16th, 1880. It is not necessary to decide in this case what the rights of the parties would have been, if the defendants had refused to accept the sum tendered, on the ground that the note was not due, or that the tender did not include interest on the note for the days of grace. But in view of the fact that days of grace were originally an indulgence created by commercial authority for the benefit of the debtor—although they have come to be regarded as part of the contract itself—we are of the opinion that if the parties to a bill or note, treat it as due on the day when by its terms it is payable, and a transaction at that time takes place between them, based on this acceptance, and the rights of third parties have not intervened, the days of grace will be deemed waived, and the same legal consequences will follow as though the transaction took place on the day of the legal maturity of the paper." Wyckoff v. Anthony, 90 N. Y. 442.

If a note is payable on demand, a tender made by the maker, before demand, will have the same effect as if the note were payable on a day certain and the tender were made on that day. Wooten v. Sherrard, 68 N. Car. 334.

A deposit of money with the clerk of the court, subject to the order of the person entitled thereto, is not equivalent to payment or tender, unless the full amount due is deposited. Repp v. Wiles, 3 Ind. App. 167.

It makes no difference that the insufficiency in amount arises from an honest mistake on the part of the debtor. Patnote v. Sanders, 41 Vt. 66; 98 Am. Dec. 564; Baker v. Gasque, 3 Strobb. (S. It is held by the supreme court of

New Hampshire, that the debtor is not excused from tendering the entire amount of the debt, because of an agreement with the creditor that a sum of money in the creditor's hands, which belonged to a third party, should be applied or accounted for as a part payment of the debt, unless there was a valid consideration to support such agreement; and that therefore a tender of the difference between the sum in the creditor's hands and the sum justly due, was insufficient. Fisher v. Willard, 20 N. H. 421.

Where $50 is deposited with the clerk, and after some evidence is taken in the case, an additional $10 is deposited, the tender is not good. Frank v. Pickens, 69 Ala. 369.

It is not sufficient, in a proceeding to redeem from a tax sale, to tender the amount paid by the purchaser, where a premium is allowed by law. The tender must include the premium. Lamar v. Sheppard, 84 Ga. 561.

An offer of judgment "in the sum of $407.72 principal, and interest due to date and costs," has been held to be an offer of the sum specified as the total amount, and not of costs and interest in addition thereto. Upton v. Foster, 148 Mass. 592.

Plaintiff was the owner of fifty interest-bearing bonds of $1,000 each, which were due July 1st. The maker of the bonds had on deposit, a sum sufficient to pay the face of the bonds, but not quite enough to pay the principal and interest. It was held that the plaintiff was not bound to receive payment of forty-nine of the bonds, and retain the remaining one, the circumstances showing that it was the intention that the depository should pay all the bonds as a single transaction. People's Sav. Bank v. Norwalk, 56 Conn. 547.

A tender of the amount actually due under the condition of a bond, is a good tender, though it is less than the penalty, and is made after default. Tracy v. Strong, 2 Conn. 659.

Where a carrier is sued for loss of a part of the goods, and for damage by water to the remainder, the defendant is not justified in refusing a tender of the value of the goods lost, because the amount of the damage to those injured was not also tendered. *East Tenn., etc., R. Where a sum is to be paid in state

A tender by executors, of an amount which does not equal the legacy and accrued interest, and which the legatee refuses to accept as a partial payment, does not stop the running of interest. Welch v. Adams, 152 Mass. 74.

A tender of interest upon railroad bonds, which is made for the purpose of arresting an action brought by a bond-holder after refusal by the trustees to foreclose the mortgage, must include all the interest upon all the bonds whose holders have not agreed to postpone their claim, and it is not sufficient to tender the amount of interest due on the bonds held by the plaintiff. Van Benthuyssen v. Central, etc., R. Co. (Supreme Ct.), 17 N. Y. Supp. 709.

Tender after action brought must include the accrued costs. 2 Benj. Sales (4 Am. Ed.) 922; Smith v. Anders, 21 Ala. 782; Thurston v. Blaisdell, 8 N. H.

Sanders*, 1 Nott. & M. (S. Car.) 242; Smith v. Curtiss, 38 Mich. 393; Audensreid v. Hull, 45 Mo. App. 202.

Whether a tender of the debt without costs is sufficient, after an attorney has been employed and a writ issued, but not served, is answered in the affirmative in Hull v. Peters, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 331, overruling the earlier decision of the Supreme Court in Retan v. Drew, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 304; and in Brown v. Ferguson, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 106; and in the negative in Emerson v. White, 10 Gray (Mass.) 351. See also Thurston v. Blaisdell, 8 N. H. 367.

The party to whom the tender is made, is not bound to inform the party making the tender what costs he has incurred, unless inquiry be made. Smith v. Wilbur, 35 Vt. 133.

If the tender is not made till after suit is brought, the fee of the clerk of one per cent. (U. S. Rev. Stat., § 828) for receiving, keeping, and paying out the money, must be included in the amount paid into court. The Serapis, 37 Fed. Rep. 436.

Excessive Amount.—A tender is not invalidated because the sum tendered is larger than the amount due. Patterson v. Cox, 25 Ind. 261. But it must be in such shape that the creditor can take from it the amount actually due. 2 Greenl. Ev. (Redf. ed.), § 604.

A tender of an amount larger than that which is due, is not good, if the party making the tender requires change for the balance. 9 Bac. Abr. 317; Belterbee v. Davis, 3 Campb. 70; Robinson v. Cook, 6 Taunt. 336; Cadman v. Lubbock, 5 D. & R. 289; 16 E. C. L. 235; Patterson v. Cox, 25 Ind. 261; Perkins v. Beck, 4 Cranch (C. C.) 68.

In Brady v. Jones, 2 D. & R. 305; 16 E. C. L. 87, it appeared that the debtor, who owed £6 17s. 6d., called upon the creditor at the latter's residence and laid seven sovereigns upon the table, together with a paper containing a counter demand upon the creditor to the amount of £1 5s. saying: "There, take your demand." The creditor did not take up either the money or the paper, but simply replied: "You must go to my attorney," upon which the debtor retired with the money. It was held that such facts did not constitute a good tender.

It has been held, however, that a passenger on a street car is not bound to tender the exact fare, but the conductor must furnish change to a reasonable amount; and five dollars is not an unreasonable sum to tender in payment of fare. Barrett v. Market St. R. Co., 81 Cal. 206; 40 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 671; 29 Am. L. Reg. 191.

A tender of the amount of a note not due and the accrued interest, is a good tender of the interest. Saunders v. Frost, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 259; 16 Am. Dec. 394.

But a demand for a reconveyance, upon tendering the amount of a loan, to secure which, a deed absolute in form has been given, is not such a condition as to impair the tender. Mankel v. Belscamper, 84 Wis. 218.

It must at least be free from any condition to which the creditor may rightfully object. Benj. on Sales (Bennett's Notes), § 721; Wheelock v. Tanner, 39 N. Y. 481; Moore v. Norman (Minn. 1892), 53 N. W. Rep. 809.

"The condition which the debtor is the more apt to impose, is one to which the law does not permit him to subject the creditor. The debtor has no right to insist that the creditor shall admit that no more is due in respect of the debt for which the tender is made. He may exclude any presumption against himself that he admits the payment to be only for a part, but can go no further, and his tender will not be good if he add a condition that the creditor shall acknowledge that no more is due." Benj. on Sales (Bennett's Notes), § 722, citing Bowen v. Owen, 11 Q. B. 131; 63 E. C. L. 131; Cincinnati v. Mt. Auburn Cable R. Co. (Cin. Super. Ct.), 28 Ohio L. J. 276; Doty v. Crawford (S. Car. 1893), 17 S. E. Rep. 377.

A tender, therefore, on condition that the creditor give a receipt or a release of all demands, is not good unless such release is especially stipulated for in the contract. Laing v. Meader, 1 C. & P. 257; 11 E. C. L. 382; Griffith v. Hodges, 1 C. & P. 419; 11 E. C. L. 440; Glasscott v. Day, 5 Esp. 48; Hepburn v. Auld, 1 Cranch (U. S.) 321; Perkins v. Beck, 4 Cranch (C. So where the money was tendered as "all that was due" (Sutton v. Hawkins, 8 C. & P. 259; 34 E. C. L. 380), or "in payment of the half-year's rent due at Lady Day last" (Hastings v. Thorley, 8 C. & P. 573; 34 E. C. L. 530), or as

"balance account railing" (Hough v. May, 4 Ad. & El. 954; 31 E. C. L. 235), in either case, it was bad. See also Strong v. Harvey, 3 Bing. 304; 11 E. C. L. 112; Evans v. Judkins, 3 Campb. 156; Wood v. Hitchcock, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 47.

The following tender: "Defendant in this action tenders the plaintiff $15.42 as a settlement of the matter," is not sufficient. Rand v. Harris, 83 N. Car. 486.

Where the debtor says: "I showed him (the creditor) $500, and told him he could have it for his claim," this shows a conditional offer which is not a good tender. See Tompkins v. Batie, 11 Neb. 147; 38 Am. Rep. 361, where, however, the facts are not given.

It has been held in Iowa, that where an offer of judgment of a certain sum was made "with costs to date; said amount to be a full settlement of the above case," the offer is good, the last clause not constituting a condition, but stating only the legal and logical consequence of its acceptance (distinguishing Quinton v. Van Tuyl, 30 Iowa 554). DeLong v. Wilson, 80 Iowa 216.

In a case in New York, the plaintiff testified that he made the tender "unconditionally and in payment and extinguishment of" a certain lien. It was held that the tender was bad as attaching a condition. Noyes v. Wyckoff, 114 N. Y. 204.

The mere fact that the party making the tender, tells the other party that this closes the whole matter, does not make the tender a conditional one, if the creditor is not required to accept the money on that condition or understanding. Preston v. Grant, 34 Vt. 201; Foster v. Drew, 39 Vt. 51.

Where a mortgagor tenders the amount appearing to be due, according to an account made up by himself from documents furnished by the mortgagee, this is sufficient to throw the costs of the action to redeem upon the latter, in case the amount tendered is all that is due, although the mortgagor when making it, reserves the right to dispute the mortgagee's accounts, and to have the costs taxed. Greenwood v. Sutcliffe, C. A. [1892], 1 Ch. 1.

If a county treasurer refuses to receive money tendered in redemption of land sold for taxes, solely on the ground that he has no right to receive the money or give the certificate, the fact that a receipt or certificate was demanded, will not invalidate the tender. People v. Edwards, 56 Hun (N. Y.) 377.

It is sometimes held that, in order to vitiate a tender, the condition must be one which there was no right to exact, Flake v. Nuse, 51 Tex. 98; as that the note which is to be paid be delivered up. Stafford v. Welch, 59 N. H. 46.

Where defendant tendered the amount due, and demanded the return of certain diamonds which had been pledged as collateral, this was not an unconditional tender. Cass v. Higgenbotam, 27 Hun (N. Y.) 406. Compare Loughborough v. McNevin, 74 Cal. 250.

Where, by the terms of a bond, a right was reserved to pay it before maturity, a tender of the face of the bond with interest to date of tender, is effectual to stop the running of interest, though it was coupled with a condition that the bond and all the coupons then in possession of the holder, be surrendered. Bailey v. Buchanan County, 115 N. Y. 297; 6 L. R. A. 562. The same principle is recognized in Halpin v. Phenix Ins. Co., 118 N. Y. 165.

This question was passed upon by the supreme court of Vermont in Holton v. Brown, 18 Vt. 224; 46 Am. Dec. 148, where the court, by Bennett, J., says: "When the money was tendered, the note secured by the mortgage was demanded, and the defendant refused to part with the money, unless the note was surrendered. The note was at that time mislaid, and Seymour, the attorney for the mortgagee, proposed to receive the money and discharge the note and mortgage; but the defendant declined to leave the money on such terms. This note was payable to Jesse Stratton or order, and has never been negotiated by the payee. The plaintiff might have recovered in an action at law upon the note, provided it had been shown to have been lost. The right of the holder in such case at law is fully recognized in the case of Lazell v. Lazell, 12 Vt. 449; 36 Am. Dec. 352. If the plaintiff could maintain an action on the note, at law, upon proof of its loss, without producing it, it would seem that the defendant, to have such action, must have made an absolute and an unconditional tender. A tender, with a condition annexed to the acceptance, is invalid. The party has not a right to demand a receipt, or a surrender of the security or obligation upon which the money is tendered." Holton v. Brown, 18 Vt. 224; 46 Am. Dec. 148.

So a demand for a discharge of the party by or for whom the tender is made, will vitiate it. Richardson v. Boston Chemical Laboratory, 9 Met. (Mass.) 42.

The qualifications which may be attached to a tender, without making it obnoxious to the above rule, are thus stated in Moynahan v. Moore, 9 Mich. 9; 77 Am. Dec. 468. Plaintiff employed defendant to repair a carriage, and defendant retained the carriage, claiming a lien on it for the amount due for the repairs. Plaintiff tendered a sufficient amount to discharge the lien, but required as a condition of the payment that the carriage be delivered to him. The court, by Martin, C. J., in holding that this did not vitiate the tender, says: "This tender necessarily operated to release the property, and the plaintiff was entitled to immediate possession of it. That such would be the effect of an unconditional tender is not doubted; but as the tender in this case was made upon condition that the carriage should be delivered up, it is thought that it has not such effect. A tender made to procure the possession of property, can hardly be called conditional, because it is accompanied with a demand for the property. But it does not appear that any objection was made to the tender by the defendant, except for insufficiency, he demanding more than the sum offered; and as the jury find that sufficient was tendered, the tender was good, even were the strictest rule to prevail, upon the well-established principle, that an objection made at the time of the tender, precludes all others, and if that be not well grounded, the tender will be held good."

In a case recently decided by the supreme court of Missouri, the facts were as follows: The county of Cass issued bonds payable twenty years after date, which contained a stipulation that they might be redeemed at any time after five years, upon payment by the county of the principal and accrued interest. At the expiration of the five years, the county determined to redeem the bonds by paying cash or exchanging them for new bonds. Plaintiff being the owner of a number of the bonds, presented them to the agent of the county and demanded an exchange of the old for new bonds, dollar for dollar. The agent of the county offered to pay cash or to exchange old bonds for new bonds, at their market value, which was above par. Thereupon the holder served upon the agent a written protest against the terms of the exchange, but offered to accept the money. The agent declined to pay the money, unless the protest was withdrawn. The court held that there was no tender, since the offer by the agent was not an unconditional one, and that the county was liable for the interest which subsequently accrued. Henderson v. Cass County, 107 Mo. 50.

If the condition is one on which the debtor has right to insist, and to which the creditor has no right to object, it will not vitiate the tender. Wheelock v. Tanner, 39 N. Y. 481.

So the Michigan courts hold that a tender may very properly be coupled with conditions such as the party has a right to make, and is entitled to, as resulting from a payment or tender legally made. Brink v. Freeoff, 40 Mich. 614; Lamb v. Jeffrey, 41 Mich. 719; Johnson v. Cranage, 45 Mich. 14. In the last cited case, there was a claim for boomage and tolls on certain logs, which the owners were compelled to pay before they could get possession of the logs. A Mr. Johnson claimed to hold a lien on the logs for said boomage and tolls in behalf of the companies which had rendered the services, and an order from him was necessary to enable the owners to get possession, even after they had paid all that was demanded. It was held that in making a tender to Johnson, the owners had a right to couple it with a demand for the logs, or for an order which would entitle them to later possession thereof.

Where a tender of the mortgage debt is accompanied with the condition that the mortgage be released, this does not invalidate the tender, since the condition is one which the mortgagee is bound by law to perform. Saunders v. Frost, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 259; 16 Am. Dec. 719; Halpin v. Phenix Ins. Co., 118 N. Y. 165; Salinas v. Ellis, 26 S. Car. 337. Compare Loring v. Cooke, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 48.

A tender of the amount due and secured by a pledge, is not invalidated because accompanied with the condition that the property pledged be returned to the pledgor. Loughborough v. McNevin, 74 Cal. 250; 5 Am. St. Rep. 435.

In Indiana, it is held that if the tender of the amount due upon a mortgage note is conditioned upon the release of the mortgage, it is not a good tender. The court, by Biddle, J., says: "When one party is to perform an act, whose right does not depend upon any act to be performed by the other party, the tender must be without condition, as when money is to be paid without condition. The current of authorities—indeed, we believe it to be quite uniform—holds that the party bound to pay the money cannot make a good tender upon the condition that the party to whom the money is to be paid shall give him a written receipt therefor; and in the case of a non-commercial promissory note, the authorities are in conflict, whether a good tender can be made upon the condition that the note shall be surrendered; but in the case of commercial paper, the authorities seem to be uniform, that a tender upon condition that the paper shall be surrendered, is good, because such paper might be put in circulation after payment, and innocent parties become liable; not so, however, with non-commercial paper; after payment by the maker, it becomes harmless, as against him, wherever it may go. A tender, to be good, must not be upon any condition prejudicial to the party to whom it is made. The mortgage is merely the incident to the note. The payment or satisfaction of a note secured by a mortgage is a full and complete discharge of the mortgage. According to the rules above expressed—and we believe they are correct and well sustained by authority—the answer we are considering is insufficient as to the averment of tender. The acceptance of the money, as alleged, and the surrender of the note, operated as a complete legal discharge of the mortgage by which the payment of the note was secured, as much so as if it had been surrendered with the note, released upon the record, or actually canceled. The appellees had no right to demand a cancellation of the mortgage as a condition to the tender—it would in no way have strengthened their right nor placed them in any better legal status—for the surrender of the note, upon its payment, worked the destruction of all legal vitality in the mortgage. Armstrong v. Murphy, 2 Ind. 601; Sherman v. Sherman, 3 Ind. 337; Ledyard v. Chapin, 6 Ind. 320; Francis v. Porter, 7 Ind. 213; Bickle v. Beske, 23 Ind. 18; Lynch v. Jennings, 43 Ind. 276; Rose v. Duncan, 49 Ind. 269; Roosevelt v. Bull's Head Bank, 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 579. We think a demand to cancel the mortgage as a condition of the tender, is not different in principle from demanding a receipt as a condition to the payment of money." Storey v. Krewson, 55 Ind. 397; 23 Am. Rep. 668.

An offer to pay the amount of a legacy, is not good, if it reserves for decision the question of a right to interest. In re Wallace's Estate (Surr. Ct.), 5 N. Y. Supp. 31.

Where the tender is coupled with an offer to pay an additional sum in settlement of another controversy, it is not good. Shack v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 73 Iowa 333.

A tender of the balance due on an account, less certain claims for damages, accompanied with a demand for a receipt in full, is not a good tender. L'Hommiedieu v. The H. L. Dayton, 38 Fed. Rep. 926.

A mortgagor, while riding with the mortgagee on the public highway, made repeated offers of money to the mortgagee by way of tender, but all were involved with other matters of dealing between them, and the settlement was interrupted by a quarrel. Before any costs were incurred, the mortgagee offered to accept the amount due. It was held that no tender had been made which would discharge the mortgage lien. Parks v. Allen, 42 Mich. 482.

Where the purchaser of land tenders the purchase price, on condition that the vendor's wife will sign the deed, such tender is not good as the basis for a bill to compel specific performance. Kelsey v. Crowther, 7 Utah 519.

Where a tenant had the option of purchase during the term, and tendered to the landlord, a deed to be executed by him, accompanied by the purchase-money, but the deed embraced more than the premises, the deed so qualifies the tender as to wholly invalidate it. Plummer v. Barnett (Pa. 1888), 13 Atl. Rep. 953.

So, too, the tender is invalidated by a demand that the party to whom it is made, make a title. Cotheran v. Scanlan, 34 Ga. 556.

An interesting question in this connection was raised in Louisiana, in which the supreme court of that state, by Ilsley, J., says: "We will, therefore, proceed to examine the very important question, whether the qualified tender of other lands, with a concurrent reservation of all legal rights, and

8. Mere Readiness and Willingness to Pay, not Sufficient.—The mere readiness and willingness of a debtor to pay the debt when due, amounts to nothing, without an offer or tender of payment by him and a refusal by the creditor.¹

9. Waiver of Objections.—Where the refusal is placed upon a specific ground, all other objections to the sufficiency of the tender are thereby waived.²

the special plea that he, Millaudon, was not legally liable for the deficiency, because the sale to Davis was one per aversionem, precluded him from availing himself afterwards of that defense. The tender of a thing claimed in a suit, when made in the course of judicial proceedings and in an unqualified and unrestricted manner, carries always with it the presumption which the law attaches to a judicial confession; but when such tender is made, not of the thing claimed, but of something else, with a special reservation (if the tender is not accepted as made) of all legal rights, and with the special defense that the thing actually claimed is not due, we cannot give to a tender so made the conclusive effect claimed for it by Davis. It was virtually an offer on the part of Millaudon to buy his peace, and to put a stop to litigation. If it amounted to anything at all, as an admission, it did not go to the extent that the thing claimed was due, but simply admitted that there was a deficiency in the measurement of the land sold; but it did not preclude the party from using the defense on which he relied, if his specific offer was not accepted." Davis v. Millaudon, 17 La. Ann. 97; 87 Am. Dec. 517.

A conditional tender will not stop the running of interest. Nantz v. Lober, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 304; Flake v. Nuse, 51 Tex. 98.

If the tender is made upon a condition, either expressly stated or necessarily implied, and the tender is accepted, this constitutes an acceptance of the condition. Lee v. Dodd, 20 Mo. App. 271. And if the condition be assented to, the tender is binding. Bickle v. Bescke, 23 Ind. 18. See Wheelock v. Tanner, 39 N. Y. 481.

A mere offer to pay whatever shall be ascertained to be necessary to discharge a litigated demand, without any steps being taken to ascertain that amount, and the preparation of a receipt in blank, purporting to discharge a judgment which had not in fact been entered, is not a good tender. Chase v. Welsh, 45 Mich. 345.

But where an administrator seeks to enforce a contract for the sale of land made by his intestate, it is not essential that he should actually tender a deed to the purchaser, if he shows that he is able and willing to make the deed upon payment of the purchase-money. Faulkner v. Willman (Ky. 1891), 16 S. W. Rep. 352.

Where a purchaser from a mortgagor seeks to set aside a sale under the mortgage, on the ground of fraud, and to be allowed to redeem, it is sufficient if the bill of complaint contains an averment that the complainant is ready to pay the amount admitted to be due on the mortgage debt, and hereby tenders that amount or any other sum that may be found to be due, and submits himself to the court for its decree in that behalf. Cain v. Girnon, 36 Ala. 168.

Mere proof that the party was able to perform, would be no evidence of his intention to fulfill; he must make a tender on the day and place. McConnell v. Hall, Brayt (Vt.) 223.

Hope Iron Co., 16 R. I. 318. Especially if the ground not stated is a trivial one, and one which could easily have been remedied at the time. Stokes v. Recknagel, 38 N. Y. Super. Ct. 368; Decamp v. Feay, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 323; 9 Am. Dec. 372.

If the objection made to the tender is a legal one, it would seem to make no difference how trivial it might be, and the jury would have no right to take into consideration the fact that the real object of the refusal was to get rid of the contract, and that the party in fact did not entertain the objection which he put forward. This question arose in Pennsylvania, at an early day. In that case there was evidence that Decamp, the plaintiff, specifically and continually objected to the tender, because it was in bank notes and not in coin. There was also evidence tending to show that his real motive for declining the bank notes was that he desired to get rid of the effect of the tender. The jury were instructed that "the great question was whether the refusal to take the money offered arose from a determination to dissolve the contract and keep the money received." The supreme court held that this instruction was erroneous, because it contained a plain intimation that if the real motive was different from the avowed one, and if the party had in truth no objection to the kind of money tendered, but merely used it as a pretext for an objection with a view of getting rid of the bargain, it amounted to a waiver, notwithstanding his express declarations that he would waive nothing. The court, by Gibson, J., uses the following language: "The right of a person to have a tender of imperfect performance considered as valid, arises from his having been, by the silence of the opposite party, deceived into the belief that nothing further was required; but where there is no allegation of misapprehension, by what right can the person making the tender enter into the motive of a party objecting, and say, 'Your dislike to the mode of performance is all affectation, and you are therefore bound to withdraw your objection'? To this, no matter what or how unconscionable the motive may be, he might openly reply, 'I only exercise a right I reserved by contract, and although your notes would answer my ends as well as specie, yet for the purpose of defeating the contract altogether, I require payment in coin because you cannot procure it.'" Decamp v. Feay, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 323; 9 Am. Dec. 372.

Some cases hold that not only must the objections be made at the time of the tender, but that all objections must be made then; and those then made preclude the making of others subsequently. Moynahan v. Moore, 9 Mich. 9; 77 Am. Dec. 468; Fosdick v. Van Husan, 21 Mich. 570.

There can be no waiver of an objection, unless it appears that the party had knowledge of the facts which would warrant the objection. Waldron v. Murphy, 40 Mich. 668; Dunham v. Pettee, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 500.

The objection that the tender was made by a party who was not duly authorized is waived, unless made at the time. Lampley v. Weed, 27 Ala. 621.

Where tender is made by check, and is refused, not because of the form of the tender, but on the ground that the contract has not been complied with, this constitutes a waiver of a tender in specie. Walsh v. St. Louis Exposition, etc., Assoc., 101 Mo. 534; Henderson v. Cass County, 107 Mo. 50; Collier v. White, 67 Miss. 133.

It is too late, after the final decree, to object that a tender was made by check. Bradford v. Foster, 87 Tenn. 4.

Tender was made in a check and was objected to on the ground that it was not certified. The debtor, with the creditor's consent, thereupon withdrew it to get it certified. In about two hours he returned with the check certified, when the creditor objected to receiving it on the ground that the hour for performing the contract had passed. It was held that this objection could not avail. Duffy v. O'Donovan, 46 N. Y. 223.

Where a larger amount of goods than that contracted for is tendered, the objection to the amount is not waived by failing to make it at the time. Levy v. Green, 1 E. & E. 969; 102 E. C. L. 966; Perry v. Mount Hope Iron Co., 16 R. I. 318.

But if the objection is to the amount of the tender, and not to its medium, it is a good tender. Jennings v. Mendenhall, 7 Ohio St. 257.

Where tender is made at a place other than that stipulated in the contract as the place of payment, and is refused except upon certain conditions, this constitutes a waiver of the right to have the tender at the place agreed on. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Union Mills

IV. PARTIES ; PLACE—1. By Whom to be Made.—The tender must be made by the debtor, or the person who is bound to pay over the money or deliver the property, or by his legal representative.¹

2. To Whom Made.—The tender must be made to the party to whom the money is due, or who is entitled to the possession of the property, or to his authorized agent.²

3. Tender of Specific Property.—An obligation to deliver specific articles of personal property may be discharged by a tender of the

Where certain wheat placed in an elevator was to be delivered on payment of charges, and plaintiff demanded the wheat without tendering the charges, and its delivery was refused exclusively on another ground, it was held that tender of the charges was waived. Farbell v. Farmers' Mut. El. Co., 44 Minn. 471.

If a purchaser of real estate denies that anything is due the vendor, and does not offer to pay anything, he waives all objection to the tender of a deed by the vendor, accompanied with a demand of payment of the whole purchase-money. Hannan v. McNickle, 82 Cal. 122.

A subsequent acceptance of property is a waiver of the objection that it was not tendered in time. Emery v. Langley, 1 Idaho N. S. 694.

It is not good if made by a stranger, McDougald v. Dougherty, 11 Ga. 570; unless subsequently ratified by the debtor, Harding v. Davies, 2 C. & P. 78; 12 E. C. L. 35; Mahler v. Newbaur, 32 Cal. 168; Kincaid v. School Dist. No. 4, 11 Me. 188; Read v. Goldring, 2 M. & S. 86; and the creditor is not bound to accept a tender made by a stranger. Gibson v. Lyon, 115 U. S. 439.

A tender may be made by an agent and to an agent, if the latter is authorized to receive the money. But a demand, in order to avoid the tender, should be made of the debtor personally. Berthold v. Reyburn, 37 Mo. 586.

A person who has no interest in mortgaged premises, nor in the tender made, cannot make a valid tender of the mortgage debt on his own behalf. Mahler v. Newbaur, 32 Cal. 168; Sinclair v. Learned, 51 Mich. 335. But a person having an interest in the consequences of a tender, may make an effectual tender. Kincaid v. School District, 11 Me. 188. It may be made by a surety. Hampshire Mfg. Bank v. Billings, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 87.

Where a mortgage debt is payable on demand, a tender made by a purchaser of the property, who did not assume the debt, is not good, if made before demand of payment by the mortgagee, or a tender by the mortgagor. Noyes v. Wyckoff, 114 N. Y. 204.

So a lessor may refuse a tender of the rent, by one to whom the premises have been subleased in violation of the contract. Prieur v. Depouilly, 8 La. Ann. 399.

But want of authority, in an agent, to make a tender, cannot be alleged in the answer, unless objected to when the tender was made. Lampley v. Weed, 27 Ala. 621.

It would seem that a tender made in behalf of an idiot, by any person, is good, and so is one made in behalf of an infant, by a relative, though not his guardian. 2 Pars. Cont. 639; Co. Litt. 206, b; Brown v. Dysinger, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 408.

Where one who is entitled to make a tender, makes it jointly with one who is not entitled to make it, the tender is bad. Bender v. Bean, 52 Ark. 146.

But it was held that where one of two co-tenants of land, tenders his pro rata share of the amount necessary to redeem the land from a sale for taxes, this is sufficient. Winter v. Atkinson, 28 La. Ann. 650.

A tender by either one of three agents appointed for that purpose, is valid. Sons of Temperance v. Brown, 11 Minn. 356.

articles at the proper time and place. The articles must be set apart and designated, so as to enable the creditor to distinguish them from others, and if this be done it is good as a tender, though the creditor be absent.¹

A tender to one of two persons jointly entitled, is sufficient. Prescott v. Everts, 4 Wis. 314; Flanigan v. Seelye (Minn. 1893), 55 N. W. Rep. 115; Dawson v. Ewing, 16 S. & R. (Pa.) 371; Carman v. Fultz, 21 N. Y. 547. But see Dodge v. Deal, 28 Ill. 303.

If the person is the duly authorized agent to receive the money, the tender is good, though the agent deny his authority. Billiot v. Robinson, 13 La. Ann. 529; McIniffe v. Wheelock, 1 Gray (Mass.) 600.

A tender to a clerk in the store where the goods were purchased, is sufficient. Hoyt v. Byrnes, 11 Me. 475.

A tender by the purchaser, to a son of the vendor, was held to be sufficient to stop the running of interest upon a sum decreed to be paid by the purchaser before the delivery of a deed by the vendor, where it appeared that the purchaser had made an unsuccessful attempt to find the vendor before tendering to the son, who had been authorized to state that the vendor would not execute the deed until a receipt in full of all demands should be given. Crawford v. Osmun, 94 Mich. 533.

Tender of money due a beneficiary, should be made to the trustee. Chahoon v. Hollenback, 16 S. & R. (Pa.) 425; 16 Am. Dec. 587; Hayward v. Munger, 14 Iowa 516.

Where the creditor sent his son to the debtor to demand a specific sum, an offer of a less sum, by the debtor, to the son, cannot be deemed a legal tender to the father. Chipman v. Bates, 5 Vt. 143.

If a party is required to pay an attorney's fee to the attorney of the opposite party, as a condition of opening a default, it would seem that a tender of the amount to the attorney is sufficient. Wolff v. Canadian Pac. R. Co., 89 Cal. 332.

Whether a tender to the assignor after assignment, is good, see Camp v. Simon, 34 Ala. 126.

1. Tender of Specific Property.—Smith v. Loomis, 7 Conn. 110.

Where the time and place are fixed, a tender at such time and place is good, though there is no one there to receive the articles. Gilmore v. Holt, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 258; Southworth v. Smith, 7

That the property must be set apart and distinguished from other articles of a like kind, or must be selected from a larger bulk by the party making the tender, is held in 2 Parsons Cont. 646; Clark v. Baker, 11 Met. (Mass.) 186; 45 Am. Dec. 199; Croninger v. Crocker, 62 N. Y. 151; Gilman v. Moore, 14 Vt. 457; Veazy v. Harmony, 7 Me. 91; Wyman v. Winslow, 11 Me. 398; 26 Am. Dec. 542; Leballister v. Nash, 24 Me. 316; Bates v. Churchill, 32 Me. 31; Dewees v. Lockhart, 1 Tex. 535; Bates v. Bates, Walk. (Miss.) 401; 12 Am. Dec. 572.

The case from Mississippi (Bates v. Bates, Walk. (Miss.) 401; 12 Am. Dec. 572) was an action on a promissory note given for ten cows and calves. A witness testified that sometime before the note matured, both plaintiff and defendant were at her house, and she heard the defendant, the maker of the note, say to the plaintiff that he was then ready to deliver the cows and calves named in the note, but plaintiff replied that the note was not due, and that he would not receive them until it was due. It was further shown that the defendant had in the place, cows and calves enough to discharge the obligation. Another witness testified that on the day the note fell due he was called on by the maker to walk to his lot; he was informed by defendant that the cows and calves which witness saw in his lot, being eleven in number, had been driven up to discharge the note that plaintiff held. The court held that the cows and calves were not sufficiently identified to make it a good tender.

In a case arising in Rhode Island, the plaintiff offered to sell the defendant 30 or 40 tons of scrap iron, which the defendant agreed to buy if plaintiff would deliver it on the defendant's wharf. Plaintiff carried to the wharf a cargo of 53½ tons and tendered it to defendant, which was refused on the ground that it was not the kind contracted for. Afterwards at the trial, defendant made the further objection that a tender of 53½ tons was not a tender in fulfillment of a contract to deliver 30 or 40

4. Place of Tender.—If the contract fixes the place, the tender must be made at that place, and the party to whom the tender is to be made must attend there for the purpose of receiving the money or thing to be tendered.¹

tons. It was held that the objection was well taken, and that it was not waived by a failure to make it when the goods were tendered. Perry v. Mount Hope Iron Co., 16 R. I. 318. See also Benj. on Sales (2d Am. Ed.), § 689; Rommel v. Wingate, 103 Mass. 327; Croninger v. Crocker, 62 N. Y. 151; Dixon v. Fletcher, 3 M. & W. 146; Hart v. Mills, 15 M. & W. 85; Cunliffe v. Harrison, 6 Exch. 903; Levy v. Green, 1 E. & E. 969; 102 E. C. L. 966; Rylands v. Kreitman, 19 C. B. N. S. 351; 115 E. C. L. 351.

But where the article sold in bulk is all of a given quality, as grain, separation or identification is not necessary. Armstrong v. Tait, 8 Ala. 635; Hughes v. Prewitt, 5 Tex. 264. This rule has been applied to a reaping machine of a particular pattern, where there was a number of such machines. Ganson v. Madigan, 9 Wis. 146.

And where an article is uniform in bulk, and it is no burden to the purchaser of a portion, to separate such portion from the mass, a tender of too much, from which the purchaser is to take the amount of his purchase, is good. Thus, where a ship's hold contained 582 hectolitres of nuts of uniform quality, and the nuts were shipped as ordered, except as to the additional quantity, and it was a part of the contract of sale that the purchaser was to furnish bags, a tender of 400 hectolitres, to be taken from the ship's hold, is good. Brownfield v. Johnson, 128 Pa. St. 254; 6 L. R. A. 48. But in that case it appeared that it was common to ship small orders of nuts in common bulk, in this manner.

1. Place of Tender.—Startop v. McDonald, 6 M. & G. 593; 46 E. C. L. 623; Co. Litt. 210b; Roberts v. Beatty, 2 P. & W. (Pa.) 63; 21 Am. Dec. 410; Wiggin v. Wiggin, 43 N. H. 567; 80 Am. It is sufficient, as a general rule, that personal property which has been sold, be offered to the purchaser at the place where it was at the time of making the sale. 2 Kent's Com. 505; 2 Story on Contracts, § 1410; Barr v. Myers, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 295.

But if the contract is to pay a debt by the delivery of certain articles, the property should, if it is portable, be taken to the creditor's residence or place of business, and tendered there. Hall v. Whittier, 10 R. I. 535; Miles v. Roberts, 34 N. H. 254; Goodwin v. Holbrook, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 380; Lobdell v. Hopkins, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 516; Roberts v. Beatty, 2 P. & W. (Pa.) 63; 21 Am. Dec. 410; Barr v. Myers, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 295. Provided that the creditor is within the state. Santee v. Santee, 64 Pa. St. 473; Howard v. Miner, 20 Me. 330; Harris v. Mulock, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 402; Grussy v. Schneider, 59 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 188; Houbie v. Volkening, 49 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 169; King v. Finch, 60 Ind. 420; Littell v. Nichols, Hard. (Ky.) 66. But not if he is out of the state. Trimble v. Williamson, 49 Ala. 525; Gill v. Bradley, 21 Minn. 15.

It is held in Kentucky, that the usual place of the obligor's residence, is the place of payment, where no place is named and the payment is to be made in personal property. Galloway v. Smith, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 133; Wilmouth v. Patton, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 280; Chambers v. Winn, Sneed (Ky.) 166; 2 Am. Dec. 713; Grant v. Groshon, Hard. (Ky.) 85; 3 Am. Dec. 725.

But where the debt is to be paid in money, the debtor must seek the creditor, if he is within the state and no particular place of payment is named. Galloway v. Smith, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 133; Judd v. Ensign, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 258. A tender of the purchase price of land, however, is good if made at the vendor's residence, though he is absent. Smith v. Smith, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 405; 2 Hill (N. Y.) 351.

But if a place is named, a tender at that place is sufficient, though the one who is to receive it is not present at the time. Judd v. Ensign, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 258.

If a note is payable in personal prop-

5. Time of Tender.—Where the act to be performed may, under the terms of the contract, be done anywhere, a tender made at a convenient time before midnight is sufficient; but if the act is to be done at a particular place, so that the duty rests upon the other party to attend at that place, the tender must be made by daylight, and a convenient time before sunset.¹ The property, when thus erty, to a party living out of the United States, and the place of payment is not named therein, it would seem that the debtor must ascertain from the creditor where he will receive the goods, or else must designate to the creditor where he will deliver the goods, and must make the tender accordingly. Bixby v. Whitney, 5 Me. 192.

It is held in Illinois, that where a note is given for money, but may be paid by the delivery of specific personal property, the maker must, in order to discharge the note by delivery of the property, tender it at the place which was the residence of the payee at the time the note was given. Borah v. Curry, 12 Ill. 66.

The courts of some of the states have adopted the doctrine of Lord Coke, that where there is to be a delivery of ponderous articles, and no place is designated for their delivery, the obligor must seek the obligee before the day, and ascertain what place he will appoint at which to receive them, and he must deliver them there, provided the place selected by the obligee is not an unreasonable place. (Co. Lit. 210 b; Cro. Eliz. 48.) Slingerland v. Morse, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 477; Barns v. Graham, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 452; 15 Am. Dec. 394; Sheldon v. Skinner, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 525; 21 Am. The provision of the Louisiana code, that where the obligation refers to real property, the debtor must give notice to the creditor to be present at a fixed hour, at the office of a notary, to receive the conveyance, does not apply to a case where the purchaser has been evicted from a portion of the land sold to him. Robbins v. Martin, 43 La. Ann. 488.

1. Time of Tender.—Startup v. Mc-

Donald, 6 M. & G. 593; 46 E. C. L. 623.

Where a person has a whole day in which to perform his contract, a refusal by the other person to wait at the appointed place until the time, within the day, that such first person agrees to make a tender, amounts to a direct waiver of further effort to perform. Karker v. Haverly, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 79.

It is immaterial that a tender was not made within the required time, if, when made, it was accepted. Emery v. Langley, 1 Idaho N. S. 694.

Allowing a tender of damages and costs to be made in certain cases, at any time "until three days before the commencement of the term" to which the action is returnable, excludes from the period mentioned, both the day on which the tender is made, and the first day of the term. Willey v. Laraway, 64 Vt. 566.

In an interpleader issue between a vendor of goods seeking to rescind the sale for fraud of the purchaser, and creditors holding executions against the latter, a tender on the part of the former, of unpaid notes received from the purchaser at the time of trial, will be treated as if made at the date of rescission, where the rights and liabilities of the parties have been in no way changed by the delay. Sloane v. Shiffer, 156 Pa. St. 59. See Morse v. Woodworth, 155 Mass. 233.

If no time is limited in the contract, the property is deliverable on demand. Story on Contracts, § 1411; Vance v. Bloomer, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 196; Rice v. Churchill, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 145; Russell v. Ormsbel, 10 Vt. 274.

Where a deed is placed in escrow, to be delivered to the grantee upon payment of the purchase-money, a tender within a reasonable time is good; and if the party holding the deed, refuse to deliver it upon such tender, the grantee is not bound to keep the tender good by payment of the money into court or otherwise. Cannon v. Handley, 72 Cal. 133; McDaniel v. Kimbrell, 3 Greene (Iowa) 335; Washburn v. Dewey, 17 Vt. 92; White v. Dobson, 17 Gratt.

6. Equity Will not Supply Defects.—A court of equity will not supply a defect in a tender made to a wrong party or in a wrong place.²

V. KEEPING TENDER GOOD.—The tender must be kept good to the time of trial.³

Where the contract does not fix the time for payment of a debt secured by a pledge, a tender of the amount due, including interest, within a reasonable time after a demand of payment had been refused by the pledgor, is good. Loughborough v. McNevin, 74 Cal. 250; 5 Am. St. Rep. 345.

A tender of a deed, after a verdict has been rendered for a sum of money claimed as alternative relief, is made too late. Houston v. Sledge, 101 N. Car. 640; 2 L. R. A. 487.

As to the time of day when a tender of goods is to be made, the rule is, that if they are bulky, the tender must be seasonably made, so that the party to whom they are offered may have an opportunity to examine them, and see that they are such as are required by the contract, before the close of the day on which the delivery is to be made. Croninger v. Crocker, 62 N. Y. 158; Hall v. Whittier, 10 R. I. 530; Tiernan v. Napier, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 410; Aldrich v. Albee, 1 Me. 120; 10 Am. Dec. 45; Savary v. Goe, 3 Wash. (U. S.) 140; *Acocks v. In Croninger v. Crocker, 62 N. Y. 158, a tender of wool, made after 10 o'clock at night, was held insufficient. But it has been held that a tender after sunset will be sufficient, if the party is present to receive it. Startup v. McDonovan, 6 M. & G. 593; 46 E. C. L. 591; Sweet v. Harding, 19 Vt. 587; McClartey v. Gokey, 31 Iowa 505.

The tender may, of course, be made at any hour of the day at which both the parties actually meet at the appointed place. Startup v. McDonald, 6 M. & G. 593; 46 E. C. L. 623.

Where a tender of chattels is to be made, and the party who is to receive them is absent, the tender must be made on the appointed day and at the latest convenient hour in that day, but

A tender is not good, unless it is so made as to vest the property in the creditor. Hughes v. Eschback, 7 D. C. 66; Schrader v. Wolfen, 21 Ind. 238.

Where it is not necessary to a valid transfer of stocks, that they should be transferred on the books of the corporation, an offer by the holder to deliver certificates which are indorsed in blank, is a sufficient tender. Wilson v. Hill, 88 Cal. 92.

2. King v. Finch, 60 Ind. 420. "If a tender is not legal, a court of equity will not support it; nor supply a defect of a tender against a rule of law, unless perhaps where fraud is used to prevent it." Gammon v. Stone, 1 Ves. 339.

In Clark v. Drake, 63 Mo. 354, it was held that if one tendered all admitted by him to be due, the chancellor should not deny him relief on the ground of the insufficiency of the tender, but should grant relief only on his doing that which equity required. The court in this case cited Whelan v. Reily, 61 Mo. 565; Irwin v. Brittain, 1 Hoff. Ch. (N. Y.) 353; Bishop of Winchester v. Payne, 11 Ves. 194. See also Hoyt v. Hall, 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 42.

The obligation to keep it good, is as essential to its legal efficacy as the tender. Burlock v. Cross, 16 Colo. 162.

It is not necessary to keep the identical coin or notes, or the precise pieces of money which have been tendered, but the debtor must have money of a like kind ready at all times, so that he can produce it when required. Park v. Wiley, 67 Ala. 310; McCalley v. Otey, 90 Ala. 302; Aulger v. Clay, 109 Ill. 487; Shields v. Lozean, 22 N. J. Eq. 447.

Using money after it is tendered, invalidates the tender. Gray v. Angier, 62 Ga. 596; Stow v. Russell, 36 Ill. 18; Nantz v. Lober, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 304.

Tender of the amount of a coupon falling due upon a mortgage bond, must be shown to have been made in due time and maintained, in order to prevent the whole amount of the debt from becoming due, under a clause providing therefor, in case of default in any installment. Lantry v. French, 33 Neb. 524.

Under section 2839 of the California Code, where the landlord refuses to accept rent from the tenant, the offer of the tenant, though not continued by deposit of the amount, is a sufficient tender of performance to release the tenant's surety. Randol v. Tatum, 98 Cal. 390.

In Vermont, it has been held that where the thing tendered is money, the party making the tender may use it as his own, if he holds himself at all times in readiness to pay the debt in current money, whenever requested; but if specific articles of personal property are tendered, the articles cannot be retaken, nor disposed of in any way by the one making the tender. Curtiss v. Grubanks, 24 Vt. 536.

But under the New York decisions, the party would not be allowed to use the money. Nelson v. Loder, 55 Hun (N. Y.) 173.

It is immaterial that the master does not find that the tender has been kept good, where the bill alleges the tender, and the money tendered has been paid to the clerk of the court. Anderson v. Moore, 145 Ill. 61.

In one Illinois case, it was held that where a party, after making a tender, deposited the money to his own use, and a part was drawn out, in place of which no other money was shown to have been held ready, the tender was not kept good. Crain v. McGoon, 86 Ill. 431; 29 Am. Rep. 37. But compare Thayer v. Meeker, 86 Ill. 470.

In Sharp v. Todd, 38 N. J. Eq. 329, the facts were as follows: On March 29th, a mortgagor paid the mortgagee the interest of the mortgage debt up to April 1st, and then offered to pay the principal, but said that he had not all the money in cash, part being in bank checks. The tender was refused because it was not in money. On the 31st of March, the mortgagor returned to the house of the mortgagee with the amount of the mortgage debt in gold and legal-tender currency, and attempted to enter the house, saying that he had the money to pay the mortgagee, and that he wanted the mortgage. The mortgagee thrust him out, and locked the door against him. The mortgagor then deposited the money in a bank, where it remained until he filed his answer to a bill filed by the mortgagee to foreclose, and then paid it into court. After the foreclosure suit was begun, the solicitor of the mortgagee, made a demand on the mortgagor for the principal of the mortgage debt, to which the mortgagor replied that he would pay him the money as soon as he could get it from the bank where he had deposited it, which bank was a few miles distant. It was held that the tender was good, and had been kept good.

If it be shown that the party making

VI. EFFECT OF TENDER—1. Of Money.—A tender of money which is unaccepted is not equivalent to performance, and the tender, borrowed the money to be used for that express purpose, and immediately returned it to the lender, this will avoid the tender. Park v. Wiley, 67 Ala. 310.

Where a tender is declined, but the creditor subsequently demands payment of the amount tendered, and it is refused, the benefit of the tender is lost. Rose v. Brown, Kirby (Conn.) 293; 1 Am. Dec. 22; Manny v. Harris, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 24; 3 Am. Dec. 386; Sloan v. Petrie, 16 Ill. 262; Stow v. Russell, 36 Ill. 18; Carr v. Miner, 92 Ill. 604.

If a debtor, after tender, refuses to pay, he loses the benefit of tender. Stow v. Russell, 36 Ill. 18; Woolner v. Levy, 48 Mo. App. 469; Call v. Scott, 4 Call (Va.) 402. See Tucker v. Bufum, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 46.

Where a purchaser of real estate deposited the price in a bank, but did not inform the vendor of such fact, nor place the amount at his disposal, such deposit will not prevent the running of interest, though before such deposit was made, the purchaser had demanded a conveyance and tendered the amount due. Especially is this the case where the purchaser subsequently draws the money out of the bank, and uses it in his business, and is, at the same time, in possession of the premises, receiving the rents and profits without paying rent. It is not sufficient that he is at all times prepared to pay the amount on demand. Sanders v. Bryer, 152 Mass. 141; 9 L. R. A. 255. Compare McCalley v. Otey, 90 Ala. 302.

Where a party has obtained a decree for specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, upon the deposit of the amount due from him at a bank, as provided in the contract, he loses the benefits of the decree by a subsequent withdrawal of the deposit, although the bank may be liable to the vendor for the money. Cheney v. Wagner, 33 Neb. 310.

Under the Louisiana Code, a tender will not avail, unless followed by a consignment or deposit of the money or bank notes. (C. C. 2163, 2165; C. P. 405, 407, 412); Benton v. Roberts, 2 La. Ann. 243; Breen v. Schmidt, 6 La. Ann. 13; Walker v. Brown, 12 La. Ann. 266.

If too much has been tendered, there is no obligation to keep the tender good as to the whole amount, or to pay the whole amount into court. Abel v. Opel, 24 Ind. 250.

A party tendering bonds, must keep them where he can deliver them within a reasonable time, or the tender will not avail him. Sanders v. Peck, 131 Ill. 407 (reversing same case, 30 Ill. App. 238).

Where a pledgor makes a good tender of the amount due the pledgee, and the same is refused without sufficient reason, the pledgee cannot retain the pledge as against one whose rights have accrued subsequent to the making of the pledge, though the pledgor did not keep his tender good. Norton v. Baxter, 41 Minn. 146; 4 L. R. A. 305.

Where a vendor tenders a deed to the purchaser, and upon the latter's stating that he cannot close the matter up at that time, says it will be satisfactory if it is closed in a few days, this does not work a withdrawal of the tender. Hogan v. Burton, 54 Hun (N. Y.) 638.

Failure to complete a tender made to stop interest and charge defendant with costs, by payment of the money into court, will not affect plaintiff's right to recover, where the tender was not essential to the maintenance of the action. Lewis v. Wilson, 17 N. Y. Supp. 128; 62 Hun (N. Y.) 622.

Where a defendant was required to pay an attorney's fee, as a condition of opening a default, a tender of the same to plaintiff's attorney, is a sufficient performance of the condition to preserve defendant's rights under the order, until the question of its validity shall be determined; but to constitute a payment, it must be kept good. Wolff v. Canadian Pac. R. Co., 89 Cal. 332.

As to the Tender of Proof.—As to whether it is the duty of the creditor to show that the debtor has used the money tendered, or whether it is the duty of the debtor to show that he has not used it, but has set it completely aside, there is some difference of opinion. Sanders v. Bryer, 152 Mass. 141; 9 L. R. A. 255. As to the effect on the lien of a mortgage of keeping tender good, see infra, this title, Acceptance or Refusal of Tender—Effect on Lien of Mortgage, etc.; Payment of Money Into Court.

does not satisfy or extinguish the obligation, nor bar an action upon it.¹

2. Of Property.—But the same rule does not apply to a tender of specific personal property, in which case a tender and refusal, or what is equivalent thereto, vests the property in the creditor, and puts an end to his right to sue on the contract.²

Super Ct. 304; Elliott v. Bass, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 354; Downer v. Sinclair, 15 Vt. 495; Preston v. Grant, 34 Vt. 201.

The court, by Hammond, J., in The Reuben Dowd, 46 Fed. Rep. 800, says, that the only effect of a tender which is not followed by payment into court, is to relieve the one making a proper tender of the costs of litigation that may ensue upon its refusal; but that it does not in any sense change the rights of the parties under the contract, nor does it bind him who makes the tender, to acknowledge that that sum, or any sum, is due.

Though a vendor of land refuses a tender of the purchase price, this will not release the vendee from payment, if he retains possession of the land. Rhorer v. Bila, 83 Cal. 51.

Whenever a party authorized to redeem land, makes a sufficient tender of the purchase-money with ten per cent. per annum, and all other lawful charges as prescribed by the Alabama Code, section 1881, such tender has the effect to reinvest him with the title. Steele v. Hanna, 91 Ala. 190.

An accord will constitute no bar to an action, unless there has been a performance, or a tender of performance; and the tender must be kept good. In an early case in New York, the court, by Nelson, C. J., says: "Tender of performance was proved, but this has never been held equivalent to an execution for the purpose of this defense." And the judge cites the following New York cases: Watkinson v. Inglesby, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 386; Russell v. Lytle, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 390; 22 Am. Dec. 537; Daniels v. Hallenbeck, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 408. The court goes on to say: "But in point of fact, no definite agreement between the parties was proved; or, if otherwise, the tender did not come up to it. The proposition of DeGrauw was acceded to with a qualification; but whether he ever assented to it or not, nowhere appears. His assent would have been affirmatively shown before the agreement could be regarded as complete. The evidence is positive that the old securities were not to be given up, and there is nothing to contradict it. Did DeGrauw assent? If he did not, the minds of the parties never met in the alleged arrangement. If he did, then the tender was defective, as he there insisted upon the surrender of the old notes." Brooklyn Bank v. DeGrauw, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 342; 35 Am. Dec. 569.

By the refusal, the obligor is converted into a bailee for the obligee, and must take care of the property at the latter's expense and risk. Sheldon v. Skinner, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 525; 21 Am. Dec. 161; Lamb v. Lathrop, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 95; 27 Am. Dec. 174; McJilton v. Smizer, 18 Mo. 111; Fisk v. Holden, 17 Tex. 408.

Richards* (D. C.), 21 Wash. L. Rep. 86.

The tender must be of such sum as will cover the claim admitted, with interest to date of tender, and costs accrued to that time. The Enos B. Phillips, 53 Fed. Rep. 153.

Refusal of a tender by an executor, bars a claim for interest by the legatee, whether the proceeding is in the surrogate's court or in a court of law. Morgan v. Valentine, 6 Dem. (N. Y.) 18.

A mortgagee who refuses a tender made after forfeiture, loses all interest accruing after the date of the tender. Loomis v. Knox, 60 Conn. 343.

Where the plaintiff has not realized any interest since the making of the tender, the money having been left in a bank for the benefit of defendant, the latter is not entitled to interest. Cheney v. Libby, 134 U. S. 68.

A purchaser depositing in a bank the purchase price of real estate, after demanding a conveyance and tendering the amount due, will not be relieved from the obligation of paying interest thereon, if, instead of placing the deposit at the disposal of the vendor, he deals with it as his own. Sanders v. Bryer, 152 Mass. 141.

But if the party to whom the tender is made, recovers more than the amount tendered, he is entitled to costs. Elder v. Elder, 43 Kan. 514; Collier v. White, 67 Miss. 133; Elsanger v. Grovjohn, 29 Neb. 139; Pollock v. Warwick, 104 N. Car. 638; Griffiths v. School Board of Ystradylfodwg, L. R., 24 Q. B. Div. 307.

Where a purchaser at a tax sale refuses the tender by the owner, of an amount greater than that actually paid by the purchaser, and a reference is ordered, the costs of the reference should be taxed against the purchaser. Gage v. DuPuy, 134 Ill. 132.

Where the master of a vessel made full delivery of cotton ties to the consignee, the count being verified by the custom officers, and upon complaint of shortage being made, tendered to the consignee certain bundles of ties which were left over after delivery of all the consignments, costs should not be decreed against the vessel, though a decree is rendered in favor of the libellant for the surplus bundles. The Cassius, 41 Fed. Rep. 367.

Where plaintiff recovered a less sum than defendant had tendered him, the latter is not entitled to costs, if it is not shown that the tender was brought to the knowledge of the court, or was kept good, or that defendant offered to confess judgment for that or any other sum. Saum v. La Shell, 45 Kan. 205.

Where the only issue was as to the amount due, and defendant tendered less than the sum claimed by plaintiff, and the jury found that less was due than the sum tendered, the court properly allowed costs to defendant under the provisions of sections 992 and 993 of the General Statutes of Missouri. Redman v. Thomas, 39 Mo. App. 143.

In an action commenced before a justice in Ohio, for the recovery of money, defendant offered to confess judgment for a given amount, with interest from the date on which the debt accrued. The offer was not accepted. The case went by appeal to the common pleas, and it was held that the offer followed the case to that court, and that, under the statute (Rev. Stat. Ohio, § 5141), if the plaintiff, at the trial in the common pleas, did not recover more than the amount specified in the offer, he was liable for defendant's costs accruing after the offer was made. Cohoon v. Kineon, 46 Ohio St. 590. Compare the New York case of Mock v. Saile, 52 Hun (N. Y.) 198.

Where, in an action in a justice's court, the defendant offered to allow judgment to go against him for a certain sum, which offer the plaintiff refused and afterwards recovered a less sum and the defendant paid the amount

VII. ACCEPTANCE OR REFUSAL OF TENDER—1. Reasonable Time for Decision.—The creditor is entitled to a reasonable time to determine whether he will accept or refuse the tender.¹

2. Acceptance Must be Absolute.—A tender must be accepted on the terms on which it is offered, or it must be refused.²

3. Effect on Lien of Mortgage, etc.—A tender of the full amount of a debt secured by a mortgage or pledge discharges the lien of the mortgage or pledge.³

recovered into court, this fact did not deprive the plaintiff of his right to appeal, though he had paid the costs in the justice's court. Scott v. Superior Court, 73 Cal. 11. To same effect, Grantham v. Payne, 77 Ala. 584.

1. Moore v. Norman, 43 Minn. 428; 9 L. R. A. 55; 19 Am. St. Rep. 247.

He should have time and opportunity to satisfy himself whether a correct amount has been tendered, and what his rights are in the premises. Root v. Bradley, 49 Mich. 27.

An offer of judgment may not be accepted after the case has been tried, although the time allowed by statute for acceptance has not expired. Guttfroff v. Wallach (City Ct.), 22 N. Y. Supp. 745.

So, if a creditor prevents payment by wrongfully refusing to accept it when tendered, and afterwards demands the money, the debtor is entitled to a reasonable opportunity to comply with the demand. Stafford v. Welch, 59 N. H. 46.

There is no way of compelling the acceptance of the tender. Coghlan v. South Carolina R. Co., 32 Fed. Rep. 316.

If a creditor refuses a tender properly made by a principal, the effect will be to discharge the surety. Fisher v. Stockebrand, 26 Kan. 565; Wilson v. McVey, 83 Ind. 110.

Where an employé, who is hired for a month, is discharged for negligence, after working less than half a month, and refuses a tender of half a month's wages, he cannot recover on a quantum meruit for time he actually worked. Leacock v. Striker (C. Pl.), 10 N. Y. Supp. 540.

Where a party, who is ordered to convey certain property, on the payment, within a given time, of a sum found due him, is entitled to an appeal and takes it, he is not barred of his right to the payment by rejecting a tender made within the time. Ward v. Matthews, 80 Cal. 343.

Moneys tendered as the amount admitted to be due for tax otherwise claimed to be illegal, and to restrain the collection of which an appeal has been filed, will be directed to be deposited in court and paid over to the treasurer who refused them, upon his reconsideration of the refusal and application for a second tender, but no formal retender thereof will be required. Richmond, etc., R. Co. v. Blake, 49 Fed. Rep. 904.

2. Adams v. Helm, 55 Mo. 468; Haeussler v. Duross, 14 Mo. App. 103; Odum v. Rutledge, etc., R. Co., 94 Ala. 488.

The creditor has no right to prescribe the terms upon which it shall be received. Adams v. Helm, 55 Mo. 468; Hoyt v. Sprague, 61 Barb. (N. Y.) 497; Rainés v. Jones, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 490.

But where a debtor tenders a sum of money in full, for all claims which the creditor may have against him, and the creditor receives the money, but protests that more is due him, saying he will take the money and credit it upon account, and the debtor does not dissent from this course, the creditor is not precluded from recovering any sum he may show to be due him in excess of the amount tendered. Gassett v. Andover, 21 Vt. 342. See Berthold v. Reyburn, 37 Mo. 586.

In California, it has been held that under the code, the offer to pay must be made with intent to extinguish the obligation. Chielovich v. Krauss (Cal. 1886), 11 Pac. Rep. 781. See also Magnusson v. Williams, 111 Ill. 450; Moore v. Norman, 43 Minn. 428; 19 Am. St. Rep. 247; 9 L. R. A. 55.

Where a tender of the whole amount due on a mortgage, is refused because the mortgagee asserted a claim of right, which he bona fide believed in, and which was not wantonly put forward as a cover for a wrong purpose, it would seem that the mortgage is not extinguished. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Union Mills Plaster Co., 37 Fed. Rep. 286; 3 L. R. A. 90. But it has been held that the fact that a mortgagee in refusing a tender, acts in good faith, believing the debt not to be due, will not relieve him from the statutory penalty for failing to release the mortgage. Campbell v. Seeley, 43 Mo. App. 23.

Tender Must Cover Entire Debt.—The sum tendered must be sufficient to cover the entire amount accrued at the time of tender, including all costs, and it must be absolutely and unconditionally tendered. Marshall v. Wing, 50 Me. 62; Eslow v. Mitchell, 26 Mich. 500; Potts v. Plaisted, 30 Mich. 149; Proctor v. Robinson, 35 Mich. 284; Day v. Strong, 29 Hun (N. Y.) 505; Tuthill v. Morris, 81 N. Y. 94.

Where a mortgage provided that in case a settlement should be made after the institution of a suit to foreclose, $250 should be allowed for attorneys' fees, and plaintiff brought suit to foreclose, the defendants not answering, but paying into court the principal and interest due and settling the ordinary costs, it was held that the plaintiff, by his acceptance of the amount deposited, was not estopped from claiming the $250 attorneys' fees. Hoyt v. Smith, 4 Wash. 640.

A bill may not be maintained to restrain a sub-contractor from selling realty to satisfy a mechanic's lien, on the ground that a tender of the amount was refused by defendant. For, if the amount was due when tendered, the tender should have been pleaded in defense of defendant's action to establish his lien; and if not due, he was not obliged to accept it. Patch v. Collins, 158 Mass. 468.

A party claiming that the mortgage has been discharged by a tender, will be held to strict proof that the whole amount due, with costs, was absolutely and unconditionally tendered. Bank of Benson v. Hove, 45 Minn. 40; 4 Bank. Law J. 264.

And the proof must be clear, that the tender was fairly made, and deliberately and intentionally refused; that sufficient opportunity was given the mortgagee to ascertain the amount due; and that a sufficient sum to cover the whole amount of the debt and interest, was absolutely and unconditionally tendered. Moore v. Norman, 43 Minn. 428; 9 L. R. A. 55; 19 Am. St. Rep. 247.

Where the owner of mortgaged property tenders the amount due to the holder of the mortgage, who refuses to accept it, action to cancel the mortgage at the instance of the property owner, may not be maintained unless, at the commencement of the action, he pays the amount of his tender into court. Foster v. Mayer (Supreme Ct.), 24 N. Y. Supp. 46.

In order to discharge a mortgage which provides that, in case of a default in interest, the whole debt shall become due, a tender of the amount in default is not sufficient, the whole debt must be tendered. Cupples v. Galligan, 6 Mo. App. 62; Detweiler v. Breckenkamp, 83 Mo. 45.

The tender of the amount of a coupon falling due upon a bond secured by mortgage, which was not made in due time and was not kept good, will not prevent the whole amount of the debt becoming due, under a clause providing for such result in case of default in the payment of any installment of interest. Lantry v. French (Neb. 1891), 50 N. W. Rep. 679.

By Whom to be Made.—The effect is the same, whether the tender is made by the mortgagor, or by his grantee of the equity of redemption, Yeager v. Groves, 78 Ky. 278; or by a subsequent incumbrancer. Proctor v. Robinson, 35 Mich. 284; Brown v. Simons, 45 N. H. 211. Compare Noyes v. Wyckoff, 30 Hun (N. Y.) 466.

A judgment creditor of a mortgagor of chattels, may redeem the mortgage, and may enjoin the mortgagee from selling the chattels under the mortgage, on tendering the principal and interest due on the mortgage debt, and

According to the current of authority the lien is extinguished, though the tender is not made until after default.¹

It is not necessary, in order to effect a release, that the tender should be kept good, or that the money should be paid into court.² Upon such tender being made and refused, the pledgor such reasonable and lawful expenses as have been incurred in and about the sale, if such are known to him. Lambert v. Miller, 38 N. J. Eq. 117.

It is held in New York, that where a debt secured by mortgage is payable on demand, a tender by the purchaser of the property, who has not assumed payment of the debt, will not be effectual to release the mortgage, unless demand has been made by the creditor, or a tender has been made by the original debtor. Noyes v. Wyckoff, 114 N. Y. 204.

The mortgagee is not bound to accept a tender from a stranger. Gibson v. Lyon, 115 U. S. 439.

1. At common law, the tender must have been made on the law day. 2 Jones Mortg., § 891. But in those states where the mortgage is held to be only a security, a tender after the day, and at any time before foreclosure, will discharge the lien. 2 Jones Mortg., § 893; Kortright v. Cady, 21 N. Y. 343; 78 Am. Dec. 145; Caruthers v. Humphrey, 12 Mich. 270; Van Husean v. Kanouse, 13 Mich. 303; Eslow v. Mitchell, 26 Mich. 500; Potts v. Plaisted, 30 Mich. 149; Proctor v. Robinson, 35 Mich. 284.

In some states it is held that if tender is made after the day, it must be kept good, in order to operate as a discharge of the mortgage lien. Frank v. Pickens, 69 Ala. 369; Matthews v. Lindsay, 20 Fla. 972; Crain v. McGoon, 86 Ill. 431; 29 Am. Rep. 37; Tuthill v. Morris, 81 N. Y. 94.

As to the question whether the tender must be made at the time the debt matures, or can be made afterwards with like effect, a distinction is sometimes drawn between mortgages on real property, and chattel mortgages. It has been held with reference to the former, that inasmuch as the legal title vests in the mortgagee upon default, a tender after default will not satisfy the mortgage. If such is the general rule with reference to mortgages of real property (and it is doubtful whether such rule would obtain in states where the mortgage is held to be merely a security), it is certain that no such disinction can be made in cases of chattel mortgages, or of pledges of personal property. There the relations and rights of the parties are unchanged by the occurrence of the default. Neither the title of the pledgee, nor the character of the bailment, is changed. Therefore, a tender, after default of the amount due, with interest, will extinguish the lien of the mortgagee or pledgee. This is so held in Norton v. Baxter, 41 Minn. 146; 16 Am. St. Rep. 679. The same principle is asserted in a later case in Minnesota. Moore v. Norman, 43 Minn. 428; 19 Am. St. Rep. 247.

In Missouri, if the mortgagee in a chattel mortgage has taken possession of the mortgaged property, after forfeiture, a mere tender without acceptance will not discharge the forfeiture. The legal title will remain in the mortgagee, notwithstanding the tender. Jackson v. Cunningham, 28 Mo. App. 354.

But where possession has not been taken, the general rule is, that a tender will discharge the lien, though made after default, Weeks v. Baker, 152 Mass. 20; Moore v. Norman, 43 Minn. 428; 9 L. R. A. 55; 19 Am. St. Rep. 247; though the Massachusetts case was made to turn somewhat upon the statute of that state.

If a sale has been made, a tender, even though made within the time allowed for redemption, will not divest the purchaser of the title. Scobee v. Jones, 1 Dana (Ky.) 13.

2. Moynahan v. Moore, 9 Mich. 9; 77 Am. Dec. 468; Kline v. Vogel, 90 Mo. 239.

But it would seem that at common law, the tender of the mortgage debt, if made after default, must be kept good, or it will not avail. Tompkins v. Batie, 11 Neb. 147; 38 Am. Rep. 361; Crain v. McGoon, 86 Ill. 431; 29 Am. Rep. 37; Frank v. Pickens, 69 Ala. 369; Matthews v. Lindsay, 20 Fla. 962.

Where a pledgor makes a good tender of the amount due the pledgee, and the same is refused without sufficient reason, the pledgee cannot retain the pledge as against one whose rights have accrued subsequent to the making of the pledge, though the pledgor did not keep his tender good. Norton v. Baxter, 41 Minn. 146; 4 L. R. A. 305; 16 Am. St. Rep. 679.

In the Michigan case cited above, the court, by Martin, C. J., says: "It is claimed that the want of the money in court obviates the effect of the tender. Were this an action by Moore to recover compensation for the repairs, the want of the money in court would render the tender nugatory; as the effect of tender in such cases is to stay interest and relieve from costs, and therefore the party making the tender must always have the money within reach of his creditor. But in this case, the tender having once operated to discharge the lien, it was gone forever, and nothing could revive it. The reasons which require the money to be brought into court, do not apply in such a case. By refusing to receive the money tendered, the defendant lost his lien, and can only rely upon the personal liability of the plaintiff." Moynahan v. Moore, 9 Mich. 9; 77 Am. Dec. 468.

Where a mortgagor has made tender of the amount due on a chattel mortgage, and the tender is refused by the mortgagee, who commences an action to obtain possession of the chattels, it is not necessary that the money should be brought into court. Weeks v. Baker, 152 Mass. 20; Moore v. Norman, 43 Minn. 428; 9 L. R. A. 55; 19 Am. St. Rep. 247.

It is held in Illinois, that a tender made after default in payment of a chattel mortgage, must be kept good, in order to give the mortgagor a right to maintain trover. Blain v. Foster, 33 Ill. App. 297.

Where a proper tender was made under the terms of the mortgage, of an amount sufficient to secure the release of a portion of the mortgaged premises, such tender will not effect a release, unless the tender is kept good and the amount paid into court. Werner v. Tuch, 127 N. Y. 217, aff'd 52 Hun (N. Y.) 269.

In a recent case in Alabama (McCalley v. Otey, 90 Ala. 302), a bill was filed by the mortgagor, seeking to redeem from the mortgage, and to enjoin a sale under the power of sale contained therein. The mortgagor had made repeated tenders to the mortgagee of the amount of the mortgage debt, which were refused. After these refusals, the mortgagee filed a bill for foreclosure, which he dismissed without prejudice when the cause came on for a hearing. He then proceeded to advertise the property for sale under the power. All this was done with a design to coerce payment of another claim which the mortgagee held against the mortgagor, and when the second tender was made, he expressed a determination not to accept it, unless the other claim was paid. The bill contained an allegation that a tender had been several times made and refused, "which complainants are now ready and willing to pay him, and have been willing and ready to pay him ever since." In delivering the opinion of the court, Clopton, J., holding that a payment into court is not essential, says: "It may be conceded, that in equity no less strictness is observed in keeping good and pleading a tender, than in courts of law, and that at law the tender must be kept good, and, under the statute, the plea must be accompanied with the money brought into court. What is the consequence, if the tender is not kept good, and the money is not brought into court on plea? A tender refused does not operate to discharge the debtor from the debt, but only releases him from the payment of the interest subsequently accruing; and to have this effect, the amount tendered must be in readiness to be paid at any time called for, and on plea must be followed by the payment of the money into court. It is not meant, however, that the identical money tendered must be kept. It is sufficient if the party holds himself ready to pay at all times (Shields v. Lozeau, 22 N. J. Eq. 447). The averment of the bill is equivalent to an averment, that from the time of the first tender, to the filing of the bill, complainants held themselves ready to pay the amount tendered, whenever the mortgagee would accept it; and on the facts alleged, the payment of the money into court was not essential to the equity of the bill, as a bill for redemption, or to restrain the execution of the power of sale. It is material only as bearing on the question of costs and payment of the interest during the time intervening between the filing of the bill and the amendment."

The mere tender of payment of the mortgage debt, without a deposit of the money in court, will not, under the Missouri statute (Rev. Stat. 1879, § 1008; Id. 1889, § 2938), release the mortgage, but will only stop the running or mortgagor is entitled to possession of the property pledged or mortgaged.¹

The doctrine is extended to liens of every kind.²

of interest. Landis v. Saxton, 89 Mo. 375.

But in Minnesota, it is not necessary to keep the tender good by bringing the money into court, where the debt is secured by chattel mortgage. Moore v. Norman, 43 Minn. 428; 9 L. R. A. 55; 19 Am. St. Rep. 247.

Under the Massachusetts statute which authorizes a mortgagor in a chattel mortgage to maintain replevin in case the property is not immediately restored on payment or tender of the debt, the plaintiff need not make profert of the money nor renew the tender at the trial. Weeks v. Baker, 152 Mass. 20.

Under the territorial law of Dakota, which provided that an obligation for the payment of money is extinguished by an offer of payment, if the amount offered is immediately deposited in the name of the creditor, with some bank of good repute in the territory, and notice given to the creditor, such tender, deposit, and notice is a satisfaction of a mortgage given to secure the debt. Kronebusch v. Ranmin, 6 Dak. 243.

To discharge the lien of a mortgage, without the tender being kept good, it must be clearly shown that the tender was fairly made and deliberately refused by the holder of the mortgage, or some one duly authorized by him, and that the absolute tender was sufficient to cover the whole amount due. But to relieve the mortgagor from the payment of interest and costs, the tender must be kept good. Eslow v. Mitchell, 26 Mich. 500; Proctor v. Robinson, 35 Mich. 284; Moore v. Norman, 43 Minn. 428; 9 L. R. A. 55; 19 Am. St. Rep. 247; Tompkins v. Batie, 11 Neb. 147; 38 Am. Rep. 361; Day v. Strong, 29 Hun (N. Y.) 505; Tuthill v. Morris, 81 N. Y. 94.

1. Loughborough v. McNevin, 74 Cal. 250; 5 Am. St. Rep. 435.

If, after such tender to the pledgee, a demand is made for the return of the property pledged, and is refused, the pledgee is guilty of a conversion. Loughborough v. McNevin, 74 Cal. 250; 5 Am. St. Rep. 435; Bryson v. Rayner, 25 Md. 424; 90 Am. Dec. 69; and trover or replevin will lie. Flanders v. Chamberlain, 24 Mich. 310.

A tender not only extinguishes the lien on the land or pledge, but the creditor loses the right to any collateral securities he may hold. But it does not, unless accepted, extinguish the debt, or release the personal liability of the debtor. Caruthers v. Humphrey, 12 Mich. 278; Flanders v. Chamberlain, 24 Mich. 310; Potts v. Plaisted, 30 Mich. 150; Stewart v. Brown, 48 Mich. 387.

2. Thus the rule is equally applicable to a mechanic's lien. Moynahan v. Moore, 9 Mich. 9; 77 Am. Dec. 468. See Burton v. Ringrose (Supreme Ct.), 17 N. Y. Supp. 665.

This rule is extended to the lien of an execution, so that if the tender is made after levy of the amount due, the lien is discharged, and a subsequent sale under it is unlawful. Tiffany v. St. John, 65 N. Y. 314; 22 Am. Rep. 612; Perry v. Ward, 20 Vt. 92. The opinion in the New York case contains such a clear discussion of the general doctrine, and shows so clearly its application to liens arising by operation of law, that the following somewhat extended extract from it will be of value: "It is a general rule of law," says Dwight, C., "that where a person holds a lien upon property, a tender by the owner of the property, of the amount of the lien, will discharge it. In fact, the detention of the goods upon a different and inconsistent ground, will be a waiver of the lien. Boardman v. Sill, 1 Camp. 410, n; Winter v. Coit, 7 N. Y. 288; 57 Am. Dec. 522; Weeks v. Goode, 6 C. B. N. S. 367; 95 E. C. L. 365. It is a well-settled rule in the law of pledges that if the money for which the goods are pawned, be tendered to the pawnee, and he refuses to receive it, he becomes thereby a wrong-doer, and his special property in the chattel is determined. Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 909. It is said by Comyn, 'that by tender of the money, the property in the goods is determined, and the pledge ought to be returned; but if the pawnee refuse to restore the pledge upon tender, trover lies against him.' Com. Dig. tit. 'Mortgage', A, and cases cited. The principle governing the subject is, that tender is equivalent to payment as to all things which are incidental and accessory to the debt. The creditor, by refusing to accept,

VIII. PLEADING TENDER.—The tender must be pleaded, and the plea must be accompanied by the payment of the money into court.¹

does not forfeit his right to the thing tendered, but he does lose all collateral benefits or securities. The instantaneous effect is to discharge any collateral lien, as a pledge of goods or a right of distress. Per Comstock, J., in Kortright v. Cady, 21 N. Y. 343; 78 Am. Dec. 145. Upon these principles it has been held that if the debtor tender the debt to the pledgee, and he refuse to deliver up the pledge, he is liable, though it be subsequently lost, or even forcibly taken from him. Chitty on Cont. (11th ed.) 670; Ratcliffe v. Davies, Yelv. 179; Bull's N. P. 72. This principle was applied to mortgages of real estate in Kortright v. Cady, supra, where it was held that a tender of the debt, either upon or after the law day, extinguishes the mortgage, and leaves the mortgagee only a creditor of the mortgagor. "It is, however, claimed that this doctrine does not apply to the lien of an execution, as that is created by operation of law. This case, however, cannot be distinguished in principle from that of a pledge. In each case, the lien exists as a collateral advantage to the creditor. It is incidental to the debt. In each case, if the lien is not satisfied, there is a power to sell. Payment will extinguish the one as well as the other. If the theory propounded by Comstock, J., in the case above cited, be correct, and it is believed to be sound, the tender is equivalent to payment, and is as effectual in destroying the lien as in the case of a pledge. A tender will discharge the lien of an attorney. Stokes on the Lien of Attorneys, 81, 172; Jones v. Tarleton, 9 M. & W. 675; Scarfe v. Morgan, 4 M. & W. 280; Irving v. Viana, 2 Y. & J. 416. There is, undoubtedly, a stage in a proceeding in an action where property is in the custody of the law, that a tender will not destroy the lien, as that might interfere with the proper disposition of the case. After the action is over, and judgment obtained and execution levied, the case becomes clearly assimilated to that of an ordinary lien, and if tender is made and not accepted, the lien will be extinguished. This distinction was well settled as far back as the time of Lord Coke, and is clearly stated in the Six Carpenters' Case, 8 Coke 290. The point there discussed was the effect of a tender in the case of a distress for rent or of cattle doing damage—an instance of a lien created by the act of the law. Coke considers the distinction between a tender made upon the land before distress, after the distress, and before impounding, after impounding, and before the termination of the litigation, and contrasts these with a tender made after the law has determined the rights of the parties. He says: 'Note, reader, this difference, that tender upon the land before the distress makes the distress tortious; tender after the distress, and before the impounding, makes the detainer and not the taking wrongful; tender after the impounding makes neither the one nor the other wrongful, for it then comes too late, because then the case is put to the trial of the law, to be there determined. But after the law has determined it, and the avowant has return irreplevisable, yet if the plaintiff makes him a sufficient tender, he may have an action of detinue for the detainer after, or he may, upon satisfaction made in court, have a writ for the redelivery of his goods.' He adds: 'And therewith agree all the books, and Pilking-ton's Case, in the fifth part of my reports (fol. 76), and so all the books which, prima facie, seem to disagree are, upon full and pregnant reason, well reconciled and agreed.' There is here a clear statement of the principle applicable to the case at bar."

A lawful tender, within the time prescribed by law, of the amount necessary to redeem from an execution sale, revests the property in the owner, without a deed of conveyance from the purchaser. Legro v. Lord, 10 Me. 161.

A lawful tender of the amount of taxes due upon property, is equivalent to actual payment, and deprives the collecting officer of all authority for further action, and makes every subsequent step illegal and void. Poin-dexter v. Greenhow, 114 U. S. 270.

To make a tender, made before suit brought, available, the defendant must pay the money into court, and allege that fact in his answer. Beeker v. Boon, 61 N. Y. 317; Jarboe v. McAtee, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 279; Clark v. Mullenix, 11 Ind. 532; Cullen v. Green, 5 Harr. (Del.) 17.

A failure to pay the money into court, after a tender, will not stop the interest, and will leave defendant still liable for the costs, and will not affect plaintiff's right to recover. Lewis v.

Wilson (Supreme Ct.), 17 N. Y. Supp. 128.

And where the defendant by his plea, admits an indebtedness in a certain sum, and tenders it to the plaintiff, but does not pay it into court, judgment must go for the plaintiff. Ryerson v. Kitchell, 2 N. J. L. 168.

Payment of money into court is necessary for the sufficiency of a tender made by bill. Beebe v. Buxton (Ala. 1892), 12 So. Rep. 567.

Where the purchaser has made a tender and demanded a deed, he must renew the tender and pay the money into court, when he brings suit to enforce the sale. Foster v. Fraser, Montreal L. Rep., 6 Q. B. 405.

The plaintiff may not question the sufficiency of a plea of tender, after accepting the money paid into court under such plea. Gardner v. Black (Ala. 1893), 12 So. Rep. 813.

If the money is not brought into court, and the defendant refuses to comply with the order of the court directing the money to be brought in, the plea may be stricken from the files, or disregarded. Knox v. Light, 12 Ill. 86. Compare Loughborough v. McNevin, 74 Cal. 250; 5 Am. St. Rep. 435.

The payment into court is equivalent to a plea of tender. Summerson v. Hicks, 142 Pa. St. 344. See also Cain v. Gimon, 36 Ala. 168.

A tender made in the pleadings, followed by the payment of the money into court, is a sufficient tender. Spann v. Sterns, 18 Tex. 562; Weaver v. Nugent, 72 Tex. 272; 13 Am. St. Rep. 792.

Where plaintiff seeks to set aside an execution sale, it is sufficient if in his petition he make tender of the money paid at the sale, and bring the money into court. Weaver v. Nugent, 72 Tex. 272; 13 Am. St. Rep. 792.

Where there is a tender of specific chattels, they need not be brought into court in order to keep the tender alive. It is sufficient that the party making the tender, pleads it, and avers a readiness and willingness at all times to perform. But where the tender is of money, or of things that may be brought into court, defendant must not only plead that he has always been, and still is, ready with the money or things tendered, but it must be brought into court. 2 Kent's Com. 508; 6 Bac. 465; 2 Roll. Abr. 524, 20 Vin. 312 E.; Brooklyn Bank v. DeGrauw, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 342; 35 Am. Dec. 569.

ance of a contract for the purchase of land, alleges that he has tendered a good and sufficient warranty deed, the tender must be kept good by bringing the deed into court. Goodwine v. Morey, 111 Ind. 68.

An allegation that plaintiff has been, and is, ready to perform the covenants of his agreement, and to pay the amount due, or the performance by defendant of the dependent covenants, is not an averment of a tender of money. Heine v. Treadwell, 72 Cal. 217.

It is not sufficient to plead a tender in a supplemental answer filed after the case is called for trial, if the money is not actually in court. Alexander v. Oneida Co., 76 Wis. 56.

If the plaintiff elects to take, and actually receives, the money paid into court on a plea of tender, the costs should be adjudged against him. Hanson v. Todd, 95 Ala. 328.

Where money is paid into court, the pleadings must show how much of the amount is to cover the tender made, and how much is for costs. The Good Hope, 40 Fed. Rep. 608.

Where a complainant brings money into court for the use of the defendant, and by an order of the court, the defendant is permitted to come in with an answer, by the terms of which order, leave is given the complainant to withdraw the money paid in, a withdrawal by the complainant will not affect the validity of the tender. Wright v. Young, 6 Wis. 127; 70 Am. Dec. 453.

Under the Iowa Code (section 2104), the fact that money tendered and refused was kept in possession of the party making the tender, until its payment into court, does not vitiate the tender. Loughridge v. Iowa Life, etc., Assoc., 84 Iowa 141.

A defendant below a justice of the peace, after trial and judgment against him, but before appeal, paid part of the claim to the justice, who held it till the trial above took place, and then paid it to the clerk of the appellate court; and it was held that, under the pleas of "tender" and of "always ready," the measure was unavailable. Cope v. Bryson, 1 Winst. (N. Car.) 112.

Plaintiff's hogs having been taken up by defendant while trespassing on his cornfield, he offered defendant $12.25 for the damages, which defendant refused, demanding $14. Plaintiff sued out a writ of replevin, having first deposited $12.25 and the costs, with the justice before whom the action was brought. The constable told defendant of the deposit, and defendant said he would take it. The constable, supposing the deposit to have been $10, offered that amount to defendant, which he refused. The constable afterward obtained the balance from the justice, and sought for the defendant to pay it to him, but could not find him. It was held by the appellate court of Illinois, that the tender was kept good. Neilson v. Smith, 26 Ill. App. 57.

And advantage may be taken of the failure by demurrer. Carley v. Vance, 17 Mass. 389.

It must be paid in at the time of filing the bill, Franklin v. Ayer, 22 Fla. 654; or at least by the first day of the term. Reed v. Woodman, 17 Me. 43; Pillsbury v. Willoughby, 61 Me. 274.

And the failure to pay it in may be shown, even after verdict for the defendant. Clafin v. Hawes, 8 Mass. 261.

But if the money be paid in before the plaintiff moves to take advantage of it, the irregularity is cured, Storer v. McGaw, 11 Allen (Mass.) 527. Compare Reed v. Woodman, 17 Me. 43; and plaintiff may waive the irregularity. Strout v. Durham, 23 Me. 483; Gilpatrick v. Ricker, 82 Me. 185.

Where plaintiff takes issue in an answer which does not aver that the money was paid into court, the irregularity is thereby waived, and the only issue is whether the tender was made before the action was begun. Platner v. Lehman, 26 Hun (N. Y.) 374.

A plea which sets up an agreement to compromise, part payment of the amount agreed upon and tender of the balance, though it does not state the time of the alleged payment or of the alleged tender, is good upon general demurrer, it not appearing that time was of the essence of the contract. Schwartz v. B. C. Evans Co., 75 Tex. 198.

If a defendant, in answer to an action of contract in the police court, pleads a tender of the amount due, alleging a profert in court, but in fact without

IX. PAYMENT OF MONEY INTO COURT—1. General Rule.—In proper cases, money may be deposited with an official or banker of a court for the purposes of proceedings pending in such court.¹

2. In Satisfaction.—Where the defendant admits that some part or all of the plaintiff's demand is just, he may pay the amount admitted into the hands of the proper officer of the court, and plead that the same is ready to be paid to the plaintiff, and that no larger sum is due him. Should the plaintiff then proceed with placing the money in the custody of the court, and offers the same, in open court, to the plaintiff, who refuses to receive it, on the ground that he is entitled to a larger sum, and, after judgment for the plaintiff, the defendant appeals to the superior court, and there properly pleads the proferet, and pays the money into the court, it is too late then for the plaintiff to object to the irregularities in the lower court. Storer v. McGaw, 11 Allen (Mass.) 527.

Where, after payment into court of the amount tendered, the plaintiff permitted the case to go to trial on a plea of non assumpsit to the balance of his claim, he should not be allowed to make the point that the tender had not been kept good. Gilpatrick v. Ricker, 82 Me. 185.

1. Payment into Court.—Rapolje & Lawrence Law Dict. The authors specify three objects for which such payment into court may be made, viz.: First, in satisfaction; second, to abide the event; third, where a person wishes to relieve himself from the responsibility of distributing or administering a fund in his hands.

Payment into court will not avail, unless made upon an order of court. Keith v. Smith, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 92.

A court of chancery will not make an order for the payment of money into court, until it has been ascertained to be due, either by an accounting or decree in the cause, or by an admission in the pleadings or other proceedings. An affidavit to a parol admission, does not warrant an order. McTighe v. Dean, 22 N. J. Eq. 81.

The practice of paying money into court, through the clerk as the servant and agent of the court, where there is a fund under the control of the court, and no one designated to receive it, is established by long use, and cannot be overthrown because not specially authorized by act of Congress or a rule of court. In re Finks, 41 Fed. Rep. 383.

Defendant being plaintiff's surety for the payment of money to a third party, plaintiff deposited with him the money due such third party. Under the New York Code (Code 1851, § 244), the court may properly order the defendant to pay the money to such third party, or to deposit it in court. Burhans v. Cosey, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 706.

A sued B to recover the possession of real estate. The answer alleged that the deed under which A claimed, was executed by B as a mortgage only, and that there was due on the debt secured thereby the sum of $475, which was brought into court and paid to the clerk. Subsequently, the matters in controversy were compromised, and a written agreement was executed by the parties, by which A engaged to convey the land in controversy to B for the consideration of $900, which B agreed to pay. The agreement provided that B "should obtain and pay down the amount tendered and paid into court." The money deposited with the clerk was lost. It was held by the supreme court of Indiana, that this was not a case where money could properly be brought into court, as the answer was not a confession of any part of the plaintiff's demand, and the tender could not have been accepted by the plaintiff without abandoning his whole cause of action. Sowle v. Holdridge, 25 Ind. 119.

In Michigan, it has been held that where, in a suit upon a note before a justice, the defendant paid money thereon in open court, the effect is the same as if paid into a court of record under the procedure in such courts. If the money is paid at the time of or prior to the plea, no rule or order is necessary; but if paid after the plea, leave should be obtained. Phelps v. Town, 14 Mich. 374.

Under the practice in England, payment into court of the money admitted to be due, was required before an injunction would be granted. But the practice in this country is to take an injunction bond. Chester v. Apperson, the suit and fail to recover any greater sum than that so paid in, he cannot recover either interest or costs accrued subsequent to such payment into court. But if he accepts it, he is entitled to recover costs to that time.¹

4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 639, 654. In an old case in Michigan, it is held, however, that it is proper to require the payment into court as a condition of granting the injunction. Schwarz v. Sears, Harr. (Mich.) 440.

When a plaintiff elects to take money brought into court upon a plea of tender, it is proper to order the money to be paid to him, and render judgment against him for costs. Hanson v. Todd, 95 Ala. 328.

Money is deposited in court, though it is paid to the judge instead of the clerk. Arthur v. Arthur, 38 Kan. 691.

A payment to a referee, upon a hearing before him, is not a payment into court. He does not represent the court for such purpose. Becker v. Boon, 61 N. Y. 317. And the same rule applies to an auditor. Wing v. Hurlburt, 15 Vt. 607; 40 Am. Dec. 695.

The money that is paid into court must be legal tender. Shelby v. Boyd, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 321. And must be paid to the clerk of the court in term time, and not in vacation. Currie v. Thomas, 8 Port. (Ala.) 293.

Upon payment of money into court, the clerk takes it as the private agent of the party paying, unless such payment is made upon tender pleaded, or the party has obtained leave of the court to make the deposit. Mazyck v. M'Ewen, 2 Bailey (S. Car.) 28.

The payment into court of a less sum than that justly due in a suit to redeem mortgaged premises, if not made under any rule or order of court, or with any averment or proof of a previous tender, cannot affect the rights of the parties in any manner. Hart v. Goldsmith, 1 Allen (Mass.) 145.

An action will not lie in favor of the plaintiff and against the clerk, for money deposited by the defendant in lieu of bail. Anderson v. Tomkins, 23 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 433; (Supreme Ct.) 10 N. Y. Supp. 39.

Where money paid into court is withdrawn under an order of the court, the party acting under that order can lose no right by the withdrawal. Wright v. Young, 6 Wis. 127; 70 Am. Dec. 453.

Where, under a rule of court, a party pays money into the hands of the clerk of the court, and afterwards, by permission of the court to take it out, demands a repayment, he is entitled to the identical money deposited. Mott v. Pettit, 1 N. J. L. 298.

Where money is paid into court, to be invested by the clerk on bond and mortgage, under the new system in New York, the court will allow the parties in interest to agree upon what would be a proper investment, and direct the clerk to make the same. Green v. Ward, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 21.

Money in custody of an officer of a court of law, is not within the reach of the court; and such officer cannot be made a party to a suit to reach property held by him as such officer. Bowden v. Schatzell, 1 Bailey Eq. (S. Car.) 366; 23 Am. Dec. 170.

A petition which alleges that defendants "took from one C. the sum of $114.53, and the said C. gave to the plaintiffs an order therefor, for value received, and that the said C. assigned to the plaintiffs his cause of action against the defendants," and also alleges non-payment, and also that the district court after the taking, made an order directing one of the defendants to pay this money into court; that he did not pay the same as ordered, but took the order for review to the supreme court, giving an undertaking, signed by both defendants, conditioned to pay said sum of money into court if the order should be affirmed; that said order was affirmed, and still the money was not paid, is good as against an objection presented for the first time after trial and verdict. Polster v. Rucker, 16 Kan. 115.

"The bringing of money into court is a practice adopted to relieve the defendant against an unexpected suit for money which he is willing to pay, but which he has not tendered to the plaintiff before the commencement of the suit. After the defendant has brought in as much money as he thinks proper, and the plaintiff has refused to receive it in satisfaction, the defendant is entitled to have the same considered as a payment made on the day on which it was brought in, and he is answerable only for further damages." Boydén v. Moore, 5 Mass. 369.

It is held by the supreme court of New York, for the first department, that where the plaintiff recovers less than the amount of defendant's offer, the defendant is the prevailing party, and is not only entitled to costs, but to an extra allowance, if a proper case therefor be made out. Landon v. Van Etten, 57 Hun (N. Y.) 122. See also Aikens v. Colton, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 326.

Where a bill is filed to set aside a tax deed as a cloud upon title, and plaintiff brings into court the amount due defendant, but it is neither alleged nor proved that such amount was tendered before suit, and the bill does not contain an offer to pay the amount, the defendant should not be required to pay the costs. Gage v. Arndt, 121 Ill. 491; Mearctney v. Morse (Ill. 1891), 26 N. E. Rep. 376, reversing same case on rehearing (Ill. 1890), 24 N. E. Rep. 576.

Where the tender is made after a libel is filed, and a decree is rendered for the sum tendered, costs should be allowed the libellant up to the time of the tender, and the costs of the subsequent proceedings should be taxed against him. The Carondelet, 36 Fed. Rep. 714.

An offer in writing, whereby defendant "tenders" judgment in a certain sum, is within the statute of Wisconsin (R. S. §§ 3627-8) and plaintiff is not entitled to costs unless he recovers more than the amount specified in the tender. Williams v. Ready, 72 Wis. 408.

If the money is paid into court, but not in pursuance of a tender made before the suit was brought, it must include the costs which have accrued up to that time. Goslin v. Hodson, 24 Vt. 140; Keith v. Smith, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 92. And this is true whether the money is paid in upon the whole cause of action, or any single count in the declaration, and even though the plaintiff proceeds and recovers no more than the amount paid in. State Bank v. Holcomb, 7 N. J. L. 193.

The plaintiff is entitled to the costs which had accrued when the offer of judgment was made, whether or not he recovers more than the amount offered. Douthitt v. Finch, 84 Cal. 214.

Under the law of Vermont, which requires a payment into court (Rev. Laws, § 1450), an offer made in vacation to pay the damages in a preceding action with costs up to that time, is not sufficient. The plaintiff is entitled to such costs as will enable him to discontinue the action at the succeeding term. Strusguth v. Pollard, 62 Vt. 157.

It is held by the Virginia courts, that a payment made to the plaintiff after action brought, is equivalent to bringing the money into court, in reference to the costs of the plaintiff. Hudson v. Johnson, 1 Wash. (Va.) 10.

In a suit by a carrier for the freight money, a tender of the amount due, not followed by a deposit in the registry in accordance with Admiralty Rule 72, has no effect on the question of costs, where the suit is subsequently dismissed. Henderson v. Three Hundred Tons of Iron Ore, 38 Fed. Rep. 36.

In an action on a policy of insurance, the defendant may, after plea, bring what sum he pleases into court, with costs to the time, but not specifically as the premium on the policy. Dunlap v. Commercial Ins. Co., 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 149.

Money may not be paid into court where the amount sought to be recovered is not a sum certain or capable of being ascertained by computation, as in an action for false imprisonment. Bennett v. Smerdon, 16 L. T. N. S. 296; nor can money be paid into court on part of an entire count. Hodges v. Lichfield, 3 M. & S. 201; 9 Bing. 713; 23 E. C. L. 134; 2 Dowl. Pr. Cas. 741.

The principal and interest due on a bond conditioned for the payment of money on installments, may be paid into court. Bonafons v. Rybot, 3 Barr. 1370.

Where plaintiff prevails in a suit to set aside a tax deed, he cannot recover the costs, unless he prove a tender and refusal of the price paid by the purchaser. Gage v. Arndt, 121 Ill. 491.

Where a portion of the plaintiff's claim is admitted by the answer, such portion may properly be ordered to be paid immediately, without waiting for the result of the litigation as to the residue of the claim. Clarkson v. De Peyster, Hopk. (N. Y.) 505.

Where money which was the subject of a suit, is brought into court, and the defendant admits that part of it is due the plaintiff, but denies his claim to the residue, the court may properly order the part admitted to be due to be paid to the plaintiff, without prejudicing his claim to the residue. Merritt v. Thompson, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 599.

If the plaintiff elects to take the amount alleged to have been tendered, and the money is brought into court,

Where full tender is made and the amount paid into court, it discharges the debt.¹

the correct practice is to order it to be paid to the plaintiff, and render judgment against him for the costs; but if the money is not brought into court, the judgment should be against the defendant for the amount of the tender and costs. Monroe v. Chaldeck, 78 Ill. 429.

The amount is to be credited on plaintiff's judgment after it is valued, and not at the time of entering it. Goldstein v. Stern (City Ct.), 9 N. Y. Supp. 274.

Where the defendant pays money into court, but the sum thus paid is found by the jury to be less than was due at the time, the verdict and judgment should be for the whole amount of the plaintiff's demand, without any deduction on account of the payment. The defendant, however, is entitled to the benefit of the payment, by way of credit upon the execution. Bennet v. Odom, 30 Ga. 940; Dakin v. Dunning, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 30; 42 Am. Dec. 33; Murphy v. Gold, etc., Tel. Co., 3 N. Y. Supp. 804.

If the sum paid into court is found by the jury to be the exact amount which was due, the verdict should be for the defendant. Dakin v. Dunning, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 30; 42 Am. Dec. 33.

Where the defendants, before the new counts, upon which alone the plaintiff recovered, were filed, paid into a court a sum of money sufficient to satisfy all the damages the plaintiff could have recovered under the original declaration, and costs to the time of such payment, and the plaintiff took the same, the plaintiff, in the absence of proof that he took the money in satisfaction of his claim, was not thereby precluded from filing new counts, and recovering an additional sum thereon. Hill v. Smith, 34 Vt. 535.

1. Shiver v. Johnston, 62 Ala. 37.

Where the plaintiff withdraws the money paid into court, in discharge of the demand sued on, this is an acceptance of the tender, and is a full satisfaction of the demand. The plaintiff may not afterwards claim that it was accepted merely as a payment on account. Haeussler v. Duross, 14 Mo. App. 103.

Where money is paid into court, the sum paid in is considered as stricken out of the declaration; and, unless the plaintiff proves a larger sum, the defendant must have a verdict. Bank of Columbia v. Sutherland, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 336.

Where plaintiff sued upon an assigned cause of action, and failed to show that he had acquired title, but defendant had pleaded tender and had paid the amount into court, it was held that plaintiff was not entitled to recover more than the amount paid in, though the proof would have warranted a recovery of a greater amount, if the action had been brought by the right party. Wilson v. Doran, 110 N. Y. 101; 15 N. Y. Civ. Pro. Rep. 96.

The payment of money into court in accordance with the terms of a decree, relieves the party so paying from all obligation to pay interest not included in the decree. Cobbey v. Knapp, 28 Neb. 158.

The receipt by a plaintiff, without prejudice to his rights, of United States legal-tender notes, paid into court, does not operate as a discharge of the debt, but, on repayment of such legal-tender notes, he will be entitled to judgment for his debt. Riley v. Sharp, 1 Bush (Ky.) 348.

The deposit of the money in court, after the institution of a suit on a note, is not a payment of the note to the creditor, or to any one authorized to receive it for him. Alexandrie v. Saloy, 14 La. Ann. 327.

Where a complainant brings money into court, insisting that it is all that is due to the defendant, and the court makes an order that it be paid to the latter, upon executing a refunding bond, if the defendant execute the bond and receive the money, he will not be estopped from showing that a larger amount is due to him, and this although he does not bring into court the note which the money was intended to pay. Byrd v. Odem, 9 Ala. 755.

If, in an action on a policy of insurance, the defendant pays the amount of the premium into court, which the plaintiff's attorney takes out, after informing the defendant of the intention to go for a total loss, he will not be concluded from proceeding for a total loss. Sleight v. Rhinelanders, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 192.

Where a railroad is seeking to condemn a right of way, the payment of the money into court does not, under the Indiana statute (R. S. 1881, § 3907), vest the title of the land in the company, but operates only to give it a license to take possession. Terre Haute, etc., R. Co. v. Crawford, 100 Ind. 550.

1. Rapalje & Lawrence Law Dict.

If the defendant admit a trust, or facts from which the existence of a trust would be clearly and unquestionably proved, plaintiff would be entitled to an order for the payment of the trust fund into court. Bank of Turkey v. Ottoman Co., L. R., 2 Eq. 366.

Pending a suit against a trustee for an account and distribution of the fund in his hands, he should ask leave to pay the balance into court, or to invest it under the direction of the court. If he invests the money without such direction, it will be at his own risk. Hosack v. Rogers, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 461.

Where several parties claim a sum of money, to which the party in possession of the money does not assert any right, the court may order the money to be deposited in the hands of the clerk of the court, until the respective rights of all the claimants are adjudicated upon. Succession of Thompson, 14 La. Ann. 810.

Where land which is incumbered is sold, the amount of the incumbrance may be paid into court to take the place of the incumbrance, and the land stand free. Rapalje & Lawrence Law Dict.

A vendor of goods replevied a portion, upon the ground that they had not been paid for. Defendant retained the property, sold it, and upon judgment being rendered against him in the replevin suit, paid the money into court, and then brought an action to recover the excess over the amount which he claimed to be due the plaintiff. It was held that the money so paid into court took the place of the goods, and was subject to the same rights and remedies. Crawford v. Edgerton, 39 Fed. Rep. 523.

Where there is a controversy as to where the money arising from condemnation proceedings belongs, it is proper to pay it into court. Hilton v. St. Louis, 99 Mo. 199.

Although money is wrongfully obtained, yet when it is produced in court, it becomes a fund in court, if claimed by more than one party. Davis v. Watkins, 2 Bush (Ky.) 224.

Under a decree that the plaintiff is entitled to redeem from a mortgage, and to have a conveyance thereof with covenants against the grantor's acts, upon payment of a specified sum, the plaintiff is not bound to pay the redemption money unless the defendant complies with the directions of the decree respecting a conveyance. Hence, the inability of the defendant to convey or to give a covenant against his own acts, which will not be broken in its inception, is not a ground for granting plaintiff leave to pay the money into court, instead of tendering it to defendant. Davis v. Duffie, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 691.

The proprietor, to whom, under the Louisiana Act of March 18th, 1844, laborers have delivered attested accounts, exceeding the amount due the undertaker, may, by suit against the claimants, have such amount distributed among them, and may relieve himself from liability by depositing the amount in court. Clarke v. Saloy, 2 La. Ann. 987.

To authorize an order for a defendant to bring money into court, it must appear that the person applying has some interest at least in the final disposition of the fund, and that he who has it, has no equitable title thereto. And the facts from which this is to appear, must be found in the case, admitted or proved, so as not to be open to subsequent controversy. McKim v. Thompson, 1 Bland (Md.) 150.

The payment of money into court is most usually ordered on interlocutory application, in the case of personal representatives, or other persons filling the character of trustees, having money in their hands belonging either wholly or in part to the plaintiff. 3 Dan. Chan. Practice (Perkin's ed.), p. 1819.

While, under the Indiana code, the avowed holder of money claimed by separate parties, may be required to deposit with the court either the money itself or security, it does not require that a bond of indemnity be given by a plaintiff, as assignee of a deposit in a bank, where no certificate of deposit

Where the court orders an administrator to pay money to the clerk, to be held subject to the further orders of the court, the effect of the order cannot be changed by any agreement between the administrator and the clerk, and such agreement will not release the clerk from responsibility for the money so paid in. Sullivan v. State, 121 Ind. 342.

Upon an application to the court for the payment of money under the control of its officers, the applicant must produce a certificate from the officer with whom the money was deposited, showing the amount of the fund, the mode of investment, and the claims, if any, which have been made thereon. Hulbert v. Pierce, 35 Ill. 158; Clark v. Mullenix, 11 Ind. 532; Mohn v. Stoner, 11 Iowa 30; Warrington v. Pollard, 24 Iowa 281; 95 Am. Dec. 727; Jarboe v. McAtee, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 279; Adams v. Rutherford, 13 Oregon 78; Holladay v. Holladay, 13 Oregon 523; Brock v. Jones, 16 Tex. 461; Gilkeson v. Smith, 15 W. Va. 44. Compare Whelan v. Reilley, 61 Mo. 565.

The rule that the money must be paid into court, in order to keep the tender alive, applies as well where the tender is made by an offering in writing under a statute, as to actual production and offer of the money. Shugart v. Pattee, 37 Iowa 422.

It is not always necessary to pay the money into court, in order to keep the tender alive. Gardner v. Randell, 70 Tex. 453.

But there must be an averment of a readiness and willingness to pay. Walker v. Walker, 17 S. Car. 329; Park v. Wiley, 67 Ala. 310.

An offer to do equity does not require the bringing of the money into court, as in the case of a plea of tender. And neither payment nor tender of the amount will be considered a condition precedent to the granting of a decree for relief. Spann v. Sterns, 18 Tex. 556.

Where a purchaser from a mortgagor, seeks to set aside a sale under the mortgage, on the ground of fraud, and to be allowed to redeem, it is sufficient if the bill of complaint contains an averment that the complainant is ready to pay the amount admitted to be due on the mortgage debt, and hereby tenders that amount or any other sum that may be found to be due, and submits himself to the court for its decree in that behalf. Cain v. Gimon, 36 Ala. 168.

In an equitable proceeding to set aside a sale under mortgage, and to be allowed to redeem, on payment of the balance due the mortgagee, it is not necessary that the petition should allege a tender of the amount due, nor that the money be paid into court. Kline v. Vogel, 90 Mo. 234.

Where the plaintiff makes profert of money in court, and the court decides that the money is not due, and the plaintiff appeals, but while the appeal is pending, withdraws the tender, such withdrawal is not a waiver of his claim. Vail v. McMillan, 17 Ohio St. 617.

So where a sale was made by an agent, who was personally interested, to a minor without means, and the principal, upon learning of the sale, tendered back the money paid and the notes given, repudiated the sale, and notified both the agent and the purchaser that the contract would not be complied with, it is not necessary, in a proceeding to set aside the sale, to bring the notes and money into court, if plaintiff be ready to do this on the granting of final relief. Miller v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 83 Ala. 274.

Where a tender has simply the effect to extinguish a lien, and does not discharge the debt, it need not be followed up by a payment into court. Cass v. Higenbotam, 100 N. Y. 248.

This was so held in California, where the effect of the tender was to extinguish a pledge, the language of the court being as follows: "It is said the plea of tender by Drexler is insufficient for the reason that he did not bring the money into court. We think the plea is sufficient without bringing the money into court. This is so held in Kortright v. Cady, 21 N. Y. 343; 78 Am. Dec. 145. The authorities referred to in the cases just cited in the opinions of Davis, J., and Comstock, C. J., sustain this rule. The plea here is in accordance with section 1495, Civil Code, and it is expressly provided by section 1504, Civil Code, that an offer of payment duly made, though the title to the thing offered be not transferred to the creditor, stops the running of interest on the obligation, and has the same effect upon all its incidents as a performance thereof. One of these incidents is the discharge or extinction of the lien." Loughborough v. McNevin, 74 Cal. 256; 5 Am. St. Rep. 435.

If too much has been tendered, it is not necessary to bring the whole amount tendered into court, but only so much as is actually due. Abel v. Opel, 24 Ind. 250.

The courts of Missouri recognize a distinction between a tender made under the statute and one at common law. Thus in Klein v. Keyes, 17 Mo. 327, the supreme court, speaking through Scott, J., says: "Under this section (§ 23, ch. 35, Rev. Stats.), it was not necessary, after a tender, to bring the money into court, nor to show that the defendant had always been ready to pay; the tender before suit brought only affecting the matter of costs."

And this language is quoted with approval by the court of appeals in Voss v. McGuire, 26 Mo. App. 459. But that section has been amended and was amended at the time the court of appeals rendered the opinion in the case last cited. The statute now requires that the thing tendered shall be deposited in court (Rev. Stats. 1889, § 2937).

The legal effect of a plea of tender is an irrebuttable presumption of indebtedness to the extent of the tender; and when the tender is brought into court for the use of plaintiff, that amount is considered as stricken from the complaint, and if more is claimed by plaintiff, he proceeds for the excess of his demand above the tender only. Bank of Columbia v. Sutherland, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 336; Spalding v. Vandercook, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 431; Johnston v. Columbian Ins. Co., 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 315; Hubbard v. Knous, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 556.

After a plea of tender, a plaintiff may be nonsuited in a proceeding to recover beyond the tender. Jenkins v. Cutchens, 2 Miles (Pa.) 65; McCredy v. Fey, 7 Watts (Pa.) 496; Supply Ditch Co. v. Elliott, 10 Colo. 327; 3 Am. St. Rep. 586.

In Davis v. Millaudon, 17 La. Ann. 97; 87 Am. Dec. 517, the supreme court of Louisiana says: "A tender in open court, of the thing demanded, or its equivalent, is certainly an admission

b. ADMITS PLAINTIFF'S RIGHT TO SUE.—So such payment into court admits the plaintiff's right to sue, and the capacity in which he sues.¹

that the thing itself is due, and is consequently inconsistent with an averment that the thing is not due. It has ever been held that the plea of payment is inconsistent with a general denial; and a plea of tender cannot be less so."

It is only an admission of a legal demand. Ribbans v. Cricket, 1 B. & P. 264.

Though the contract is one which the Statute of Frauds requires to be in writing, payment into court dispenses with the necessity of proving it. Midleton v. Brewer, Peake 15.

If the maker of a note pay into court the amount thereof, he cannot show a partial failure of consideration. Mahan v. Waters, 60 Mo. 167.

Though in an action for unliquidated damages, a plea of tender cannot be interposed, yet if such plea is made, it constitutes an admission that the damages amount at least to the sum tendered. Cilley v. Hawkins, 48 Ill. 308.

It is held by the supreme court of Massachusetts, in an opinion by Bigelow, J., that in an action for damages, where the declaration contains only one cause of action, specifically set forth, the tender is a conclusive admission of every fact which the plaintiff would otherwise be bound to prove in order to maintain his action, and precludes the defendant from introducing evidence of carelessness on the part of the plaintiff, either in bar on the merits or in mitigation of damages. Bacon v. Charlton, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 581.

Under the statute of Illinois a plea of tender admits liability for the injury complained of. Miller v. Gable, 30 Ill. App. 578.

A plea of set-off, accompanied by a deposit in court of the difference between the amount sued for and the set-off, is a conclusive admission of the justice of the plaintiff's demand, and will entitle him to recover the amount he sues for, less such sum, if any, as the jury may find due the defendant on the set-off. Williamson v. Baley, 78 Mo. 636.

A verdict may be rendered for more than the amount tendered, but cannot be for less. Denver, etc., R. Co. v. Harp, 6 Colo. 420.

But it admits only the cause of action as to the sum tendered. It does not conclude the party making it as to any defense he may have against a further recovery consistent with the admission of the original contract or cause of action. Simpson v. Carson, 11 Oregon 361; Davis v. Millaudon, 17 La. Ann. 97; 87 Am. Dec. 517; Griffin v. Harriman, 74 Iowa 436; Spalding v. Vandercook, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 431; Eaton v. Wells, 82 N. Y. 576; Wilson v. Doran, 110 N. Y. 105; Cox v. Parry, 1 T. R. 464; Stevenson v. Berwick, 1 A. & H. 265.

But while a tender constitutes an admission that the amount tendered is due, it does not necessarily admit the existence of the grounds upon which plaintiff bases his right of recovery, Griffin v. Harriman, 74 Iowa 436; Hennell v. Davies, 1 Q. B. 367; and it is competent for defendant to urge any objections to the plaintiff's right to recover further damages. Lucy v. Walrond, 5 Scott 52; Lacy v. Walrond, 3 Hodg. 215; Johnston v. Columbian Ins. Co., 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 315; Spalding v. Vandercook, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 431.

If the defendant, in an action of assumpsit containing the common money counts, and also a count for the use and occupation of certain premises described, pays a part of the sum demanded into court, without specifying to which of the counts the payment is to be applied, such payment is an admission only that the defendant owes the plaintiff on some one or several of the counts, the sum so paid; but it is not an admission of any particular contract or debt under any one of the counts, nor of a liability on all of them. Hubbard v. Knous, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 556.

It does not preclude defendant from taking advantage of the Statute of Limitations, Levy v. Greville, 4 D. & Ry. 632; 16 E. C. L. 24; 3 B. & C. 10; 10 E. C. L. 5; and does not admit all the items contained in a bill of particulars. Seaton v. Benedict, 2 M. & P. 66.

Payment by the defendant to the plaintiff, pending an action of assumpsit, of part of the entire demand, to recover which the action is brought, is not equivalent, as an admission of the cause of action, to a payment of money into court. Galloway v. Holmes, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 330.

c. MONEY BELONGS TO THE PLAINTIFF. — The payment of money into court is an admission of indebtedness to the extent of the amount paid in, and, whatever may be the result of the trial, the money so paid in belongs to the plaintiff, and the party bringing it into court loses all right to it.¹

A tender in court admits that the amount tendered was due at the date of the suit, and estops the party making tender from claiming that the suit was prematurely brought. Giboney v. German Ins. Co., 48 Mo. App. 185.

But the plaintiff may disregard a payment of money into court without a rule of court, as a substitute for tender. Swan v. Sternfeld, 55 N. J. L. 41.

Money deposited in a district court, as a tender, remains in that court pending an appeal, and the circuit court of appeals has no control over the money or over the district court in regard to it, except when the cause is reviewed, and is determined and remanded for further proceedings. Mignano v. McAndrews, 56 Fed. Rep. 300.

The money paid in is a payment upon the claim of plaintiff, and cannot be withdrawn by the defendant. Call v. Lothrop, 39 Me. 434; Gilpatrick v. Ricker, 82 Me. 185; *Reed v. A plea of tender is an admission that the amount tendered is due plaintiff.

Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Readinger, 28 Neb. 587.

The plaintiff has a right to take the money out of court, and does not thereby waive his objection to the amount of the tender. Murray v. Bethune, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 191; Murphy v. Gold, etc., Tel. Co. (City Ct.), 3 N. Y. Supp. 804.

The plaintiff is entitled to all money paid in, though the verdict is for a less amount. Berkheimer v. Geise, 82 Pa. St. 64.

Even in the case of a tender and refusal of specific chattels, which operate to discharge the debt and extinguish the further relation of debtor and creditor, the property of the articles is deemed to vest in the creditor, and the parties afterwards stand in the relation of bailor and bailee. Singerland v. Morse, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 478; Sheldon v. Skinner, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 525; 21 Am. Dec. 161; Lamb v. Lathrop, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 96; 27 Am. Dec. 174.

Under the New York statute, there is no difference in this respect, whether the action is one for a tort or on contract. Taylor v. Brooklyn El. R. Co., 119 N. Y. 561; on second hearing, 18 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y.) 72. Compare Clement v. New York, etc., R. Co., 56 Hun (N. Y.) 643.

Where money has been paid into court by the defendant, and the plaintiff dies, and his administrator is substituted, who does not appear and is nonsuited, the money will be impounded to answer the defendant's costs. Jenkins v. Cutchens, 2 Miles (Pa.) 65.

Where a defendant dies after the payment, the revival of the action against his executor, or even the commencement of a new suit, will not change the effect of the payment. Murray v. Bethune, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 191.

Voss v. McGuire, 26 Mo. App. 452, was a case commenced in a justice's court. After the service of the summons, and before the trial, defendant paid to the constable, as a tender for plaintiff, a sum greater than the amount ultimately recovered by plaintiff, together with the costs then accrued.

TENEMENT.—(See also LODGINGS AND APARTMENTS, vol. 13, p. 1003; REAL PROPERTY, vol. 19, p. 1033.)

Tenement is a word of wide meaning, and, "though in its vulgar acceptance it is only applied to houses and other buildings, yet in its original, proper, and legal sense, it signifies everything that may be holden, provided it be of a permanent nature."¹

TENENDUM.—(See also DEEDS, vol. 5, p. 456).—In a deed or conveyance of land the tenendum is the clause which formerly indicated the tenure by which the grantee was to hold the lands of the Plaintiff had judgment before the justice, and, upon defendant's appeal to the circuit court and a trial anew, plaintiff again recovered judgment. An appeal was then taken to the court of appeals and the judgment of the circuit court was reversed and the case remanded. On the retrial of the case, plaintiff again had judgment, but again for a sum less than that paid to the constable by the defendant. When the appeal was taken to the circuit court, the constable deposited with the clerk of the circuit court the money which had been delivered to him as a tender. While the case was pending in the appellate court, the circuit clerk, at defendant's request, delivered the money back to the defendant. But after the reversal and remanding of the case, defendant returned the money to the clerk. After the money was paid over by the defendant to the constable, the latter offered it, through his attorney, to the plaintiff, who refused to accept it. Plaintiff having recovered a sum less than the amount tendered, defendant moved the court to tax the costs against the plaintiff. This the court refused to do, and the question was brought by appeal before the Kansas City court of appeals. That court reversed the action of the circuit court.

It cannot affect the question that plaintiff did not know that the money had been paid into court. Taylor v. Brooklyn El. R. Co., 18 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y.) 72.

The Indiana courts have held that while a tender is an admission that the entire sum tendered is due and payable, it is not conclusive evidence. Abel v. Opel, 24 Ind. 250.

A clerk of court is not, by virtue of his office, a receiver of the court, and is not bound to receive money paid into court as a tender, except by order of the court; and money deposited with the clerk, without any order of the court, may be withdrawn at any time by the depositor, before the court has recognized it as a fund in its control, or the other party has manifested a willingness to receive it. Hammer v. Kaufman, 39 Ill. 87.

Money paid into court for a party, to satisfy his lien upon drafts which he has been compelled to deliver up, cannot be subjected by a creditor of such party who is not a party to the action, to the payment of such creditor's debt. Tuck v. Manning, 150 Mass. 211; 5 L. R. A. 666.

Where the defendant pays into court, pending the suit, and to the credit thereof, the amount admitted due, which is invested under the direction of the court, the defendant will be entitled to any profit, and responsible for any loss, arising from the investment, before the termination of the suit. Clarkson v. DePeyster, Hopk. (N. Y.) 505; 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 77.

1. Com. v. Hersey, 144 Mass. 297, quoting 2 Bl. Com. 16.

"While frequently used in the sense of house or building, the enlarged meaning is land, or any corporeal inheritance, or anything of a permanent nature which may be holden." Sacket v. Wheaton, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 105. See also Field v. Higgins, 35 Me. 339; Mitchell v. Warner, 5 Conn. 518.

"With respect to the word 'tenements' or tenementa, in Co. Litt. 20, a, it is stated: 'This is the only word which the Stat. of Westm. 2, that created estates tail, useth; and it includeth not only all corporate inheritances which are or may be holden, but also all inheritances issuing out of any of those inheritances, or concerning or annexed to, or exercisable within the same, though they lie not in tenure, therefore all these without question may be entailed.' That is a proper legal definition of 'tenement.' I think 'tenement,' when used at all in connection with a house or room, must mean something of the same kind, or of the same character, and a thing absolutely immovable from the land." Fredericks v. Howie, 1 H. & C. 381.

Tenement is a word of extensive signification. When used in a statute directing the proceedings to be taken, when goods and chattels cannot be found to discharge an execution, and the debtor has lands or tenements, it should be construed as referring to such interests in real estate as are connected with the freehold, and not included in the term chattels. Barr v. Binfon, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 335.

A Wharf Has Been Held a "Tenement."—A wharf or pier reclaimed from tide-water by an embankment, or by raising the bottom with stone, earth, or other material, was held to be a "tenement," within the meaning of a New York statute authorizing summary proceedings in favor of the landlord to recover the possession of "houses, lands, and tenements." People v. Kelsey, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 372. In that case, the court, by Brown, J., said: "But few persons, I think, would entertain any doubt that a pier of ground reclaimed from tide-water by embankment, or by raising the bottom by filling with stone, or earth, or other material, in the manner in which piers and wharves are constructed above the surface of the water, would be regarded as land. Where the reclamation is permanent and durable, what is it, if it is not land? Be that as it may, the word tenement signifies everything which may be holden, if it be of a permanent nature, and a wharf or pier is so permanent that it becomes a part of the soil and freehold itself."

In a Will.—(See also WILLS).—The word "tenements" has never been construed in a will, independently of other circumstances, to pass a fee. Canning v. Canning, Moseley 240; Doe v. Richards, 3 T. R. 356; Den v. Miller, 5 T. R. 558; Wright v. Denn, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 238.

Technical Sense.—The word will include an advowson, Westfaling v. Westfaling, 3 Atk. 460; Gully v. Bishop of Exeter, 4 Bing. 290; 13 E. C. L. 439; so it has been held to include tithes, Powell v. Bull, 1 Comyn. 265; R. v. Skingle, 1 Stra. 100; Rex v. Barker, 6 Ad. & El. 388; 33 E. C. L. 91; and so a dignity, whether it be granted of a place or not, is a "tenement." In re Rivett-Carnac's Will, 30 Ch. Div. 136; R. v. Knollys, 2 Salk. 509; 1 Ld. Raym. 10; Ferrer's Case, 2 Eden 373.

A freehold rent charge is within the words "freehold lands or tenements." Druitt v. Christchurch, Colt. Reg. Ca. 328. And see for other cases illustrating the scope of the term in its strict legal sense, REAL PROPERTY, vol. 19, p. 1033.

In its popular sense, the term "tenement" frequently has the same meaning as "house." Yorkshire F. & L. Ins. Co. v. Clayton, 8 Q. B. Div. 423.

"The common people still use the word, as in the days of Blackstone, to mean house." Cotton, L. J., in Dashwood v. Ayles, 55 L. J. Q. B. 10.

So the term has been held equivalent to "dwelling-house." Minifie v. Banger, 55 L. J. Q. B. 10.

Tenement.—Under the inhabited house duty act, a house let to different tenants, occupying rooms on the same floor, opening on a common hall staircase, is held not to be "divided into and let in different tenements." Yorkshire, etc., Ins. Co. v. Clayton, 6 Q. B. Div. 557; 8 Q. B. Div. 421. But if the tenements are complete in themselves, having each its independent hall and stairway, they are "different tenements," although all on the same floor, like "flats." The "difference" may be horizontal as well as vertical. Atty. Gen'l v. Mutual, etc., Chambers Assoc., L. R., 10 Exch. 305.

May Signify a Part in Contradistinction to the Whole House.—"In modern use, the word often signifies rooms let in houses, or such part of a house as is separately occupied by a single family or person, in contradistinction from the whole house. Young v. Boston, 104 Mass. 95. Where also a part of a room is occupied by one, and a distinct portion by another, as where one occupies one side of the room, and another the opposite side, or one the front, and the other the rear, which is not infrequent in the smaller trades, the portion appropriated to either is properly called his tenement and himself its tenant, even if no partition separates their respective holdings, and a passageway between them is used in common." Com. v. Hersey, 144 Mass. 298; Com. v. Clynes, 150 Mass. 71.

A tenement may consist of a single room or contiguous rooms, or rooms upon different stories, if controlled by a single person and used in connection with each other. The fact that one of the rooms was occupied and used as a shop, and another for a living room grantor; but since the conversion of all freehold tenures into free and common socage, the tenendum is of no further use even in England, and is therefore joined to the habendum—to have and to hold.¹

TENOR—(See also EFFECT, vol. 6, p. 169; FORGERY, vol. 8, p. 510; INDICTMENT, vol. 10, p. 594; LIBEL AND SLANDER, vol. 13, p. 457; PURPORT, vol. 19, p. 590).—The word “tenor” imports an exact copy—that the instrument is set out in the words and figures.²

or kitchen, by the same person, would not make these rooms distinct tenements. Com. v. Clynes, 150 Mass. 72; Com. v. Buckley, 147 Mass. 581.

“Building” not identical with “Tenement.”—An indictment charged the illegal letting of a certain “tenement and building” for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors. It was held that the indictment charged the letting of a building, and that there was a variance between the indictment and the evidence, which proved the letting of a single apartment in the building, the other apartments being occupied by other tenants. The court said: “A building is a tenement, but a tenement may be something different from a building. But in this indictment, it is clear that the words building and tenement are used as synonymous.” Com. v. Bossidy, 112 Mass. 278.

And so in Com. v. McCaughey, 9 Gray (Mass.) 296, it was held that a charge of keeping and maintaining a “building,” for the illegal sale of liquors, could not be supported by proof that defendant kept and maintained only a part of the building, or a “tenement” in it, the residue being occupied by other persons. But an indictment for keeping a “tenement” may be sustained by proof of keeping a “building.” Com. v. Godley, 11 Gray (Mass.) 454.

Not Necessarily Part of a Dwelling-House.—Thus, a complaint for keeping and maintaining a “tenement” for the illegal sale of liquors, may be supported by proof of keeping and maintaining for such a purpose, a shop consisting of one room, and not forming part of a dwelling-house. Com. v. Cogan, 107 Mass. 212.

The Term Imports an Immovable Structure.—In Fredericks v. Howle, 1 H. & C. 381, it was held that a portable booth used by strolling players was not a “tenement,” within the English act, which prohibits keeping “any house or other tenement” as an unlicensed theatre.

A Fishery Held Not to be a “Tenement.”—A several fishery is not within the popular meaning of the term. Redington v. Millar, 24 L. R. Ir. 65.

Tenement Block.—A building described in an insurance policy as a “ten tenement frame block” is not “unoccupied,” if two of the tenements are in actual use and occupation as residences. The court, by Lord, J., said: “The phrase ‘tenement block’ gives but slight indication of what portions of the block the tenements consist, whether a single room, a floor or flat, or suite of rooms. It imports only of necessity that the building is designed for the accommodation of various families.” Harrington v. Fitchburg Ins. Co., 124 Mass. 129.

Tenement House.—See HOUSE, vol. 9, p. 780; LODGINGS AND APARTMENTS, vol. 13, p. 1015.

1. 2 Bl. Com. 208; Bouvier’s L. Dict.
2. Com. v. Wright, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 65; State v. Atkins, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 458; State v. Johnson, 26 Iowa 407; 96 Am. Dec. 160.

The word “tenor” has a technical meaning, and requires an exact copy. People v. Warner, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 273.

“While the misuse or omission of a letter, which works no such change in a word as to make of it a different one, will not be treated as a fatal variance, still, tenor imports identity, and whenever that is destroyed, either by the omission or adoption of any one word, however slightly the sense may be affected, it will be so regarded.” State v. Townsend, 86 N. Car. 679. And in that case the omission of the word “all” in an indictment purporting to set out the tenor of a card, though its effect upon the sense was of the slightest, if any, was held to be a fatal variance.

The word “tenor” binds the party to a strict recital; but the number of a bank bill and the words at the top of it expressing its amount, are not parts of the bill, and need not be set out in an indictment purporting to give the "tenor" of the bill. Com. v. Stevens, 1 Mass. 203. And in Griffin v. State, 14 Ohio St. 61, the indictment alleged that one of the counterfeit bank notes unlawfully sold by the defendant "was of the tenor and effect following, to-wit:" The court, by Scott, J., said: "The word 'tenor' imports an exact copy. It was necessary therefore that the indictment should set forth truly and precisely all the words and figures of the bill which constitute its contract. It was not necessary to the validity of the indictment to go further, and set out the numbers of the bill, its vignettes, mottoes, and devices, or the words and figures in its margin, which constitute no part of the contract of the forged instrument. These are not properly any part of the bill. Com. v. Bailey, 1 Mass. 62; 2 Am. Dec. 3; Com. v. Stevens, 1 Mass. 204; People v. Franklin, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 299; Com. v. Searle, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 332; 4 Am. Dec. 446; State v. Carr, 5 N. H. 367; Wharton's Am. Crim. Law 174, 588."

In the Popular Sense.—"Tenor," in its technical sense, means an exact copy; but, in popular use, may mean the substance and effect of an instrument. Where a statute prescribing the mode of entering judgment on an instrument, required the date and "tenor" to be entered, this was held satisfied by entering the substance of the instrument, for if an exact copy were intended, this would include the date, and calling for the date in addition, was superfluous. Beeson v. Beeson, 1 Harr. (Del.) 466.

Tenor Distinguished from Purport—(See also PURPORT, vol. 19, p. 590; FORGERY, vol. 8, p. 510 et seq.)—"It has never been required, either at common law, or by any statute of this state, that the purport and tenor of an instrument, charged to have been forged, should both be set out in the indictment. Section 1814 of the Revised Statutes provides, that it shall be sufficient to describe the instrument forged, by the purport thereof. But neither this section, nor any other provision of our statute, forbids setting out the instrument forged according to its tenor; and an indictment setting out the instrument forged according to its tenor only, would undoubtedly be sufficient. 2 East's Pleas of the Crown 983. In the indictment before us, the pleader has attempted to set out the note forged according to its purport, as well as according to its tenor. Where the tenor is given, the purport must necessarily appear, as the tenor of an instrument means an exact copy of it, whereas, the purport means 'the substance of it, as it appeared on the face of the instrument to every eye which read it.' As said by Buller, J., in Reading's Case, 2 Leach 672, 'The indictment is repugnant in itself; for the name and description of one person or thing, could not purport to be another; and in Gilchrist's Case, upon a conference of ten judges, it was held that, 'The word purport imports what appears on the face of the instrument. It means the apparent and not the legal import.' 2 Leach 753." State v. Pullens, 81 Mo. 391.

Distinguished from "Manner and Form."—The law attaches a technical meaning to the word "tenor," as signifying either an exact copy, or a statement of the libel verbatim. "Tenor" has so strict and technical a meaning as to make it necessary to recite verbatim; but the expression "manner and form" means nothing more than a substantial recital. Wright v. Clements, 3 B. & Ald. 503; 5 E. C. L. 358.

1. Killman v. State, 2 Tex. App. 222; 28 Am. Rep. 432. And in that case it was held that a canvas tent might be a "disorderly house." The court said: "The case of Callahan v. State, 41 Tex. 43, cited and relied upon by counsel, was a case of theft from a house, and in that case our learned chief justice says: 'Such a structure as that described by the witness would, in common language, be called, as it was called by the witness, a tent; never a house. . . . However difficult it might be to define in words the exact difference, in some possible cases, between a house and a tent, it can readily be conceived that there are houses that cannot be taken, called, or understood

TENTERDEN'S (LORD) ACT¹ is a supplement to the Statute of Frauds, and requires the following promises and engagements to be in writing: First, an acknowledgment of a debt barred by the Statute of Limitations. The act further provides that an acknowledgment by one joint contractor shall not affect the others.² Second, a promise to pay a debt incurred, or a ratification of a contract made, during infancy.³ Third, a representation as to a person's character, ability, etc., made to enable him to obtain money or goods upon credit.⁴ Fourth, executory contracts for the sale of goods.⁵

TENURE—(See also REAL PROPERTY, vol. 19, p. 1028; TITLE).—The word properly denotes the specific feudal relation subsisting between the lord and the tenant.⁶ But since the decadence of the feudal system, which has deprived the true doctrine of tenures of nearly all of its practical importance, the word tenure has often been confused with terms referring to the quantum of the tenant's estate. This confusion is chiefly due to the fact that common-law tenure is found only in connection with estates having a certain conventional quantum.⁷

TENURE OF OFFICE—(See also PUBLIC OFFICERS, vol. 19, p. 562*k*).—The word tenure, in this connection, includes the duration or term of office, as well as the manner of holding.⁸

to be tents, and tents that cannot be called, taken, or understood to be houses; and this is one of them.' This language, we think, most clearly shows that the decision in that case was mainly made to depend upon the particular facts and circumstances of that particular case; that the structure therein described, from which the property was stolen, could in no manner be considered a house. The language quoted, however, does in our opinion equally as well convey the idea that there are tents which can be called, taken, and understood to be houses, and the tent described in this case, we think, is, if there ever was such a one, just one of those tents."

7. Challis on Real Property (Text-book Ser.) *6. Thus in Richman v. Lippencott, 29 N. J. L. 59, it was said: "The word tenure is one of very extensive signification; it may import a mere possession, and may include every holding of an inheritance."

8. People v. Waite, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 58. That case was upon the term of office of a commissioner of deeds. The statute authorizing and regulating the appointment of commissioners, declared that they should hold their offices by the same tenure as justices of the peace. The court, by Nelson, J., said: "It was contended by the counsel for the defendant that the term 'tenure' designated only the manner of holding the office; that holding by the same tenure as justices of the peace, meant that the commissioners should hold their offices in the same manner and be displaced for the same reasons. I apprehend this as too restricted a definition of the term, and that it was intended to include the duration of a term of office, in addition to the manner of holding."

The Indiana constitution provides that "the general assembly shall not create any office, the tenure of which shall be longer than four years." In State v. Harrison, 113 Ind. 434, it was contended on behalf of the relator, that the right to hold over after the expiration of a four-year's term, to an officer of legislative creation, was the practical abrogation of that part of the

- II. Term of Court, 949.

- III. Term of Years, 951.
- IV. Terms of Agreement, 951.

I. IN GENERAL.—"Term," in a general sense, signifies boundary or limit; the extremity of anything, or that which limits its extent.¹ As applied to time, the word signifies a fixed period, a determined or prescribed duration.² As applied to language, it means a word, an expression, a phrase; as a term of art, a law term, etc.³

II. TERM OF COURT.—Terms of court are those stated periods during which courts sit for the dispatch of business.⁴ The frequency constitution. But the court refused to give the clause this interpretation, saying: "This contention rests upon a critical analysis of the word 'tenure,' which comes from the Latin 'tenere,' to hold. The argument assumes that the meaning to be attributed to the word 'tenure,' as used above, is substantially such as to render any person incapacitated or ineligible to hold an office of legislative creation for a longer period than four years, by any method in virtue of one selection or election. . . . We are not impressed with the view thus urged. . . . To sustain the view contended for would require us, upon the mere construction or definition of a word—and a definition which in our view does not lead to the conclusion claimed—to entirely read out of, or materially modify, all that part of § 3, art. 15, of the constitution which has reference to the holding over of officers who are incumbent in offices created by the general assembly."

"The word tenure in this connection means nothing more than the right to, or the manner of holding, the place." Ex p. Herrick, 78 Ky. 32.

Under Terms.—A party is said to be under terms when the court shows him some indulgence or makes some order in his favor, upon certain conditions. Bouv. L. Dict., tit. "Terms, To Be Under."

Term of Office.—Refers to the tenure of office, and there may be different incumbents during a single term. Baker v. Kirk, 33 Ind. 517.

In Criminal Law.—When a statute provides that whenever any person who shall be convicted of any crime, the punishment whereof shall be confinement at hard labor "for any term of years," shall have been before sentenced to a like punishment, he shall be sentenced to punishment in addition to that prescribed by law for the offense of which he shall be convicted, the words "term of years," mean a period of time not less than two years. Ex p. Seymour, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 40, per Shaw, C. J.

4. Term of Court.—Burr. L. Dict., tit. "Terms of Court;" 3 Bl. Com. 275.

In English practice, the courts of Westminster held four terms a year; viz., Hilary, Easter, Trinity and Michaelmas terms. "These terms are supposed by Mr. Selden (Jan. Angl. l. 2, § 9) to have been instituted by William the Conqueror, but Sir Henry Spelman hath clearly and learnedly shown that they were gradually formed from the canonical institutions of the church; being, indeed, no other than those leisure seasons of the year which were not occupied by the great festivals or fasts, or which were not liable to the general avocations of rural business." 3 Bl. Com. 275.

Formerly, Hilary Term began on the 20th of January, and ended on the 12th of February; Easter Term began on the Wednesday fortnight after Easter day, and ended on the Monday next after Ascension day; Trinity Term began on the Friday following Trinity Sunday and ended the Wednesday fortnight thereafter; Michaelmas Term began on the 6th of November, and ended on the 28th of November. By Stats. 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Wm. IV., ch. 70, the terms were so rearranged and duration of terms depend upon the constitution of the court.¹ The whole term is considered as but one day, so that the court has power to revise its own judgments and decrees at any time during the term at which they are rendered.² But it may not re-examine its final judgments or decrees at a term subsequent to that at which they were rendered.³ It may, however, at such subsequent term, order the correction of clerical errors so as to that Hilary Term began on the 11th, and ended on the 31st of January; Easter Term began on the 15th of April, and ended on the 8th of May; Trinity Term began on the 14th day after the ending of Easter Term and continued for twenty-one days; Michaelmas Term began on the 2d, and ended on the 25th of November. By the Judicature Act, the division of the legal year into terms is abolished, and the terms are superseded by the sittings of the court of appeal and of the high court of justice in London and Middlesex. Term Fee.—In English practice, the term fee is a sum which a solicitor is entitled to charge to his client, and the client to recover, if successful, from the unsuccessful party, paid for every term in which any proceedings subsequent to the summons shall take place. Bouv. L. Dict., tit. "Term Fee;" Abb. L. Dict., tit. "Term."

Term probatory is the period of time during which evidence may be taken in an ecclesiastical suit. Coote's Ecc. Pr. 240.

1. Bouv. L. Dict., tit. "Term."
In the United States, the word "term" is generally used in the sense of session. The time of the commencement of each term is fixed by statute; the end of it is not usually so fixed, but is determined by the final adjournment of the court for that term. Anderson's L. Dict., tit. "Term;" U. S. v. Guiteau, 1 Mackey (D. C.) 498; McNaughton v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 19 Fed. Rep. 881.

But the duration of the term, as well as the time for its commencement, is sometimes fixed by statute. Horton v. Miller, 38 Pa. St. 271. See also JURISDICTION, vol. 12, p. 296.

A judgment cannot be set aside at a subsequent term, unless it was entered by misprision of the clerk, by fraud, or the like. Medford v. Dorsey, 2 Wash. (U. S.) 433; Brush v. Robbins, 3 McLean (U. S.) 486; Wood v. Luse, 4 McLean (U. S.) 254.

The rule applies only to final judgments and decrees; interlocutory judgments and orders may be opened at a subsequent term. Kitchen v. Strawbridge, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 84; Clark v. Blair, 14 Fed. Rep. 812; De Florez v. Reynolds, 8 Fed. Rep. 434; Reeves v. Keystone Bridge Co., 11 Phila. (U. S. C. C.) 498; Willmantic Linen Co. v. Clark Thread Co., 24 Fed. Rep. 799.

And a judgment which is void for want of jurisdiction may be vacated on motion at a subsequent term. Shuford v. Cain, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 302.

make the record conform to the truth.¹ At common law, a judgment related back to the first day of the term at which it was rendered.² A term, may, in the discretion of the court, be adjourned to a day certain,³ and the presumption is that an adjourned term of court was regularly called and held.⁴

III. TERM OF YEARS.—A term, in real-estate law, or estate for years, is one granted for a definite period of time by the owner of the freehold, called the lessor, to one called the lessee, or termor, to hold for the time stipulated and under the conditions agreed upon.⁵

2. 3 Bl. Com. 420.

The fiction of law that a term consists of but one day, cannot be invoked to antedate the judicial rejection of a claim to public lands, so as to render operative a grant otherwise of no effect. Newhall v. Sanger, 92 U. S. 761.

5. Term of Years.—See ESTATES, vol. 6, p. 884; 1 Washb. Real Prop. (5th ed.) 465; Tiedeman Real Prop., § 172.

A term may be for several years, one year, or any fraction of a year, if the time is fixed. ESTATES, vol. 6, p. 884; 1 Washb. Real Prop. (5th ed.) 465; Tiedeman Real Prop., § 172, citing Brown v. Bragg, 22 Ind. 122; Gould v. Eagle Creek School Dist., 8 Minn. 427.

The word "term" is used to designate both an estate for years, and the time during which it is to be held. Bouv. L. Dict., tit. "Term of Years;" Abb. L. Dict., tit. "Term of Years;" 1 Washb. Real Prop. (5th ed.) 468.

While it is necessary that a term be for a fixed period, it is not essential that the period be fixed by the contract of the parties. It is sufficient, if, by the provisions of the contract, the duration of the term can be rendered certain. Say v. Smith, 1 Plowd. 269; Horner v. Den, 25 N. J. L. 106.

Thus, an agreement that a lessee may continue to keep the premises after the expiration of his term, until he is reimbursed from the rents and profits for certain improvements stipulated to be made, entitles him to possession against one claiming under the lessor. Batchelder v. Dean, 16 N. H. 265.

A lease for a certain period, renewable at the lessee's option, for a further period named, is good for the aggregate of the two periods named, if the lessee elects to renew. Delashman v. Berry, 20 Mich. 292; 4 Am. Rep. 392; Doe v. Dixon, 9 East 15.

A lease determinable upon the abandonment of a certain enterprise upon the premises, is good. Horner v. Den, 25 N. J. L. 106.

A lease for such a period as a third person shall name, is good, as its duration may be rendered certain. Say v. Smith, 1 Plowd. 269.

When certainty of continuance depends upon matter ex post facto, that matter must occur in the lifetime of both the lessor and the lessee. Western Transp. Co. v. Lansing, 49 N. Y. 508, citing Rector of Chedington's Case, 1 Coke 380, 155b; Say v. Smith, 1 Plowd. 269. See also ESTATES, vol. 6, p. 884.

Term in Gross.—A "term in gross" is one which is not attached to the inheritance, but is held by some person, not interested in the inheritance, for his own use and benefit. Abb. L. Dict., tit. "Term;" Bouv. L. Dict., tit. "Term in Gross."

Term Attendant upon Inheritance.—A term which is held by a trustee in trust for the owner of the inheritance, is said to be attendant upon the inheritance in contradistinction to the term in gross, which is outstanding. Abb. L. Dict., tit. "Term;" 1 Wash. on Real Prop. (5th ed.), p. 494. See also Stat. 8 & 9 Vict., ch. 112, whereby such terms were abolished.

nants, and obligations of a contract are frequently called the terms thereof.¹

TERMINER.—See note 2.

TERMINATE.—See note 3.

TERRE-TENANT.—Terre-tenant is defined by Bouvier as one who is in the actual possession of land; but, in a more technical sense, as he who is seised of land; and, in the latter sense, the owner of the land or person seised is the terre-tenant, and not the lessee.⁴

1. Terms of Agreement.—Walsh v. Mehrback, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 449.

In Hurd v. Whitsett, 4 Colo. 89, the court said: "We conclude, therefore, that the words 'term' and 'terms' cannot legitimately be used synonymously; that they are not generic in their relations to each other, but have each a technical and specifically distinct meaning as applied to estates in the nature of tenancies. True, the words are both derived from the Latin terminus, a limit or boundary, but their application is nevertheless technically distinct, 'term' meaning, in brief, a limited estate, and 'terms,' the limitations in the use of that estate arising out of the covenants and conditions thereto annexed."

An assignment for the benefit of creditors, which authorizes the assignee to sell on such "terms" as he shall deem advisable, invests him with a legal discretion only, and does not authorize him to sell on credit. Cribben v. Ellis, 69 Wis. 337, overruling Keep v. Sanderson, 2 Wis. 42; 60 Am. Dec. 404; Hutchinson v. Lord, 1 Wis. 286; 60 Am. Dec. 381, which held that such language in the assignment authorized the assignee to sell on credit, and, therefore, rendered the assignment void. Beus v. Shaughnessy, 2 Utah 492, is in harmony with the early Wisconsin decisions.

Terms Cash.—The words "terms cash" upon an unrecipited bill of goods sent by a wholesale to a retail dealer, cannot be held, as a matter of law, to imply that the goods were paid for before they were shipped. Wellauer v. Fellows, 48 Wis. 105.

2. Oyer and Terminer.—A phrase applied in England to the assizes, which were so called from the commission of oyer and terminer directed to the judges, empowering them to inquire, hear and determine all felonies, misdemeanors, treasons, etc. 4 Bl. Com. 269, 270. It is now used to denote a court of original jurisdiction for the trial of crimes.

3. Termination of Voyage in Policy of Insurance.—In Gracie v. Marine Ins. Co., 8 Cranch (U. S.) 82, Marshall, C. J., said: "The voyage is understood to be terminated when the vessel arrives at her port of destination, and has been moored there in safety for twenty-four hours; but it will be conceded that the termination of the voyage as to the ship does not, nevertheless, terminate the risk on the goods; this risk may continue when the voyage as to the ship has ended."

4. Bouv. L. Dict.

In Hulett v. Mutual L. Ins. Co., 114 Pa. St. 146, Clark, J., said: "A terre-tenant, in a general sense, is one who is seised or actually possessed of lands as the owner thereof. In a scire facias sur mortgage or judgment, a terre-tenant is, in a more restricted sense, one, other than the debtor, who becomes seised or possessed of the debtor's lands, subject to the lien thereof. Those only are terre-tenants, therefore, in a technical sense, whose title is subsequent to the incumbrance. Chahoon v. Hollenback, 16 S. & R. (Pa.) 425; 16 Am. Dec. 587. 'Strictly speaking,' says Chief Justice Gibson, in Mitchell v. Hamilton, 8 Pa. St. 491, 'only the debtor's subsequent grantee of the fee simple is a terre-tenant.' So in Dengler v. Kiehner, 13 Pa. St. 41; 53 Am. Dec. 441, says the same learned judge, 'Who is a terre-tenant? Not every one who happens to be in possession of the land; there can be no terre-tenant who is not a purchaser of the estate, mediately or immediately from the debtor, while it is bound by the judgment.' To the same effect is Fox v. Hempfield R. Co., 79 Pa. St. 66, note, and many other cases."

TERMINUS.—In modern law, a limiting point, either of time or space, and either at the beginning or end of a period. The termini of a voyage, for instance, are the two local points at which it begins and ends. The terminus a quo (limit from which) is the point where it begins; the terminus ad quem (limit to which) is the point where it ends.¹

TERRIER.—In the old English law, a register or survey of lands; a book or roll in which the several lands either of an individual or corporation, are described, containing the quantity of acres, boundaries, tenants' names, etc.²

TERRITORIAL COURTS.—See COURTS, vol. 4, p. 461; TERRITORIES, vol. 25; UNITED STATES COURTS.

I. POWER OF CONGRESS OVER.—That Congress has full and complete legislative authority over the people of the territories, and all the departments of the territorial governments, is no longer open to discussion. In the language of the Supreme Court of the United States, "it has passed beyond the stage of controversy into final judgment."³ This power of Congress results, as a necessary consequence, from the right of the United States to acquire and hold additional domain,¹ and may be exercised either by the creation of a local government with delegated authority to legislate for the territory, or by the passage of laws directly by Congress, without the intervention of such a government.²

The theory upon which Congress has proceeded is, that, in the exercise of its undoubted right to govern, it deems it unwise, and inconsistent with local self-government, to enact municipal laws for the territories, and has therefore erected temporary governments therein, and delegated to them authority to enact such laws as may be convenient or expedient.³ The bodies politic thus created are not sovereignties, but creatures of federal power, authorized to exist for their own convenience, and subordinate to the authority of the federal government.⁴ Their relation to the federal government is much the same as that which counties bear to their respective states, and Congress may legislate for them as a state does for its municipal organizations.⁵

U. S. 135, that it was within the power of Congress to effect a collective naturalization on the admission of a state into the Union, and that this was done in the case of Nebraska. In this case the decision of the supreme court of Nebraska in State v. Boyd, 31 Neb. 682, was reversed.

Porter*, 9 How. (U. S.) 242.

gated power must be exercised in strict conformity with the terms in which it is delegated. Murrin v. Converse (Wyoming, 1870), 2 Chic. Leg. N. 113.

None of the powers of sovereignty exist in the people of a territory. The powers conferred on them may at any time be withdrawn or modified by the federal government. Murrin v. Converse (Wyoming, 1870), 2 Chic. Leg. N. 113; Howe v. Gallagher (Wyoming, 1871), 3 Chic. Leg. N. 251; U. S. v. Nelson, 29 Fed. Rep. 205.

If, technically speaking, there is no sovereignty in a territory of the United States, but that of the United States itself, then crimes committed therein are, correctly speaking, committed against the government and dignity of the United States; hence, indictments for the same should be in the name of the United States, and the attorney for the United States would be the proper officer to prosecute them. But the practice is otherwise in all the organized territories, and for crimes committed therein against the territory, all indictments and writs run in the name of the territory and are prosecuted by the local prosecuting attorney and the territorial attorney-general, as crimes committed against the territorial laws. See this query raised by Mr. Justice Bradley in Snow v. U. S., 18 Wall. (U. S.) 321.

II. LAWS OF CONGRESS APPLICABLE TO.—When the organic act of a territory provides that “the constitution and all laws of the United States which are not locally inapplicable, shall have the same force and effect”¹ within the territories as elsewhere within the United States, the duty is devolved upon the courts, when the question arises, to determine what laws are applicable and what are not.²

In determining this question, courts are not bound by any construction which the administrative department of the government, in the discharge of its duties, may have given to such provision.³ Whenever Congress shall determine to enact municipal laws for the government of the territories, the intention that such laws shall operate therein, will be clearly expressed.⁴

Where the term “state” is used in an act of Congress, rather as a geographical expression than a political one, it is held that a territory, being not only a distinct political society, but also a defined and recognized division of the Republic, is within the meaning and intent of the act.⁵

A law of Congress, when applicable to the territories, has as full force and effect therein as if enacted by the territorial legislature; and it is beyond the power of the territorial legislature to annul or in any manner change, alter, repeal, or otherwise modify,

2. The following federal laws have been held “not locally inapplicable:” The provisions of the National Banking Act, Silver Bow Co. v. Davis, 6 Mont. 311; the admiralty and maritime laws of the United States, Phelps v. Panama, 1 Wash. Ter. 529; and the extradition laws of the United States, Speer on Extradition, p. 302. See also Kingen v. Kelley, 3 Wyoming 566; 28 Pac. Rep. 36.

The following laws have been held “locally inapplicable:” The act of Congress defining the jurisdiction of United States courts in cases of contempt, Territory v. Murray, 7 Mont. 251; the act of Congress relating to drawing jurors in courts of the United States, U. S. v. Beebe, 2 Dakota 298; the act of Congress providing for impaneling grand juries in United States courts, and prescribing the number of which they shall consist, Reynolds v. U. S., 98 U. S. 153; the act of Congress providing that in the United States courts no witness shall be excluded in any civil action because he is a party to, or interested in, the issue tried, Good v. Martin, 95 U. S. 98.

In short, all acts of Congress regulating the proceedings in the United States courts are, in truth and in fact, “locally inapplicable” to the courts of a territory. Hornbuckle v. Toombs, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 654. It has also been held that cl. 17, § 8, art. 1, of the constitution of the United States, providing that Congress shall exercise exclusive legislation over all places purchased by consent of the legislature of the state in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings, is inapplicable to the territories. Reynolds v. People, 1 Colo. 179. See 2 Story on the Const. (4th ed. by Cooley), § 1224.

It was said in McKennon v. Winn (Okl. 1893), 33 Pac. Rep. 582, that the common law obtained in Oklahoma at the time of its first settlement and until the adoption of the organic act.

a law of Congress. Such a law is supreme and becomes part of the organic law of the territory.¹

III. LEGISLATIVE POWER OF—1. Power Stated.—The legislative power in each territory is vested in a governor and legislative assembly,² and “extends to all rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of the United States.”³ What are “rightful subjects of legislation,” must be determined by an examination of the subjects upon which legislatures are in the practice of acting, with the consent and approval of the people they represent.⁴

The organic act under which a territory is organized, takes, as to the territory, the place taken by a constitution, as the fundamental law of a state, and an act of the territorial legislative assembly derives its legal force and validity from such organic act.⁵ All territorial enactments, inconsistent with the constitution of the United States, the organic act, or laws of Congress, are null and void.⁶

The express approval by Congress of every legislative act is not necessary to its legality, for, until disapproved or annulled, it is presumed to be acquiesced in by Congress, and therefore is operative.⁷ “Action by Congress in annulling territorial statutes is rare. . . . The usual way of declaring a territorial statute which is inconsistent with the higher law of Congress, inoperative, is through the courts, just as in the states, similar enactments would be adjudged to be unconstitutional.”⁸

The question in Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 204; 2 Wash. 326, was as to the legality of a territorial legislative divorce, and it was upheld on the ground that it was a “rightful subject of legislation,” though see the same question decided contra, in Re Higbee, 4 Utah 19. Congress, however, has put an end to this practice, by prohibiting territorial legislatures from granting divorces. U. S. Act July 30th, 1886.

It was held in Alger v. Hill, 2 Wash. 344, that the territorial legislature of Washington had power to grant a charter to the city of Seattle, this not being a private charter nor an especial privilege within the inhibition of the United States Revised Statutes, section 1889.

2. Restraints Upon.—Usually, all restrictions upon the powers of territorial legislation, are found in the organic laws creating the territory, or in acts of Congress supplemental thereto.¹ While it is true that the constitution of the United States operates on the federal government alone, and not upon the states,² yet, as the territorial governments are agencies of the federal government, the constitution and bill of rights thereto apply to them. Congress, therefore, has rightfully prescribed the limitation upon territorial legislation in enacting that it must not be "inconsistent with the constitution" and laws of the United States.³

a. DUE PROCESS OF LAW.—A territorial legislature cannot deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law.⁴

b. TRIAL BY JURY.—The right of trial by jury cannot be denied any person or corporation by a territorial legislature "in cases cognizable by the common law,"⁵ or in "suits at common law," where the amount involved exceeds twenty dollars.⁶

c. CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.—A territorial legislature cannot provide for the prosecution of "capital or otherwise infamous crimes"⁷ by information.⁸ Neither can it confer upon justices of view the action of the legislature with respect to its organization, or pass upon the election and qualification of its members. Chavez v. Luna (N. Mex. 1889), 21 Pac. Rep. 344; Lyons v. Woods (N. Mex. 1889), 21 Pac. Rep. 346.

Congress has neither the time nor inclination to study the different territorial enactments to ascertain their legality, and as there are territorial courts open and free to pronounce upon the legality of questionable laws, it has rarely exercised its power of annulling territorial statutes. See Miners' Bank v. Iowa, 12 How. (U. S.) 8. See remarks of Mr. Justice Miller on this point in Clayton v. People, 132 U. S. 632.

Strumbaugh*, 9 Mont. 81.

5. Thus, where a statute of Idaho Territory provided that actions to try title to office should be heard and determined by a judge at chambers without a jury, it was held void. People v. Havird, 2 Idaho 498.

d. THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.—Territorial legislatures are inhibited from passing any law "interfering with the primary disposal of the soil."³ The government has a perfect title to the public land and an absolute and unqualified right of disposal; and a territory cannot in any manner modify or affect the right which the government has to the primary disposal of the public domain.⁴

e. TAXATION OF FEDERAL PROPERTY.—The acts of Congress prohibit the territories from "imposing any tax upon the property of the United States."⁵ The reason for such a prohibition is apparent; if a territory possessed this authority, it could cripple and wholly defeat the operations of the federal government.⁶

f. IMMUNITY FROM TAXATION.—Again, "the lands or property of non-residents shall not be taxed higher than the lands or property of residents."⁷ This is an application of the constitutional guaranty that "the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states,"⁸ and is the source of the doctrine announced by the federal Supreme Court, viz.: that a state cannot impose higher burdens by way of taxation upon the business or property of citizens of other states, than are imposed upon the corresponding business or property of its own citizens.¹

g. LIMITATION OF THE RIGHT OF ACQUISITION BY CORPORATIONS.—The right of corporations or associations for religious and charitable purposes, to hold real estate in any territory, is limited by the act of Congress to fifty thousand dollars,² and all property acquired in excess is to be forfeited to the United States under proceedings authorized to be instituted for that purpose.³

h. RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.—The right of suffrage in the territories is conferred by Congress on all citizens of the United States,⁴ and those who have declared their intention to become such.⁵ But the legislative assembly may regulate the exercise of the right, subject to the restrictions and limitations imposed by the constitution of the United States, the laws of Congress, and the organic act. The political rights of the inhabitants of the territories are their franchises which they hold as privileges, in the legislative discretion of Congress.⁶ Congress may, therefore, take from them any right of suffrage it may previously have conferred, or at any time modify or abridge it, as it may deem expedient, as in the act of March 22d, 1882, Congress, in the exercise of its power, enacted what is commonly known as the "Edmunds Act," the eighth section of which is alike applicable to all the territories, disfranchising bigamists and polygamists.⁷ In 1885, the legislative assembly of Idaho Territory enacted what is known in that territory as the "Test-oath" statute, imposing disqualifications additional to those prescribed by Congress. The supreme court of that territory held, and the federal Supreme Court affirmed, the territorial statute to be valid.⁸

Again, before Congress regulated the right of suffrage in the territories, there existed a concurrent power of Congress and the territorial legislature upon that subject. This concurrent power is similar in its nature to the concurrent powers of Congress and the states upon many subjects, and when Congress exercised a power in which for years it had concurrent jurisdiction, the concurrent power in the inferior legislature over that subject ceased.¹

i. DELEGATION OF POWERS.—It is an elementary principle of constitutional law that the powers confided to one department of the government cannot be exercised by another.² When the organic law of a territory provides that the governor, "by and with the advice and consent of the legislative council,"³ shall appoint territorial officers, that authority cannot be delegated by the legislature to another body, and the governor cannot be divested of his prerogative.⁴ If the legislature could take from him this power, and provide for the selection of such officers by any other mode, it could take from him every prerogative he possessed. Congress having pointed out the manner of filling the territorial offices, the legislature has no power to provide another and different mode.⁵

The legislative assembly of each territory may, however, under the acts of Congress, regulate the manner of filling "all township, district, and county offices."⁶ These offices are entirely the objects of legislative creation, and a legislative assembly may at any time abolish such an office, or it may increase or diminish the duties and compensation of the occupants of such offices, or it may declare any such office vacant. The exercise of any of these powers by a legislature, is not in violation of the constitutional prohibition impairing the obligation of contracts, nor within the meaning of the fifth amendment, providing that no one shall be "deprived of . . . property without due process of law."⁷

The records kept by the legislative assembly are authorized by act of Congress to be deposited in the territorial secretary's office.¹ They are the highest evidence of the due passage and approval of all legislative enactments,² and parol evidence is inadmissible to vary or contradict them.³

k. ATTACHÉS OF: COMPENSATION.—The number of officers and attachés of a territorial legislative assembly is determined by the laws of the United States, and the appropriation for their payment is defrayed by Congress. A territorial legislature cannot "in any instance, or under any pretext, exceed the amount appropriated by Congress for its annual expenses."⁴ position of new duties. Lee v. Uinta County, 3 Wyoming 52.

b. POLICE POWER.—In virtue of the same authority, a territorial legislature may rightfully regulate the general police power of the territory.²

c. INCORPORATION—(1) Municipal.—A territorial legislature may, by general incorporation acts, create municipal corporations and confer upon them the usual franchises.³

(2) Private.—The legislative assemblies of the several territories are forbidden by Congress from granting private charters or especial privileges,⁴ but they may, by general incorporation laws, permit persons to associate together as bodies corporate, for the purpose of engaging in mining, manufacturing, and other industrial pursuits;⁵ and also for conducting the business of insurance, banks of discount and deposit, though not of issue, trust and guarantee associations, and for the construction and operation of

d. TAXATION—(See also TAXATION, vol. 25, p. 5).—It is competent for a territorial legislature to levy taxes, for all local purposes, upon property subject to taxation within its jurisdiction.⁴

(1) Public Lands.—Public lands, the property of the federal government, are not taxable.⁵ But they may become private property, and liable to taxation after they have been entered at the land office and a certificate of entry obtained therefor,⁶ and if the taxes thereon remain unpaid, they may be sold like other lands, even though no patent may have issued thereto.⁷ So a territorial legislature may tax equitable interests and improvements held or owned by individuals in government lands.⁸ But a pretended sale of the lands for such taxes would be void.⁹

(2) Railroads.—Railroad land grants are not taxable by the territories until they are patented to the company, or until they are earned by making the required payment into the treasury.¹⁰ But the property of the company is subject to territorial and county taxation.¹¹

(3) National Banks—(See also NATIONAL BANKS, vol. 16, p. 143).—The capital stock of a national bank cannot, as such, be taxed by a territory. But the shares of stock in the bank, being the personal property of the individual stockholders, are liable to taxation.¹ The tax, however, must not be greater than that imposed on other "moneyed capital."² And where the assessment is required to be made "at the place where the bank is located," the domicile of the stockholders is immaterial.³

IV. EXECUTIVE POWER OF—1. How Vested.—The executive power in each territory is vested in a governor, appointed by the president, with the advice and consent of the Senate, who holds his office for four years, unless sooner removed.⁴ In the absence or disability of the governor, the secretary of the territory executes all powers and performs all the duties of the governor.⁵

2. Power of Appointment.—Among the duties imposed upon the governor under the organic act of each territory, is that he shall nominate and commission⁶ all "officers not otherwise provided for . . . by and with the advice and consent of the legislative council."⁷ The act of Congress referred to, provides that all township, district, and county officers shall be elected or appointed in such manner as may be regulated by the legislative authority; and that the governor shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the legislative council, shall appoint all officers not therein otherwise provided for. The "officers not otherwise provided for" are, within the meaning of the act, territorial officers, and must be appointed by the governor as required,⁸ and he cannot be divested of his prerogative by the legislature.⁹ A person nominated by the governor to a territorial office, has no right thereto until the legislative council has confirmed the nomination.¹⁰

3. Power to Fill Vacancies.—If a vacancy is occasioned by "death or resignation," during the recess of the legislative council, the governor may fill the vacancy by granting a commission, "which shall expire at the end of the next session of the legislature."¹ The appointee, under such circumstances, continues in office until his term expires by limitation, and no longer; and if no person is commissioned to succeed him by "the end of the next session of the legislature," the incumbent does not "hold over," but the office becomes vacant.² There being no inherent power in the executive to fill a vacancy, except as provided by law, the governor in such case would be powerless to fill the vacancy.³

4. Power of Removal.—Another duty imposed upon a territorial executive under the acts of Congress is, that he "shall take care that the laws thereof be faithfully executed."⁴ It has been contended that by virtue of this provision, the governor possesses, as a necessary legal adjunct and incident of the power of appointment, the power of removal.⁵ But this principle is applicable only in those cases where the office is held at the pleasure of the appointing power, and the tenure is not fixed by law.⁶

In the other class of cases, where the law has attached to the office a tenure during which the incumbent may hold, the right to remove does not exist as an incident of the power to appoint.⁷

5. Judicial Control of.—It has been decided that the executive of a territory could be compelled by mandamus to perform ministerial acts.⁸ "But the weight of authority is to the effect that courts have no jurisdiction to interfere with the official acts of the chief executive, no matter of what nature they may be."⁹

V. JUDICIAL POWER OF—1. Power Defined.—The judicial power in each territory is vested in a supreme court, which consists of a chief justice and generally two associate justices . . . appointed . . . "for four years, and until their successors are appointed and qualified."¹⁰

Each territory is divided into judicial districts, wherein district courts are authorized to be held by one of the justices of the supreme court, assigned to the district by order of the supreme court, and required by law to reside therein.¹¹

The chambers of the district judge may be held while he is in attendance upon the bench of the supreme court, even though the place where the supreme court is in session is without the territorial limits of his district.¹

The inferior courts of a territory are the probate courts and courts of justices of the peace.² Where Congress enumerates the courts in which the judicial power shall be vested, it is not competent for a territorial legislature to create any other judicial officers or vest judicial powers in any other tribunal.³

2. Appointment and Removal of Territorial Judges.—The justices of a territorial supreme court are appointed by the president, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and their tenure of office is "for four years, and until their successors are appointed and qualified."⁴ This is understood to mean, "that the incumbent shall continue to hold the office after the expiration of his term, and until his successor is qualified."⁵ But it is held by the court of claims, that territorial judges are subject to removal or suspension like other civil officers, a commission for a term of years giving no better legal right to the office than if it was at the pleasure of the appointing power.⁶ The right of a person assuming to exercise the functions of a territorial supreme judge, should be tested by instituting a proceeding in the nature of a quo warranto in the name of the United States, and not in the name of the territory.⁷ A territorial judge is not liable to impeachment has the power to change districts or create new ones, but it cannot by such change divest the court of the jurisdiction which the territorial legislature has prescribed for territorial causes. Murphy v. Murphy (Dakota, 1885), 25 N. W. Rep. 806.

Rev. 308; article by Judge Brown on "Judicial Independence."

7. Nebraska v. Lockwood, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 239. In this case, the court deny and trial before the Senate of the United States, for such officer has repeatedly been declared to be merely a legislative officer, and not a civil officer, within the constitution of the United States.¹ It should be noticed, then, that these judges occupy an anomalous position, so far as being legally amenable to any authority is concerned.

3. Kinds of Courts.—Although the judges of the supreme court of a territory are appointed by the president under an act of Congress, yet the courts they are authorized to hold are not courts of the United States, within the meaning of the constitution.² They are legislative courts, and as the distinction between federal and state jurisdiction, under the constitution, has no foundation in territorial governments, no such distinction exists either in respect to the jurisdiction of their courts or the subjects committed to their cognizance.³

4. Jurisdiction—a. SUPREME.—The supreme court of a territory is clothed with both original and appellate jurisdiction. Where its original jurisdiction is affirmatively conferred by the organic act,⁴ such affirmative grant of original jurisdiction in particular cases, implies a negative upon its exercise in any other case. The supreme court of a territory, therefore, has no power to issue any writ as a court of original jurisdiction, except as such authority is conferred by Congress or is in aid of its appellate powers.⁵ Moreover, the legislative assembly of a territory has no power to extend the affirmative grant of original jurisdiction beyond the limits of the organic act.⁶

b. DISTRICT.—The district court of each territory has two distinct jurisdictions. As a territorial court it administers the local law of the territorial government and is invested with plenary municipal jurisdiction. As invested with jurisdiction to administer the laws of the United States, it has all the authority of United States circuit and district courts, and a portion of each term is directed to be appropriated to the trial of such causes.⁷ In cases the authority of a territorial legislature to impeach a territorial judge; "for a conviction," the court say, "would be futile as to removal."

4. As in some territories Congress has conferred upon the supreme court original power to grant writs of habeas corpus.

5. Where Congress provides that the jurisdiction, both original and appellate, "shall be limited by law," it has been held that in virtue of the organic act conferring upon the courts "chancery as well as common-law jurisdiction" (see U. S. Rev. Stat., §§ 1866, 1868), the grant of such "common-law jurisdiction" carries with it original jurisdiction in mandamus. Chumasero v. Potts, 2 Mont. 251.

arising under the latter jurisdiction, the practice and method of proceeding is the same as in cases arising under the laws of the territory.¹

District courts are also possessed of "chancery as well as common-law jurisdiction."² And they have the same jurisdiction in admiralty causes as is vested in the federal courts.³

c. INFERIOR.—The jurisdiction of the inferior courts of a territory is generally prescribed by Congress, and it is beyond the power of a territorial legislature to extend or modify it.⁴

5. Practice.—The practice, pleading, and forms and mode of proceeding in the territorial courts, subject to any regulations that Congress may deem expedient, are left to the action of the territorial legislatures,⁵ and to regulations which may be adopted by the courts themselves.⁶

"Whenever Congress has proceeded to organize a government for any of the territories, it has merely instituted a system of courts therefor, and has committed to the territorial assembly full power, subject to a few specified or implied conditions, of supplying all details of legislation necessary to put the system into operation."⁷

But the laws or practice of a territory cannot regulate the process by which the Supreme Court of the United States exercises its jurisdiction over territorial supreme courts. Brewster v. Wakefield, 22 How. (U. S.) 128.

In Territory v. Baca (N. Mex. 1892), 30 Pac. Rep. 864, it was held that a territorial statute relating to jurors contravened U. S. Act of July 30, 1866, prohibiting the enactment of local or special laws for summoning or impanelling jurors.

6. Appellate Power of Federal Supreme Court Over.—Writs of error and appeals from the final¹ decisions of the supreme court of any territory are allowed to the Supreme Court of the United States, "in the same manner and under the same regulations"² as from the circuit courts of the United States, provided the value of the property, or the amount in controversy, exclusive of costs, exceeds the sum of $5,000.³ So, appeals are allowed from the supreme or district courts of a territory upon writs of habeas corpus involving the question of personal freedom.⁴ But the Supreme Court of the United States has no jurisdiction on habeas corpus in criminal cases, unless the sentence of the territorial court exceeds the jurisdiction of that court, or there is no authority to hold under the sentence.⁵ The proceedings under a petition for habeas corpus are, in their nature, civil proceedings, even though instituted to arrest a criminal prosecution and secure personal freedom; and the appellate revisory jurisdiction of the supreme court is governed by the statutes regulating civil proceedings.⁶

All appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States from judgments or decrees of territorial courts, must, in jury trials, be by writ of error.⁷ The form of proceeding depends on the single fact of whether or not there has been a trial by jury.⁸ Upon a writ of error, the Supreme Court of the United States is confined to the bill of exceptions, or questions of law otherwise presented by the record; upon an appeal, to the statement of facts and rulings certified by the court below. The facts as thus set forth in the statement are conclusive upon the supreme court.⁹ Congress has not conferred upon the Supreme Court of the United States, in plain and explicit language, jurisdiction in criminal cases from all the territories.¹⁰

I. DEGREE OF MENTAL CAPACITY REQUIRED—1. General Rule.—A person who at the time of making his will has an understanding of the nature of the business in which he is engaged, a recollection of the property he means to dispose of, of the persons who have a claim upon his bounty, and the manner in which it is to be distributed, has sufficient mental capacity to execute a will.²

The law does not require that persons shall be able to dispose of property with sound judgment and discretion. It is sufficient if they understand what they are about. Paine v. Roberts, 82 N. Car. 451; Barnhardt v. Smith, 86 N. Car. 473; Bost v. Bost, 87 N. Car. 477. But one should be capable of exercising judgment, reason, and deliberation, in order to understand to a reasonable degree the effect of his will upon his family and estate, Bates

v. Bates, 27 Iowa 110; and to effect a settled purpose of his own with regard thereto. Shropshire v. Reno, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 93.

The mere fact that a wealthy testator frequently complained of being very poor, is insufficient to show such a want of knowledge of his property as will invalidate his will. Knauss' Appeal, 114 Pa. St. 10.

Georgia Code, § 2409, fixes "the amount of intellect necessary to constitute testamentary capacity" as "that which is necessary to enable the party to have a decided and rational desire as to the disposition of his property; his desire must be decided in distinction from the wavering, vacillating fancies of a distempered intellect; it must be rational in distinction from the ravings of a madman, the silly pratings of an idiot, the childish whims of imbecility, or the excited vagaries of a drunkard."

In Indiana, the rule is thus stated: the testator must be able to know the extent and value of his property, the number and names of the natural objects of his bounty, their deserts with reference to their conduct towards him, and their wants and capacities, and possess memory sufficient to retain all these facts in his mind long enough to have his will prepared, and to execute it; but if this degree of capacity be slightly impaired, he may still be competent to make a will. Bundy v. McKnight, 48 Ind. 502. See also Dyer v. Dyer, 87 Ind. 13; Lowder v. Lowder, 58 Ind. 538; Leeper v. Taylor, 47 Ala. 221.

"Sound Mind" and "Disposing Memory."—The expression "sound mind," does not mean a perfectly balanced mind. The question of soundness is one of degree. Boughton v. Knight, 42 L. J. P. 25. "Sound and disposing mind" means a mind of natural capacity, not unduly impaired by old age, or enfeebled by illness, or tainted by morbid influence. Smith v. Tebbetts, 36 L. J. 97; 16 W. R. 18. The term "unsound mind" includes every species of unsoundness. Willett v. Porter, 42 Ind. 250. A "sound mind" is one wholly free from delusion. Tittel's Estate, Myr. Prob. (Cal.) 12. A person may not be of "sound mind," but yet be of "disposing mind," and capable of making a will. Freeman v. Easley, 117 Ill. 317. "Sound and disposing mind" means the power of understanding the nature of the property, the family, and

But it is not necessary that he should have a recollection of all his estate and family, and of their condition in general, nor that he should have an appreciation of the probable effect of his will upon them and be able to collect all these matters in one view.¹ And, from the general rule, it follows that the same degree of capacity is not required for the disposition of a small estate as in the disposition of a larger and more complicated one.²

That a person has sufficient understanding to transact the ordinary business of life, is strong evidence of his testamentary capacity;³ but the want of such an understanding does not neces-

the effect of the will. Sefton v. Hopwood, 1 F. & F. 578. Under a statute providing that persons of "sound mind and memory" may make a will, an instruction in those terms cannot be complained of because it makes no distinction between "sound mind" and "disposing mind." Keithley v. Stafford, 126 Ill. 507. The words "mind" and "memory," as used in the New York statute regarding testamentary capacity, are convertible terms. Forman's Will, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 274.

The words "unsound mind" include every species of mental defect, and are not confined to idiots, non compos, lunatics, monomaniacs, or distracted persons, though so defined by statute. Durham v. Smith, 120 Ind. 463. A person may be of "sound mind and memory," though his recollection be impaired. Yoe v. McCord, 74 Ill. 33.

What Law Governs.—The validity of a will of real estate is to be determined, as respects the mental capacity of the testator, by the lex rei sitæ; that of a will of personalty by the lex domicilii. Varnier v. Beville, 17 Ala. 286; Succession of Robert, 2 Rob. (La.) 427.

1. McMasters v. Blair, 29 Pa. St. 298; Wilson v. Mitchell, 101 Pa. St. 495; Daniel v. Daniel, 39 Pa. St. 191; Tawney v. Long, 76 Pa. St. 106; Shaver v. McCarthy, 110 Pa. St. 339; Reichenbach v. Ruddach, 127 Pa. St. 564; Thompson v. Kyner, 65 Pa. St. 368; Brown v. Mitchell, 75 Tex. 9.

He need not have the same perfect and complete understanding and appreciation of any of these matters in all their bearings, as a person in sound and vigorous health of body and mind would have. Kempsey v. McGinniss, 21 Mich. 141.

The Same Capacity Is Required in Making a Will of Personalty as of Realty.—One having sufficient capacity to make a will of personal estate is competent to make a will of lands; there is no difference in the measure of capacity required. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 32. "If he were of sane memory at the time of making the testament of the goods, he could not be of non-sane memory at the time of making the will of the lands, both being made at one and the same instant." Winchester's Case, Co. Rep. pt. 6, p. 23; Sloan v. Maxwell, 3 N. J. Eq. 563. But probate of a will of personalty is not conclusive evidence of mental capacity to make a will of real estate, for the reason that in either case the question of capacity is tried by different jurisdictions. Shelf. on Lunacy 66, 67; Doe v. Teage, 5 B. & C. 335; 11 E. C. L. 248.

2. Sheldon v. Dow, 1 Dem. (N. Y.) 503; Campbell v. Campbell, 130 Ill. 467.

It is sufficient if there is capacity for the object attempted. Hoban v. Campan, 52 Mich. 346.

There can be no safer rule than that the competency of the mind should be judged of by the nature of the act to be done on a consideration of all the circumstances of the case. Trish v. Newell, 62 Ill. 196; Marsh v. Tyrrell, 2 Hagg. 122.

3. Tomkins v. Tomkins, 1 Bailey (S. Car.) 92; Coleman v. Robertson, 17 Ala. 84; Comstock v. Hadlyme, etc., Soc., 8 Conn. 254; Meeker v. Meeker, 75 Ill. 260; *Freeman v. (Del.) 108.

The precise point, however, is the testator's capacity to understand the nature of the testamentary act, and too much stress should not be laid on a comparison between his present and sarily show incapacity.¹ So, one may not have sufficient capacity to execute a valid contract, and yet be capable of making a will.² This rule, although generally accepted, is denied by some authorities, which hold that the degree of capacity requisite is the same in both cases.³

The same degree of mental capacity is required for the revocation as for the execution of a will.⁴ So, if a testator, who is competent at the time of executing his will, subsequently becomes insane or otherwise incapacitated and destroys it, the past business habits. Brown v. Riggin, 94 Ill. 560.

In Gass v. Gass, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 278, it was held that an instruction to the jury that the capacity to make money and to take care of it is evidence of testamentary capacity, was not exceptionable, but that such evidence was not conclusive.

Although possessing business capacity, in general, a person may be controlled by such an insane delusion with respect to the subjects of his testamentary disposition as to render him incapable of making a valid will. American Bible Soc. v. Price, 115 Ill. 623.

Undue Influence.—But as was said in Mountain v. Bennet, 1 Cox 353, if a dominion was acquired by any person over a mind of sufficient sanity for general purposes and of sufficient soundness and discretion to regulate his affairs in general, if such dominion or influence were acquired over him as to prevent the exercise of such discretion, it would be equally inconsistent with the idea of a disposing mind.

Less capacity may be required to make a will than to make a deed. Kerr v. Lunsford, 31 W. Va. 680; Jarrett v. Jarrett, 11 W. Va. 584.

A less degree of imbecility will suffice to create testamentary incapacity than will serve as an excuse for a crime. McTaggart v. Thompson, 14 Pa. St. 149.

Schouler says: "The true criterion is not whether the testator is capable of a particular transaction inter vivos, but whether he was capable of making a will. The comparison is one of different standpoints, rather than of different degrees from a common standpoint." Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 67.

In Maryland, it is provided by statute that the inquiry as to the capacity of the testator must always be whether, at the time of executing or acknowledging the will and testament, he was capable of executing a valid deed or contract. Code of Maryland, art. 93, § 300; *Davis v. will may be established, nevertheless, if its contents can be ascertained.¹

2. Time to Which Question Relates.—The time to which the question of testamentary capacity relates is the precise time of the execution of the will.² And a will executed while the testator is of sound mind, is not affected by his subsequent insanity;³ nor is a will executed while the testator is insane revived or established by his failure to destroy or cancel it upon a subsequent recovery.⁴ If a will is executed while the testator is of sound mind, and a codicil is added when he is insane, the codicil may be rejected and the will admitted to probate; but if a will is executed while the testator is insane, a codicil, added when of sound mind, is a republication of the will and entitles it to probate.⁵

II. PERSONS WANTING UNDERSTANDING—1. Idiots.—The will of an idiot is necessarily void. An idiot may be defined as one born without understanding, hopelessly incurable, and without lucid intervals.⁶ If one can transact any business intelligently,

1. Revocation.—A will destroyed by a person not possessing testamentary capacity is not a revocation of such will. Rich v. Gilkey, 73 Me. 595; Semmes v. Semmes, 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 388; Rhodes v. Vinson, 9 Gill (Md.) 169; McIntire v. Worthington, 68 Md. 203; Batton v. Watson, 13 Ga. 63; Forbing v. Weber, 99 Ind. 588; Allison v. Allison, 7 Dana (Ky.) 94. In Ford v. Ford, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 92, where a testator in a fit of insanity directed his will to be destroyed, it was held that this did not amount to a revocation.

An insane man can have no intent such as is necessary to revoke a will. Smith v. Wait, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 28.

In Forman's Will, 1 Tuck. (N. Y.) 205, the tearing up of a will by a testatrix when under such mental excitement as incapacitated her from forming a reasonable and intelligent intention to revoke her will, was not considered a revocation.

In Idley v. Bowen, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 227, it was held that a revocation by burning the will by the testator could be impeached by showing the incompetency of the testator at the time of the act. See also Nelson v. McGiffert, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 158, where Walworth, Ch., ruled to the same effect.

If the testator was sane at the time of making the last of several codicils, it is not necessary to prove sanity at the time of making the other codicils, since the last is in law a republication of those prior thereto. Brown v. Riggins, 94 Ill. 560.

6. Idiots.—Bac. Abr., vol. 5, A 1; Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 90; 1 Redf. on Wills 61, 64; Whart. & Stillé's Med. Jur. 1873, § 33. The principal characteristics of idiots are thus described by Ray (Med. Jur. Insanity 54): "Idiocy is that condition of mind in which the reflective, and all or a part of the affec-

he is not an idiot.¹ The will of an idiot, though wise in its provisions, is nevertheless void.²

2. Persons Deaf and Dumb, and Blind Persons.—At common law persons who were born deaf and dumb were presumed to be idiots, and were held to be incapable of making wills.³ At present, however, it seems that there is not even prima facie presumption of incapacity, and whether such persons are to be

tive powers are either entirely wanting, or are manifested to the slightest possible extent. In reasoning powers many idiots are below the brutes, unable to compare two ideas together; nothing leads them to act but the faint impressions of the moment, and these are often insufficient to induce them to gratify even their instinctive wants." Beverly's Case, 4 Co. 123; Browning v. Reane, 2 Phill. 69; Bannatyne v. Bannatyne, 14 Eng. L. & Eq. 581; Bonner v. Matthews, cited 1 Shelf. Lunacy 276.

The term "idiot" is restricted to persons foolish from birth, supposed to be naturally without mind. Spedling v. Worth County, 68 Iowa 152. See Stewart v. Lisenard, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 255.

1. Errickson v. Fields, 30 N. J. Eq. 634. Bannatyne v. Bannatyne, 14 Eng. L. & Eq. 581, is a leading English case, in which the will was attacked on the ground of the idiocy or imbecility of the testator. It appeared that he was placed in an asylum in 1815 and remained there till 1817, when he was released. He made a rational will in 1820, which was written for him by his mother. In 1822 he was again placed in the asylum, and remained there till he died in 1849. In 1838 he was found by a commission to have been of unsound mind without lucid interval since 1815. The evidence showed that from 1818 to 1821 he kept a bank account and drew drafts on the same, which were paid to him over the bank counter, and there was no evidence that he received assistance in these transactions. The will was attacked on the ground, not of lunacy nor of monomania, but of idiocy or imbecility; but it was sustained, Dr. Lushington of the ecclesiastical court saying, "Many acts of business could possibly be done by a lunatic and the lunacy not detected; but it is scarcely possible to predicate the same of an idiot or imbecile person." The case supports the proposition that there can be no such thing as a "lucid interval" in a case of idiocy; the same judge having said further that the characteristic of idiocy is permanence with little or no variation, though often in the case of idiots it does sometimes happen that there will be a greater degree of excitement demonstrated at some than at other periods.

In Townsend v. Bogart, 5 Redf. (N. Y.) 93, the testatrix was an unmarried woman, 52 years old, and owned considerable real estate; she resided with her mother until the death of the latter, after which she lived with a cousin 17 years, until her own death. She was a member of, and attended church, took care of her room and person, and was able to do some light house and needle work. She stuttered and could utter only short sentences; never learned to read and write, though she attended school for three years; was unable to count more than ten, or tell the time of day from the clock; could neither add nor multiply; had no idea of the value of property, or of money beyond ten cents; did not know the amount of her property; and was easily lost on familiar streets. Two of her sisters were in an insane asylum, and she herself was adjudged an idiot eight years before her death. She had a weak mind and was unable to attend to most things which require only ordinary intelligence. Ten years before her death she signed a paper with her mark, leaving all her property to a daughter of the cousin with whom she lived; but probate thereof was refused, on the ground that she was an idiot, and incompetent to execute a will.

treated as mentally incompetent depends upon the evidence that can be given of their capacity;¹ but if the presumption does exist, it yields to proof of mental capacity,² as by proof that a person has sufficient understanding to declare his wishes by signs, to cause them to be reduced to writing, and to execute the paper as a will.³

One who is blind merely, is capable of making a will; and such will may be admitted to probate on proof that it was read to, or, if not read, that its contents were known to, him.⁴

In Brower v. Fisher, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 441, where the prima facie presumption of incapacity was recognized, a commission was issued to inquire as to the mental competency of such a person.

In Dickenson v. Blissett, 1 Dick. 268, a person who was born deaf and dumb, and who had attained to her majority, applied for the possession of her real estate and an assignment of her property. Lord Hardewick, having put questions to her in writing, to which she gave sensible answers in writing, thereupon granted the application. See Perrine's Case, 41 N. J. Eq. 409.

Proof that a Testator Understood Contents of Will.—It should appear that the testator knew and approved the contents of the paper, and its force as a testamentary act. In Goods of Owston, 2 Sw. & Tr. 461, where the testator, who was deaf and dumb, made his will by communicating his instructions to an acquaintance by signs and motions, who prepared a will in conformity therewith, which was afterwards duly executed by the testator, the court required an affidavit from the draughtsman of the will, stating the nature of the signs and motions by which the instructions were communicated. This will, however, was denied probate. See also Goods of Geale, 3 Sw. & Tr. 431.

And in Weir v. Fitzgerald, 2 Bradf.

(N. Y.) 42, it was held that "something more is necessary to establish the validity of a will in cases where, from the infirmities of the testator, his impaired capacity, or the circumstances attending the transaction, the usual inferences cannot be drawn from the mere formal execution. Additional evidence is, therefore, required that the testator's mind accompanied the will; that he knew what he was executing, and was cognizant of the provisions of the will."

If the will of a blind person is read to him, it is not necessary that the reading should be in the presence of a witness. Martin v. Mitchell, 28 Ga. 382.

The circumstance that the blind man had dictated the will, and when it was read to him, directed the attestation to be made, it being attested in the same room in his presence, and the terms of the statute being complied with, though he had lost the controlling power of sight, and no fraud being alleged, has been held sufficient. Neil v. Neil, 1 Leigh (Va.) 6.

If the will is not read to the testator, that fact is not sufficient to avoid it, when it can be shown from other circumstances that the testator knew its contents or substance. Longchamp v. Fish, 2 B. & P. N. R. 415; Barton v. Robins, 3 Ph. 455 n; Clifton v. Murray, 7 Ga. 564; Boyd v. Cook, 3 Leigh (Va.) 32; Lewis v. Lewis, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 496; Hess' Appeal, 43 Pa. St. 73.

Persons who are deaf, dumb, and blind should not be judicially considered incapable from the fact of the additional affliction. This only calls for a more careful consideration of the testator's capacity.¹

Persons who were not born deaf, dumb, and blind, but who have become so from supervening causes, are presumed competent.² Wherever the disability is not congenital, it is to be treated as a circumstance only, to be considered with others, in determining the capacity of the testator.³

It is not considered necessary, in the probate of a will made by a deaf and dumb person, or by a person who is blind, that the witnesses should declare that the testator was cognizant of the contents of the will.⁴

3. Lunatics—a. IN GENERAL.—A lunatic is one who is usually insane, but who has intervals of reason;⁵ though the term is frequently used to describe all persons of unsound mind who are not

If reasonable ground is laid for believing that the will was not read, or that there was fraud or imposition of any kind practiced upon the testator, it is incumbent upon those who would support the will to meet such proof by evidence and to satisfy the jury, either that the will was read or that the contents were known by the testator. Harrison v. Rowan, 3 Wash. (U. S.) 580. See also Harden v. Hays, 9 Pa. St. 163; Harding v. Harding, 18 Pa. St. 342; Hoshauer v. Hoshauer, 26 Pa. St. 406.

In Harleston v. Corbett, 12 Rich. (S. Car.) 604, it was held that any proof, which satisfactorily shows that the testator was cognizant of the contents of the will, is competent. The declarations of the blind man, made after the execution of his will, were given in evidence to show that he knew the contents when he executed the will.

By the Roman law, a blind man might make a nuncupative will, by declaring the same before seven witnesses; but he could not make a testament in writing, unless it was read to him and acknowledged by him to be his will before the witnesses. See Weir v. Fitzgerald, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 68.

But Mr. Jarman's rule in regard to this point is the very least that will insure safety, "that, in proportion as the infirmities of the testator expose him to deception, it becomes imperatively the duty, and should be anxiously the care, of all persons assisting in the testamentary transaction, to be prepared with the clearest proof that no imposition has been practiced." 1 Jarm. on Wills (6th Am. ed.) 47.

b. LUCID INTERVALS.—A will made during a lucid interval is valid,² while one not made in a lucid interval is void, even though it is wise, just, and natural in its provisions.³ A lucid interval is not a mere remission of mania; it must continue long enough to give some assurance of a return of a sound and disposing mind.⁴ It is not necessary that the patient be restored to the

1. 1 Redf. on Wills 63. The term "non compos mentis" is of larger import and includes all persons of unsound mind. Co. Litt. 246 b; Rochford v. Ely, Ridgway 528.

The generally accepted medico-legal definition of lunacy is, that it is "the prolonged departure, without an adequate external cause, from the state of feeling and modes of thinking usual to the individual when in health." Lundway v. Croft, 3 Curt. 678.

Dr Ray, says: "Madness is not indicated so much by any particular extravagance of thought or feeling as by a well-marked change of character or departure from the ordinary habits of thinking, feeling, and acting, without any adequate external cause. To lay down, therefore, any particular definition of mania founded on symptoms, and to consider every person mad who may happen to come within the range of its application, might induce the ridiculous consequence of making a large portion of mankind of unsound mind. . . . When the sanity of an individual is in question, instead of comparing him with a fancied standard of mental soundness, as is too commonly the custom, his natural character should be diligently investigated, in order to determine whether the apparent indication of madness is not merely the result of the ordinary and healthy constitution of the faculties. In a word, he is to be compared with himself and not others." Ray's Med. Jur. Insanity (5th ed.), § 133.

2. Lucid Interval.—Gombault v. Public Admr., 4 Bradf. (N. Y.) 226; Wright v. Lewis, 5 Rich. (S. Car.) 212; Swinb. pt. 2, § 3, pl. 3, where it is said, "Howbeit, if these mad or lunatic persons have clear or calm intermissions, then during the time of their quietness and freedom of mind they may make their testaments, appointing executors and disposing of their goods at their pleasures; so that neither the furor going before, nor following the making of the testament doth hinder the same begun and finished in the meantime." 1 Wms. on Exors. (Perkins' Am. ed.) 33; Godolph, pt. 1, ch. 8, § 2; Wentw., ch. 1, p. 33 (14th ed.); Hall v. Warren, 9 Ves. 610; Rodd v. Lewis, 2 Cas. temp. Lee 176.

Georgia Code, § 2407, provides that a lunatic may make a will during a lucid interval.

3. Schouler on Wills, § 78; 1 Wms. on Exors. (Perkins' Am. ed.) 361 n; Harper v. Harper, 1 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 351; Potts v. House, 6 Ga. 324.

4. 1 Redf. on Wills 109; Schouler on Wills (ed. 1892), § 108; Taylor's Med. Jur. 651. Some authorities deny altogether the existence of such a thing as a "lucid interval," but admit that there may be times when a lunatic has sufficient capacity to execute a will. 1 Whart. & Stillé's Med. Jur. (3d ed.) § 745. The distinction is too finely drawn for legal purposes, and the term will continue to hold its place in legal nomenclature. Schouler on Wills 1892, § 109. But the term should not be confounded with that state of mind in which one partially insane, or a monomaniac, is competent to execute a will; that is, when his delusions are of a kind which cannot influence any testamentary disposition he may make. There is no such thing as a "lucid interval" in a case of partial insanity, since the patient is at all times insane, but with respect only to one or more subjects. 1 Wms. on Exors. (Rand & T. Am. ed.) 73; Dew v. Clark, 1 Add. 279; Smee v. Smee, L. R., 5 P. D. 84.

No intelligible definition of the distinction between a remission of lunacy and a lucid interval can be given, except it is made to depend upon duration and degree. 1 Redf. on Wills 109, 112. Dr. Taylor says: "By a lucid interval we are to understand a temporary cessation of the insanity, or a perfect restoration to reason. This state differs entirely from a remission, in which there is a mere abatement of the symptoms. . . . Nothing more is intended by a lucid interval than that the precise condition of mind in which he was before the inception of lunacy, but he should so far recover his mental faculties as to appreciate his testamentary act.¹

A party who alleges a lucid interval must prove it.² Where, however, a will is wise and natural in its provisions, it is in itself strong evidence that it was made in a lucid interval and that it is therefore valid.³ While on the other hand, if it be foolish and patient shall become entirely conscious of his acts and capacity." Taylor on Med. Jur. (ed. 1861) 651.

1. Boyd v. Eby, 8 Watts (Pa.) 66; Lucas v. Parsons, 27 Ga. 621. Lord Chancellor Thurlow is said to have held in Atty. Gen'l v. Parnter, 3 Bro. C. C. 441, that the lunatic must be absolutely restored to his former state of mind in order to do a valid and responsible act; but this dictum was repudiated by Lord Eldon in Ex p. Holyland, 11 Ves. 10, when he said: "There may be frequent instances of men restored to a state of mind inferior to what they possessed before; yet it would not be proper to support commissions of lunacy against them," and in Hall v. Warren, 9 Ves. 611, Sir Wm. Grant said: "If general lunacy is established, they will be under the necessity of showing, not merely a cessation of the violent symptoms of the disorder, but a restoration of the faculties of the mind sufficient to enable the party to judge soundly of the act."

Wills Sustained.—Wills made during lucid intervals have been sustained in the following cases: Hall v. Warren, 9 Ves. 611; Ex p. Holyland, 11 Ves. 11; White v. Driver, 1 Ph. 84; Symes v. Green, 1 Sw. & Tr. 401; Nichols v. Binns, 1 Sw. & Tr. 239; Cartwright v. Cartwright, 1 Ph. 90; Chambers v. Queen's Proctor, 2 Curt. 415; Gombault v. Public Admr., 4 Bradf. (N. Y.) 226; Maris v. Freeman, 3 Redf. (N. Y.) 181; Dickie v. Van Vleck, 5 Redf. (N. Y.) 284; Brock v. Lockett, 4 How. (Miss.) 459; Goble v. Grant, 3 N. J. Eq. 629; Lucas v. Parsons, 27 Ga. 593; Chandler v. Barrett, 21 La. Ann. 58.

In Dickie v. Van Vleck, 5 Redf. (N. Y.) 284, the testator called on a lawyer who was a stranger to him, in 1871, dictated a rational will to him, transacted business intelligently in 1871 and 1872, had had attacks of insanity in 1870, and was adjudged a lunatic in 1874. The will was held valid, particular stress having been laid upon the fact of the giving instructions for the will to a strange attorney, as evincing the mental capacity of the testator.

2. Burden of Proof.—If derangement be proved to have existed at any particular time, but a lucid interval be alleged to have prevailed at the period particularly referred to, then the burden of proof attaches on the party alleging such lucid interval, who must show sanity and competence at the period when the act was done and to which the lucid interval refers. This rule was stated by Lord Thurlow in Atty. Gen'l v. Parnter, 3 Bro. C. C. 441, and approved by Lord Erskine in White v. Wilson, 13 Ves. 89; Prinsep v. Dyce Sombre, 10 Moore P. C. 278. See also, to the same effect, White v. Driver, 1 Ph. 88; Ayrey v. Hill, 2 Add. 210; Kinleside v. Harrison, 2 Ph. 459; Brogden v. Brown, 2 Add. 445; Evans v. Knight, 1 Add. 239; Wood v. Fisher, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 171; Jackson v. Van Dusen, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 144; Titlow v. Titlow, 54 Pa. St. 216; Harden v. Hays, 9 Pa. St. 15; *Boyd v. Proof of a lucid interval is rendered very difficult by the fact that the patient often appears entirely rational when there is really no abatement of his disease. Brogden v. Brown, 2 Add. 445.

Strong proof of capacity should be required in a case in which a consultation of physicians was held at the instance of those in whose favor the will was to be made, to decide upon the testator's sanity. Christy v. Clarke, 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 529.

3. Schouler on Wills, § 78; 1 Wms. on extravagant in its character, the contrary may be presumed; subject, however, to the rebuttal of the presumption by proof of execution during a lucid interval.¹

4. Persons Partially Insane—Monomaniacs—a. IN GENERAL.—The doctrine that the testator's partial insanity or monomania will invalidate a will if it is the offspring of the particular delusion under which he labors, but does not invalidate a will which is in itself rational and in no way attributable to such delusion, is now established in England,² and the same doctrine has been Exors. (Perkins' Am. ed.) 361 n; Swinb. Wills, pt. 2, § 3, pl. 14; Cartwright v. Cartwright, 1 Ph. 90; Nichols v. Binns, 1 Sw. & Tr. 239; Symes v. Green, 1 Sw. & Tr. 401; Scruby v. Fordham, 1 Add. 74; Weir's Will, 9 Dana (Ky.) 441; Gombault v. Public Admr., 4 Bradf. (N. Y.) 226; Kempsey v. McGinnis, 21 Mich. 123; Goble v. Grant, 3 N. J. Eq. 629.

In Cartwright v. Cartwright, 1 Ph. 90, it was said that the best proof of the existence or non-existence of lucid intervals is that which arises from the act itself, and that, if it can be proved that it is a rational act, rationally done, the whole case is proved. In this case the testatrix had early in life been deranged, but she recovered and afterwards carried on her own house and establishment like any sane person. Several months before she made her will, and after making it, many of the worst features of her insanity reappeared, and on the day it was made her manner was wild and agitated, to such an extent that she gave the attesting witnesses the impression that she was insane. Her physician had previously denied her the use of books and writing materials, and had kept her hands tied up; but on the day the will was made gave her writing materials, in compliance with her importunate demands, and loosened her hands, on which she immediately wrote out and sealed her will, tearing up several sheets of paper during the process and pacing the room in a disordered manner. The will was rational, proper, natural, and conformable to the testatrix's affections, and she made a judicious selection of executors and trustees. She was impressed with the importance of making her will, and was greatly agitated by her inability to get writing materials. The will was upheld.

So in Kingsbury v. Whitaker, 32 La. Ann. 1055, it was held that where a will was made by the testator himself, unaided by others, and its provisions were sage and judicious, containing nothing "sounding in folly," it should be presumed, even in the case of a person habitually insane, that it was made during a lucid interval; and that the burden of proof was on those who attacked it to show insanity at the moment it was made. See also Chandler v. Barrett, 21 La. Ann. 58. And in Weir's Will, 9 Dana (Ky.) 434, it was held that when a lunatic writes his own will, in a natural manner, and the provisions of it are altogether sensible, proper and judicious, the will itself proves that when he wrote it he had a lucid interval.

But in Nicholas v. Freeman, 1 Str. & Tr. 239, it was held that the fact that the provisions of the will were reasonable was not conclusive, but strong evidence of its having been made in a lucid interval. And Sir H. Jenner Fust in Chambers v. Queen's Proctor, 2 Curt. 415, says that while a rational act done in a rational manner is entitled to great weight, it cannot be arbitrarily declared "the strongest and best proof" of a lucid interval. See also Bannatyne v. Bannatyne, 2 Rob. 472.

1. Swinb. on Wills, pt. 2, § 3, pl. 14, 16. Mr. Redfield says that the presumption in question is but little more than one of fact, "since it is every day's experience that a sensible man, in the fullest most unquestionable possession of all his mental powers, will sometimes make the strangest, most unaccountable disposition of his property without, and indeed contrary to, all supposed motive to be deduced from any process of fairly conducted à priori reasoning." 1 Redf. on Wills 122. 2. 1 Redf. on Wills 63; Schouler on Wills (ed. 1892), § 144. The doctrine of "partial insanity" was established in England by the leading case of Dew v. Clark, 1 Add. 279; 3 Add. 79. In that case, the testator, besides laboring under mental perversion on religious subjects and in some other particulars, entertained an insane aversion to his daughter. He had shown great violence and irritability of temper towards his wife, who died shortly after the birth of the daughter. Testator refused to see the latter for two or three years after her birth, and declared, while she was in her earliest infancy, that she was born depraved, was the special property of Satan, and destined to be the victim of vice and evil. He persisted in this belief up to the time of his death. The daughter was respectful and attentive to the testator, behaved herself at all time with decorum and propriety, and was a person of strictly moral and religious habits. The testator was an electrician, and of sound mind except as to the delusion respecting his daughter. He disposed of an estate of the value of £40,000, leaving the daughter, his only child, an annuity of £100. The will was rejected. Sir John Nicholl, a distinguished probate judge, observed in this case: "It was said that 'partial insanity' was unknown to the law. The observation could only have arisen from mistaking the sense in which the court used that term. It was not meant that a person could be partially insane and sane at the same moment of time; to be sane the mind must be perfectly sound; otherwise it is unsound. All that was meant was, that the delusion may exist only on one or more particular subjects." This decision was rested on the authority of Greenwood's Case (cited Dew v. Clark, 3 Add. 79), where the testator conceived the idea that his brother had administered poison to him, which delusion became the prominent feature of his insanity. He recovered his senses in a few months and returned to his profession, which was that of a barrister, but could never divest himself of the delusion respecting his brother, who was his heir apparent, and accordingly, executed a will disinheriting him. A jury found against the will in the court of king's bench; a contrary verdict was found in the common pleas, and the suit was finally compromised. 1 Wms. on Exors. (Perkins' ed.) 42. The existence or possibility of such a thing as "partial insanity" was denied by Lord Brougham in Waring v. Waring, 6 Moore P.C. 341, who there said that, "When we predicate that one is of unsound mind only upon certain points, we are wrong in supposing such a mind really sound on other subjects; it is sound only in appearance," and that "no confidence can be placed in the acts, or in any act, of a diseased mind, however apparently rational that act may appear to be, or may in reality be." In this case the testatrix was a widow who died without issue, leaving a considerable amount of real and personal property, and two brothers and five sisters as her next of kin. She executed a will in 1821 making her eldest brother, Rev. Thomas Waring, her sole heir and executor. In 1834 she executed another will, making one Henry Waring, a stranger to the family, the principal beneficiary. The last will was wholly in the handwriting of the deceased, and in itself disclosed no positive evidence of a disordered mind. In 1841 a commission found that the testatrix had been insane from 1838. She was a widow and remarried in 1821, and shortly after became strange and eccentric in her conduct, very suspicious of servants and others, had an idea that she was persecuted, that her husband was trying to poison her, that certain respectable ladies made faces at her at church, that she was preached against from the pulpit, that certain of the nobility and even her male servants were in love with her, and entertained many other delusions of an extravagant character; but none, it seems, respecting any of her relatives, unless perhaps one, namely, an heir apparent who had become a Catholic, to which denomination she was greatly averse. The will was rejected. The case of Smith v. Tebitt, L. R., 1 P. & M. 398, seems to support the dictum of Lord Brougham in Waring v. Waring, 6 Moore P. C. 341. Sir J. P. Wilde there said: "A person who is affected by monomania, although sensible and prudent on subjects and occasions other than those upon which his infirmity is commonly displayed, is not in law capable of making a will." Here the testatrix imagined that her deceased husband was the "devil," and refused to go into mourning for him, that her heirs-at-law were "doomed to perdition," that she herself was "the Holy Ghost," and her physician "the Father," and she caused a tiara of jewels to be made for her in which to ascend to heaven. She left the bulk of her estate to her physician as the gift of "one member of the Trinity," to another, having provided sundry legacies for relatives, servants, and others. The will was set aside.

generally recognized in the courts of the United States.¹ The doctrine, however, was denied in some of the earlier English cases.²

b. DELUSIONS.—A delusion which may incapacitate one from making a will has been defined as the conception of the existence of something extravagant, which has no existence whatever, but of which the person entertaining it is incapable of becoming permanently disabused by argument, reason, or proof.³ A mere

The doctrine of Waring v. Waring,⁶ Moore P. C. 341, and Smith v. Tebbitt, L. R., 1 P. & M. 398, is expressly repudiated and that of Dew v. Clark, 3 Add. 79, reaffirmed; namely, that the will of one suffering from delusions, will not be set aside if it is rational in itself, and in no way attributable to such delusions. Banks v. Goodfellow, L. R., 5 Q. B. 547. In this case two delusions affected the testator's mind: one, that he was pursued by spirits, the other, that a man, long since dead, came personally to molest him, the dead man having no claim on the testator's bounty. The will was rational and made in favor of the testator's niece, and was sustained. Cockburn, C. J., there said: "When the jury are satisfied that the delusion has not affected the general faculties of the mind, and can have had no effect upon the will, we see no sufficient reason why the testator should be held to have lost his right to make a will, or why a will made under such circumstances should not be upheld. Such an inquiry may involve, it is true, considerable difficulty and require much nicety of discrimination, but we see no reason to think that it is beyond the power of judicial investigation and decision, or may not be disposed of by a jury directed or guided by a judge." In Boughton v. Knight, L. R., 3 P. & M. 64, these principles were reaffirmed, but the will was set aside because the aversion of the testator to certain of his children who were excluded by the will, was considered to amount to an insane delusion. In Smee v. Smee, L. R., 5 P. D. 84, the same doctrines were declared, but the will was rejected as having been the result of the testator's delusions. In Murfett v. Smith, L. R., 12 P. D. 116, the will was sustained, the decision having been rested upon the authority of Banks v. Goodfellow, L. R., 5 Q. B. 549, without an opinion. So, also, Russell v. Lefrancois, 8 Can. Supreme Ct. Rep. 335.

The doctrine with regard to partial insanity, as adjudged in Dew v. Clark, 3 Add. 79, has been recognized very generally in the American courts. See Clapp v. Fullerton, 34 N. Y. 190; Lathrop v. Borden, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 560; Merrill v. Rolston, 5 Redf. (N. Y.) 220; Forman's Will, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 274; Boyd v. Eby, 8 Watts (Pa.) 72; Pidcock v. Potter, 68 Pa. St. 342; Benoist v. Murrin, 58 Mo. 307; Gardner v. Lamback, 47 Ga. 133; Potts v. House, 6 Ga. 324, and cases cited throughout this section.

But in Indiana, the doctrine seems not to be recognized. In Willett v. Porter, 42 Ind. 250, and in Eggers v. Eggers, 57 Ind. 461, it was held that the provision of the statute declaring persons of "unsound mind" incompetent to execute a will must be construed to include every species of unsoundness of mind, whether partial or complete.

In Montana (Prob. Code, § 433), and in New Mexico (Code, § 1378), a person having an insane delusion is declared incompetent to make a will.

Other definitions are: "a belief in something impossible in the nature of things or the circumstances of the case," Ray Jour. of Insanity, Apl. 1865, 515. "A belief in the existence or truth of things which no man in his senses can admit," Taylor Med. Jur. (6th ed.) 626. These definitions have been criticised by Sir J. P. Wilde in Smith v. Tebbitt, L. R., 1 P. & M. 378, as "begging the question" and "arguing in a circle;" but they were pronounced by Sir James Hannon in Boughton v. Knight, L. R., 3 P. & M. 64, sufficient for all practical purposes. 1 Redf. on Wills 71, 72.

mistake of fact which is the result of false evidence is not such a delusion.¹

One whose mind is perverted by insane delusions with reference to one or many subjects, however unreasonable and absurd, may nevertheless make a valid will, provided the provisions thereof are not influenced by such delusions.² But a will shown

In Chaney v. Bryan, 16 Lea (Tenn.) 67, this definition is approved. Monomania is a morbid affection of the mind, consisting in a mental or moral perversion, or both, in regard to some particular subject or class of subjects; an insane delusion, believing in the existence of things which do not exist, and which no sane man would believe.

And in American Seamen's Friend Soc. v. Hopper, 33 N. Y. 619, Denio, C. J., said: "If a person persistently believes opposed facts which have no real existence except in his perverted imagination and against all evidence of probability, and conducts himself, however logically, upon the assumption of the existence, he is, so far as they are concerned, under a morbid delusion, and delusion in that sense is insanity."

Delusions and hallucinations brought about by the use of cocaine and morphine, will, like other delusions, incapacitate a testator. In re Underwood (Ohio), 21 Wkly. L. Bull. 279.

The following characteristics of monomania or partial insanity are laid down by Dr. Hammond in his treatise on insanity, and quoted approvingly in 1 Whart. & Stillé's Med. Jur. 1873, § 60, n: "First, that one of the most prominent features of this species of insanity is a morbid feeling of hatred to friends, and a disposition to do them injury; second, that it is especially a symptom of monomania to imbibe delusions which exercise a governing influence over the mind of the affected individual, and force him to the commission of acts which in a state of sanity he would not perpetrate; third, that the monomaniac has power to conceal his delusions and to arrest the paroxysms to which he may be subjected."

In Nichols v. Binns, 1 Sw. & Tr. 239, Sir C. Cresswell said: "Where a person is laboring under an insane delusion, his sanity is to be tested by directing his attention to the subject-matter of the delusion; but where he is afflicted with habitual insanity without delusions, his sanity is to be tested by his answers to questions, his apparent recollection of past transactions, and his reasoning justly with regard to them, and with regard to the conduct of individuals."

It must be an insane delusion. Brown v. Ward, 53 Md. 376; Fulleck v. Allison, 3 Hagg. 527.

Belief based on evidence, however slight, is not a delusion. A delusion rests on no evidence whatever, but is based on mere surmise. Tittel's Estate, Myr. Prob. (Cal.) 12.

It is only the belief of facts which no rational person could believe, that is an insane delusion. 1 Wms. on Exors. 35; 1 Redf. on Wills 71. So in Clapp v. Fullerton, 34 N. Y. 190, it was held not sufficient to justify the rejection of a will, that a testator, in other respects competent, entertained the mistaken idea that one of his daughters was illegitimate, if it was not the effect of an insane delusion, but of slight and inadequate evidence, acting upon a jealous and suspicious mind. See also Floreys v. Florey, 24 Ala. 241.

An instruction that, if the testator was mistaken in his belief that his relatives had mistreated him, and therefore made no provisions for them, he was of unsound mind, was erroneous. The fact of such mistaken belief does not, as a matter of law, amount to an insane delusion. Carpenter v. Bailey, 94 Cal. 406.

In the case of Date's Estate, 12 N. Y. Supp. 205; 58 Hun (N. Y.) 608, the testator was declared competent, on the evidence of the scrivener, a lawyer who was also one of the subscribing witnesses, and who testified that the testator directed changes to be made in his will as to his son, because of reports of his bad conduct which he had heard.

to be the direct offspring of delusions which control the mind of the testator, cannot be sustained.¹

The exclusion of relatives is frequently the result of insane delusions in respect to them, and whenever this can be proved in any particular case, probate of the will should be refused.² When, however, the testator has made his will with an appreciation of his property and the claims of those who were the natural objects of his bounty, the exclusion of his relatives, or apparent unjust

Where it is shown that the testator was under an insane delusion, his mental capacity is to be measured by the relation of the delusion to the testamentary act. Matter of Vedder, 6 Dem. (N. Y.) 92.

In Hollinger v. Syms, 37 N. J. Eq. 221, a delusion of the testator in regard to his own physical condition did not affect the testamentary disposition.

In Rice v. Rice, 53 Mich. 432, the testator was proved to have entertained many strange and unreasonable delusions, among them that he was a great man, that his services were needed by the general government, and that he was likely to be made secretary of the treasury; but his will, not being affected by such delusion, was sustained.

A delusion of a testatrix that she had been robbed and was destitute, is insufficient to establish testamentary incapacity. Rodger's Estate, 19 W. N. C. (Pa.) 383.

Georgia Code, section 2407, provides that a monomaniac may make a will, provided the same be in no way the result of, nor connected with, his delusions.

In Morse v. Scott, 4 Dem. (N. Y.) 514, the testator was induced, by an insane delusion that his body was going to be preserved to the end of time, to provide in his will for the perpetual maintenance of his vault, and it was thereby regarded as invalid.

In Brinton's Estate, 13 Phila. (Pa.)

234, an insane delusion with respect to the testator's property was held to invalidate his will, although his memory and reasoning powers in other respects were unimpaired.

It is error to instruct the jury in effect, that a will may be sustained, though the result of an insane delusion, if they believe the testator would have made the same will if he had been in his right mind. Cotton v. Ulmer, 45 Ala. 378.

Georgia Code, section 2399, provides in substance that where an entire estate is bequeathed to a stranger, to the exclusion of the wife and children, the will should be closely scrutinized, and upon the slightest evidence of aberration of intellect, fraud or undue influence, probate should be refused.

By the Roman civil law, a will which totally excluded any child of the testator from participation in his estate, was styled "inofficious," and condemned as the product of insanity, in consequence of which it became customary in England, for the testator to bequeath a disinherited child a shilling or other small legacy, to rebut the presumption that because of the testator's insane forgetfulness, he was omitted from the will. But discrimination against them, although harsh and unreasonable, if not the offspring of some insane delusion, cannot affect the validity of the will.¹

no such presumption exists at common law, it being requisite only in case of an "inofficious" will, that there should be satisfactory proof of the testator's knowledge and approval of its contents. 1 Wms. on Exors. (Perkins' Am. ed.) 53, 54. In Boughton v. Knight, L. R., 3 P. & M. 64, it was said that a man moved by capricious, mean, or even bad motives, may wholly or partially disinherit his own children and leave his property to a stranger; but there is a point beyond which it will cease to be a question of harsh and unreasonable judgment, and then the repulsion which a parent exhibits to his child must be held to proceed from some mental defect, and if such a repulsion, amounting to a delusion, is shown to have existed prior to the execution of the will, the party who propounds that will must show that it was inoperative when the will was made. Baker v. Lewis, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 359; In re Mintz's Will, 5 Phila. (Pa.) 206.

In Calhoun v. Jones, 2 Redf. (N. Y.) 34, the will was rejected on the ground that it proceeded from an insane delusion of the testator that his father and sister, his only heirs at law, hated him because of a difference in their religious belief, and that the father had treated him harshly and unjustly on that account. In Crandall v. Shaw, 2 Redf. (N. Y.) 100, the testator gave his relatives but $11,000 and bequeathed $300,000 to a charity. He had the delusion that his relatives were impostors, not related to him, and were combining to get his property and injure him. The will was rejected.

In Lockwood's Will, 2 Conn. (N. Y.) 118, the testator had been in an insane asylum and had been discharged as "improved." Besides entertaining a great many most extravagant ideas and delusions, he believed that his relatives were trying to poison him to obtain his property, declaring that their intentions had been revealed to him by the birds at night. He was a very close man, and had about $23,000 in the bank, most of which he made himself. He left his entire estate to charities, except to his executor "a sum from my estate . . . large enough to be over and above any bribe that may be offered by my brothers, sisters, and children for the redemption of this will and their heirship to my estate." Probate was refused.

In Ballentine v. Proudfoot, 62 Wis. 216, the testatrix entertained a delusion that her only living child and her husband had ill-treated her and purposely made her uncomfortable and unhappy while she lived with them, and firmly believed that they proposed to poison her or make way with her in some manner. The exclusion of them from the provisions of the will was held to be plainly the result of these delusions, and was, therefore, invalid.

And in the Matter of Kahn, 1 Conn. (N. Y.) 510, the testator was under a similar delusion. He believed that his wife and children had entered into a conspiracy against him, and had attempted to poison him, and send him to a lunatic asylum. Probate of the will was refused.

In the Matter of Dorman, 5 Dem. (N. Y.) 112, the testator entertained great dislike to his children. He habitually, and without apparent cause, denounced them as robbers and thieves, and at such times manifested great excitement, and refused to be reasoned with on the subject. It was held that he was a monomaniac with regard to them, and that his disowning them was the result of the delusion.

Evidence.—In Mill's Appeal, 44 Conn. 484, it was held that, for the purpose of showing that the testator was under the influence of an insane delusion in believing one of his heirs at law to be a lewd character, evidence of the good character of such an one is admissible. In Kevil v. Kevil, 2 Bush (Ky.) 614, and Thomas v. Stump, 62 Mo. 275, it is said that a gross inequality in the distribution of the testator's estate may be taken into consideration upon the question of his mental capacity, but is not of itself sufficient to show incapacity, nor to invalidate the will. See notes to Kevil v. Kevil, 15 Am. Law Reg. (O. S.) 79.

In Foster's Estate, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 216, it was attempted to show that the testatrix had conceived a prenatal hatred of her son, whom she excluded from the will, devising her whole property to a daughter. The son had married an obscure person against the testatrix's wishes, and had acted in other respects in a manner tending to estrange him from his mother. The will was admitted to probate.

Moral insanity, such as a profound hatred of another, is insufficient to invalidate a will, unless it amounts to an insane delusion, under the influence of which the will is executed. Contempt, hatred, distrust, and a fear of a husband will not of themselves invalidate the will of the wife, which in a large measure excludes him from sharing in her property. Forman's Will, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 274; Frere v. Peacock, 1 Rob. 442; 2 Taylor Med. Jur. (2d Eng. ed.) 555; 12 Am. Law Reg. (O. S.) 385.

The delusion of a testator that his brother was exercising his muscle for the purpose of killing him, is insufficient to set aside a will by which all of the testator's property was devised and bequeathed to his wife. Fricke's Will (Supreme Ct.), 19 N. Y. Supp. 315.

A delusion of the testator as to the chastity of his divorced wife and the illegitimacy of their child, was held insufficient to invalidate his will, which did not discriminate unjustly against the child. Cole's Will, 49 Wis. 179.

To establish insane delusion, the contestant must do something more than simply show "a mistaken notion" on the part of the testator as to the feelings or intentions of his relatives in reference to him or his property. Mosser v. Mosser, 32 Ala. 551; Hall v. Hall, 38 Ala. 131; Shorb v. Brubaker, 94 Ind. 165; Hite v. Sims, 94 Ind. 333; Carpenter v. Bailey, 94 Cal. 406.

In Coit v. Patchen, 77 N. Y. 533, the testatrix, a married woman, at the age of fifty-eight was a person of business capacity and intelligence, and entirely competent to dispose of her property. At that time she had an attack resembling apoplexy or paralysis, but on her recovery managed her business in person, executed deeds, conversed intelligently with her friends, gave intelligent instructions for her will, changed her views, on her attorney's advice, and though not in full possession of her health or former mental vigor, collected rents, directed improvements on her property, and conducted her own affairs like a capable person. She discriminated against her husband and some of her children in the will; but it was considered that the discrimination was due to jealousy of the husband, and resentment against the children for taking part against her in bitter family quarrels for many years, and the contestants' theory of an insane delusion on her part was rejected and the will sustained.

In Lathrop v. American Board of Foreign Missions, 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 590, the testator's will was refused probate on the ground that he was a monomaniac in respect to freemasons, and expressed fears that he would lose his life and property among them, and because he entertained delusions towards his relatives who were freemasons, and excluded them from his will. But in White's Will, 121 N. Y. 406, a dislike of freemasonry and of a son because he was a freemason, was not sufficient to establish an insane delusion.

Religious beliefs of a strange and unusual character will not affect the capacity of the testator,¹ unless they amount to morbid

In Shorb v. Brubaker, 94 Ind. 165, evidence that the testator expressed the opinion that his children had ill-treated him, stating no fact, and an opinion expressed by such children, as witnesses, that they had not mistreated him, was held to be insufficient to justify an instruction that if the testator was influenced by such belief in framing his will, and that it was a delusion, the fact would justify the verdict for the contestants. See also Hite v. Sims, 94 Ind. 333, where it was held that the finding that testator was laboring under a delusion that certain of his children had treated him badly, would not justify a refusal to admit the will to probate.

Persons Having no Interest.—A delusion as to a particular person, who might expect a legacy, but has no interest in having the will set aside, is no sufficient objection to the testator's capacity. Stackhouse v. Horton, 15 N. J. Eq. 202.

In Cleveland v. Lyne, 5 Bush (Ky.) 383, it was held that persons not heirs apparent of the testator at the time of his death, but who by reason of an unexpected casualty would have become so had he lived a short while longer, and who were excluded from the will, cannot avail themselves of the testator's delusions regarding them, in order to set aside the will.

Insane delusion and prejudice toward a son-in-law will not invalidate a will, unless it results in the exclusion of the son-in-law's wife. A son-in-law is not one of the presumed objects of a testator's bounty. Brace v. Black, 125 Ill. 33.

In Gass v. Gass, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 278, it appeared that the testator believed that there were degrees in heaven; that whatever circle of life a man lived in on earth would be enjoyed by him in heaven; that his pre-eminence there depended materially upon the amount of property he acquired here, and the charitable use he made of it. The court refused to charge that these opinions; of themselves, amounted to insane delusions, leaving the jury to determine that question from their character and the extent to which the testator carried them. The instructions were approved on appeal, the supreme court intimating that it was impossible for men to determine how far merely theoretical beliefs in regard to the future life are founded in delusions, there being no mode of testing their accuracy.

A court has no jurisdiction to decide whether a doctrine held by any particular religious sect be true or false. A delusion common to all the members of a religious sect cannot invalidate a will. Newton v. Carbery, 5 Cranch. (C. C.) 626.

In Bonard's Will, 16 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 128, the testator bequeathed an estate of the value of $150,000 to the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals; in consequence it was claimed of his belief, that the souls of men after death passed into the bodies of animals. He was a Frenchman by birth, residing in the city of New York, and had no family. His will was contested by certain persons living in France, who alleged themselves to be his heirs. The will contained no reference to his peculiar belief, nor did it appear that he had made any declaration of his opinions in connection with his will. The will was established. In this case, the Surrogate, in delivering his opinion, said: "If a judicial officer should assume that merely because a man earnestly believed in that doctrine (metempsychosis), he was insane, or labored under an insane delusion incapacitating him for making a will, if prompted by that faith . . . it would not fall very far short in principle of assuming that all mankind who did not believe in the particular faith which the judge accepts respecting the future state, are more or less insane or the victim of an insane delusion."

delusions which pervert his judgment and reason.¹ Nor does belief in witchcraft render a will invalid, unless it is shown to be the offspring of that belief.² Belief in spiritualism is held not to be an insane delusion.³

c. ECCENTRICITY.—Unusual and irregular habits, known as eccentricities, do not incapacitate one from making a will,⁴ unless

In American Bible Soc. v. Price, 115 Ill. 630, the testator bequeathed the bulk of his estate to a religious corporation, under the impression that such a gift would insure the salvation of his soul. The will practically excluded a wife and children, and was rejected. See notes on this case 22 Cent. L. J. 338.

In Addington v. Wilson, 5 Ind. 137, the testator believed in witches, and that his wife and daughters were witches; in Kelly v. Miller, 39 Miss. 17, the testator believed in witches and conjurors, and that his mother was bewitched, and that his horse and gun were bewitched, and that when he broke bread at table it turned into blood; in Lee v. Lee, 4 McCord (S. Car.) 183, the testator believed that all women were bewitched, would not sleep on a bed made by a woman, and imagined himself engaged in constant warfare with evil spirits; in Robinson v. Adams, 62 Me. 369, the testatrix was a spiritualist, who believed that her son-in-law was under the control of an evil spirit. She kept books of spiritual communication which she considered of great value, and declared that the spirit of her deceased husband directed the terms of the will; in Brown v. Ward, 53 Md. 377, the testatrix was a spiritualist who believed that she communed with spirits, could cure the sick, and foretell future events; in Smith's Will, 52 Wis. 543, the testator was a spiritualist and claimed to have received a message from his deceased wife, telling him to marry the appellant beneficiary, and who frequently consulted mediums about his business, etc. In all these cases, however, the wills were sustained by the highest tribunals. See Matter of Vedder, 6 Dem. (N. Y.) 92.

In Middleditch v. Williams, 45 N. J. Eq. 735, the chancellor said: "Believing, as I do, that these manifestations are correctly described by Vice-Chancellor Gifford in Lyon v. Home, L. R., 6 Eq. 655, when he called them 'mischievous nonsense, well calculated on the one hand to delude the vain, the weak, the foolish and the superstitious, etc.' still it seems to me to be entirely clear that it cannot be said that a person who does believe in their reality is, because of such belief, of unsound mind or subject to an insane delusion. No court has yet so held."

Undue Influence.—But the will of one who entertained such belief has been set aside on the ground of undue influence exercised on the mind of the testator through such belief. As in Thompson v. Hawks, 14 Fed. Rep. 902, where the testator in disposing of his property followed implicitly the directions which he believed the spirit gave him. And in Greenwood v. Cline, 7 Oregon 18, where the testatrix, prior to the execution of the will, accompanied the legatee to a spiritual seance where a pretended letter, purporting to be from the deceased husband of the testatrix, warning her against her son and advising her to dispose of her property in a particular way, the will was set aside on the ground of undue influence. See also UNDUE INFLUENCE.

4. Eccentricities.—1 Redf. on Wills 71, 72; Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 144; Taylor's Med. Jur. (1836), p. 639; Prentiss v. Bates, 58 Mich. 567; Brick v. Brick, 66 N. Y. 144; Ingoldsby v. Ingoldsby, 20 Grant Ch. (Up. Can.) 131; In re Wilkie's Estate, 17 Nova Scotia 543.

Georgia Code, section 2408, provides that "eccentricity of habit or thought such eccentricities have been indulged in to such an extent as to amount to insanity.¹

d. DELIRIUM.—Delirium is a species of insanity resulting from the diseased state of the body, and is totally inconsistent with testamentary capacity.² But this species of insanity is temporary in its character, and the law does not allow a presump-does not deprive a person of the power of making a testament."

Eccentricity is said to be distinguished from an insane delusion, by the fact that the eccentric man is aware of his differences from other men and persists in them, while a monomaniac is not conscious of his peculiarities, and believes himself to be guided by the wisest and most judicious counsels. 1 Redf. on Wills, 71, 72; Taylor on Med. Jur. (1866) 639.

In Mercer v. Kelso, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 106, the testator was a man of many strange and unreasonable habits and most extraordinary eccentricities, but he was adjudged to have a sound and disposing mind.

Eccentricity was illustrated in Lee v. Lee, 4 McCord (S. Car.) 183. The testator was a man filthy in his dress, slept in a hollow gum, he ate out of a pot with a broken spoon, and had no furniture in his house, although he was a man of considerable means; he imagined himself engaged in constant warfare with evil spirits, complained of incessant assaults, and provided the strangest weapons for his defense. His will, however, which was drawn up by his direction from dictation, was declared to be a valid instrument.

An eccentric will was that in which the testator, after disinheriting his next of kin in favor of a stranger, directed his executors to cause some parts of his bowels to be converted into fiddle strings, others to be sublimated into smelling salts, and the remainder of his body vitrified into lenses for optical purposes, explaining in a letter accompanying the will, that these directions were not given in a spirit of singularity or whim, but that he had a mortal aversion to funeral pomp, and wished his body to be converted into purposes useful to mankind. The testator was shown to have conducted his affairs with great shrewdness and ability, and to have been regarded by his associates as a man of sound mind. The will was admitted to probate. Morgan v. Boys, cited in Taylor Med. Jur. (ed. 1858) 657.

In another case, the testator, an Englishman who had lived long in the east and professed the Mahometan religion, directed that the residuum of his estate should go to the poor of Constantinople, and towards erecting a cenotaph in that city, inscribed with his name and bearing a perpetually burning light. The testator had lost his wife and child, and had no kin nearer than a brother of independent means. The will was sustained. Austen v. Graham, 29 Eng. L. & Eq. 38.

In Lewis' Case, 33 N. J. Eq. 219, the testator, besides being miserly, squalid, dishonest, profane, and irascible and otherwise eccentric in character, bequeathed the bulk of his estate to his executors, to be applied to the reduction of the debt incurred by the United States in the war of 1861. He had no relatives. The will was sustained.

1. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 145; Ray Med. Jur. (1839) 129, § 92; Mudway v. Croft, 3 Curt. 678; Frere v. Peacock, 1 Rob. 442. In Yglesias v. Dyke (Prerog. Court, May, 1852), cited 2 Taylor Med. Jur. 556 (2d Eng. ed.), it was shown that the testatrix kept fourteen dogs of both sexes, which were provided with kennels in her drawing-room. Her will was rejected on the ground of eccentricity amounting to insanity. So, the will of another woman who had a strong propensity for cats, provided them with meals at regular hours, and furnished them with plates and napkins. The author observes, however, that a "propensity for animals proves nothing in relation to the existence of insanity, unless there is at the same time good evidence of intellectual aberration."

2. Delirium.—Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 121; 1 Redf. on Wills, p. 91; Ray on Med. Jur. "Insanity," pars. 346, 350; Taylor on Med. Jur. (1861) 632; Whart. & Stillé's Med. Jur. (2d ed.), § 255; Jackson v. Moore, 14 La. Ann. 209; Hix v. Whittemore, 4 Met. (Mass.) 545; Clark v. Ellis, 9 Oregon 128; Staples v. Wellington, 58 Me. 453.

In Owing's Case, 1 Bland Ch. (Md.) 370, Bland Ch., says: "What is commonly called delirium is always preceded or attended by a feverish and tion of its continuance from proof of its existence at any particular time.¹

e. DRUNKENNESS.—Neither the frequent use of intoxicating liquors nor habitual drunkenness, will of themselves incapacitate the testator.² But if the will is executed during a period when highly diseased state of the body. The patient in delirium is wholly unconscious of surrounding objects, or conceives them to be different from what they really are; his thoughts seem to drift about, wildering and tossing amidst distracted dreams, and his observations, when he makes any, as often happens, are wild and incoherent."

The law contemplates this species of mental derangement as an intellectual eclipse; as a darkness occasioned by a cloud of disease passing over the mind. Shelf. on Lunacy, 43; Brodgen v. Brown, 2 Add. 441.

1. Clark v. Ellis, 9 Oregon 138; Dimes v. Dimes, 10 Moore, P. C. 422.

It will continue only during the continuance of the fever in which it originated. If a fever is shown to exist at a given time, the law does not presume its continuance, as in the case of fixed insanity. Staples v. Wellington, 58 Me. 453.

In Brodgen v. Brown, 2 Add. 455, Sir John Nichol, comparing lucid intervals in the case of habitual insanity with intervals of reason in cases of delirium, says, "that the apparently rational intervals of persons merely delirious for the most part, are really such."

In Brown v. Riffin, 94 Ill. 561, it was held that the proof of periodical epileptic attacks, loss of consciousness, the usual sequence of such attacks with fever and delirium, was not such proof of insanity as will justify an instruction based upon the presumption of its continuance.

In Matter of Bush, 1 Conn. (N. Y.) 330, the testatrix was suffering from typhoid fever and was shown to be the subject of frequent attacks of delirium. But upon the testimony of expert witnesses, the court was satisfied that the delirium was intermittent and that during intervals, she was of a disposing mind, and that the fever did not effect any organic change in the mind. The will was shown to be executed during such an interval, and upheld.

In Lillibridge's Estate, 133 Pa. St. 211, the court refused to set aside a will as an issue derisarij rel non, 20 years after the testator's death, on evidence that the will was executed while the testator was suffering from typhoid pneumonia, from which he died, there being nothing to show that he was delirious at the very time the will was executed.

A drunkard may make a valid will, even if at the time of the execution of the instrument he is under the influence of liquor, provided he comprehends the nature, extent, and disposition of his estate. Peck v. Cary, 27 N. Y. 9; Matter of Reed, 2 Conn. (N. Y.) 403; Gardner v. Gardner, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 526; Key v. Holloway, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 575.

In Lewis v. Jones, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 645, it was held that an habitual drunkard, though subject to the control of a commission, was not necessarily incapacitated from making a will.

The question of the effect of intoxithe mind of the testator is in a state of delirium from intoxication, it cannot be a valid testamentary act.¹ Nor can one have cation upon the capacity of a person, is not one to be determined by expert testimony, but is dependent upon the facts of the particular case. Pierce v. Pierce, 38 Mich. 418; Ayrey v. Hill, 2 Add. 209. And contradictory testimony as to such circumstances should be left for the jury to decide upon. Best v. Best (Ky. 1889), 11 S. W. Rep. 810. In Gharky's Estate, 57 Cal. 274, where the only issue presented by the contestant was the unsoundness of the testator's mind, it was held that the question whether the testator was drunk at the time the will was executed, should not be submitted to the jury as a special issue.

In Duffield v. Morris, 2 Harr. (Del.) 375, it was held that delirium tremens produced by drunkenness, as affecting testamentary capacity was the same as insanity produced in any other manner.

Burden of Proof.—Proof of drunkenness does not destroy the legal presumption of the testator's general capacity, and the burden of showing the manner of capacity at the time of the execution of the will rests on the contestant. Black v. Ellis, 3 Hill (S. Car.) 68; Whitenack v. Stryker, 2 N. J. Eq. 8; Andress v. Weller, 3 N. J. Eq. 604; Elkinton v. Brick, 44 N. J. Eq. 154; Lee's Case, 46 N. J. Eq. 193; Crittenden's Estate, Myr. Prob. (Cal.) 50. As was said in Lee's Case, 46 N. J. Eq. 193, inebriety, although long continued and resulting occasionally in temporary insanity, does not require proof of lucid intervals to give validity to the act of the drunkard, as is required where general insanity is proved. And, consequently, where habitual intoxication is shown, there will be no presumption that there was incapacitating drunkenness at the time of making the will. But in Cockran's Will, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 263, where it was proved that for some time before the execution of the will, and until his death, the testator's mind was in general in a state of derangement produced by the habitual and intemperate use of ardent spirits, it was held that it was necessary for the establishment of the will that it should be shown by clear and statutory testimony to have been made in a lucid interval.

1. 1 Redf. on Wills 160; Peck v. Cary, 27 N. Y. 9; Edge v. Edge, 38 N. J. Eq.

211; Chapleau v. Chapleau, 1 Leg. News (Can.) 473.

The rule is thus laid down by Swinburn: "He that is overcome by drink, during the time of his drunkenness is compared to a madman, and therefore, if he make his testament at that time, it is void in law; which is to be understood when he is so excessively drunk that he is utterly devoid of reason and understanding, otherwise, if he be not clean spent, albeit his understanding is obscured and his memory troubled, yet he may make his testament, being in that case." Swinb. on Wills, pt. 2, § 6; 1 Redf. on Wills 160; Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 126; 1 Wms. Exors. (Perkins' Am. ed.) 59; Ayrey v. Hill, 2 Add. 206; Billinghurst v. Vickers, 1 Ph. 191; Wheeler v. Alderson, 3 Hagg. 602.

Shelford observes that incapacity arising from intoxication differs from ordinary lunacy, in that the effects of drunkenness subsist only while the excitement lasts; so that there can scarcely be such a thing as latent ebriety, that is, a case of incapacity from mere drunkenness when the man is to all outward appearances capable; and that consequently, in cases of this description, all which is required to be shown is the absence of such excitement, at the time of the act done, as would vitiate it; for under a slight degree of excitement from liquor, the memory and understanding may be as correct as in the total absence of any exciting cause. Shelf. on Lunacy (Eng. ed. 1833) 276, 305. The sufficiency of the excitement to vitiate the act must depend upon the circumstances of each case; the degree of such excitement belongs to a description of cases that admits of no definite rule. Ayrey v. Hill, 2 Add. 209.

The existence of a commission is only prima facie evidence of incapacity in the case of a drunkard. 1 Jarm. on Wills (6th Am. ed.) 65; 1 Wms. on Exors. (4th Am. ed.) 37, note 1, and 38, note 1; Shelf. Lunacy (Eng. ed. 1833) 206; Sergeson v. Seeley, 2 Atk. 413; Groom v. Thomas, 2 Hagg. 449; Lewis v. Jones, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 645.

Where a committee of a drunkard gives no bond and does not take charge of the property, and the drunkard manages his own affairs for 35 years thereafter, the presumption is that the proceedings were abandoned, and that testamentary capacity whose mind has become so impaired from habitual drunkenness, as to be deprived of judgment and reason.¹

5. Feeble-Minded Persons—a. IN GENERAL.—Mere weakness of understanding is not of itself sufficient to incapacitate a testator;² but there may be incapacity in the testator without total deprivation of reason.³ And a testator who has been of feeble mind from his birth, or who has been reduced to that condition by disease,⁴ the drunkard being reformed, was competent to make a will. Leckey v. Cunningham, 56 Pa. St. 370.

Blackstone, 2 Bl. Com. 496, in enumerating the persons who, by reason of mental disability, are incapable of making a will, adds, "Such as have their senses besotted with drunkenness."

2. Weakness of Understanding.—Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 70; Hoban v. Campan, 52 Mich. 346; Weir v. Fitzgerald, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 42; Horn v. Pullman, 72 N. Y. 269; Snyder v. Sherman, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 139; Wade v. Holbrook, 2 Redf. (N. Y.) 378; Gray's Will, 5 N. Y. Supp. 464; 52 Hun (N. Y.) 614; Matter of Gross, 14 N. Y. St. Rep. 429; Dornick v. Reichenback, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 84; Heister v. Lynch, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 108; Kimball v. Cuddy, 117 Ill. 217; Chandler v. Barrett, 21 La. Ann. 58.

In Mountain v. Bennett, 1 Cox 356, Lord Chief Baron Eyre said: "It is not necessary to go so far as to make a man absolutely insane, so as to be an object for a commission of lunacy, in order to determine the question whether he is a person of sound and disposing mind, memory, and understanding. A man perhaps may not be insane, and yet not equal to the important act of disposing of his property by will." In Osmond v. Fitzroy, 3 P. Wms. 129, it is said that "courts cannot measure the size of people's understanding and capacities, nor examine into the prudence or wisdom of men in disposing of their estates."

3. Abraham v. Wilkins, 17 Ark. 292; Butlin v. Barry, 1 Curt. 614; Delafield v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 9.

4. Imbecility from Disease.—In the following cases wills were contested on the ground of incapacity arising from weakness of understanding produced by disease:

Paralysis.—McDaniel's Will, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 331; Smith v. Smith, 75 Ga. 477; Rothrock v. Rothrock, 22 Oregon 551; Trish v. Newell, 62 Ill. 196; Brock v. Luckett, 4 How. (Miss.) 459; Irish v. Smith, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 573.

In respect to paralysis and its effect on the mind, Mr. Justice Washington observed in Hoge v. Fisher, Pet. (C. C.) 163, "If no actual derangement or mental imbecility be found, it is not sufficient per se to assign a cause of derangement which might or might not have produced that effect. Paralysis, for instance, is sometimes a cause of mental derangement, and frequently it is not. If attended by apoplexy or an affection of the nerves, it necessarily affects the mind; but it frequently affects only the muscles, thereby producing bodily infirmity alone, and leaving the mind unimpaired. If the patient survives the stroke for any considerable length of time, it may in general be concluded that it was simply a paralysis affecting the body only."

In Legg v. Myer, 5 Redf. (N. Y.) 628, the testator had suffered from a stroke of paralysis for about six weeks. He was unconscious at first, but improved rapidly, so that his physician left him, and though he never fully recovered his power of speech or strength of mind, he read the paper every day and frequently called attention to articles that interested him; read the Bible often, received visits and shook hands with his visitors; understood conversation; showed an interest in money matters; was able to comprehend the extent of his property, the number of his children and their relations to him, and could understand ordinary business affairs. The will was sustained. Birdsall's Will (Surr. Ct.), 13 N. Y. Supp. 421; Sheldon v. Dow, 1 Dem. (N. Y.) 503; Tacke's Will (Surr. Ct.), 3 N. Y. Supp. 108.

produced by paralysis, the court properly excluded evidence that the testator's ancestors and relatives were affected with the same disease; such fact if proven having no tendency to show the effect of paralysis on the mind.

1. Use of Medicines and Drugs—Morphine, Opium.—A person thrown into a stupor from the use of medicines, as from the administration of morphine, may be incapable of making a will. See Garrison v. Blanton, 48 Tex. 299; Stedham v. Stedham, 32 Ala. 525; Bush v. Lisle, 89 Ky. 393. But the mere fact that the testator was addicted to the use of morphine at the time the will was executed, when it is not shown that he was under the influence at that time, will not affect his capacity. Frost v. Wheeler, 43 N. J. Eq. 573. So also the administration of opium is not sufficient to show want of testamentary capacity, when it is not shown that the drug affected the mental powers of the testator, further than to cause sleepiness, or that she was at all affected by it when she executed the will. In re Glockner's Will (Surr. Ct.), 2 N. Y. Supp. 97.

2. Delafield v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 9. This is a leading case in New York, on the degree of capacity requisite for the execution of a will in cases of imbecility. The testator, Mr. Henry Delafield, was a New York banker, without children. He made his will in 1842, bequeathing the residuum of his estate to two brothers, having amply provided for his wife and certain relatives. His estate continued to augment in value at the rate of $60,000 per annum for 7 years, all of which increment, if he had died in the meanwhile, would have gone to his brothers under the residuary clause of the will. In 1849, he suffered an attack of paralysis and apoplexy, which deprived him of the power of speech and the use of his right arm and leg. He enjoyed good, but not uninterrupted health, until his death 7 years later, occasionally having spasms or convulsions. He could not, from his first attack, utter anything more than a few inarticulate sounds, described by witnesses as resembling the syllables "yah, yah," "yeah, yeah," "nin, nin," "nyeh," and supposed by them to mean "yes" and "no." He accompanied these sounds by gestures and motions of the left hand and arm, and by shaking his head. The gestures usually consisted in waving his hand in different directions, with his fingers extended, putting his fingers in his mouth, or raising his hand and shaking it. The external senses were not seriously affected. He would look at books and papers occasionally, but could not read at all. An unsuccessful attempt was made to induce him to write with his left hand, and block letters were placed before him, but he would not use them and pushed them away, nor would he use a dictionary to express his thoughts. The newspapers were read to him, but he showed no comprehension or appreciation of the reading. He was not intrusted with the management of his business nor allowed to have money; could not supply his own wants, and

b. PERSON IN EXTREMIS.—The fact that the testator when he executed his will was in extremis, raises no presumption of incapacity.¹ The same test is to be applied here as in other cases, and if, although in a dying condition, the testator has sufficient intelligence to comprehend his estate and the effect and operation of his will, he has sufficient capacity to make it. In the notes will be found numerous cases in which the testamentary capacity of persons in extremis is considered.²

c. OLD AGE.—Extreme old age, with its attendant physical and intellectual weakness, does not of itself incapacitate the teswas washed, dressed, and attended at the table like a child, and was even frequently unable to control his evacuations. His wishes were not easily ascertained, and sometimes could not be understood at all. He would also assent to contradictory suggestions. Before his attack, he was a calm, quiet, undemonstrative gentleman, rarely even exhibiting any emotion, and deeply absorbed in his business. After the attack, he occasionally shed tears, exhibited at times a want of decency, indulged in freaks, caprices, and whims, and had to be restrained from going into dangerous places. He was said to have pulled out his watch when passing the city hall clock, and to have insisted on being driven to his old office and to other places of his former business, to have assented by nods to suggestions to return home when out driving, to have called attention to the stopping of the clock, and to have laughed heartily at a ridiculous circumstance recalled to him by an acquaintance. While in this condition, he executed three codicils to his will, diverting the residuum of his estate from his brothers; his hand was guided while executing the first two; it did not appear whether he was assisted in making his mark to the third. The instructions for the codicils were given by his wife to counsel, and she was the principal beneficiary, although she was amply provided for by the will. The testator was declared to be not of sound mind and memory, and the codicils were set aside. While this case does not in terms overrule the decision in Stewart v. Lispenard, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 255, it is considered practically to have done so, and to have established the rule stated in the text. See also Blanchard v. Nestle, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 37; Newhouse v. Godwin, 17 Barb. (N. (Pa.) 244; Duggan v. McBreen, 78 Iowa 591; Rankin v. Rankin, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 531. In this last case the testator was under sentence of death for murder when the will was made.

A testatrix, being ill, gave instructions for her will at 11 o'clock in the morning; she executed the will at 6 in the evening, and died in two hours. The court instructed the jury that if the testatrix, at the time of giving the instructions, had sufficient discretion for that purpose, and was able afterwards at the time of execution to remember the instructions, she was competent. Hathorn v. King, 8 Mass. 371. See also Tomkins v. Tomkins, 1 Bailey (S. Car.) 92; Billingshurt v. Vickers, 1 Ph. 187.

The occasional flightiness or wandering of intellect of a dying man is of slight weight as bearing upon the question of his testamentary capacity. McMasters v. Blair, 29 Pa. St. 298; Leech v. Leech, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 244.

A person to be competent to execute a will must be able to do more than answer simple questions by an affirma-tator.¹ Nor does the loss of memory accompanying such a state, which does not amount to a forgetfulness of his interests and affairs, and of the relation he sustains to others, disqualify him.²

tive or negative. Marquis of Winchester's Case, 6 Co. Rep. 23.

In Menzies v. White, 9 Grant Ch. (Up. Can.) 574, the will of a person executed when roused from a stupor into which he was thrown by an accident which resulted fatally, was sustained.

Sandidge*, 85 Va. 546; Sutton v. Sutton, 5 Harr. (Del.) 450; Muller v. St. Louis Hospital Assoc., 73 Mo. 242. In this last case the element of undue influence was prominent.

In Knapp v. Reilly, 3 Dem. (N. Y.) 427, the testator had been thrown by disease into a state of chronic stupor, from which he could be aroused, but into which he would relapse almost immediately. The will executed by him when so aroused was rejected.

Georgia Code, section 2408, provides that "old age, and the weakness of intellect resulting therefrom, does not, of itself, constitute incapacity; but if that weakness amounts to imbecility, the testamentary capacity is gone. In cases of doubt as to the extent of this weakness, the reasonable or unreasonable disposition of his estate should have much weight in the decision of the question."

A testator who, notwithstanding great age, bodily infirmities, and impaired mind, has mind and memory enough to recollect the property of which he is about to dispose, the persons to whom and the manner in which he wishes to bequeath it, and to know and understand the business in which he is engaged, has that sound and disposing memory which qualifies him to make a will. *Watson v. Yet such a state of mind as amounts to senile dementia incapacitates one from making a will.¹

III. PROBATE AND CONTEST.—1. Presumption and Burden of Proof.—

Until the contrary appears, testamentary capacity is to be presumed, and where a will is sought to be avoided on the ground of mental disability, the burden is on the party alleging the disability to establish the fact.² The decisions, however, are by different times afterwards referred to its provisions. Sharp's Appeal, 134 Pa. St. 492.

In Wilson v. Mitchell, 101 Pa. St. 495, the testator was over 100 years old, when he made his will. He had been a man of remarkable vigor of mind, but when he executed the will he was blind, and his hearing was impaired; his mind acted slowly; he was forgetful of recent events and of names; he repeated questions in conversation, would sometimes seem bewildered when aroused from sleep, and was extremely filthy in his habits. The court was nevertheless of the opinion that he was competent, and his will was sustained. See also Fow's Estate (Pa. 1892), 23 Atl. Rep. 447; Tallman's Will (Pa. 1892), 23 Atl. Rep. 986.

In Merrill v. Rush, 33 N. J. Eq. 537, the testatrix was 83 years old, dictated her own will, mentioned 20 legatees to the scrivener and noted the omission of one by him. The will was sustained, though it appeared that the testatrix had made an unjust and unfounded charge against a person who had no claims upon her bounty, and was forgetful in respect to several unimportant matters.

The fact that the testator at the age of 68 married a girl of 18 years, is not of itself evidence of imbecility. Thomas v. Stump, 62 Mo. 275.

1. Senile Dementia.—Schouler on Wills (2d. ed.), § 130; Swinb. on Wills, p. 2, § 5; Harvey v. Sullens, 46 Mo. 147; Minor v. Thomas, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 106.

In Dumond v. Kiff, 7 Lans. (N. Y.) 465, the testator made his will in June, at the age of 80. Neither of the subscribing witnesses testified that he was of sound mind; one of them thought the contrary. In the following autumn he did not know his children, inquired how many he had, could only name some of them, and died soon thereafter. The will was rejected.

In Liddington's Will, 4 N. Y. Supp. 646; 51 Hun (N. Y.) 638, the testator was 92 years old, feeble, deaf, nearly blind, and subject to periodical attacks of sickness, in which his mind wandered. The will, which gave a large part of his estate to the wife of the scrivener, was rejected.

Lucid Interval.—There may be such a thing as a "lucid interval" in a case of senile dementia, during which the person will be competent to execute a will. Kerr v. Lunsford, 31 W. Va. 686.

(The element of undue influence enters so largely into this last case that it can scarcely be considered to be in conflict with the Missouri doctrine, that the burden rests upon the proponent, and is not shifted by a prima facie case of competency made out by the testimony of the subscribing witnesses.) Payne v. Banks, 32 Miss. 292; 1 Redf. on Wills 32; Swinb. on Wills, pt. 2, § 3, p. 4; 1 Wms. on Exors. (Perkins' An. ed.) 20; Schouler on Wills, §§ 173, 174. And see INSANITY, vol. 11, p. 159.

In Delafield v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 9, four of the judges were of the opinion that the burden devolved upon the proponents to establish the testator's competency, under a statute which provided that, "If it should appear upon the proof taken that such will was duly executed, and that the testator at the time of executing the same was in all respects competent to devise real estate, and not under restraint, the will should be admitted to probate." But five of the judges held that the statute could not be construed to intend that if the proof was evenly balanced, the will should be declared invalid, and stated the rule to be that, "At common law and under the New York statutes, the legal presumption is that every man is compos mentis; and the burden of proof that he is non compos mentis rests on the party who alleges that an unnatural condition of mind existed in the testator. He who sets up the fact that the testator was non compos mentis must prove it." Jones v. Jones, 63 Hun (N. Y.) 630.

The presumption of sanity when first thrown in the scale, as it certainly may be, relieves the legatee from giving express evidence in the first instance to show mental capacity of the testator. In re Robinson's Estate, 20 Nova Scotia Rep. 271.

Where the testator was not interdicted as non compos mentis when the will was made, and there is nothing to show that he was subject to hallucinations, it will be presumed that he was of sound and disposing mind. Lacombe v. Dambourges, 3 Can. Law J. 10.

The burden is not shifted from the contestant by a statute which provides, among other things, that the will shall be admitted to probate if it appears that the testator, at the time of executing the same, was competent to devise his property. Herbert v. Berrier, 81 Ind. 1.

After a will has been regularly admitted to probate, the burden is on the contestant to show want of capacity in the testator. Howard v. Moot, 64 N. Y. 262; Renn v. Samos, 33 Tex. 760; Jenkins v. Tobin, 31 Ark. 306; Rogers v. Diamond, 13 Ark. 479; McDaniel v. Crosby, 19 Ark. 533.

English Rules.—The following rules, drawn from the decision in Sutton v. Sadler, 3 C. B. N. S. 87; 91 E. C. L. 86, represent the English practice, and are commended in 1 Wms. on Exors. 23 (6th Am. ed.), Perkins' note: "If a party impeach the validity of a will on account of a supposed incapacity of mind in the testator, it will be incumbent on such party to establish such incapacity by the clearest and most satisfactory proofs. The burden of proof rests upon the person attempting to invalidate what on its face purports to be a legal act. Sanity must be presumed until the contrary is shown. . . . But it must be borne in mind that the presumption of sanity is not to be treated as a legal presumption, but, at the most, as a mixed presumption of law and fact (if not as a mere presumption of fact); that is, an inference to be made by a jury from the absence of evidence to show that the testator did not enjoy that soundness which experience shows to be the general condition of the human mind. If, therefore, a will is produced before a jury and its execution proved, and no other evidence offered, the jury should be properly told that they ought to find for the will. And if the party opposing the will gives some evidence of incompetency, the jury may nevertheless, if it does not disturb their belief in the competency of the testator, find in favor of the will. And in each case the presumption of competency would prevail. Still the onus probandi lies in every case on the party relying on a will, and he must satisfy the jury that it is the will of a capable testator; and when the whole matter is before them on evidence given on both sides, if the evidence does not satisfy them that the will is the will of a competent testator, they ought not to affirm by their verdict that it is so."

In England, the general rule is that the person claiming under the will in an issue devisavit vel non must call all of the subscribing witnesses and make them his witnesses as to the mental capacity of the testator. Keays v. McDonnell, 6 Ir. Eq. 611. The rule on this point is not uniform in America. Schouler on Wills (2d ed.), § 177.

Presumption Prima Facie Only.—In the case of Rutland v. Gleaves, 1 Swan. (Tenn.) 198, the evidence tended to show that the testatrix was not well informed as to the contents and effect of the will which she signed, and the court held that it was error to instruct the jury "that if they believed the will was correctly read to the testatrix and that she was of sound mind, the legal presumption would be that she understood its contents," without explaining to them that the presumption was prima facie only and might be rebutted.

1. The following authorities support the proposition that the burden of proof is upon the proponent of the will to show mental capacity in the testator, and remains with him throughout the proceeding. Crowninshield v. Crowninshield, 2 Gray (Mass.) 524; (in this case it was held that the statute enabling persons of "sound mind" to make a will, imposed upon the executor the burden of showing the testator's mental capacity, and that the burden did not shift on evidence of sanity given by the subscribing witnesses.) Baldwin v. Parker, 99 Mass. 79; Baxter v. Abbott, 7 Gray (Mass.) 71; Gerish v. Nason, 22 Me. 438; Cilley v. Cilley, 34 Me. 162;

Robinson v. Adams, 62 Me. 369; Hardy v. Merrill, 56 N. H. 227; Comstock v. Hadlyme, etc., Soc., 8 Conn. 261; Taff v. Hosmer, 14 Mich. 309; (in this case Judge Cooley sets out the Michigan practice fully. See abstract from his opinion in INSANITY, vol. 11, p. 155.) Aikin v. Weckerly, 19 Mich. 482; Beaubien v. Cicoth, 8 Mich. 9; Kempsey v. McGinniss, 21 Mich. 123; Prentiss v. Bates, 93 Mich. 234; (where it is said that the rule placing the burden on the proponents throughout the case is firmly established in Michigan, overruling Prentiss v. Bates, 88 Mich. 567. See the strong dissenting opinion of Grant, J., in Prentiss v. Bates, 93 Mich. 234.) McGinniss v. Kempsey, 27 Mich. 363; Elliott v. Welby, 13 Mo. App. 19; Benoist v. Murrin, 58 Mo. 322; Jones v. Roberts, 37 Mo. App. 163; Cravens v. Faulconer, 28 Mo. 19; Tingley v. Cowgill, 48 Mo. 291; Norton v. Paxton, 110 Mo. 456; Harvey v. Sullen, 56 Mo. 372; Evans v. Arnold, 52 Ga. 169; Williams v. Robinson, 42 Vt. 658; Moyer v. Swygart, 125 Ill. 267; Potter v. Potter, 41 Ill. 80; Mueller v. Rebhan, 94 Ill. 142; Rigg v. Wilton, 13 Ill. 15; Yoe v. McCord, 74 Ill. 38; Carpenter v. Calvert, 83 Ill. 62; Hubbard v. Hubbard, 7 Oregon 44; Chrisman v. Chrisman, 6 Oregon 127; In re Layman's Will, 40 Minn. 371. (This last decision is based on a Minnesota statute which requires proof of sanity to be offered by the proponent.)

In West Virginia, the reason given for placing the burden on the proponent is, that at common law a person could not make a will, and that the statute enabling persons of sound mind to make a will changed the common-law presumption of sanity, and required the proponent to show sanity when the will was executed. McMeehan v. McMeehan, 17 W. Va. 685. And see Nicholas v. Kershner, 20 W. Va. 261.

The burden of proving capacity to make a will rests upon the proponents, Fulton v. Andrew, L. R., 7 H. L. 448; and a fortiori, when it appears that the testator was subject to delusions. Smee v. Smee, L. R., 5 P. D. 84. See also Paske v. Ollatt, 2 Ph. 323; Barry v. Butlin, 2 Moore P. C. 480; Browning v. Budd, 6 Moore P. C. 430; Sutton v.

proof required in probate proceedings, and to be satisfied by a prima facie case of competency made out by the testimony of the subscribing witnesses.¹

Sadler, 3 C. B., N. S. 87; 91 E. C. L. 86; Baker v. Batt, 2 Moore P. C. 317; Symes v. Green, 1 Sw. & T. 401; Panton v. Williams, 2 Curt. 530; Wallis v. Hodgson, 2 Atk. 56. The burden is upon the proponent in the court below, and also on appeal from an order establishing the will. Potts v. House, 6 Ga. 324.

In a suit to set aside a will, probate of the will is not sufficient to shift the burden of proof to the plaintiff, the contestant. Rogers v. Thomas, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 390; Rigg v. Wilton, 13 Ill. 15.

In Evans v. Arnold, 52 Ga. 169, the court said: "We think the court erred in charging that after the factum of the will was duly proven, the burden of showing the other requisites ceased as to the propounders, and on the issue of sanity or insanity, the burden was on the caveators. We are aware of the fact that there are respectable authorities asserting this rule. It has the countenance of no less an authority than Mr. Redfield, though he lays it down rather as a logical deduction from certain other rules than as law. The truth is, the rule is unsettled. The general rule of law undoubtedly is that one is presumed sane until the contrary is shown, and this may also be said of the rule that he who holds the affirmative of a proposition must prove his assertion. But when one comes into a court of justice to give the property of the deceased person a different direction from that given by the law, he takes upon himself to prove all the conditions on which his right depends. . . . I am not, myself, prepared to say that the general doctrine of the law as to sanity is to be entirely disregarded. Undoubtedly, sanity is the normal condition of man; and if, on an examination of the circumstances attending the execution, nothing unusual appear; if the testator appear to be aware of what he is doing, and acts as sane men do, I am of the opinion that a prima facie case is made out, at least that a verdict for the will would be justified, if, when the facts are detailed, the act as done is done as sane men do things—as if a man ask a witness to attest his will, and the witness do so on its being signed by the testator—the very act of signing intelligently is a sane act. . . . Still, the rule is undoubted, that it is a part of the propounder's case to prove the sanity and freedom of the testator, and unless the jury be affirmatively satisfied that the testator was of sound and disposing mind, they should find against the will."

1. Carpenter v. Calvert, 83 Ill. 62; Wilbur v. Wilbur, 129 Ill. 392; Pendlay v. Eaton, 130 Ill. 69; Hawkins v. Grimes, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 257.

There is much conflict of decision upon this point, having its origin in a rule of probate practice, requiring the executor to offer some evidence of the testator's sanity on propounding the will, and to examine the subscribing witnesses on that point, whether his capacity was or was not impeached; but it is said that the weight of authority supports the rule as stated in the text. 1 Wms. on Exors. (Rand. & Tal. Am. ed.) 110 n; 1 Redf. on Wills (1876) 31.

The expression "burden of proof," should not be confounded with the expression "weight of evidence;" because it is the duty of the proponent in every case to satisfy the jury by a preponderance of testimony, that the will was made by a competent testator. The expression meant, that standing alone, without proof on either side, the will is to be established or rejected in consequence of the failure of the one side to offer proof of capacity, or of the other side to give some evidence of incapacity. Barry v. Butlin, 2 Moore P. C. 480; Scott v. Wood, 81 Cal. 400; Keays v. McDonnell, 6 Ir. Eq. 611.

In a contested case, the competency of the testator must be established to the satisfaction of the court, beyond a reasonable doubt. Keays v. McDonnell, 6 Ir. Eq. 611. In Panton v. Williams, 2 N. C. App. 29, Lord Brougham said: "The course of administration directed by the law is to prevail against him who cannot satisfy the court of probate that he has established a will. . . . There is no duty cast upon the court to strain after probate, and to grant it where doubts remain wholly unremoved. In Smith v. Newman, cited Keays v. McDonnell, 6 Ir. Eq. 611, Judge Keatinge instructed the jury: 'Has it been made out to your perfect satisfaction that the deceased, when he executed this will, was of sound mind? If you entertain a reasonable doubt, the plaintiff has failed to prove his case, and it is your duty to find for the defendant."

See Harper v. Harper, 1 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 351, where it is said, citing Delafield v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 9, that the burden of proof to show unsoundness of mind rests on the contestant, but that "it is also the rule in the first instance that the party propounding the will must prove the mental capacity of the testator." This apparent solecism is thus explained by Mr. Perkins, 1 Wms. on Exors. (6th Am. ed.) 32, note x³; "Much of the conflict among the cases has arisen from treating the presumption of sanity in case of wills as one of law—a legal presumption—and then holding that the burden of proof is upon the person who has the benefit of that presumption." The annotator concludes that the difficulty may be avoided "by treating the presumption as one of fact, making only a prima facie case in favor of the proponent, without relieving him of the burden of proof."

In an action to contest the validity of a will, if the plaintiff fail to introduce testimony to show want of capacity in the testator, the court may, when the plaintiff rests, direct a verdict for the defendant, under Ohio Rev. St., § 5861, which provides that the order of probate shall be prima facie evidence of validity of the will. Wagner v. Ziegler, 44 Ohio St. 59. For the rule before this statute see Green v. Green, 5 Ohio 278.

The proponent must show affirmatively before resting his case, that the testator was of sound mind, under New York Code Civ. Proc., § 2623, which provides that a will shall be admitted to probate "if it appears to the surrogate that the testator, at the time of executing it, was in all respects competent to make a will." Ramsdell v. Viele, 6 Dem. (N. Y.) 244, citing Kingsley v. Blanchard, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 317; Miller v. White, 5 Redf. (N. Y.) 321; Matter of Cottrell, 95 N. Y. 336; Redf. Surr. Prac. (3d ed.) 216. See also Crispell v. Dubois, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 397; Lake v. Ranney, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 49; Lissauer's Will (Surr. Ct.), 5 N. Y. Supp. 260.

Where the infirmities of the testator, or his impaired mental capacity, are such that an inference of competency cannot be drawn from the formal execution of the will, and one of the subscribing witnesses is dead and the other but little acquainted with the testator, the burden is upon the proponent to satisfy the surrogate beyond a reasonable doubt of the testator's capacity; that he could comprehend the nature of his property, what it was, and how situated; and also appreciate the relations to him, of those entitled to his bounty. Matter of Kiedaisch, 2 Conn. (N. Y.) 438.

There would seem to be an inconsistency in holding, first, that the executor or proponent must offer evidence of the testator's capacity, and, second, that the testator is presumed to have been sane, and that the contestant must prove his insanity. Upon this point Judge Redfield says: "We cannot but feel that all the apparent confusion in the matter has arisen from the modern gloss which has been incorporated with the old rule, that the party propounding the will must adduce some proof of the testator's sanity at the time of executing the will, which, with all due submission, we venture to affirm is either a fallacy, or else it is the expression of a principle too refined for our apprehension. For no man's comprehension can be so far blunted that he will not be able to perceive the incongruity of requiring a party to give positive proof of the existence of a fact which the law presumes in the absence of all proof." 1 Redf. on Wills (1876) 46 n.

Where a will, rational in its provisions, is shown to have been duly executed, the burden of showing want of mental capacity shifts to the contestant. Fee v. Taylor, 83 Ky. 259; Milton v. Hunter, 13 Bush (Ky.) 163; Brooks v. Barrett, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 94; Browne v. Molliston, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 129; Spratt v. Spratt, 76 Mich. 384; Aikin v. Weckerly, 19 Mich. 482; Banker v. Banker, 63 N. Y. 409; Duffield v. Morris, 2 Harr. (Del.) 375; Perkins v. Perkins, 39 N. H. 163; McCulloch v. Campbell, 49 Ark. 367; Turner v. Cheesman, 15 N. J. Eq. 243; Mayo v. Jones, 78 N. Car. 402.

1. Gross inequalities in the provisions of a will, when no reasons appear therefor, shift the burden to the proponents, and require them to show the mental capacity of the testator. Matter of Budlong's Will, 126 N. Y. 423, aff'd 54 Hun (N. Y.) 131; Gay v. Gillilan, 92 Mo. 250.

In the case of Caldwell v. Anderson,

The presumption is that a person once insane continues in that state of mind, and if the habitual insanity of the testator be shown, and it is alleged that the will was executed in a lucid interval, the burden of proof shifts to the proponent;¹ though if the proof only shows a case of insanity, directly connected with some violent disease with which the testator was attacked, the party alleging the insanity must bring his proof of continued insanity to that point of time which bears directly upon the subject

104 Pa. St. 204. Gordon, J., said, "Where the testator is shown to be of weak mind, without regard to the cause or causes from which that weakness has arisen, though it be not sufficient in itself to wholly destroy testamentary capacity, and the person by whom, or under whose advice, the will has been written, being a stranger to the testator's blood, receives a legacy or bequest, large as compared to the testator's estate, the burden of proof shifts from the contestants to the proponent of the will." Boyd v. Boyd, 66 Pa. St. 283; Cuthbertson's Appeal, 97 Pa. St. 163.

The proponent cannot shift the burden back to the contestant, by showing that the testator had lucid intervals. Saxon v. Whitaker, 30 Ala. 237. But if it appears that the will was made in a lucid interval, the burden shifts to the contestant to show incapacity at the time of execution. Mifflin v. Smedley, 3 Del. Co. Ct. (Pa.) 143.

Where a person becomes insane after executing his will, and the will is found mutilated shortly before his death, the burden is upon the party alleging a revocation, to show that it was mutilated while the testator was of sound mind. Harris v. Berral, 1 Sw. & Tr. 153.

In Porter v. Campbell, 2 Baxt. (Tenn.) 81, a verdict in favor of a will was set aside for error of the judge in instructing the jury that if the testator retained a holographic will among his papers during lucid intervals, "it would be very strong, if not conclusive proof" that he intended it to remain his will.

It is error for the court to reject evidence of the testator's insanity prior to the making of the will, on the ground that the burden is on the contestant to show insanity at the very time the will was executed. Reichenbach v. Ruddach, 127 Pa. St. 564.

But the fact that the testator had been insane some years prior to the execution of the will, does not raise a presumption that he was insane when the will was published; especially if it appears that after a cure, no symptoms of relapse were ever manifested. Snow v. Benton, 28 Ill. 306. See also Hall v. Unger, 2 Abb. (U. S.) 507.

The burden of proof is not shifted to the proponent by proof of the fact that the testator's mind was affected a few years after the will was made, with nothing to show that the derangement was permanent in its character. Taylor v. Creswell, 45 Md. 422. Nor by evidence that the testator was sick for some time before making his will, and occasionally suffered paroxysms of pain in which "he did not know anything." Blake v. Rourke, 74 Iowa 519.

When the subscribing witnesses testify that the testator was conscious when he executed the will, proof that he was delirious within four hours before that time, does not shift the burden to the proponent. Lyddy's Will, 5 N. Y. Supp. 636.

Mental capacity or incapacity of a testator at the time of the execution of the will, will be presumed to have continued to the time of the execution of a codicil. Thomas' Estate, 20 W. N. C. (Pa.) 336.

in controversy.¹ If the will is rational on its face, and is shown to have been properly executed and attested, it will be strong evidence that the testator was competent; but if there are circumstances shown counterbalancing such presumption, the proponent must affirmatively establish that the testator was of sound mind when the will was executed.²

If the testator was under guardianship as a person of unsound mind, he was prima facie incapable of making a will, and the burden of proof rests upon the proponent to show that his reason was afterwards recovered.³

1. Trish v. Newell, 62 Ill. 201; Hix v. Whittemore, 4 Met. (Mass.) 545; Lee v. Lee, 4 McCord (S. Car.) 183; Grabill v. Barr, 5 Pa. St. 441; Turner v. Cheesman, 15 N. J. Eq. 243; Cartwright v. Cartwright, 1 Ph. 100; 1 Wms. on Exors. 17, 18; Swinb. on Wills, pt. 2, § 3; Collison on Lun. 55; Shelf. on Lun. 275.

And especially where it is shown that the testator was cured and no symptoms of a return of the malady were ever manifested, there can be no presumption that insanity was present at the time of the publication of his will. Snow v. Benton, 28 Ill. 306. But a temporary derangement of intellect, from disease or other cause, will create, while it lasts, an incapacity to make a will, if the party's situation is apparent. Aubert v. Aubert, 6 La. Ann. 104.

2. Schouler on Wills (1892), § 113; 1 Redf. on Wills (1876) 51; Symes v. Green, 1 Sw. & Tr. 401. In this case the testator, after being undoubtedly insane for a fortnight, had a lucid interval of a month, and then became depressed as to his religious condition to such an extent as to convince his friends of his insanity. While in this condition, he made his will; it was in his own handwriting, was perfectly rational, and in no way connected with, nor did it refer to, the subject upon which he was deranged. The testimony of the subscribing witness was against his sanity, and the court required the proponent to establish the testator's competency affirmatively, failing in which, the will was rejected. See Cartwright v. Cartwright, 1 Ph. 90, in which a rational will written by the testatrix in a lucid interval was sustained, and Clark v. Lear, cited 1 Ph. 90, 119, where a carefully framed will in the testator's handwriting, alleged to have been executed in a lucid interval, was rejected because of an absurd devise to a young woman whom the testator had met by chance.

See supra, this title, Lucid Intervals; Temple v. Temple, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 476; Singer v. Isbey, 4 Lanc. (Pa.) 193; Lee v. Lee, 4 McCord (S. Car.) 183.

But the fact that the will is unreasonable is not of itself proof of incapacity of the testator. Munday v. Taylor, 7 Bush (Ky.) 491.

3. 1 Redf. on Wills (1876) 43; East India Co. v. Dyce Sombre, 4 W. R. 714; Breed v. Pratt, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 115; Little v. Little, 13 Gray (Mass.) 264; Stone v. Damon, 12 Mass. 488; Hamilton v. Hamilton, 10 R. I. 538; Johnson's Estate, 57 Cal. 529.

In Stone v. Damon, 12 Mass. 488, it was decided that the rule that a decree adjudging a person non compos mentis was conclusive evidence of his insanity, did not apply where the testamentary capacity of such person was in dispute. In Bogardus v. Clark, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 623, it was held that such a decree was not conclusive on the parties to the proceeding, as to a devise of real estate by the alleged lunatic.

The fact that a person is under guardianship as a lunatic, while it raises a strong presumption of testamentary incapacity, does not invalidate a will then made. 1 Wms. on Exors. (Perkins' ed.) 38 n; Schouler on Wills (1892), § 81; 10 Moore P. C. 244; Cooke v. Cholmondely, 2 Mac. & G. 22; Bannatyne v. Bannatyne, 16 Jur. 864; Robinson v. Robinson, 39 Vt. 267; Lucas v. Parsons, 27 Ga. 593; Slinger's Will, 72 Wis. 22; Titlow v. Titlow, 54 Pa. St. 216; Dyre's Estate, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 156; Rice v. Rice, 50 Mich. 448; Pendleton's Will, 1 Conn. (N. Y.) 480.

In Stevens v. Stevens, 127 Ind. 560, it was held that an instruction that the proof to overcome the presumption of insanity arising from an adjudication of lunacy must be "clear, explicit, and satisfactory," was not made erroneous by italicising those adjectives.

In Re Burr, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 208,

Generally speaking, the party upon whom the burden of proof rests, has the right to open and close.¹

2. Relevancy, Admissibility, and Weight of Testimony—a. IN GENERAL.—All facts connected with the personal history of the testator, and bearing upon his capacity, are admissible in evidence on the chancellor, having become satisfied that the lunatic had so far recovered as to be capable of disposing of his property by will, suspended proceedings in lunacy partially, so as to enable the alleged lunatic to make a will under the superintendence of some officer of the court, to guard against improper influences.

Subsequent Adjudication of Insanity.—In Brady v. McBride, 39 N. J. Eq. 495, the will of a person, executed when she was eighty-two years old and blind, was admitted to probate on satisfactory evidence of capacity, though two years after the will was made, an inquisition of lunacy found her to be of unsound mind, and to have been in that condition for three years.

1. The party setting up the will, where the burden of proof is upon him, goes forward with his proof, and has the right to open and close, Boardman v. Woodman, 47 N. H. 120; Judge v. Stone, 44 N. H. 593; Perkins v. Perkins, 39 N. H. 163; and this no matter in what form the issues for trial may be drawn. Hardy v. Merrill, 56 N. H. 227. And see Brooks v. Barrett, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 96; Phelps v. Hartwell, 1 Mass. 71; Buckminster v. Perry, 4 Mass. 593; Blaney v. Sargeant, 1 Mass. 335; Higdon v. Higdon, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 48; Kempsey v. McGinniss, 21 Mich. 123; Aikin v. Weckerly, 19 Mich. 482. In Tuff v. Hosmer, 14 Mich. 310, the proponent proved by the subscribing witnesses, the execution of the will and the sanity of the testator. The contestant then put in testimony impeaching the testator's capacity, and rested. The proponents then went fully into the question of sanity, against objection, putting in affirmative and not rebutting evidence of capacity. It was decided, Cooley, J., rendering the opinion, that the proponent of the will has the affirmative, and must first make out a prima facie case of sanity, and that therefore he is entitled to the opening and close, and that the contestant could open and close only when the pleadings were such as in the absence of proof would establish the right claimed against him; but that he could neither be required nor was he entitled to open for the purpose of disproving allegations not yet in any manner supported, and which the proponent must establish to maintain his case.

In Maryland, the party alleging the insanity of the testator has the burden of proof, and the right to open and close. Townshend v. Townshend, 7 Gill (Md.) 29; Higgins v. Carlton, 28 Md. 143.

So in Delaware, if the contestant does not deny the formal execution of the will. Chandler v. Ferris, 1 Harr. (Del.) 454, citing Bell v. Buckmaster, and Cabbage v. Cabbage, unreported Del. Cases.

In Brooks v. Barrett, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 94, it was held that the right to open and close was with proponent, as he had, in the first case, to prove the execution of the will, and examine the subscribing witnesses as to the sanity of the testator.

In Syme v. Broughton, 85 N. Car. 367, Ashe, J., said: "In the case of St. John's Lodge v. Callender, 4 Ired. (N. Car.) 335, Chief Justice Ruffin says: 'From the nature of an issue devisavit vel non, he who alleges the affirmative opens the case, and for that reason the party propounding the will is commonly spoken of as the plaintiff. But it is inaccurate, for properly speaking there is neither plaintiff nor defendant; both sides are equally actors, in obedience to the order directing the issue. In neither case is the party in the affirmative at liberty to withdraw and defeat a trial, more than the party in the negative.' He further adds that 'the paper itself, the res is sub judice, and the judge gives his sentence for or against it without noticing particular persons.' It follows, if the will must be proved by the subscribing witnesses, that the burden is upon the propounder, and he would have the privilege of opening and concluding. And when the will has been prima facie established by the statute, evidence, which, according to the case of Mayo v. Jones, 78 N. Car. 402, does not extend to proof of the sanity of the testator, as that, it is said, is presumed, if the caveators an issue as to his mental condition.¹ So evidence of insanity in members of the testator's family is admissible.² Although the question at issue relates to the capacity of the testator at the time of the execution of the will, it is competent to show insanity both before and after.³ But general reputation as to unsoundness of mind in the testator is inadmissible.⁴ The will in contest, and all the facts and circumstances attending its execution, are should seek to defeat the will by proving the insanity of the deceased, the burden would be shifted to them, but that would not take from the propounder the right to open and conclude the argument." McRae v. Lawrence, 75 N. Car. 289.

In South Carolina, on appeal, the case is tried de novo, and the appellant has the burden and the right to open and close. Southerlin v. McKinney, Rice (S. Car.) 35; Tillman v. Hatcher, Rice (S. Car.) 271.

In Indiana, the right to open and close is given by statute to the defendant (proponent), in an issue devisavit vel non, and he does not lose that right by allowing the plaintiff to introduce his evidence first. Perry v. Bland, 4 Ind. 297. The same right is given to the contestee by statute, in Ohio. Randebaugh v. Shelley, 6 Ohio St. 307.

Inquisitions of Lunacy.—Lunacy proceedings are admissible in evidence to fix the date of the commencement of the testator's lunacy. Hawkins v. Grimes, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 257.

In New York, the finding of an inquisition in lunacy, that the testatrix had been insane for two years preceding the time of inquiry, is admissible in evidence to show incapacity of the testatrix when she destroyed her will, notwithstanding New York Code Civ. Proc., § 2335, which restricts such inquiry to competency at the time of inquisition. Dominick v. Dominick, 20 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 286. See supra, this title, Presumption and Burden of Proof, as to presumptions arising from proceedings in lunacy against a testator.

Suicide.—The fact that the testator committed suicide, does not raise a presumption of his insanity. It is merely a circumstance to be considered with others in determining his capacity at the time the will was executed. Duffield v. Morris, 2 Harr. (Del.) 375. In this case the testator committed suicide the next day after the execution of the will. So, also, in Chambers v. Queen's Proctor, 2 Curt. 415; and in both cases the will was established. 1 Redf. on Wills (1876) 116; Taylor Med. Jur. (Reese's Am. ed. 1873) 802; Burrows v. Burrows, 1 Hagg. 109. See Brooks v. Barrett, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 94; McElwee v. Ferguson, 43 Md. 479; Frary v. Gusha, 59 Vt. 257; Godden v. Burke, 35 La. Ann. 160; Kahn's Will, 1 Conn. (N. Y.) 510; Burkhart v. Gladish, 123 Ind. 338; Card's Will, 8 N. Y. Supp. 297; 55 Hun (N. Y.) 607. In this case it is said that the law of New York presumes sanity in a suicide, from the fact that the attempt is made a felony by the Penal Code, § 178. Matter of Frickie, N. Y. Daily Reg. Feb. 6th, 1886; Pettitt v. Pettitt, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 191.

2. Hereditary Insanity.—See People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 9; State v. Simms, 68 Mo. 305; Baxter v. Abbott, 7 Gray (Mass.) 71. So the evidence that the father and mother, and remote ancestors of the testator were insane, is admissible, but the witness must be from his personal knowledge. Coughlin v. Poulson, 2 McArthur (D. C.) 308. Evidence of insanity of the sister and niece of the testatrix was introduced in Pren-tis v. Bates, 93 Mich. 234, reversing same case, 88 Mich. 567.

But it should appear that the insanity is transmissible by inheritance. So, the record of a hospital that the testator's father was admitted to the hospital because of intemperance resulting in melancholia, is inadmissible. Reichenbach v. Ruddach, 127 Pa. St. 564.

Eq. 243; Jackson v. Vandusen, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 144.

4. Wright v. Tatham, 5 Cl. & F. 670; admissible in evidence;¹ and, also, unpublished wills executed by the testator at other times, as they tend to show intelligence and a settled purpose to make dispositions.²

b. DECLARATIONS OF TESTATOR—(See also INSANITY, vol. 11, p. 158).—The declarations of the testator, made at or about the time of the execution of a will, of his acts and conduct,³ and Brinkman v. Rueggiesick, 71 Mo. 553; Townsend v. Pepperell, 99 Mass. 40; Vance v. Upson, 66 Tex. 476.

1. The Will as Evidence.—The will itself, as an act inter vivos, in its nature and effect may be judicially regulated as an essential and most important part of the evidences of capacity. Bell v. Martin, 1 Dow. Parl. 386; Jackson v. King, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 207; Tobin v. Jenkins, 29 Ark. 151; Brogden v. Brown, 2 Add. 445.

The probate of a will is also admissible in evidence, though it contains an ex parte affidavit of an attesting witness, that the testator was of sound mind. Summers v. Copeland, 125 Ind. 466.

The will itself, if proper and natural, is strong evidence of the testator's capacity. Young v. Barner, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 96. But the fact that it is unreasonable is not of itself evidence of the want of a disposing mind. Munday v. Taylor, 7 Bush (Ky.) 491.

The hardship of a case, as where children are disinherited, is a circumstance for the consideration of the jury, in connection with the other evidence submitted, tending to show insanity or other mental defect. Addington v. Wilson, 5 Ind. 137.

A bequest of property which does not belong to the testator does not necessarily show his incompetency to make a will. Marks v. Bryant, 4 Hen. & M. (Va.) 91.

The contestant may offer the will in evidence, though it has not been admitted to probate. Curry v. Bratney, 29 Ind. 195; Ware v. Ware, 8 Me. 42; Anderson v. Irwin, 101 Ill. 411.

As to the force and efficacy of the will, its contents and character, as evidence of mental capacity, see Couch v. Couch, 7 Ala. 519; Coleman v. Robertson, 17 Ala. 85; Clark v. Fisher, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 171; Gombault v. Public Admr., 4 Bradf. (N. Y.) 226; Harper v. Harper, 1 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 351; Stewart v. Lisenard, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 313; Munday v. 2. Love v. Johnston, 12 Ired. (N. Car.) 355.

In Hughes v. Hughes, 31 Ala. 519, overruling Roberts v. Trawick, 13 Ala. 68, a will made eight years before the execution of the will in contest, and disposing of the estate differently, was admitted in evidence.

In Carrico v. Neal, 1 Dana (Ky.) 163, it was held that an inference in favor of the validity of a will, from the fact that many of its provisions were like those of a former will executed by the testator when of a disposing mind, was rebutted by the fact that the will in contest bore a closer resemblance to a paper purporting to be a will made by the testator when he was clearly not of a disposing mind.

letters¹ written at that time, are admissible in evidence to show the state of his mind at the time the will was made, but not as Diffenderfer*, 50 Md. 466; Colvin v. Warford, 20 Md. 357.

Evidence of sudden irritability, moroseness and unprovoked profanity, indicating a complete change of disposition, is competent in connection with other facts, to show mental incapacity of a testator. Conely v. McDonald, 40 Mich. 150. So, also, prejudice, ill-will, or hatred on the part of an usually affable testator, and outbursts of violent passion, are admissible in evidence as tending to show his incapacity. Sherley v. Sherley, 81 Ky. 240. Also evidence of violent language used by the testator. In re Brown, 38 Minn. 112.

In Hamilton v. Hamilton, 10 R. I. 538, evidence that testator did not keep his buildings in as good repair in the latter part of his life as previously, was admitted, as showing want of capacity on his part.

Declarations of the testator which are made after the execution of the will, are admissible as evidence of his imbecility of mind. See Rambler v. Tryon, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 94; McTaggart v. Thompson, 14 Pa. St. 154; as well as those prior to the execution of the will. Pratte v. Coffman, 33 Mo. 76. So in Dennis v. Weekes, 51 Ga. 24, the declaration of the testator as follows: "I have done something this evening I ought not to have done. I have made my will, and did not make it as I wanted it, and know I did wrong, but I could not help it," was admitted as tending to show the state of the testator's mind.

But in Crocker v. Chase, 57 Vt. 413, the declarations of a testatrix, made three years after the execution of the will, were not admitted for the purpose of showing her mental condition at the time the will was executed. In this case it was said: "Subsequent declarations are admissible in support of the issue of incapacity, provided they tend to show incapacity at the time they were made. But if they have no tendency to prove such contemporaneous incapacity, they are not admissible against the will." See also Robinson v. Hutchinson, 26 Vt. 38.

In Whitman v. Morey, 63 N. H. 448, it was held, that upon an issue of insanity, the declarations of the testator showing the state of his feelings towards relatives, may be received. See also Staser v. Hogan, 120 Ind. 207.

Where the declarations of the testator were rejected because too remote to form part of the res gestæ, and the record does not show the circumstances under which they were made, the action of the court will not be disturbed on appeal. Dinges v. Branson, 14 W. Va. 100.

In Irwin v. Deschamps, 11 W. N. C. (Pa.) 365, it was held that the loose declarations of the testator were entitled to no weight, where it appeared that he understood the nature and effect of his will.

Evidence of the feelings of a testator towards a son-in-law, and the value of property bequeathed him, is admissible in an issue as to the mental capacity of the testator. Stokes v. Shippin, 13 Bush (Ky.) 180.

1. Letters.—Sensible, clear, and coherent letters written by a testator immediately before or after making his will, are strong proof of his mental capacity, and are admissible in evidence on that issue. Blakeley's Will, 48 Wis. 294; McNinch v. McNinch, 2 Rich. (S. Car.) 229; Foster v. Dickerson, 64 Vt. 233; Vance v. Upson, 66 Tex. 476. Letters addressed to a testator are inadmissible as evidence to his capacity, Wright v. Doe, 7 Ad. & El. 313; 34 E. C. L. 95, unless it be shown that they came to him, and that he exercised some act of judgment or understanding upon them. Waters v. Waters, 35 Md. 531. But in Doe v. Samuel, 1 Han. (New Bruns.) 265, letters written by a testator to his relatives before making his will, which excluded them, stating that he intended to leave evidence of the facts stated by him.¹ So, evidence of previously expressed intentions of the testator with respect to the disposition of his property is relevant and admissible.²

c. DECLARATIONS OF DEVISEES AND LEGATEES.—The declarations of persons interested under a will, affirming the competency of the testator, are generally admitted when they make against the interest of the person uttering them. Where, however, the declaration is made by one of several devisees or legatees, it seems from the weight of authority that it should not be admitted to prejudice the rights of the others.³

his property to them, were inadmissible in a contest of the will on the ground of mental incapacity of the testator.

In Woodward v. Sullivan, 152 Mass. 470, a letter written by an attorney, at the instance of the testatrix, repudiating a bond which she had made to convey her estate to a certain party, was admitted in a controversy as to her mental capacity to make a will which she executed 2½ years after giving the bond.

A paper written by the testator two years after making his will, explaining his reasons for its provisions, is admissible in evidence to show mental capacity on his part. Wood v. Sawyer, Phill. (N. Car.) 251.

1. Rusling v. Rusling, 36 N. J. Eq. 603; Jones v. McLellan, 76 Me. 49; Lang's Estate, 65 Cal. 19; Moritz v. Brough, 16 S. & R. (Pa.) 405; Rule v. Maupin, 84 Mo. 587; Gibson v. Gibson, 24 Mo. 228; Canada's Appeal, 47 Conn. 450; Comstock v. Hadlyme, etc., Soc., 8 Conn. 254; Robinson v. Hutchinson, 26 Vt. 38; Dickie v. Carter, 42 Ill. 376; Bates v. Bates, 27 Iowa 110; Thompson v. Updegraff, 3 W. Va. 629; Dinges v. Bronson, 14 W. Va. 100. But see Reel v. Reel, 1 Hawks (N. Car.) 250; Howell v. Barden, 3 Dev. (N. Car.) 442; and dissenting opinion in Jackson v. Kniffen, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 31.

Such declarations are not admissible as evidence of undue influence. Comstock v. Hadlyme, etc., Soc., 8 Conn. 203; Waterman v. Whitney, 1 Kern. (N. Y.) 157.

2. Sutton v. Sutton, 5 Harr. (Del.) 449; Seale v. Chambliss, 35 Ala. 519. Where the testator executed a codicil to his will during a sudden and fatal illness, it was competent to show that he had declared his intention to make the changes contained in the codicil a short time before his illness. Hammond v. Dike, 42 Minn. 273. See also Conch v. Conch, 7 Ala. 519; Prather v. McClelland, 76 Tex. 574; Bundy v. McKnight, 48 Ind. 502. But in Wurzell v. Beckman, 52 Mich. 478, declarations of a testatrix that she wanted the first will to stand, were inadmissible on an issue as to her mental capacity to make a second will.

The mere fact that a will is in the direction of a preconceived purpose of the testator, is not sufficient to establish the same unless he was of sound mind when the will was made. Hoover's Will, 19 D. C. 495. Nor can the will be regarded as invalid because not made in conformity to previous declarations of the testator. Quisenberry v. Quisenberry, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 386.

3. See INSANITY, vol. 11, p. 157, where numerous cases are cited. See also as agreeing with the weight of authority, Dale's Appeal, 57 Conn. 127; Seale v. Chambliss, 35 Ala. 19; Le Bau v. Vanderbilt, 3 Redf. (N. Y.) 384. In this latter case the question arose whether the declarations or admissions of one legatee, tending to show undue influence or want of testamentary capacity, were admissible in evidence in behalf of the contestants. Calvin, Surrogate, said: "The apparent irreconcilability of the authorities bearing upon the subject, has caused some embarrassment in deciding the question raised, and will justify a full statement of the cases, so far as they are applicable. In Beall v. Cunningham, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 399, it was held that the admission of one of several devisees, obviously against his interest, that the decedent had given him the paper propounded as a form of will, and told him 'that it was a mere form, which he might dispose of as he pleased,' was admissible. In Rogers v. Rogers, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 324, in an action contesting the validity of a will, the circuit judge had refused to permit proof of conversations in which the principal devisee stated a desire to own his father's homestead, and of another conversation in which said devisee remarked: 'We have had too much trouble and difficulty in getting this will, to attempt getting another.' On the authority of Beall v. Cunningham, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 399, the court on appeal held the testimony competent, and also stated the English practice of receiving admissions by one parishioner against the whole parishioners, where the question involved was common to all, as one could not be compelled to testify against himself and associates; and said the courts of Massachusetts and Pennsylvania had virtually applied the same rule in will cases. But the decree was affirmed, notwithstanding the alleged error, because the appellate court concluded that the party was not injured by the exclusion. In Fairchild v. Bascomb, 34 Vt. 398, evidence that a legatee stated to one of his brothers (one of the contestants of the will), that he did not know that the deceased had made a will, and that about a week after he stated to another the will's contents, was received, it appearing that said legatee was present at the execution of the will, and that he was sole legatee. In Atkins v. Sanger, 18 Mass. 192, evidence was admitted of the declaration of one of the executors and a legatee, as to facts which occurred at the time of making the will. In Phelps v. Hartwell, 1 Mass. 71, testimony was offered to prove a declaration of one of the legatees, giving his opinion, that the testator at the time of making his will was not of sound mind. Sedgwick, J., said that if the appellee, who made the declaration, were solely interested in establishing the will, he should be in favor of admitting the evidence, because he thought that evidence of opinions formed at the time, might be fairly presumed to be among the best means of informing a party as to the real state of the testator's mind; but as the other appellee was interested in the establishment of the will, it would not be proper to admit the evidence offered. In Davis v. Calvert, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 269, on a bill filed by one of the next of kin, against the probate of a will, the plaintiff offered to show that the executor who propounded the will, in a conversation a few days after the death of deceased, declared that though he had promised the deceased to provide for certain children, he did not consider himself bound to do so, because he was convinced that they were not children of the deceased. The evidence was rejected. But this was held error, the court saying: 'Calvert being executor and contingent devisee, representing every interest under the will, and being also defendant on the record, evidence of any relevant declarations or admissions by him, adverse to the will, and bearing upon the issues, or any of them, ought to have been admitted; the rule being that the admission of a party to the record, is always evidence, though he be but a trustee for another, with certain exceptions not applicable to this case. In Lewis v. Mason, 109 Mass. 169, it was held that on the question of undue influence, the statement of deceased's children made in his lifetime to another child, that such child should not stay in the testator's house, and that they had got the testator where they wanted him, was admissible, for the reason that it had some tendency to show a purpose upon the part of the former to keep the testator under their supervision and control, and exclude the other members of the family from any opportunity to interfere. This statement seems to have been made prior to the execution of the will. In Peebles v. Stevens, 8 Rich. (S. Car.) 198, it was held that where executors and legatees propounded the will for probate, their declarations, as well after as before the execution of the will, might be given in evidence by the next of kin. The court held them competent testimony, because they were from parties to the cause, and might be used by the adverse party, those making them having a joint interest and representing all the rights and interest of the testatrix, and of her legatees. Some members of the court concurring in the result, put their decision principally upon the ground that a confederacy had been shown between the executors, and that the admission of one confederate bound the others. See also Durant v. Ashmore, 2 Rich. (S. Car.) 184. In Harvey v. Anderson, 12 Ga. 69, the general rule was stated to be that the declarations of a party to the record, or of one identified in interest with him therein, were, as against such party, admissible in evidence, and that this rule applied to all cases where he had any interest, whether others were joint parties on the same side with him or not, and whatever might be its relative amount. In Williamson v. Naburs, 14 Ga. 286, where the admissions of an executrix and legatee of a life interest, and the proponent of the will, were held competent evidence on the trial of a caveat to that will, Starnes, J., said there was a conflict of opinion in the adjudicated cases on this subject; but held the case of Harvey v. Anderson, 12 Ga. 69, made the question res adjudicata, and that it was specially in that case reasonable that admissions by one who was executrix, who took the whole property for life, and was proponent of the will, could not have been made against this strong interest and bias, for the purpose of prejudicing the legatees in remainder, or from any other motive than truth. So in Brown v. Moore, 6 Yerg. (Tenn.) 272, the declarations of one of several devisees that the will had been unduly or fraudulently procured to be made, were held admissible. In Smith v. Morgan, 2 Moody & Rob. 257, it was held that the declarations of an assignee, made before his appointment as such, were competent; but Fenwick v. Thornton, M. & M. 51, is cited in Williams on Executors, as contrary to this doctrine. 'It may be doubted,' says the author, p. 1612, 'whether admissions made by an executor or administrator before he was clothed with that character, are receivable in evidence against him in an action brought by or against him, in his representative capacity.' In Clapp v. Fullerton, 34 N. Y. 190, the will was propounded by the principal legatee and contested on the ground of testator's imbecility or lunacy, and of undue influence on the part of the proponent—the proponent and contestant being daughters of the deceased—it being alleged that the contestant received but an insignificant legacy, because deceased was laboring under the insane delusion that the contestant was illegitimate. It was proved by a declaration of the proponent that this suspicion had its origin in the mind of her father nearly two years before his death, and in the interim between the execution of the instrument propounded and of a prior will. It does not appear at what period this admission of the proponent was made. It also appeared that the proponent, after the testator's death, intimated to a witness that her mother had been too intimate with her father's brother. This testimony seems not to have been objected to, nor is the question of its admissibility discussed by the court, which affirmed the decree of the surrogate. The evidence must have been given by the contestant for the purpose of showing undue influence exercised by the proponent upon the deceased to induce him to cut off her sister, and therefore, though the evidence were improperly admitted by the surrogate, its admissibility could not have been considered on an appeal by the party who gave it. In Brick v. Brick, 66 N. Y. 144, the declarations of deceased's wife, the sole legatee, made several years after the execution of the instrument propounded, was received, but the language of the opinion of Judge Rapallo, in that case, is 'All these declarations were made in 1864, and there is no proof of any attempt prior to the date of the will to interfere with the intercourse between the brothers.' Julke v. Adam, 1 Redf. (N. Y.) 454, was a case where the declarations of the widow of the deceased, against whom undue influence was charged, were received. The surrogate admitted the testimony as tending to prove an existing intent and disposition, citing Brush v. Holland, 3 Bradf. (N. Y.) 240. In that case, the contestants sought to introduce proofs of the declarations of the decedent's widow, to show incapacity and the exercise of undue influence, the widow being a legatee and executrix. The surrogate excluded the admission as such; but as it had some bearing upon the motives and dispositions of the persons charged with procuring the will, he was unwilling to say that in that view and bearing it was entirely inadmissible. The declaration in that case by the widow of her intention to control the deceased in the making of his will was made prior to the execution of the will. In Horn v. Pullman, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 471, probate was contested on the ground of mental incapacity, fraud and undue influence. The sole beneficiaries were Mr. and Mrs. Pullman, and the surrogate rejected the admission of Mrs. Pullman, that she thought what property the testator had when he was done with it, ought to be willed to her and her husband, and that they were going to have it, too; also evidence that she said that they had got the property, and had it so fixed that if the children of deceased contested the will, they would have to pay their own cost; that they had consulted a physician beforehand to see if he was competent to make a will, and that he was a nice old man and would do anything she asked him to. This rejection was held error. In Dan v. Brown, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 483,

d. OPINION TESTIMONY—(1) Non-Professionals.—The rule prevailing in most of the states of the Union and in England, is that a non-professional witness, other than a subscribing witness, may, after stating the facts upon which his opinion is based, say whether he considers that the testator was mentally competent at the time the will was executed; ¹ though in some states he is only permitted to state the impressions produced upon him by the conduct of the testator, and is restricted to the actual facts to which he testifies, and cannot give a general opinion it was held that the admission of the plaintiff or defendant, will in general affect none but himself, and not his co-plaintiff or co-defendant unless they are his partners; that in partition by several tenants in common against others, where the plea was non tement insimul, the admissions of one of the plaintiffs that a will was lost could not be received to affect his co-plaintiff, and that the confessions of one tenant in common of lands, is not evidence against his co-tenant. In Hammon v. Huntley, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 493, it was held that confessions by an executor of a debt due from his testator is not admissible as evidence in a suit for a debt against his co-executor to establish the original demand. And see James v. Hackley, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 273; Whitney v. Ferris, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 66; Forsyth v. Ganson, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 558; Osgood v. Manhattan Co., 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 612.

In Bovard v. Wallace, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 499, which was a feigned issue to try the validity of a will, the defendants offered to prove that one of the devisees had declared that the testator at the time of executing that writing, was incapable of making a will, which evidence was excluded as incompetent and the ruling sustained on appeal. And in Nussear v. Arnold, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 323, the declarations of the principal devisee that the testator was incapable of making a will were received in evidence; but on appeal the exception taken to the evidence was sustained. The same rule was followed in Hauberger v. Root, 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 431; Dietrich v. Dietrich, 4 Watts (Pa.) 167; Boyd v. Ebly, 8 Watts (Pa.) 66; Clark v. Morrison, 25 Pa. St. 453; Titlow v. Titlow, 54 Pa. St. 216; Dotts v. Feltzer, 9 Pa. St. 88. The rule in Massachusetts is the same, it being held that devisees and legatees have not that joint interest in the will which will make the admissions of one, though he be a party to the record, admissible against the other legatees. Sahiler v. Bumstead, 99 Mass. 112; and in Alabama, Blakey v. Blakey, 33 Ala. 611; and in West Virginia, Forney v. Ferrell, 4 W. Va. 729; and in Ohio, Thompson v. Thompson, 14 Ohio St. 356; and in Georgia, Morris v. Stokes, 21 Ga. 552. The reasoning and result of the last case go far toward overruling the earlier Georgia case above referred to—certainly as applicable to the case under consideration."

Doe, J., in a dissenting opinion in State v. Pike, 49 N. H. 408, said: "In England, no express decision of the point can be found, for the reason that such evidence has always been admitted without objection. It has been universally regarded as so clearly competent that it seems no English lawyer has ever presented to any court, any objection, question, or doubt in regard to it. But in Wright v. Tatham, 5 Cl. & F. 670; 4 Bing. N. Cas. 489, the question was involved in such a manner, and the number and strength of the judicial opinions were such, as to make that case an authority of the greatest weight in favor of the competency of the evidence." And see Lawe v. Jolliffe, 1 W. Bl. 365; Atty. Gen'l v. Parnter, 3 Bro. C. C. 442; King v. Arnold, 16 St. Tr. 695; Reg. v. Oxford, 9 C. & P. 525; 38 E. C. L. 208; Reg. v. Higginson, 1 C. & K. 129; 47 E. C. L. 129; Den v. Clark, 3 Add. 79; Wheeler v. Alderson, 3 Hagg. 602; Kinleside v. Harrison, 2 Ph. 449; White v. Driver, 1 Ph. 88; Cartwright v. Cartwright, 1 Ph. 122.

In Townsend v. Townsend, 7 Gill (Md.) 10, Martin, J., said, in reference to certain opinions of a non-professional witness as to the testator's capacity: "The impression made upon the mind of the witness by the conduct, manner, bearing, conversation, appearance, and acts of the testator in various business transactions, for a long series of years, is not mere opinion; it is knowledge, and strictly analogous to the cases of personal identity and handwriting, which are constantly established in the law courts by the opinion and judgment of persons who have enjoyed the opportunity of observing the person, or handwriting sought to be identified, or proved." This, Judge Redfield says, is placing the question upon true ground. And from the fact that the statute is silent in respect to the qualifications of the witness to prove the capacity of the testator, the same author concludes that it was not intended that the testimony of a professional expert should be required for that purpose, and that consequently, a non-professional witness, after stating facts, is competent to express his opinion as to the testator's sanity. 1 Redf. on Wills (1876) 141, 143.

The non-professional witness may be first examined as to his actual observations relating to the testator's state of mind, so as to lay a foundation for discrediting or rejecting his opinions. Pidcock v. Potter, 68 Pa. St. 342; Roberts v. Trawick, 13 Ala. 68.

While the California Code permits an "intimate acquaintance" of a particular person, to give his opinion as to that person's sanity, he cannot testify that in his opinion such person was competent to make a will. Taylor's Estate, 92 Cal. 564. But in Porter v. Throop, 47 Mich. 313, an old acquaintance of a testatrix was permitted to give his opinion as to her capacity to make the will in question, where the bequests were few and the provisions of the will simple.

In Richmond's Appeal, 59 Conn. 226, it was held that a witness had a right to illustrate her opinion of the capacity of a testatrix, by saying that her mental capacity was not greater than that of an average child of seven or eight years.

A non-professional witness may be asked, after testifying to facts within his own observation, whether, from his general appearance, he considered a certain person capable of making a contract or transacting important business. Wilkinson v. Pearson, 23 Pa. St. 117; Titlow v. Titlow, 54 Pa. St. 216.

It is proper to ask a non-professional witness, who had seen and conversed with the testator about the time of the execution of the will, whether, from his conversation and appearance, he was capable of comprehending or understanding a document of any considerable length if it had been read over to him; and what capacity the testator had, at the time the witness saw him, to understand business matters. Clary v. Clary, 2 Ired. (N. Car.) 78. He may also be asked to state his opinion as to the testator's capacity to make an intelligent disposition of his property by will. In re Pinney's Will, 27 Minn. 280.

A justice of the peace cannot express his opinion that the testator, who was a lawyer, conducted a case before him a short time before his death, "well and shrewdly." Staser v. Hogan, 120 Ind. 207.

Those who have had opportunities to observe the testator, may express an opinion as to his sanity, though they cannot give reasons for their judgment. Stubbs v. Houston, 33 Ala. 555; nor detail conversations had with him. Shanley's Appeal, 62 Conn. 325; and they may be asked their opinion as to his capacity to transact business, since that does not involve his capacity to make a will. Brockmeier v. Buck (Ohio), 12 Wkly. L. Bull. 213. But in Chase v. Winans, 59 Md. 475, the court refused to hear opinion testimony as to the capacity of the testator, more than fifty years having elapsed since his death.

A witness who is not an expert, but who is acquainted with an injured person and has frequently seen him, both before and after the injury, may testify as to whether or not he has observed any change, either in his physical or mental condition, since the happening of the injury. Bridge v. Oshkosh, 71 Wis. 363, and where the question is as to whether testamentary capacity has been destroyed by a spell of illness, a non-professional, who observed the testator both in health and sickness, may testify that he saw no change in the mental condition of the testator. Severin v. Zack, 55 Iowa 28.

But it is never permissible to allow a non-expert to give his opinion generally as to whether a testator had sufficient capacity to dispose of his property by will. Schneider v. Manning, 121 Ill. 376. A question asked such a witness as to what she thinks of the mental condition of a testator, from what she has observed and from what she has heard him say, is objectionable. Parsons v. Parsons, 66 Iowa 754. And if the witness admits that he knows no fact or circumstance on which his opinion is founded, he is incompetent. Bowling v. Bowling, 8 Ala. 538.

The opinion is not rendered inadmissible by the fact that the witness did not form his opinion at the time he observed the facts testified to, and upon which the opinion is based. Hathaway v. National L. Ins. Co., 48 Vt. 335; and the witness may, in forming his opinion, take into consideration any circumstance within his knowledge or observation which he deems evidence of mental capacity or incapacity at the time in question. In re Norman, 72 Iowa 84.

Opinion on Hypothetical Statement of Facts.—But a non-expert witness cannot, even upon cross-examination, be permitted to give his opinion upon the question whether a hypothetical statement of facts would, or would not, if true, be evidence of insanity. Dunham's Appeal, 27 Conn. 192; Pittard v. Foster, 12 Ill. App. 132.

Weight Given to Opinion.—The opinions of witnesses as to the capacity of the testator are entitled to but little weight; they should state the facts and leave inferences to the court or jury.

as to his sanity or insanity.¹ In still other states, a non-professional witness is not allowed to state his inference of the capacity or incapacity of the testator from the facts within his knowledge.²

Carpenter v. Calvert, 83 Ill. 62; Turner v. Cheesman, 15 N. J. Eq. 246; McCulloch's Will, 35 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 169. And this is especially so, where the opinion is that of a disappointed witness. Eddey's Appeal, 109 Pa. St. 406.

If it appear that the testator had capacity to acquire a fortune, and to take care of it in his old age, the opinion of a large number of ignorant witnesses that he was mentally incapable of making a will, is of no weight. Eddey's Appeal, 109 Pa. St. 406; Comb's Appeal, 105 Pa. St. 155; Taylor's Estate, 40 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 279.

The fact that a testator confers a power on his semi-imbecile son to dispose of certain property by will, does not establish testamentary capacity in the son, but is only evidence of the opinion of his father. Alexander's Will, 27 N. J. Eq. 463.

1. Matter of Ross, 87 N. Y. 514, it was stated thus: "Where non-professional witnesses, who did not attest the execution of a will, are examined as to matters within their own observation bearing upon the competency of the testator, they may characterize, as in their opinion rational or irrational, the acts and declarations to which they testify; but the examination must be limited to their conclusions from the specific facts they disclose, and they cannot be permitted to express their opinions on the general question whether the mind of the testator was sound or unsound." Clapp v. Fullerton, 34 N. Y. 190; Hewlett v. Wood, 55 N. Y. 634; Petrie v. Petrie, 6 N. Y. Supp. 831; 53 Hun (N. Y.) 638; Bell v. McMaster, 29 Hun (N. Y.) 272; Petrie v. Petrie, 25 N. Y. St. Rep. 309; Culver v. Haslam, 7 Barb. N. Y. 314; Clarke v. Sawyer, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 351. This is the rule for which Judge Redfield contends. 1 Redf. on Wills (1876) 144; McCarthy's Will, 55 Hun (N. Y.) 7; Ramsdell's Will, 3 N. Y. Supp. 499; 51 Hun (N. Y.) 636. He cannot be asked the broad question whether he considered the party non compos mentis, or incapable of managing his affairs. DeWitt v. Barley, 9 N. Y. 371.

In Thomas v. State, 40 Tex. 60, it was held that non-professional witnesses should be allowed to give their opinions, together with the facts on which their opinions were based, as to the sanity of the defendant, where it appears that their acquaintance with him was sufficient to enable them to form a correct estimate of his mental condition. In Brown v. Mitchell, 75 Tex. 9, it is said that the opinion of one who was present when a will was signed, and who witnessed the appearance, heard the conversation, and can state the condition of the testator at the time, is admissible on the question of mental capacity.

2. Hastings v. Rider, 99 Mass. 624; Buckminster v. Perry, 4 Mass. 593; Dickinson v. Barber, 9 Mass. 225; Needham v. Ide, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 510; Ellis v. Ellis, 133 Mass. 469; Smith v. Smith, 157 Mass. 389; Williams v. Spencer, 150 Mass. 346; Martin v. Perkins, 56 Miss. 204; Halley v. Webster, 21 Me. 461; Wyman v. Gould, 47 Me. 159.

But a witness may testify that he did not observe any failure of mind in the testator. Robinson v. Adams, 62 Me. 410. See further Bridgman's Appeal, 82 Me. 323; Fayeth v. Chesterville, 77 Me. 28. And in May v. Bradlee, 127 Mass. 414, the committee of the testator, not an expert, was allowed to be asked by the proponent whether he had, while guardian, observed anything which led him to infer in his own mind that his ward was crazy. And in Nash v. Hunt, 116 Mass. 237, the witness was permitted to say whether he observed "no incoherence of thought in the testator, nor anything unsound or singular in respect to his mental condition."

In Poole v. Richardson, 3 Mass. 330, certain witnesses were allowed "to testify to the appearance of the testator." And in Barker v. Comins, 110 Mass. 477, the unprofessional witnesses were allowed to say whether they noticed any change in the testator's intelligence, or want of coherence in his remarks. See also McConnell v. Wildes, 153 Mass. 487.

The same rule existed in New Hampshire until the case of Hardy v. Merrill, 56 N. H. 227; which overruled Boardman v. Woodman, 47 N. H. 120; State v. Pike, 49 N. H. 399; State v. Archer, 54 N. H. 468. The rule in that state now is that non-professional witnesses who are not subscribing

The qualification of non-expert witnesses to give opinions as to the mental soundness of the testator, is a question of fact for the trial court.¹

(2) Experts.—The opinion of an expert² as to the sanity of a testator is receivable in evidence, whether founded upon his personal knowledge and observation of the case, or upon a hypothetical statement of facts.³ Any educated practising physician is witnesses, may testify to their opinion in regard to the sanity of the testator, when founded upon their knowledge and observation of his appearance and conduct.

1. Carpenter v. Hatch, 64 N. H. 573. And where there is no abuse of discretion, the decision of a trial court as to whether a witness is sufficiently acquainted with one, whose sanity is in question, to speak on such issue, will not be interfered with. People v. Levy, 71 Cal. 618.

2. An "expert" is defined by Judge Redfield to be "one who has had special opportunity, by study and observation, to imbue his mind with such knowledge as peculiarly fits him to give instruction to others on the particular question involved." 1 Redf. on Wills (1876) 137.

In Toome's Estate, 54 Cal. 509, a Roman Catholic priest was held to be an expert virtute officii, and competent to express an opinion as to the sanity of the testator whom he attended in his last illness.

3. Schouler on Wills (1892), § 206; 1 Redf. on Wills (1876) 154.

The question whether the failure of the testator to provide for a sister, by his will, as he had all his life intended to do, shows mental incapacity, no motive or reason for such failure appearing, is not a matter of science, and should not be put to an expert. Stockton v. Thorn (Minn. 1888), 39 N. W. Rep. 143. Nor the question whether the testator if sane "would have cut off his only son with fifty dollars." A belief respecting the sanity of the testator, founded on a provision of his will, is not competent evidence. Commonwealth Title Ins. Co. v. Gray (Pa. 1892), 24 Atl. Rep. 640.

The testimony of a medical attendant in an asylum where the testatrix resided when she made her will, is admissible to show her sanity, and that she continued voluntarily in the asylum. Martin v. Johnston, 1 F. & F. 122.

A medical witness who has testified to having seen the deceased some two or three months before he made his will, may be asked, "From what you saw, what was his mental capacity?" Per Manning, J., and Martin, C. J., contra, Campbell and Christancy, J. J., in White v. Bailey, 10 Mich. 155.

An expert cannot be asked whether, in his opinion, the testator was competent to make a will, the standard of mental capacity for that purpose being a question of law, Kempsey v. McGinniss, 21 Mich. 123. See also Runyon v. Price, 15 Ohio St. 1; Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 398; Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 459; Wilkinson v. Pearson, 23 Pa. St. 117; Hewlett v. Wood, 55 N. Y. 634; nor whether the testator was competent to give orders for a complicated bequest. Matter of Buckley's Will (Surr. Ct.), 2 N. Y. Supp. 27.

An expert may be asked, "Was the testator, in your opinion, at the time, etc., capable of planning and executing such a paper as is here offered as his will?" and further, "Was he in a mental and physical condition to transact any business requiring an exercise of the judgment, the reasoning faculties, and a consecutive continuation of thought?" Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 459; Kempsey v. McGinniss, 21 Mich. 123.

Experts cannot give their opinion as to whether the fact that the life-long purpose of the testator to provide for his sister was abandoned at his death-bed, without apparent motive, indicated any change in his intellect, the jury being as competent judges as any expert on that point. Stockton v. Thorn (Minn. 1888), 39 N. W. Rep. 143.

A medical expert may express a direct opinion as to the sanity of the testator, where he has had an opportunity for personal observation. Baxter v. Abbott, 7 Gray (Mass.) 71; 1 Redf. on Wills (1876) 154; contra Walker v. Walker, 34 Ala. 469. He may also state on his examination, in chief the reasons for his opinion. Collier v. Simpson, 5 C. & P. 73; 24 E. C. L. 219; Keith v. Lothrop, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 453. But he cannot combine his personal knowledge with representations made to him by others, such as nurses and physicians, and, from the whole, pronounce a direct opinion as to the testator's sanity. Heald v. Thing, 45 Me. 392; Wetherbee v. Wetherbee, 38 Vt. 454. Nor give an opinion which requires him to weigh collateral testimony. Kerr v. Lunsford, 31 W. Va. 659.

As to how far the superintendent of an insane asylum may give his opinion as to the sanity of a testatrix who was a ward of the asylum, from the record of her case there kept by his predecessor, and not from his personal knowledge, see Prentis v. Bates, 93 Mich. 234. In Potts v. House, 6 Ga. 324, it was held that the opinion of a medical expert as to the mental capacity of a testator was admissible, whether founded on facts coming within his own observation, or testified by others. Though in White v. Bailey, 10 Mich. 155, it was held that neither medical experts nor other witnesses can be allowed in any case to give an opinion upon mental capacity or condition, without first showing the circumstances and facts upon which the opinion is based. And see Hastings v. Rider, 99 Mass. 622; Chandler v. Barrett, 21 La. Ann. 58.

Form of Question.—In Woodbury v. Obear, 7 Gray (Mass.) 467, it was held that in a case of conflicting evidence, the expert witness should not be asked, "Suppose all the facts stated by the witnesses to be true, was the testator laboring under an insane delusion, or was he of an unsound mind?" The proper formula is, "If the jury should find these facts (stating them) to be true, what would be your opinion, upon the facts so found, on the question of the testator's soundness of mind?" The reason given for the objection to the first form of interrogatory is that, the evidence being conflicting, the answer of the witness might tend to mislead, "since it might, unknown to the jury, be founded upon some proposition or statement of facts differing in material particulars from that which appeared to them to be satisfactorily established." Kempsey v. McGinniss, 21 Mich. 124.

A hypothetical question should not be so drawn as to call for an interpretation of fact, which the jury are as competent to make as an expert. Prentis v. Bates, 88 Mich. 567.

In Crowell v. Kirk, 3 Dev. (N. Car.) 355, approved in Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 398, it was held that questions propounded to experts and to others calling for an opinion, should be so framed as to require them to state the degree of the testator's capacity in their own language, in other words, "in the best way they can."

1. Thomas, J., in Baxter v. Abbott, 7 Gray (Mass.) 71; semble, Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 398; Hastings v. Rider, 99 Mass. 622; Chandler v. Barrett, 21 La. Ann. 58. The rule that the physician must be in active practice, to be called as an expert, is not absolute. 1 Redf. on Wills (1876) 154 n.

A physician may testify as to the testator's unsoundness of mind, but cannot express an opinion as to his testamentary capacity. Palmer's Estate, 5 W. N. C. (Pa.) 542. See also Burdon's Estate, 11 W. N. C. (Pa.) 138.

A physician may testify from his professional knowledge, whether the condition of testator at the time he committed suicide was an indication of insanity, and whether the act of suicide was evidence of insanity. Frary v. Gusha, 59 Vt. 257.

2. Weight of Expert Testimony.—Rankin v. Rankin, 61 Mo. 295. Physicians as experts are no better prepared to judge of the mental capacity of a person to execute a will, than other men of sound judgment and good common sense. Carpenter v. Calvert, 83 Ill. 62.

In Matter of Kledaisch, 2 Conn. (N. Y.) 450, Ransom, Surrogate, said, "The testimony of experts, although admissible always and a great aid to a court and jury in discovering where the truth lies in a question of this kind (sanity of testator), cannot ever be held to be conclusive and controlling against the testimony of those persons of intelligence who saw the man daily, and who had transactions with him of a social character and in business." See 1 Redf. on Wills (1876) 155 n, for a general criticism of expert testimony.

The testimony of three subscribing witnesses, showing the sanity of the testator, should prevail over the opinion of an expert which would have the

(3) Subscribing Witnesses.—Subscribing witnesses, though non-experts, and unfamiliar with the testator's habits and character, may give their opinion as to his mental capacity at the time the will was executed, and this without first stating the facts upon which such opinion is based.¹

As a matter of law, the testimony of a subscribing witness has been said to be entitled to no more weight than that of an ordieffect of showing the subscribing witnesses to be guilty of perjury. Lyddy's Will (Surr. Ct.), 4 N. Y. Supp. 468.

Expert testimony in a case of alleged mental incapacity of a testator, from drunkenness, is not entitled to much weight. O'Keefe's Estate, Myr. Prob. (Cal.) 154.

See generally, upon the subject of expert evidence, EXPERT AND OPINION EVIDENCE, vol. 7, p. 490.

Y.) 638; Williams v. Lee, 47 Md. 321; Gibson v. Gibson, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 329; Logan v. McGinnis, 12 Pa. St. 27; Egbert v. Egbert, 78 Pa. St. 326; Titlow v. Titlow, 54 Pa. But the law expects from the subscribing witnesses, peculiar care, caution, and circumspection. Sloan v. Maxwell, 3 N. J. Eq. 563.

In Hastings v. Rider, 99 Mass. 624, Gray, J., said: "The subscribing witnesses to a will may testify to their opinion of the testator's sanity, upon its being presented for probate, because that is one of the facts necessary to the validity of the will, which the law places them around the testator to attest and testify to." And see Appleby v. Brock, 76 Mo. 314.

But in Williams v. Spencer, 150 Mass. 346, it was decided that a subscribing witness could not express an opinion as to the sanity of the testator, formed from what he had seen and heard since the will was executed. Nor can a subscribing witness express an opinion as to whether the testator had sufficient strength of mind to comprehend a clause creating charitable trusts in a will. Melanefy v. Morrison, 152 Mass. 476.

The opinion of the draftsman and subscribing witness of a prior will, that the testator was, at the time of the execution thereof, of sound mind, is not admissible in a contest of a later will for want of mental capacity of the testator. Doe v. Gilbert, 22 New Brunswick Rep. 576.

A subscribing witness cannot be required to state the facts which he observed at the time of the execution of the will before giving his opinion as to the testator's sanity; but either party may examine him as to what then transpired. Robinson v. Adams, 62 Me. 369; Logan v. McGinnis, 12 Pa. St. 27. But in Cilley v. Cilley, 34 Me. 162, it was said that the subscribing witnesses may give their opinions as to the sanity of the testator, when the facts are stated upon which their opinions are founded.

A subscribing witness cannot be asked if he would have attested the will if he had known the testator was insane. Such evidence is irrelevant. Nor can it ordinarily be shown that the testator had a dislike to one of the subscribing witnesses. Per Gibson, C. J., in Spence v. Spence, 4 Watts (Pa.) 165.

In Clary v. Clary, 2 Ired. (N. Car.) 78, it was said that no good reason appears for the rule which permits a subscribing witness to give his opinion as to the sanity of the testator, and denies the same privilege to others who were present when the will was executed, though they were persons of equal and perhaps greater powers of discrimination, and better acquainted with the social, domestic, and business habits of the testator. And see Appleby v. Brock, 76 Mo. 314; Schouler on Wills (1887), § 201.

And in Huff v. Huff, 41 Ga. 696, it was said that the functions of the subscribing witnesses are not to judge of the mental capacity of the testator; they are merely to witness the execution of the will.

Necessity for Calling Subscribing Witnesses.—It is not necessary to establish the validity of a will, that the subscribing witnesses shall testify as to the sanity of the testator at the time

nary witness of equal abilities and opportunities for observation.¹ And where a subscribing witness discredits the capacity of the testator, his testimony should be received with great caution.²

3. Province of Court and Jury.—The general rule is that the question of mental capacity is one of fact and peculiarly within the province of the jury, and that the court, while it may, according to the practice of some jurisdictions, determine whether there is sufficient evidence to send or withhold a case from the jury,³ cannot instruct them that such and such facts constitute capacity or incapacity of the testator.⁴

the will was executed. Cilley v. Cilley, 34 Me. 162; Orser v. Orser, 24 N. Y. 51. But under some conditions the failure of the proponents to call the subscribing witnesses to the will may be a damaging circumstance against their case. Ulmer's Appeal (Pa. 1888), 12 Atl. Rep. 686.

1. The rule is, that the value of his testimony is to be determined "with reference to his opportunity for observation, his skill and care in observing, his intelligence and powers of discernment and memory." Thornton v. Thornton, 39 Vt. 158. And see Garrison v. Garrison, 15 N. J. Eq. 266.

Where the subscribing witnesses to a will are called, and disagree as to the capacity of the testator, other proof may be given as to that fact, and the jury must decide upon the whole evidence. Bell v. Clark, 9 Ired. (N. Car.) 239. And though the subscribing witnesses testify that he was not of sound mind, his capacity may be established by other sufficient evidence. Sechrest v. Edwards, 5 Metc. (Ky.) 171.

2. The testimony of a subscribing witness who discredits the capacity of the testator, should be received with great caution. Cheatham v. Hatcher, 30 Gratt. (Va.) 56; Lamberts v. Cooper, 29 Gratt. (Va.) 61. See also Snyder v. Cunningham (Ky. 1891), 16 S. W. Rep. 130; Webb v. Dye, 18 W. Va. 376; Young v. Barner, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 103; Hoerth v. Zable, 92 Ky. 202; Cook's Estate, 41 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 6; Howard's Will, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 203.

The declaration of a deceased subscribing witness made after the will was executed, cannot be received to show mental incapacity of the testator. Boardman v. Woodman, 47 N. H. 120; Sellars v. Sellars, 2 Heisk. (Tenn.) 430; Weatherhead v. Sewell, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 272; Sewall v. Robbins, 139 Mass. 164. Contra, Harden v. Hays, 9 Pa. St. 151.

Where the sanity of the testator has been proved by two of the subscribing witnesses, the declarations of the third, who is out of the state and whose handwriting has not been proved, cannot be received to invalidate the will. Fox v. Evans, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 506.

The declarations of a subscribing witness made out of court, can only be used to impeach their testimony, and not to show the testator's incapacity. Stirling v. Stirling, 64 Md. 138.

3. Cuffman v. Long, 82 Pa. St. 72; Rees v. Stillé, 38 Pa. St. 138.

The proper question to be submitted to the jury on an inquiry as to the testator's sanity is, whether his mind and memory were sufficiently sound to enable him to know and understand the business in which he was engaged when he executed the will. Harvey v. Sul-lens, 56 Mo. 372; McClintock v. Curd, 32 Mo. 411; Tenbrook v. Lee, 5 Clark (Pa.) 37; Lyons v. Van Riper, 26 N. J. Eq. 337; Jamison v. Jamison, 3 Houst. (Del.) 108.

4. See INSANITY, vol. 11, p. 158; Trezevant v. Rains (Tex. 1892), 19 S. W. Rep. 567; Matter of Bull (C. Pl.), 2 N. Y. Supp. 52; Gardiner v. Gardiner, 34 N. Y. 155.

The court cannot instruct the jury in regard to any particular delusion of the testator, that it was a test of insanity, nor that certain specified acts of the testator, if proven, would be strong evidence of insanity. Gardner v. Lamb-back, 47 Ga. 133.

In White v. Helmes, 1 McCord (S. Car.) 430, a motion was made for a new trial, on the ground that the judge had erred in charging the jury that "no evidence had been given to show that the deceased had been out of his senses at any moment before the will was made," but the motion was denied, the judge having further instructed them that it was their province to decide whether the testator was of sound mind. See

TESTE.—In old English practice the initial and emphatic word of the clause at the conclusion of writs, containing the attestation of the sovereign, or chief justice out of whose court it was issued, and the day on which it was issued or granted. It corresponded to the date of other instruments. In modern practice, the word teste has been retained, as the name of the corresponding clause

An instruction that the testimony of the testator's neighbors was of more weight than that of others not having the same opportunities of knowing him, is erroneous because it invades the province of the jury in respect to the credibility of witnesses. Cline v. Lindsey, 110 Ind. 337; Durham v. Smith, 120 Ind. 463.

In Ware v. Ware, 8 Me. 42, the appellant (contestant) requested the court to instruct the jury that, if an illusion was fixed upon the mind of the testator as a reality, for months before and up to the time of the execution of the will, and his conduct was at any time influenced by such illusion, he was not of sane mind. . . . And that if he really, for months before and up to the time of executing the will, believed that he was repeatedly visited by a superhuman being whom he saw, felt, heard and conversed with, then he was not of sane mind. The instruction was refused, and on appeal, Mellen, C. J., said: "The question of sanity often depends on a multitude of circumstances, various and minute, peculiar and contradictory, and where lights and shades are sometimes almost lost in each other. Besides, it is perhaps almost impossible for a judge to draw any certain divisional line, and present it beforehand for the regulation of the jury. The line of separation between the powers and provinces of court and jury, in the decision of such cases, we apprehend it is also equally difficult to draw. . . . In addition to these remarks, we would observe that the authorities sanction, in clear language, the course pursued on the trial of this cause. Starkie, vol. 3, p. 1707, says, 'The question of sanity is so peculiarly a question of fact for the decision of a jury, that a will of real estate cannot be set aside in equity without being first tried at law on an issue of devisavit vel non.'" In Robinson v. Adams, 62 Me. 369, the court referred to the jury the question of the existence of communication between the testatrix and her deceased husband, and other kindred questions. This, Judge Redfield thinks, was error. 1 Redf. on Wills (1876), p. 163.

In a case where the delusions of the testator had no effect upon his will, it was held that the judge properly left to the jury the question whether or not he was capable of making a will. Smee v. Smee, L. R., 5 P. D. 84.

See generally, as to province of court and jury, QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT, vol. 19, p. 598.

Miscellaneous Matters—Practice.—A general allegation that the testator was of unsound mind, includes every species of unsoundness of mind. Willett v. Porter, 42 Ind. 250.

An averment that, by reason of softening of the brain, the testator's "memory and mental faculties had become almost wholly obliterated" and that he had been in that condition for many months before the will was made, and died a few weeks after its execution, sufficiently alleges want of testamentary capacity. Holden v. Meadows, 31 Wis. 284.

Appeal.—Where the question of capacity to make a will has been properly submitted to a jury, and the judge before whom the trial is had, expresses no dissatisfaction with their verdict, the court will seldom interfere on appeal. Den v. Ayres, 13 N. J. L. 153.

Where the evidence preponderates in favor of the will, the court will not reverse a judgment sustaining it because of the admission of immaterial evidence. Hoar v. Seaman (Pa. 1888), 15 Atl. Rep. 716.

Costs.—An executor propounding the will in good faith is entitled to his costs, whether the will be sustained or rejected. Perrine v. Applegate, 14 N. J. Eq. 531. If there are strong circumstances to justify a contest of the will, the court will direct the costs to be paid out of the estate. Frost v. Wheeler, 43 N. J. Eq. 573. But not where the contest is unfounded and vexatious. Nichols v. Binns, 1 Sw. & Tr. 239; Stacey v. Spratley, 4 De G. & J. 199.

in modern writs, being particularly applied to the day on which the writ is witnessed, that is, issued or supposed to be issued, though it is expressive also of the place where the court is or was sitting at such time.¹

TESTIMONY—(See also BILL TO PERPETUATE TESTIMONY, vol. 2, p. 277; EVIDENCE, vol. 7, p. 42; WITNESSES).—Testimony is oral evidence.² Evidence includes all testimony; but "testimony" is only a species of evidence distinguished from documentary or written evidence.³

1. Burr. Law Dict.

In Gwin v. Latimer, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 27, it was said "that the teste of a writ means the date or time at which it is witnessed or issued." As to the necessity of the teste, see WRITS; SUMMONS, vol. 24, p. 523.

2. A species of evidence by means of witness. Carroll v. Bancker, 43 La. Ann. 1078; 43 La. Ann. 1194. In the old books, "testimony" means witness. Co. Litt. 326.

In Woods v. State (Ind. 1893), 33 N. E. Rep. 903, it was held that "testimony" is the statement of a witness under oath, but it need not be made to a judicial tribunal; that a deposition may contain testimony although never used in the pending cause.

3. Lindley v. Dakin, 13 Ind. 388; McConaha v. Carr, 18 Ind. 443.

So a statement in a bill of exceptions, purporting to contain all the evidence given on a trial, that it contained all the "testimony" given, was held insufficient where it appeared that written or documentary evidence was introduced on the trial. McDonald v. Elfee, 61 Ind. 279; Gazette Printing Co. v. Morss, 60 Ind. 153.

But in Miller v. Wolf, 63 Iowa 233, where the appellant stated in the abstract of evidence, certified on appeal, that it contained all the testimony, although the use of the word "testimony" was acknowledged to be inaccurate, it was said that, "If it can be fairly inferred, however informal the language used, that the appellant claims that he has presented an abstract of all the evidence, this court will presume that he has, unless the appellee sets out additional evidence." And where a bill of exceptions recited in its introductory clause that in order to maintain the issues on his part, the plaintiff introduced the following "testimony," but from the context it was clear that the word "testimony" referred to documentary evidence, the misuse of the word was not allowed to defeat the operation of the instrument. Harris v. Tomlinson, 130 Ind. 426.

5. The verdict of a jury finding a party guilty of a bill of scandal is uncertain and cannot be construed as being guilty of the bill of scandal charged in the indictment. Rep. 425.

Where, in an election to decide whether or not a school district should issue bonds, the ballot simply read "for bonds" and "against bonds," omitting the word "the," it was held not to invalidate the election. State v. Metzger, 26 Kan. 395.

The omission of the word "the" in signing the name of a corporation to a deed of assignment, is not fatal to the subscription. DeRiesthal v. Walton, 66 Md. 470.

letters testamentary," the word "the" cannot be construed as referring only to the original grant, but upon the death or resignation of an administrator, an action may be begun any time within two years from the grant of letters testamentary to his successor. Eddy v. Adams, 145 Mass. 489.

Where a legacy was of "ten shares of the stock of the W. & N. R. Co.," the word "the" preceding stock, is ambiguous, and may as well refer to the stock of the company in general as to the stock owned by the testatrix; but where a subsequent clause of the will bequeaths "the balance of my stock as per my stock book," the legacy is thereby made specific. Harvard Unitarian Soc. v. Tufts, 151 Mass. 76.

A statute allowing "the party aggrieved" to prosecute an action to set aside a judgment obtained by fraud of the prevailing party, cannot be construed as giving the right to any person aggrieved, not a party to the action, though he be directly interested in the result. The definite article "the" and the word "party," used with distinct reference to a judgment recovered in an action, are not to be taken to have been employed without regard to their proper signification, unless upon satisfactory reasons apparent in the terms or the obvious purposes of the enactment. Stewart v. Duncan, 40 Minn. 410.

"The credit," in a guarantee, points to a definite credit—"something ascertained and known" (per Bramwell, B., Broom v. Batchelor, 25 L. J. Ex. 299; 1 H. & N. 255; but the majority of the court was against him in the conclusion, partly led up to by the dictum just cited).

The English statute providing that where the annual value of "the house occupied by" a brewer does not exceed ten pounds, the beer brewed by him shall not be chargeable with duty, was held to mean the house occupied by him, in which he lives. The words "in which he lives" do not actually appear in the judgment, but embody its principle, Pollock, B., observing: "It was intended to get at the status of the man who brews." It is difficult to see, however, why it was more easy to read into the exception the words "in which he lives" rather than the words "in which he brews," which the court refused. Tippett v. Hart, 52 L. J. M. C. 41; 10 Q. B. Div. 483.

Where a complaint for selling adulterated milk in violation of Massachusetts Gen. Sts., ch. 49, § 151, after alleging the official character of the inspector and that he kept an office and books as required by the statute, charges that the defendant, being a dealer in milk, and so recorded "in the books of said inspector," did sell, etc., instead of an allegation that he was recorded in the books aforesaid, or in the said books, does not sufficiently show that he was recorded in any such books as the statute requires an inspector to keep. In the statute, doubtless "the books" mean the books before mentioned, i. e., the books kept for the purpose of recording the names of persons engaged in the sale of milk; but it does not necessarily follow that these words are to be taken to have the same meaning in the complaint which they have in the statute. *Com. v. I. DEFINITION.—A theater, in modern times, is a house for the exhibition of dramatic performances;—a playhouse, comprehending the stage, pit, boxes, galleries and orchestra.¹

1. Webster's Dict.

A theater is any edifice used for the purpose of dramatic, operatic, or other representations, plays, or performances, for admission to which entrance-money is received, not including halls rented or used occasionally for concerts or theatrical representations. U. S. Act, July 13th, 1866, § 9; Abb. Law Dict.

The word theater does not import, necessarily, anything but the stage on which the actors play, and the room in which the acting is done and seen. Lee v. State, 56 Ga. 477.

A theater, in ancient times, was an edifice in which spectacles or shows were exhibited for the amusement of spectators; but in modern times, it is a house for the exhibition of dramatic performances. A theatrical exhibition must be either such as pertains to a theater, or to the drama, for the representation of which the theater is designed. A drama is a story represented by action; the representation is as if the real persons were introduced and employed in the action itself. It is ordinarily designed to be spoken, but it may be represented in pantomime, when the actors use gesticulation, sometimes in the form of the ballet, but do not speak; or in opera, where music takes the place of poetry and of ordinary speech, and the dramatic treatment is essentially different from either. An opera is a musical drama, consisting of airs, choruses, recitations, etc., enriched with magnificent scenery, machinery, and other decorations, and representing some passionate action. The spoken drama, therefore, and the opera, agree in the method or manner which is essential to the dramatic art, viz., imitation in the way of action. In the former, the actor observes the rules of rhetoric and of oratory, and follows the special laws of dramatic delivery; whilst in the latter, he employs the power of music, both vocal and instrumental, as a medium of artistic and passionate expression. Bell v. Mahn, 121 Pa. St. 225; 6 Am. St. Rep. 786.

Although the term "theater" has an extended signification, and comprehends a variety of performances, yet it is conceived that all which it does legitimately comprehend, partake more or less of the character of the drama. Jacko v. State, 22 Ala. 73.

Tumbling and Fencing.—Neither tumbling nor fencing are theatrical entertainments. Rex v. Handy, 6 T. R. 286.

Negro Minstrels.—Theatrical performances are not confined to the pure drama, but may include negro minstrel

II. ERECTION—1. Municipal Control.—Cities usually have power to control the erection of theaters within their corporate limits, and may prevent the construction of insecure and unsafe buildings,¹ and make such regulations as may be deemed necessary to secure the safety of the audience.²

performances. Shelby Co. Taxing Dist. v. Emerson, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 312.

Place of Public Entertainment.—The room in which a dramatic piece is performed, and to which persons paying for it are admitted for the purpose of hearing it, is, for the time, a place of public entertainment, although the room is ordinarily used for different purposes. Russell v. Smith, 12 Q. B. 217; 64 E. C. L. 215.

A person who, being the owner of a two-story building, offers to rent, for use as a theater, a room or hall in the upper story, containing a small stage and dressing-room, which might be used for small dramatic exhibitions, but who had never used it as a theater nor let it to another to be so used, cannot be convicted of "engaging in, or carrying on the business of keeping a theater," under the provisions of the revenue law. Gillman v. State, 55 Ala. 248.

Payment of Money Does Not Fix Character of Place.—The payment of money, although a usual incident of a place of amusement and entertainment, is not necessary to give that character to a place. Private Theatricals, 28 Jour. Jur. 74. See infra, this title, License—Construction of Statutes Requiring.

1. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—Regulation of Buildings, vol. 15, p. 1176.

Supervising Board.—Where a given municipal body is empowered to pass upon plans of a given public building, and prohibit its erection if it finds the same unsatisfactory, it has no right to disapprove of plans, on the ground that it does not approve of the site contemplated. Reg. v. Central Board of Health, 15 Vict. 375.

Restraining Erection of Stand Overlooking Ball-Grounds.—But an injunction will not be granted to restrain the use by a landowner, of a stand on his premises from which persons are allowed to witness base-ball games on adjoining grounds. Detroit Base Ball Club v. Deppert, 61 Mich. 63; 1 Am. St. Rep. 566.

Subscriptions Toward Building a Hall—Ownership.—Subscriptions toward building a hall for the use of a brass band, made "for the purpose of assisting such band," without any conditions whatever, amount to gifts to the members of the band, and such building when erected belongs to them as tenants in common. Higgins v. Riddell, 12 Wis. 587.

2. Obstruction of Passage Ways.—The provisions of statutes relating to obstruction of passage ways and exits in theaters, declaring that the same shall be kept free from chairs, or that persons shall not be allowed to stand therein during performances, should be construed literally. The statute is violated, even if the number allowed to stand is not so great as to prevent free egress in case of danger. It is not necessary to prove that the manager or proprietor of the theater knew of the violation in question. It is sufficient if tickets for a performance were sold by defendant's agents, after they knew that the seats in the house were filled. Fire Department v. Stetson, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 125.

In Fire Department v. Hill, 14 N. Y. Supp. 158, it appeared that the defendant was lessee of the theater, but had sublet to another the privilege of giving performances therein, defendant furnishing ticket sellers, ticket takers, and necessary ushers; that the ushers were employed and paid by defendant, though they were subject to the orders of the party giving the performances, and that it was the latter who admitted the persons who crowded the passage ways on the occasion in question; that about a week before, defendant's attention had been called by officers to the violation of the statute, and he had promised compliance with the law; but though he was afterwards in and about the theater, the infraction of the law still continued. This was held to have authorized a finding that the defendant allowed the passage ways to be obstructed as complained of.

Doors of Theaters.—In Florida, by act of June 5th, 1891, doors of theaters are required to open outwardly, and owners, managers, or lessees failing so to provide, are declared guilty of felony.

Attendance of Officer—Unreasonable

2. Furnishings—Fixtures.—The term “fixtures,” when applied to a theater, includes all the fittings up necessary to make it suitable for theatrical purposes.¹

III. LEASE—1. In General.—In the lease of a theater the parties are bound by the covenants, as, for example, a covenant that the theater shall be used only for theatrical purposes.²

Ordinance.—An ordinance requiring owners of theaters to pay the city constable $2.00 per night for his attendance at public performances therein, has been held unreasonable and void. Waters v. Leech, 3 Ark. 110.

1. In Forbes v. Howard, 4 R. I. 364, it was held that although chairs in the boxes might not properly come under the head of “fixtures,” yet if the defendant neglected to furnish seats, which would be necessary fixtures, the cost of chairs which the plaintiff was obliged to furnish, to supply the place of seats for the boxes, might be given in evidence to enable the jury to estimate the damages which the plaintiff suffered in consequence of the defendant's non-performance of his contract to furnish necessary fixtures. Upholstery upon the seats was considered as undoubtedly within the terms of the contract to furnish fixtures; and where a contract to furnish accommodations for a theater, on a five years' lease, in a building about to be erected, refers for the finish of the building to the specifications in a building contract, in which no provision is made for painting the theater walls, such painting cannot be claimed to be within the first contract, although the same provides for the furnishing “of scenery and fixtures for the theater;” the painting of the walls of the theater not falling within the denomination either of “scenery” or “fixtures.”

Chairs Screwed to Floor—Mechanic's Lien.—Where chairs were furnished for a theater, of a pattern that had to be made with special reference to the size, shape, and plan of the auditorium in which they were to be placed, and were secured to the floor, as they could not stand alone, they were held to form a part of the building, and a mechanic's lien was allowed to be filed and enforced against the building, by the one furnishing them. Grosz v. Jackson, 6 Daly (N. Y.) 463.

Evidence—Experts.—The opinions of a committee, who, after consultation with stage carpenters and artists, have fitted up a theater in one place, are inadmissible as proof of the cost of fitting up a theater at another place, such persons not being experts. Forbes v. Howard, 4 R. I. 364.

2. See LEASE, vol. 12, p. 1000 et seq.
In Leader v. Moody, L. R., 20 Eq. 145, under a provision in the lease, the lessee, for a valuable consideration, sub-demised certain boxes and pit-stalls, together with free and uninterrupted admission into, and egress and regress to and from, and the full use and enjoyment of such boxes and stalls during all such nights as the theater should be open for the reception of an audience or company, to any public performance or exhibition of any opera, or any entertainment, whatsoever, of or upon the stage, except balls or masquerades, to the plaintiff for a term of years, reserving full right of access to the boxes and stalls for the purpose of repairs. The under lease contained a covenant for quiet enjoyment of the demised premises, but no covenant on the part of the grantor of the under lease to observe or perform the covenants of the original lease. Afterwards the lessee of the theater agreed to let it for a term of three months, for the purpose of holding religious meetings. In order that the theater might be converted into a convenient place for holding such meetings, the divisions between the boxes were removed and the pit (including the site of the plaintiff's stalls) was boarded over; but these alterations were not permanent, and the parties disclaimed any intention of using the theater for religious services beyond the three months. It was held that, without the plaintiff's consent, the theater could not be converted to other than theatrical purposes, nor could the original lessee, or any person claiming under him, enter on the plaintiff's boxes or stalls; but that, under the circumstances, the proper remedy was in damages, and not by way of injunction. And see Dauney v. Chatterton, 45 L. J., C. P. Div. 293; Croft v. Lumley, 5 E. & B. 648; 8; E. C. L. 647.

Custom and Usage.—Any usage, with reference to the leasing of a theater, may be binding, where the contract of Either party will be liable to the other in damages for a breach of the covenants of the lease.¹ The lessor may obtain an injunction leasing was entered into with reference to such usage. American Academy of Music v. Birt, 26 W. N. C. (Pa.) 351.

Production of Books—Accounts.—An agreement by the lessee of a theater, to afford the lessor every facility for ascertaining the correctness of accounts rendered by the lessee, does not import that the lessor is to exercise the check in person. He may do it by any person, as to whom the lessee can have no reasonable ground of complaint. And, under a covenant to produce books as evidences of his accounts, he is impliedly bound to keep books giving reasonable information. A court will not interfere by interlocutory injunction, where the question between the parties is one of account, and there is no allegation of the defendant's insolvency. A mere irregularity in accounts rendered under a covenant to account, unless it leads to an inference of fraud or dishonesty, is not a ground for the appointment of a receiver. Aarons v. Lewis, 3 Vict. 79. And see PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS, vol. 19, p. 227.

1. A notice by one party of an intention not to comply with an executory contract of a lease, may be considered an immediate breach. Thus A agreed to rent B's theater for two weeks, from February 9th. On the 9th of January, he informed B of his intention not to take or occupy the theater according to agreement, and it was held that B might treat this notice as a breach of the contract, and that the amount of the rental under the contract would be a valid set-off in an action commenced by A against B on the 13th of January. Grau v. McVicker, 8 Biss. (U. S.) 13.

Where the contract between the lessor and lessee of the theater, makes them in effect partners, but the theater is to be under the sole management of the lessee, the lessor to have no control, authority, or voice therein, the fact that the lessee does not personally attend to the management of the building, but is looking after the business elsewhere, is not a breach of contract justifying a re-entry by the lessor. Leavitt v. Windsor Land, etc., Co., 54 Fed. Rep. 439.

Lease of Hall to Attack Christianity Void.—In Pringle v. Napanee, 43 U. C. Q. B. 285, it was held that Christianity is part of the recognized law of the land, and that a plea that the purpose for which a hall was intended to be used was for the delivery of lectures attacking the fundamental doctrines of Christianity, was a good defense to an action for a breach of contract to let a public hall. And in Cowan v. Milbourn, L. R. 2 Ex. 230, it was held that a breach of contract to lease, might be justified on such ground, notwithstanding that the lessor had previously assigned a different reason.

Breach by Owner.—Measure of Damages.—Where the owner of a hall lets it for an entertainment, and refuses to permit it to be held, because he has failed to procure a renewal of his license to let the hall for theatrical purposes, the measure of damages is the difference between the probable profits, to be proved with reasonable certainty, and the expenses proved. Behrens v. Miller, 2 City Ct. (N. Y.) 427.

Where the contract is broken by notice of renunciation prior to the time of performance, it seems that the damages are such as would have arisen from the non-performance of the contract at the time appointed, subject to abatement in respect to any circumstances that may afford the means of mitigating the loss. Grau v. McVicker, 8 Biss. (U. S.) 13.

Lease of Unfinished Theater.—Where an unfinished theater is leased, with an agreement to complete the same with all due diligence, the lessee may recover damages from the lessor for a breach of such agreement, but the damages cannot include the prospective profits of performances which have been announced, but have not taken place. New York Academy of Music v. Hackett, 2 Hilt. (N. Y.) 217.

Buildings Destroyed by Fire.—In Taylor v. Caldwell, 3 B. & S. 826; 113 E. C. L. 826, the defendants agreed to let to the plaintiffs, the Surry Gardens and Music Hall for certain specified days, for the purpose of holding concerts, with no express stipulation for the event of the destruction of the Music Hall by fire. A few days before the time arrived for giving the first concert, the Gardens and Music Hall were so far damaged by an accidental fire as to prevent the entertainments. The plaintiffs brought an action for damages for breach of contract, alleging a loss of restraining the production of immoral or indecent performances likely to injure the reputation of the house.¹

2. Right of City to Lease Municipal Buildings for Theatrical Purposes.

—The owner of a hall used for theatrical and similar purposes cannot restrain the city within which it is located from letting the city hall for entertainments, because his profits are lessened thereby; the city, by its charter, having the right to control and lease its public buildings and real estate.² Nor can property owners restrain the city because the rate of insurance is thereby increased.³

divers sums of money paid for printing, advertisements, and expenses in preparing for the concerts, and otherwise in relation thereto; but it was held that both parties were excused from performance of the contract. Blackburn, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "There seems no doubt that where there is a positive contract to do a thing, not in itself unlawful, the contractor must perform it or pay damages for not doing it, although in consequence of unforeseen accidents the performance of his contract has become unexpectedly burthensome or even impossible. The law is so laid down in 1 Roll. Abr. 450, Condition (G), and in the note (2) to Walton v. Waterhouse, 2 Wms. Saund. 421, a (6th ed.), and is recognized as the general rule by all the judges in the much discussed case of Hall v. Wright, E. B. & E. 746; 96 E. C. L. 745. But this rule is only applicable when the contract is positive and absolute, and not subject to any condition, either express or implied; and there are authorities which, as we think, establish the principle that where, from the nature of the contract, it appears that the parties must from the beginning have known that it could not be fulfilled unless when the time for the fulfillment of the contract arrived, some particular specified thing continued to exist, so that, when entering into the contract, they must have contemplated such continuing existence as the foundation of what was to be done; there, in the absence of any express or implied warranty that the thing shall exist, the contract is not to be construed as a positive contract, but as subject to an implied condition that the parties shall be excused in case, before breach, performance becomes impossible from the perishing of the thing without default of the contractor. There seems little doubt that this implication tends to further the great object of making the legal construction such as to fulfill the intention of those who entered into the contract. For, in the course of affairs, men in making such contracts in general would, if it were brought to their minds, say that there should be such a condition."

1. Lessor Restraining Production of Immoral Plays.—The lessor of a theater may obtain an injunction restraining the lessee from advertising, or giving a performance or entertainment of such an apparently immodest or indecent nature as to injure the reputation of the theater. The court has the power to prohibit a permanent injury to the house from such performances or from such advertisements. Wandell's Law of the Theater 67, citing Walsh v. Wiggins, 19 Chic. Leg. N. 169.

A provision in an agreement for the management of a theater, by which the lessee agrees that he will maintain it as a first-class place of amusement, and that no attraction of a questionable character, or such as would not be regarded as first class by the managers of certain theaters named, shall be booked, will be construed according to the practical interpretation put upon it by the parties before the litigation begins. Leavitt v. Windsor Land etc., Co., 54 Fed. Rep. 439.

2. Stone v. Oconomowoc, 71 Wis. 155; Bell v. Platteville, 71 Wis. 139.

Under Vermont Rev. Laws, § 2751, authorizing towns to vote money for necessary incidental purposes, a town, whose town-house has been damaged by the elements, may elect to build a new one, and may fit up and rent part of it as an opera-house, if the primary object of the building is for municipal purposes, though it could not originally have built it for purposes of rental. Bates v. Bassett, 60 Vt. 530.

3. Bell v. Platteville, 71 Wis. 139.

Pleadings.—It was likewise laid down in the above case, that an allegation in a bill to restrain a city from renting its

IV. LICENSE.—(See also LICENSE, vol. 13, p. 514; TAXATION—Occupation, Business, and Privilege Taxes, vol. 25, p. 479)—1. In General.—From early times it has been usual to require licenses from theaters. The law of the subject, and the power and its limitations, are treated largely in the articles referred to above.¹

2. Right of Legislature to Exact.—The legislature of a state is empowered to regulate places of amusement, and to require the licensing thereof. Such legislation is sustainable as a legitimate exercise of the taxing power of the state, and as a part of its police regulations.²

hall for entertainments, "that the city proposed to use the property as if it were a private corporation, and had erected the same with private corporate funds," was a mere conclusion from the other facts alleged, and not admitted by a demurrer to the bill. See Pratt v. Lincoln Co., 61 Wis. 66; Spaulding v. Lowell, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 71; French v. Quincy, 3 Allen (Mass.) 9; Camden v. Village Corporation, 77 Me. 530.

1. License.—In Baker v. Cincinnati, 11 Ohio St. 543, under an ordinance of the Cincinnati common council, a charge of $63.50 was exacted from the plaintiff for a license to give theatrical exhibitions, in addition to a fee of $1.00 for the officer issuing the license; and it was held that the amount in excess of $1.00 was not illegally exacted, and that the exaction was not in violation of any provision in the constitution of the state, restricting the power of taxation vested in the general assembly. In delivering the opinion of the court in this case, Gholson, J., said: "Things licensed must be such as should only be permitted under the regulation or supervision of public functionaries. The tax or charge may have reference to such regulation or supervision. Such is the case of exhibitors of shows and performances. An inquiry has to be made as to those who propose to exhibit, and as to the nature of the thing to be exhibited. Then, the exhibition may require additional attention from those intrusted with the care of the public peace, to prevent disorder and disturbance. The burden thus devolved upon public officials, requiring, perhaps, an increase in their number or compensation, for the benefit of exhibitors of shows or performances, may justly authorize a charge beyond the mere expense of filling up a blank license." And see Hodges v. Nashville, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 61; Boston v. Schaffer, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 415.

Disposition of License Fees to Charitable Society.—The fact that the money realized from the license fees, or fines and penalties imposed for failure to procure a license, is paid over to a society for the reformation of juvenile delinquents, does not render the ordinance levying the license void, on the ground that it is a tax on an ordinary occupation for the benefit of a private society. The municipality has power to require the license fee, which becomes its property, and may dispose of it as seems proper. Wallack v. New York, 5 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 310.

2. Wallack v. New York, 3 Hun (N. Y.) 84. And see Tanner v. Alblon, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 121; People v. Lawrence, 41 N. Y. 137; Bush v. Seabury, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 418; Buffalo v. Webster, 10 Wend. Tarver*, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 94; State v. Stephens, 4 Tex. 137; 1 Dill. on Mun. Corp., §§ 357-360.

Graduation of License According to Population.—An act dividing the business of keeping certain places of amusement into two classes: first, in cities whose population exceeds 25,000; and second, in cities or towns having less,

3. Delegation of Power to Municipalities.—Municipal corporations are usually given the power to "license, regulate and tax," or to "tax, restrain and prohibit," places of amusement.¹

4. Discretion as to Granting.—Usually it is discretionary with the mayor or city officer in whom is vested the power to grant a theatrical license, whether or not to grant it in a given instance. Unless the duty imposed on him is mandatory, the courts cannot interfere with the exercise of his discretion.²

and fixing the license in the former case at $1,000 and in the latter at $500, does not contravene an article in the constitution requiring the legislature to "graduate the amount" of the tax. State v. O'Hara, 36 La. Ann. 94; State v. Schouhausen, 37 La. Ann. 42.

Tax by County in Addition to State Tax.—The sum of $25 imposed on each day's exhibition of a circus, is not a tax on property, but a charge for a license for an exhibition, and hence the owner of a circus is not liable to pay, in addition to the sum imposed by the statute, any other amount for county levies. Orton v. Brown, 35 Miss. 426.

Annual Tax.—In Nurdlinger v. Irvine, 18 W. N. C. (Pa.) 65, it was held that a statute imposing a state license tax, to be collected by the county treasurer on every theater or circus in the city or county of Philadelphia in the sum of $200, provided that a license granted by the treasurer of any county shall entitle the party receiving the same to make such exhibitions in any part of the state for the period of one year; that the tax of $200 thus imposed was an annual tax, and that theatrical or circus exhibitions could not be given in the city and county of Philadelphia for more than one year without paying the tax anew. And see Downing v. Blanchard, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 383.

1. Dill on Mun. Corp., §§ 35, 60; Baker v. Cincinnati, 11 Ohio St. 534. Under an act authorizing the mayor and aldermen to license theatrical exhibitions "on such terms and conditions as to them may seem just and reasonable," they may exact money for the license. Boston v. Schaffer, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 415.

The corporate authorities of a town, under a grant of power to "license, regulate, and restrain theatrical amusements," may exercise the taxing power as a means to effect this object. Hodges v. Nashville, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 61.

In Missouri, a city of the fourth class cannot levy a license tax upon theatrical performances held in an opera house within its limits; the prohibition of § 8193 of the Rev. Sts. of 1889 being valid. Negrotto v. Monett, 49 Mo. App. 286.

Under a charter giving the city council of Houston, power "to prohibit and punish keepers and inmates of variety shows, and to segregate and regulate the same, and determine such inmates and keepers to be vagrants," an ordinance is not authorized which declares any place a variety show where persons engage in music, dancing or plays, and liquor is sold, offered or given to any person present, and punishing the keeping of such show by fine. Ex p. Bell (Tex. Cr. App. 1893), 22 S. W. Rep. 1040.

2. People v. Grant, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 455. It was held in this case, that under statutes providing that an exhibition shall not take place in the city of New York until "a license for the place of such exhibition for such purpose, shall have been first had and obtained," and that "the mayor of the city of New York is hereby authorized and empowered to grant such license, to continue in force until the first day of May next ensuing the grant thereof, on receiving for each license so granted, and before the issuing, the sum of $500," it is discretionary with the mayor whether he will grant a license or not. See also Toole's Appeal, 90 Pa. St. 376.

An application for a license should satisfy the mayor of the morality of the entertainment. Upon appeal to the quarter sessions, the case will not be heard de novo, but inquiry will be made merely as to whether the mayor exercised a fair legal discretion. Steadman's Appeal, 14 Phila. (Pa.) 376.

When Issuance Mandatory.—Under an act providing that the mayor shall, upon payment of the sum named, issue a license in certain cases, the requirement is mandatory on him. It confers upon him no discretion. Com. v. Stokely, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 316.

5. Scope of License.—Ordinarily a single license does not apply to more than one place;¹ but the payment of a license fee for the privilege of keeping a theater, opera house, or concert hall, where theatrical entertainments are given, will cover any and all entertainments given by companies hired by the person paying the fee.²

6. Necessity for License.—Failure to procure a license precludes a right of action against an actor for breach of his promise to appear at the theater.³

7. Liability for Failure to Procure License.—One who conducts unlicensed theatrical performances, may be liable to a criminal prosecution, where the statute so provides;⁴ or he may be sued

1. Nurdlinger v. Irvine, 18 W. N. C. (Pa.) 65.

2. Shelby Co. Taxing Dist. v. Emerson, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 312; Bell v. Watson, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 328; Rowland v. Kleber, 1 Pittsb. (Pa.) 68.

Agreement not to Interfere with Unlicensed Persons.—An agreement not to interfere with a person whose application for a license has been refused, does not amount to a license. Simpson v. Wood, 105 Mass. 263.

Payment of Fine not Equivalent to License.—The payment of a fine by a party for a failure to take out a license, is not equivalent to a license, and does not bar a suit to recover the amount of license fees due. Nurdlinger v. Irvine, 18 W. N. C. (Pa.) 65.

Recommendation that License Shall Be Granted.—A recommendation that a license shall be granted to several, will not justify the granting of the same to one of them. Batchelder v. Erb, 47 N. J. L. 93.

3. Gallini v. Laborie, 5 T. R. 242.

But, in an action against a performer for not performing, at a licensed theater, pursuant to his contract, evidence that the performances had gone on without interruption, is sufficient prima facie evidence that the theater is duly licensed. Rodwell v. Redge, 1 C. & P. 220; 11 E. C. L. 374.

Inability to Procure License.—It has been held in England, that no action can be maintained on an agreement to exhibit entertainments of the stage, for gain, in a place where, by the terms of a statute, a license cannot be obtained, and that a plea showing that the intended place of exhibition was so situated was an answer to a declaration on the breach of such agreement. Levy v. Yates, 8 A. & E. 129; 35 E. C. L. 352.

Recovery of Wages—Absence of License.

—An actor may maintain an action for his services in an unlicensed theatrical exhibition, unless it appears that he knew his employer had no license. Roys v. Johnson, 7 Gray (Mass.) 163.

But where the plaintiff is a participant in the concern, he cannot recover money paid at the request of the defendant in the conduction of an unlicensed theater. De Begnis v. Armistead, 10 Bing. 107; 25 E. C. L. 47.

4. Allegation of Indictment.—An indictment against the proprietor of a theater, who fails to take out the license prescribed by law, sets forth enough, if it alleges that the exhibition "purported" to be an exhibition of certain performances. An allegation that the exhibition was what it purported to be, carries with it an obligation to substantiate the same by proof. Com. v. Twitchell, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 74. It is not necessary to allege that the exhibition was for profit. Nor is it necessary that the prosecutor should prove that fact on the trial. Pike v. State, 35 Ala. 419. But an indictment under the Alabama Code 1886, § 629, making it a misdemeanor to give a public exhibition without a license, should allege that charges are made for admission or for the use of some instrument or device, and that the entertainment was not given for a charitable purpose or in a theater whose owner or manager had taken out a license, as they are excepted by such section from the provisions of the act. Mosby v. State (Ala. 1893), 13 So. Rep. 148.

If there are two legislative acts in a given state requiring licenses for theaters, an indictment should allege under which act the charge was made. Com. v. Fox, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 204.

One Penalty Only Recoverable.—One penalty only, is recoverable for the violation of a statute, unless it is otherwise expressly provided, and a second action by another common informer, to recover a like penalty, is not maintain-for the statutory penalty, where the statute has provided a penalty for keeping an unlicensed house.¹

8. Construction of Statutes Requiring Licenses.—It has been held that the owner of a room or hall, fitted up with a stage and dressing-room, which might be used for small dramatic performances, but which has never been so used, cannot be convicted of keeping a theater,² and that a portable booth theater, which may be taken to pieces and moved about, is not a house or place of public resort for the performance of stage plays.³ A license to keep a able. Garrett v. Messenger, L. R., 2 C. P. 583.

Restraining Impromptu Characterizations.—An injunction lies to restrain impromptu characterizations if performed on successive nights in a public hall, for admission to which a price is charged, a license being required for dramatic entertainments. Society for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents v. Diers, 10 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 216.

1. Wallack v. New York, 3 Hun (N. Y.) 84.

Proof that a party was the manager of a theater, and that he paid salaries and dismissed performers, is sufficient proof that he caused unlicensed performances, and if he caused the performances, it is not material whether he did so as the agent of others or not. Parsons v. Chapman, 5 C. & P. 33; 24 E. C. L. 201.

In an action of debt to recover the penalty of £100, given by the Statute 25 Geo. II. ch. 36, § 2, for keeping an unlicensed house for public dancing, etc., it appeared that music, dancing, etc., had occasionally taken place at the defendant's house (a public house); that no money was taken by him for admission, but the rooms were let to persons who sold tickets, and received money for admission at the door; but there was no direct evidence that the defendant knew of this practice. It was held that upon these facts, there was evidence to go to the jury of a keeping of the house by the defendant for the purposes mentioned in the statute, and that the judge was wrong in directing a non-suit. Marks v. Benjamin, 5 M. & W. 565.

An action on a promise to the mayor and aldermen of a city to pay for a license, should be brought in the name of the city, the mayor and aldermen being merely its agents. Boston v. Schaffer, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 415.

2. Gillman v. State, 55 Ala. 248.

The owner of a building not in Philadelphia or Alleghany County, a part of which is fitted up with stage, etc., and occasionally let out for the holding of public meetings, local entertainments, and to traveling theatrical and operatic companies, at a variable rent or price for the use thereof, is not liable for the payment of the $50 license fee imposed by the Act of April 16th. 1845, P. L. 532, and its supplements. Hayes v. Coatesville Opera House Co., 139 Pa. St. 636.

Private Theater.—A private theater in which theatrical representations occasionally take place for the benefit of charity, an entrance fee being charged, is within an act setting forth that any "house or other place of public resort for the public performance of stage plays, shall be licensed." Shelley v. Bethell, 12 Q. B. Div. 11.

Public Room.—By § 2 of stat. 6 & 7 Vict., ch. 68, it shall not be lawful for any person "to have or keep any house or other place of public resort," "for the public performance of stage plays," without authority. By section 11, every person who for hire, shall act or present, or cause, permit, or suffer to be acted or presented, any part in any stage play in any place not duly licensed, is subject to a penalty. The defendant hired a public room for the public performance of stage plays for six consecutive nights: the room was not licensed. It was held that they did not "have or keep" a place for the performance of stage plays within section 2, but might be liable under section 11. Reg. v. Strugnell, 7 B. & S. 124.

3. Davy v. Douglas, 4 H. & N. 180. A portable theater or booth, consisting of two caravans or wagons drawn from place to place by horses, and when joined together forming a temporary structure for the performance thereon of stage plays, is not a "tenement" used as an unlicensed theater. *Fredericks v. No Permanent Theater in Existence at Passage of Act.—It has been held in Texas, that an act "to levy taxes," imposing a state tax of $5 upon each representation of "theaters or dramatic representations, for which pay for admittance is demanded or received," applied to a theater named, although its owners contended that their theater was a permanent and fixed establishment, that there was no permanent theater in the state when the act was passed, and that therefore the act applied only to transient or strolling performances. *Trapp v. Dramatic Entertainment or Stage Play.

—The following was held to be a dramatic entertainment or "stage play," within the prohibition of an act requiring licenses for theatrical performances. On the rising of the curtain, there was a representation of a storm at sea, and of a man swimming, not a living person, but in theatrical phrase a "double." When the storm subsided, a drop scene was disclosed, with a lake in the background; a character then appeared upon the stage, in the costume of a Greek prince, who spoke some lines relative to the shipwreck from which he had just escaped. He was then joined by another person, dressed as an attendant, and a short dialogue ensued. These two were the only persons who appeared bodily on the stage, and they were twice on the stage together. There were several other characters—a king, a princess, etc., and a chorus; and the dialogue between them was a composed set drama, with a regular plot of love, courtship, and matrimony. With the exception of the two persons above mentioned (the dialogue between them was wholly subordinate to the plot of the piece), none of the characters were at any time bodily on the stage; they had their places in a chamber below it, where they acted their parts, and addressed each other in the words allotted to them; but by a combination of lenses and mirrors their figures were reflected upon a mirror at the back of the stage, so as to present to the spectators the appearance of persons actually upon the stage. There was dancing, music, and singing, but no change of scenery or dress during the performance. Day v. Simpson, 18 C. B. N. S. 680; 114 E. C. L. 680. And see Wigan v. Strange, L. R., 1 C. P. 175.

performance similar thereto.¹ An exhibition of marionettes may become a stage play if accompanied by a regular dialogue carried on by unseen living actors;² but a dancing school, even though an admission fee is charged, is not within a statute prohibiting any public show or exhibition without a license;³ nor does the temporary use of a room in a public house for the purpose of dancing on a particular festival or occasion, subject the owner to a penalty for keeping a place of public dancing without a license.⁴

V. THEATRICAL ADVERTISING; LITHOGRAPHS, ETC.—A contract for the use of a fence, building, or space, for the purpose of posting theatrical advertisements, includes the right of entry upon the premises for the purpose.⁵

1. Harris v. Com., 81 Va. 240; 59 Am. Rep. 666. In this case the accused kept a skating rink, ordinarily visited by persons for the purpose of skating, and took out no license, except when he gave a performance by professional skaters, and ordinarily charged ten cents for admission and ten cents more for the use of skates, and some visitors skated, whilst others did not; it was held that the case did not come within a statute setting forth that "no person shall, without a license authorized by law, exhibit for compensation, any theatrical performance, or any performance similar thereto, panorama, or any public performance or exhibition of any kind, lectures, literary readings and performances, except for benevolent or charitable purposes," etc. And see Reg. v. Tucker, 2 Q. B. Div. 417.

4. Shutt v. Lewis, 5 Esp. 128; Reg. v. Strugnell, L. R., 1 Q. B. 93. But a room in a public house in which musical performances are regularly exhibited, though not used solely for that purpose, is within the meaning of a statute requiring a license in similar cases; and this, though no admission fee be taken. Bellis v. Beall, 2 Esp. 592.

Proof that there is nothing painted on the house, denoting that it is licensed under Statute 25 Geo. II., ch. 36, was held sufficient prima facie evidence that it was unlicensed. Gregory v. Tuffs, 6 C. & P. 271; 25 E. C. L. 393; Brown v. Nugent, L. R., 7 Q. B. 588.

To subject a party to the penalties of the statute for keeping a house of illegal dancing and music, it is not necessary that the party who kept the house should take money for admission. Archer v. Willingrice, 4 Esp. 186. The statute providing for a penalty of £100 against any person who should keep a house for public dancing, music, or other public entertainment without a license, extends to houses kept for the purpose of private dancing, not to public places only. Clarke v. Searle, 1 Esp. 25; Green v. Botheroyd, 3 C. & P. 471; 14 E. C. L. 395.

The keeper of a house with a music license only, is liable to the penalty for keeping a house without a license, if he permits public dancing in the house. Brown v. Nugent, L. R., 6 Q. B. 693.

Hurdy-Gurdy Houses.—A house kept for public dancing is not a "hurdy-gurdy" house within an act requiring such houses to be licensed. State v. Tilley, 9 Oregon 125.

Ballet Divertissement.—In Wigan v. Strange, L. R., 1 C. P. 175, the court decided that it could not hold, as a matter of law, that a ballet performance was an entertainment of the stage, within a statute requiring a license therefor, though the majority of the court thought that, had they been dealing with it as a matter of fact, it would be.

Destruction of Indecent Posters.—It seems that any person has the right to tear down an indecent theatrical advertisement. The English court of queen's bench has practically decided that it is legal if the party is willing to pay nominal damages. Wandell's Law of the Theater 76, citing 7 Gibson's Law Notes 35.

1. Hazzards v. Hoxsle, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 417. This was an action brought upon a contract by which the defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff's testator the sum of $8.50 a week for publishing his advertisement in the Fifth Avenue, Union Square, and Lyceum Theater programs, to occupy one inch on the program page, for the entire season. The season of the Fifth Avenue Theater closed the 26th day of May; the season of the Union Square Theater on the 9th day of July, and the season of the Lyceum Theater on the 16th day of July. It was held that the contract was an entire one and not susceptible of apportionment, and terminated on the 28th day of May, when the Fifth Avenue Theater closed.

2. Central Lithographing, etc., Co. v. Moore, 75 Wis. 170; 17 Am. St. Rep. 186. Orton, J., in delivering the opinion of the court in this case, said:

"The learned counsel on both sides, and the court below, treated this transaction as a sale of personal property. It was not a sale. When the contracts were entered into, there was nothing in solido to be the subject of a sale. The mere paper, as the basis of this valuable work of mechanical art, was not only of insignificant value, but was not the subject of sale. The defendant did not wish to buy blank paper, and the plaintiff had none to sell. The plaintiff was to manufacture these engravings and lithographs for the especial, peculiar, and exclusive use of the defendant in his business as a theatrical manager. They were advertisements adapted to the names and characters of his theatrical performances. It was the plaintiff's work of skill that gave the property produced by it any value. It was work and labor performed according to the order and direction of the defendant, and according to the terms of the contracts. When the required works were produced and ready to be taken away by the defendant and paid for, it was then not a sale. The plaintiff did not own them, and did not wish to own them, for they were of no use or value whatever to him, and were only of use and value to the defendant."

When the order is for a certain number of lithographs "as per sketches," the work must be performed in accordance with the sketches, before recovery can be had for the printing. Bien v. Abbey, 13 N. Y. Supp. 286.

VI. TICKETS OF ADMISSION—1. In General.—A theater ticket is a mere license to the purchaser to enter the house and witness the performance, and may be revoked at the pleasure of the manager. If, after such revocation, the purchaser insists upon entering, or, having entered, refuses to leave, he becomes a trespasser, and force may be used to exclude him; he can maintain no action of tort for the force used, his only remedy being an action for the price paid for the ticket, and the actual legal damages sustained.²

pictures, or other representations of herself attired in the garb of Cupid, but the injunction was denied.

1. The right of the actress does not extend to making copies of the photograph or allowing others to do so for their own benefit, and even though it were taken under such circumstances as to give her an equitable interest in the copyright, she could not allow others to make copies for their own benefit, without the consent in writing of the photographer. Press Pub. Co. v. Falk (U. S. Cir. Ct. So. Dist. N. Y.), 49 Alb. L. J. 317.

2. Wood v. Ledbitter, 13 M. & W. 838, overruling Taylor v. Waters, 7 Taunt. 373. In this case a ticket of admission to the grand stand, within the inclosure of the Doncaster races, was sold to the plaintiff, and he afterwards, upon surrendering his ticket, was permitted to enter the grounds within the inclosure. The license to him was then revoked, and upon his refusal to depart upon request, he was forcibly removed from the premises, and it was held that his removal was justifiable, because the defendant had a right to countermand the license, and the plaintiff, by remaining afterwards, was acting in an unlawful manner and could therefore maintain no action for an alleged assault and battery committed upon his person in forcibly ejecting him.

Burton v. Scherpf, 1 Allen (Mass.) 133; 79 Am. Dec. 717, was the case of a negro who had purchased a ticket to a concert, and, after giving up his ticket and entering the hall, was requested to leave. Upon his refusal to do so, he was forcibly put out, and the money paid for the ticket tendered him at the box office. It was held that he could maintain no action for the assault, but could only sue for breach of contract.

In McCrea v. Marsh, 12 Gray

(Mass.) 211; 71 Am. Dec. 745, the purchaser of a ticket, a negro, was refused admission to the theater, and force was used to prevent his entering. It was held that his only remedy was an action of contract to recover the money paid for the ticket, and damages sustained by the breach of the contract implied by the sale and delivery of the ticket.

In Purcell v. Daly, 19 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 301, Monell, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The proprietor of a theater is under no obligation to the public to give any performance therein. He has no duties to perform with which the public are in any legal sense concerned, or with which the public have any right to interfere. It is true that he pays a license for the privilege of giving theatrical exhibitions, but this in no way changes the character of the institution from a private to a public one. He may shut up his theater, or he may use the theater property for other purposes than theatrical entertainments, in which case he is under no obligation to pay a license. It is only when he uses his property for that purpose that a license fee is exacted. If the proprietor of a theater sees fit to discontinue performances, the public cannot complain. This being so, the proprietor of a theater has a perfect right to say who he will or will not admit to his theater, and should anyone apply at the box-office of a theater and desire to purchase tickets of admission, and be refused, there can be no question that he would have no cause of action against the proprietor of the theater for such refusal. And in the same way, if tickets are sold to a person, the proprietor may still refuse admission, in which case the proprietor would be compelled to refund only the price paid for the tickets of admission, together with such other expense as the party might have been put to, but which expense must be directly connected with the issuing of the ticket of admission. For he could not accept money for the right of admission to his theater, and then, upon refusing that admission, seek to retain possession of the price paid for the privilege. A theater ticket is simply a license to the party presenting the same, to witness a performance to be given at a certain time, and being a license personal in its character, can be revoked. Mendenhall v. Klinck, 51 N. Y. 246; Wood v. Ledbetter, 13 M. & W. 838. And see Rex v. Jones, 1 Leach C. C. 204. But see Drew v. Peer, 93 Pa. St. 234, where the court, by Sterrett, J., said: "Whether the tickets conferred merely a license or something more, is immaterial. If they gave only a license to enter the theater and remain there during the performance, it is very clear that the agents of the defendant had no right to revoke it as they did, and summarily eject Peer and his wife from the building in such manner as to injure her. We incline to the opinion, however, that as purchasers and holders of tickets for particular seats, they had more than a mere license. Their right was more in the nature of a lease, entitling them to peaceable ingress and egress, and exclusive possession of the designated seats during the performance on that particular evening." Here, it will be observed, the judge lays some stress upon the fact that the parties had purchased reserved seats.

Return Checks.—The following query and answer appear in 12 Cent. L. J. 359: "A purchases a ticket entitling him to a reserved seat at a theatrical performance. He enters a theater, and, at the conclusion of the first act, leaves the house, and not being disposed to return, sells the check or pass received from the doorkeeper on leaving, together with the ticket for his seat, to B—is B entitled to admission upon the pass? Answer: The contract between the manager at the theater and the ticket holder is a contract for the use of a certain seat by some person, i. e., the holder of the ticket. It is not a contract that a certain seat shall be occupied by a certain person. It is a contract for so much space, which the ticket holder may occupy by himself or by his friend, or which he may leave unoccupied. The right to use or occupy that seat or that space is, for the time being, his property; he has bought it, and he may either exercise that right himself, or he may sell or assign it to another, provided there are no personal objections to that other. If B is a person to whom there would have been no objections had he been the original holder of the ticket, he is entitled to admission upon the pass."

In Wandall's Law of the Theater, p. 246, it is said: "This doctrine is founded on the assumption that a contract for a theater ticket is a lease, and the same reasoning would probably not apply if it were considered as a mere license. There is some conflict of judicial decisions on this subject, the weight of authority, perhaps, being in favor of regarding a theater ticket as a revocable license. The holder of the return check could not transfer the same if the original ticket of admission was non-transferable." And see an article on "The Law of the Theater," 12 Cent. Law J. 393, where it is said that, "We should think that the purchaser of a reserved seat at a theater, who sells his pass on leaving the house, together with the ticket for his seat, could confer no right on the second purchaser, which would entitle him to admission; it being one of the characteristics of a license, that it is limited to the person to whom it was originally given, and cannot be susceptible of transfer or alienation. Licenses are confined to the original parties, and can neither operate for nor against third persons."

Sale of Tickets After House is Full.—Continuing the sale of tickets after the house is full, in the absence of evidence that such sales were in opposition to the wishes of the proprietor, will sustain a judgment in an action for the penalty provided for in an act prohibiting such sale. Fire Department v. Stetson, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 125.

Duty of Ticket Holder Where all Seats Are Sold.—If a person upon entering a theater, is told that there is room, when in fact there is not, his proper course is to leave the theater, and demand the return of his money, and such person is not justified in taking a higher priced seat than he is entitled to under his ticket, and if he does, he may be removed, by the exercise of no more force than is necessary under the circumstances. Lewis v. Arnold, 4 C. & P. 354; 19 E. C. L. 417.

Assault by Party Being Removed.—If one of a party, all being rightfully removed from a theater, strikes the pro-

2. Transferability.—The proprietor of a theater has a right to annex to the tickets of admission issued, the condition that they shall not be transferable, and that, if transferred, they shall be worthless;¹ for a license is personal to the licensee, and is not salable or transferable.²

3. Reserved Seats.—A theater management may sell tickets, reserving to the purchaser particular seats,³ and the holder of prietor thereof, or his servant, all may be taken into custody, if they are acting with a common purpose. Lewis v. Arnold, 4 C. & P. 354; 19 E. C. L. 417.

1. Purcell v. Daly, 19 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 301. This action arose out of the efforts of Augustin Daly, the proprietor of Daly's Theater in New York City, to stop speculation in tickets of admission to his theater. To that end he issued a peculiar form of ticket to persons applying for admission, and caused a notice to be conspicuously displayed in the vestibule of his theater informing all persons, that tickets purchased or sold on the sidewalk were worthless, and would not be received at the door of the theater, and requesting all parties to read the notification on each slip. This notification, which was printed on each slip or ticket was to the effect that a ticket so issued was a simple license and issued to the party applying for the same by name, and was not transferable, and would be refused at the door if sold or purchased on the sidewalk. The tickets in question were purchased by one A. at the request and for the benefit of S., a ticket speculator. S. subsequently sold them to M. at an advanced price, but when presented by M. at the gate or entrance to the auditorium, they were not honored, and admission was refused. M. then presented the tickets at the box office and demanded the return of the price, which was refused. S. then repaid M. the money paid by him for the tickets, and in person presented them at the box office and demanded the return of the price, which was again refused, whereupon S. assigned his claim to the plaintiff. Monell, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said: "It is unnecessary to discuss the question whether a person to whom tickets of admission to a theater are issued has the right to transfer them to a third party, as under the peculiar form of ticket in the present case, this point is not at issue. The ticket in question was issued to A. acting for S., and entitled him, or possibly S., to two admissions to the theater, and contained a statement that it was a personal license, and was not transferable. The ticket itself does not form a contract, as it is not signed by either party, and consequently, can only be received as evidence of the oral contract made between the defendant and A. or S. The contract is in effect as though A. or S. had applied for admission to Daly's theater, and Daly had said, 'I will sell you the right of admission for two persons (for yourself and another) to my theater, but you must not transfer the ticket to anybody else, for I will not receive the same if it is so transferred.' That is the gist of the contract made between the parties, and as admission was not refused either to A. or S. to witness the performance on the night for which the ticket was issued, no breach of contract on the part of the defendant occurred. There was no agreement on the part of the defendant to refund the money in case the ticket so issued was not used, and hence, under any aspect of the case, the only liability on the part of the defendant would have resulted from his refusing admission to the theater, to the person to whom the ticket was issued, and as this was not done, there should be judgment for the defendant dismissing the complaint."

2. Mendenhall v. Klinck, 51 N. Y. 250.

3. It has been held, that a legislative act setting forth that, "No proprietor of a theater shall, after the door of such theater is open for the reception of spectators, sell tickets so as to reserve particular seats, or to mark or describe as reserved or taken, any seats which have not been reserved by the sale of tickets therefor, previous to the opening of such exhibitions," is a vexatious and unlawful interference with the rights of private property, and as such, the legislative assembly is incompetent to enact it. Dist. of Columbia v. Saville, 1 McArthur (D. C.) 581; 29 Am. Rep. 616.

such a ticket will be entitled to the seat called for;¹ but the proprietor of a theater is under no obligation to sell a chosen seat to a particular person.² The neglect of the management to have a particular seat marked "taken," can give a stranger no right to it, if already purchased by another.³

4. Free Admission.—The management of a theater may grant tickets of free admission at discretion, but this practice, if carried to such an extent as to become an injury to the interest of the stockholders or other interested parties, may be restrained by injunction.⁴

1. Com. v. Powell, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 180; 3 Leg. Int. 100.

The Coupon.—The coupon which is attached to a theater ticket and retained by the holder, is a mere voucher showing a right that has already accrued to the holder. At the moment the bearer presents his ticket for admission, his right to the seat designated by the coupon, accrues; and the coupon is, therefore, a voucher to prove a present right, rather than a contract to secure a future one. See "Tickets," 1 Harvard L. Rev. 24.

Ejection from Reserved Seat.—A person paying for general admission to a place of amusement, not knowing that an extra price is charged for certain seats, may rightfully occupy one of them without pay until notified by the management that a fee is charged therefor and the same demanded of him; and in the absence of improper conduct upon the part of such ticketholder, he should be allowed to remain within the auditorium, although it is necessary to remove him from the seat in question, he declining to leave the same. McGovern v. Staples (New York Supreme Court), cited in 7 Alb. L. J. 219.

Mistake of Ticket Seller.—The mistake of a ticket seller in selling a ticket of admission with reserved seat, for a day other than the day of performance, and the consequent ejection of the purchaser from the seat, no undue force or violence being used, is not a case for exemplary or punitive damages. MacGowan v. Duff, 12 N. Y. St. Rep. 680.

Agreement for Private Box Does Not Run with the Land.—An agreement that plaintiff should be paid £360 on the 31st of December, 1834, for £313 loaned by him on the 26th of April, 1834, if four persons named should be alive on the 31st of December, and that plaintiff in the meantime should have the gratuitous use of two boxes at the Victoria Theater; but if either of the four persons should die, plaintiff should pay a reasonable sum for the use of the boxes, was held not an agreement running with the land, and, therefore, not binding as to the use of the boxes on an assignee of the theater. Flight v. Glossopp, 2 Scott 220; 2 Bing. N. Cas. 125; 29 E. C. L. 279.

2. Obligation to Sell a Chosen Seat.—The proprietor of a theater who advertises the price of reserved seats during a certain period, and that the sale of seats will begin at a given hour, is not bound to sell a chosen seat for the entire period, to the person who first presents himself, and tenders the price of it. Pearce v. Spalding, 12 Mo. App. 141. Bakewell, J., in delivering the opinion of the court in this case, said: "Defendants advertised to sell reserved seats; but they did not advertise that the first applicant should have his choice of any seats in the parquet at $3 for each entertainment; nor, that he should have numbers 675, 677, 679 and 681; nor, that he should have a license to use any seat during the performance for seven consecutive entertainments. By no fair construction, can any such meaning be got out of the language of the advertisements."

3. A visitor to a place of amusement is entitled to a seat; but the right to some extent depends upon the character of the ticket. If for a reserved seat, he has a right to that particular seat. If not reserved, to any one he may find unoccupied, and which has not previously been sold another. Com. v. Powell, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 180.

4. Baker's Appeal, 108 Pa. St. 510; 56 Am. Rep. 231. The facts in this case were these: By the charter of the Philadelphia Academy of Music, every five shares of stock entitled the holder to a free ticket of admission. Certain stockholders, holding large amounts of stock, from time to time made transfers of small lots thereof to other persons, on the books of the company, at the beginning of the dramatic season, with the understanding that the stock should be retransferred at the end of the season, this being enforced by the transferee retaining the new stock certificate, together with an irrevocable power of attorney from the transferee to retransfer the same; the transferee retaining only the ticket of admission. A bill being filed by certain stockholders to restrain such transfers and prohibit the issuing of free tickets thereon, it was held that they were not warranted by the charter, and should be enjoined; that the word "holder" in the provision of the charter that "every five shares of stock shall entitle the holder thereof to a free ticket of admission," meant that the privilege of free admission was confined to an actual true owner and holder, and did not extend to a transferee to whom shares were temporarily transferred; and that injury to the interest of the stockholders, consisting in diminishing its revenues from the sale of tickets and hindering the legitimate stockholders in obtaining admission, by a continuous practice on the part of the directors of issuing free tickets to unauthorized persons, being irremediable in damages, was of equitable cognizance, and might be restrained by injunction.

Account of Complimentary Tickets.—Upon a motion for an injunction to restrain the lessee of the Victoria Academy of Music from issuing complimentary tickets to any part of the house without the consent of the plaintiff lessor, and for a receiver, where it appeared that the lessee had leased the theater at the rent of 12 per cent. of the gross receipts, and had agreed to render an account of the daily gross receipts, and, when required, to produce the books and other evidences to the lessor and to afford him every facility for ascertaining the correctness of such daily returns, the court, without deciding the power of the lessee to issue complimentary tickets, ordered that an account of those issued from day to day should be kept and furnished daily to the plaintiff. Aarons v. Lewis, 3 Vict. 79.

Enforcement of Right of Free Admission.—The owners of a theater, by deed bearing date in 1839, made for valuable consideration, covenanted to confirm to certain debenture holders, the privilege of free admission to the theater. The petitioner was entitled, as one of the debenture holders, to the benefit of the deed of 1839, but subsequently lost his debenture. In 1851, the respondent became lessee of the theater, with notice of the deed of 1839, and it was held that the petitioner was not entitled specifically to enforce against the respondent, the privilege of free admission created by the deed of 1839. Malone v. Harris, 11 Ir. Ch. Rep. 33.

Termination of License by Sub-lease.—By lease not under seal, R and C, trustees, on behalf of themselves and other proprietors of a theater, demised it to S for three years, reserving to themselves and the other proprietors free liberty of admission to the theater. S, by lease not under seal, let the theater to the plaintiff for two nights, subject to the terms on which he held the theater, and it was held that the license was determined, and that an action of trespass might be maintained by the plaintiff against the defendant, a proprietor, who entered the theater during his tenancy. Coleman v. Foster, 1 H. & N. 37; 37 Eng. L. & Eq. 489.

Covenant not to Grant Free Admission Without Lessor's Consent.—A, in 1792, grants a lease of a theater to B, B covenanting not to grant rights of admission, except to two hundred and fifty free admissions, without the consent of A, and in case of any of the covenants being broken, the lease to be void. B then assigns his interest to trustees, to receive the profits and pay the debts etc., who leave B in the management and direction of the concern, in the course of which, in 1799, B granted a ticket of admission to C for twenty-one years. In 1800, the trustees take possession of the theater, but suffer C to exercise his privilege of admission till 1814, when the ticket is stopped, on the ground that B had no right to make such grant. It was held first, that the covenant by B with A not to grant right of admission, supposing it to have been broken, did not avoid the grant to C; second, that as the trustees had left B in the management of the theater, they must be taken to have authorized the grant, and could not afterwards disavow it; third, that this was not an interest in land, but a license to C to enjoy the privilege of admission, and therefore that it was not necessary that it should pass by deed, or that B should have been

5. Forgery of Theater Tickets.—Forgery may be committed by printing, as well as writing, instruments purporting to be the act of another, and hence, may be committed by printing bogus theater tickets.¹

VII. EXCLUSION OF COLORED PERSONS—1. Right to Exclude.—The business of conducting a theater or place of amusement is a private business enterprise, in which, in the absence of any statute or ordinance prohibiting, any one may engage.² But states, in the exercise of the police power to license and regulate theaters, have power also to impose the condition that they shall accommodate all persons alike, without regard to race or color, and such authorized by the trustees in writing to make such grant. Taylor v. Waters, 2 Marsh 551; 2 E. C. L. 374; 7 Taunt. 374.

1. Benson v. McMahon, 127 U. S. 457. This was a habeas corpus case brought by one Benson against the United States marshal for the southern district of New York, in whose custody he was, awaiting extradition by the government of Mexico on the charge of forgery. It appeared that Benson, knowing of the future engagement of Mr. Henry E. Abbey's opera company at the city of Mexico, had preceded him there, and, representing himself to be Abbey's agent, had made all the arrangements for the future production of the operas, in which Adelina Patti was to appear, had fixed the dates, arranged the prices of admission, and issued the tickets therefor, which he had sold, and had pocketed the money to the extent of some twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars, and then escaped to Europe. In affirming the judgment of the circuit court dismissing the writ of habeas corpus, Miller, J., said: "About the only contest made by the counsel for the prisoner is, that these are not forgeries, mainly because they are printed matter and are not in writing, and because neither the name of Mr. Abbey, nor of anybody purporting to be responsible therefor, is found in writing upon them, using the word 'writing,' as defendant's counsel does, as meaning script or signatures made by the use of a pen. It is therefore contended that these tickets are not forgeries, but the fraudulent intent for which they were issued, the actual loss and deception to the parties who bought them, and the injury to Mr. Abbey and the others concerned, are not controverted. It is said, however, that this is only a cheat at common law, and it is very strenuously argued that the real meaning of the word 'forgery' in this treaty is to be ascertained by the definition of that offense according to the common law of England.

But we are not satisfied that the crime of forgery, even at common law, is limited to the production, by means of a pen, of the resemblance of some man's genuine signature which was produced with a pen. This view of the subject would exclude from the definition of this crime all such instruments as government bonds, bank notes, and other obligations of great value, as well as railroad tickets, where the signature of the officer which makes them binding and effectual, is impressed upon them by means of a plate or other device representing his genuine signature. It would also exclude from its definition all such instruments charged as forgeries, where the similitude of the signer's name is produced by a plate used by the forger. It can hardly be possible that these are not forgeries within the definition of the common law; and if they are, they show that it is not necessary that the name which appears upon the false instrument shall be placed thereon by means of a pen or by the actual writing of it in script, but that the crime may be committed as effectually if it is done by an engraved plate or type so arranged as to represent or forge the name as made by the actual use of a pen. It is difficult to perceive how the question as to whether the forgery was committed by printing, or by stamping, or with an engraved plate, or by writing with a pen, can change the nature of the crime charged." And see Com. v. Ray, 3 Gray (Mass.) 441; Wheeler v. Lynde, 1 Allen (Mass.) 402; People v. Rhoner, 4 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y.) 166.

regulations have been held constitutional, and a negro refused admission solely on account of race or color has been allowed to recover damages.¹ All state laws which discriminate against negroes as a race, and deny them equal civil rights with other citizens, are prohibited by the constitution of the United States;² but as a theater is a private business enterprise, and the ticket of admission a mere license, revocable at the pleasure of the proprietor,³ the proprietor may make whatever regulations for the conduct of his business he chooses, and may refuse admission to any one without assigning a reason therefor.⁴

2. Right to Assign Particular Seats.—In the absence of legislation prohibiting, it will not be considered discrimination for the manager of a theater to assign to colored persons seats in a particular locality, if such seats are as good as those assigned to white

This last decision and the whole doctrine, that a state can pass such laws, is condemned by Mr. Tiedeman (Tiedeman's Lim. of Police Power, § 92) as unconstitutional.

Congress, in pursuance of the 13th and 14th amendments to the United States constitution, attempted to regulate the equal right to enjoyment by all persons, of theaters and places of amusement, by passing the celebrated "Civil Rights Bill," providing "that all persons shall be entitled to full and equal enjoyment of the accommodations, advantages and facilities and privileges of . . . theaters and other places of public amusement . . . and applicable alike to citizens of every race and color, regardless of any previous condition of servitude." 18 U. S. Stats. at Large, 335; but in the Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 3, this act was declared unconstitutional, and the attempt to secure to all citizens equal accommodation at places of amusement was held not to be within the powers of Congress, the ground of the decision being that the denial of equal accommodations does not impose any badge of servitude or slavery on the person.

"The states might pass such laws (requiring proprietors of theaters to admit negroes), but if a ticket to a theater is but a revocable license, they would be of little effect; as, if the theater proprietor desired to exclude colored persons, he might do so merely by revoking the license, and it would be impossible to determine whether it was revoked by reason of 'race, color, or previous condition of servitude.'" Theaters are not necessities of life, and the proprietors of them may manage their business in their own way. If that way is unfair or unpopular, they will suffer in diminished receipts. *Clifford v. In Bowlin v. Lyon, 67 Iowa 536; 56 Am. Rep. 353, it was held that, as it did not appear that a skating rink was operated under a license or privilege granted by the state or by the city in which it was conducted, or that it was in any manner regulated or governed by the police regulations of the city, it must be presumed to have been conducted as a private business merely, and that no person, black or white, had a right to enter against the will of the proprietors.

VIII. SUNDAY PERFORMANCES.—(See also SUNDAY, vol. 24, p. 528)

—1. Statutes Prohibiting.—A statute prohibiting exhibitions and plays on Sunday is not unconstitutional, for the reason that the legislature is the sole judge of the acts proper to be prohibited with a view to maintaining the public peace, and preventing the obstruction of religious worship, and the bringing into contempt the religious institutions of the people.²

Statutes for the observance of Sunday are generally held to be remedial in their character and to be construed liberally.³

In Baylies v. Curry, 128 Ill. 287, the court refused to admit evidence to show that it was the rule of the theater that colored persons were given the same advantages for the same price, in all parts of the house, that white persons had, except that the former were assigned a particular row of seats, as it was not shown that the woman was offered a seat in a particular row or portion of the house, but that she was entirely excluded. And in Drew v. Peer, 93 Pa. St. 234, the decision was on the entire exclusion of the plaintiff, and the court said that if regulations had been shown setting apart a particular place in the theater for colored persons, the defendant might have cited West Chester, etc., R. Co. v. Miles, 55 Pa. St. 209; 93 Am. Dec. 744; but in the absence of such regulation, a colored person refused admission, may recover damages.

In this case it was laid down, that the legislature, having declared substantially that Sunday theaters are a nuisance and come within the description of acts and practices which are not protected by the constitution, the court could not, if it would, review their discretion and sit in judgment upon the expediency of their acts. The manager who sells tickets for, and superintends, an entertainment that he has caused to be given on Sunday, is guilty of "laboring on Sunday," within the meaning of Mansf. Dig. Arkansas, § 1883, which denounces a penalty against every person found "laboring on Sunday," except in the performance of ordinary household duties of daily necessity, comfort, or charity. Quarles v. State, 55 Ark. 10.

Entrance Fee Charged to Camp Meetings.—In Com. v. Weidner (Pa. Com. Pleas), 37 Alb. L. J. 148, it was held that charging and receiving compulsory prices for admission to a camp meeting on Sunday, was worldly employment or business, and not within the exception of "works of necessity and charity." IX. NUISANCES.—(See also NUISANCES, vol. 16, p. 922).—Erections of every kind adapted to sports or amusements, having no useful end, and which collect, or have a tendency to collect, disorderly crowds, and all indecent exhibitions, are regarded by the common law as nuisances.²

X. LIABILITY OF MANAGER.—The proprietor or manager of a theater, or similar place of amusement, to which the public is invited, is bound to use ordinary care and diligence to put and keep the hall in a reasonably safe condition.³ He is liable, in an action of tort, for such acts and defaults of his servants, agents, or Pigeon Shooting.—In Rex v. Moore, 3 B. & Ad. 184; 23 E. C. L. 52, the defendant was convicted on the ground that he had collected a crowd in his own field for pigeon shooting, by which the neighborhood was annoyed, and he was held guilty of a nuisance.

Cock-Pit.—An indictment for a nuisance in keeping a cock-pit, was held valid at common law. Rex v. Howell, 3 Keb. 465; Rex v. Higginson, 2 Burr. 1233.

Circus.—A circus may become a nuisance by being conducted so close to a man's residence that he will be disturbed by the noise and crowds of disorderly persons who usually collect at such performances. Inchbald v. Robinson, L. R., 4 Ch. 388; 20 L. T. N. S. 259; 17 W. R. 459.

Sparring Exhibitions.—Unless there is a likelihood that a breach of the peace will be committed, or that a sparring exhibition is to be in the nature of a prize fight, the police of a given municipality have no right to interfere with it. Sparring forms part of the physical education of students, and, legitimately exercised, is an innocent pastime, and assists the body as intellectual exercises assist the mind. Behrens v. Miller, 2 City Ct. (N. Y.) 427.

Injunction.—The court refused an injunction to the occupier of premises adjacent to a theater, access to which was obstructed by the assembling of a crowd previously to the opening of the theater, where such obstruction existed at the time of action brought, but had since ceased by reason of the action of the police; but gave the plaintiff costs. *Barber v. By a lease of a place of amusement, the tenant was permitted to make alterations, but was bound to restore the premises to the condition in which he took them. He changed a balcony, subdivided into boxes containing chairs and tables, into a place for standing room; and, when crowded with people, the balcony fell, not having strength sufficient to support their weight, and it was held that the owner of the place was not liable for the injuries received by a third person from the fall, which was caused wholly by the change in assistants, as fall within the scope of their employment.¹ He is liable also in damages for his breach of a contract to produce a play.² The service of an injunction on the acting manager, in the absence of the proprietor, may be good.³ The declarations of the stage manager as to the success of the theater, made in his farewell address from the stage at the close of the season, have been held evidence against the proprietor.⁴ A manager may be discharged for improper conduct,⁵ and, upon breach of the use by the tenant. Bard v. New York, etc., R. Co., 10 Daly (N. Y.) 520.

1. Fowler v. Holmes, 3 N. Y. Supp. 816; Dickson v. Waldron (Ind.), 34 N. E. Rep. 506; affirmed on rehearing 35 N. E. Rep. 1. The first of these cases was in the city court of Brooklyn, N. Y., and was an action against a theater proprietor for an assault and battery. The question was, whether one W., who perpetrated the assault, was the servant of the defendant and while engaged in his master's business was acting within the scope of his employment. It was held that the evidence on the point was sufficient to take the case to the jury. In the Indiana case the theater manager was held liable for an assault and battery made by a special policeman appointed for the theater at the special request of the manager, the policeman being employed as door-keeper. The Indiana case is made the subject of an article in the American Law Register for June, 1894. And see MASTER AND SERVANT, vol. 14, p. 740.

A discovery may be allowed of the books of the theatrical manager to show thereby his connection with, and liability for, the theatrical or amusement enterprise, where it seems probable that such books will show who is the proprietor. Ahylmeyer v. Healy, 12 N. Y. St. Rep. 677.

Liability for Assault by Special Police.

—The manager is responsible for the acts of a special police appointed for the theater at his request and employed and paid by him, and where such special police, while acting as door-keeper, committed an assault and battery upon an inoffensive patron, the manager was held liable. *Dickson v. 2. Thorne v. French, 24 N. Y. Supp. 694; 4 Misc. (N. Y.) 436. In this case, the defendant agreed to produce at his theater at a certain time, an opera of the plaintiffs, and to pay them a certain royalty. The plaintiffs were to furnish certain material by a certain time previous to its production, for part of which the defendant was to advance a sum agreed upon. The opera on exhibition when the contract was made, and which the plaintiffs were to follow, exceeded the expectations of the contracting parties as to its popularity, and was continued a much longer time than was originally intended by the defendant. The plaintiffs did not furnish the materials nor did the defendant advance the sum of money agreed upon in payment of the part thereof at the time specified, but the contract was treated as a continuing one by both parties. It was held that time was not of the essence of the contract; and that the defendant could not avoid damages for a final refusal to produce the opera on that ground.

A telegram sent to the author of a play, by the agent of the proprietor of a theater, asked, "What are your terms for Fernande? Can I produce it May 7th?" To this the plaintiff replied, "Twenty dollars per night. You can announce it for May 7th; if you conclude, will send scene plots to-night; answer." The answer was returned: "Agreed to terms; piece announced for May 7th; send manuscripts and plots immediately." It was held that the defendant was bound to produce the play only once, and he was only liable in damages for the amount to be paid for one exhibition. Schonberg v. Cheney, 3 Hun (N. Y.) 677.

3. The proprietor of a theater left the state, and an injunction forbidding him, his agents, etc., from producing a certain play was served upon the acting manager, ticket agent, and leading actor. The fact that the summons was not served on the proprietor, was held not to justify them in disobeying the injunction. Daly v. Amberg, 38 N. Y. St. Rep. 523, aff'g 36 N. Y. St. Rep. 713.

4. Lacy v. Osbaldiston, 8 C. & P. 80; 34 E. C. L. 300.

5. If the manager, or other servant of a theater, conducts himself in such a contract of service, may be enjoined from managing any other play.¹

XI. MANAGER AND ACTOR—1. Contracts with Actors—a. IN GENERAL.—Both manager and actor are bound by a duly executed contract of service,² and either may be liable for a breach thereof;³ and damages may be recovered from one who maliciously induces an actor to break his contract with a manager.⁴

b. CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACTS.—A contract for "the season" will be construed as an entire contract, even though the actor is to be paid so much for every week he shall appear, and if the actor is idle through fault of the manager, he may recover his salary;⁵ but the proprietor or manager of a company who an improper manner as to make it injurious to the theater to keep him, he may be lawfully dismissed by the lessee or proprietor. And an acting manager cannot, under the words "usual privileges of his situation," claim as a matter of right the use of a private box and the power of giving orders of admission, though both are usually allowed as a matter of courtesy. Lacy v. Osbaldiston, 8 C. & P. 80; 34 E. C. L. 300.

1. A mandatory injunction will not be granted to enforce the performance by the lessees and managers of a theater, for the use of such theater, and the services of such manager and subordinates, for a period named, in and about the production of a play contracted to be given, for the reason that the supervision of such personal services, by the officers of the court, would be impracticable. But in such case, where the contract is plain and the proposed breach not disputed, the court will enjoin the defendants from assisting, advertising, or managing any other play, or from putting their theater to any other use than the production of plaintiff's play during the period covered by the contract. Lacy v. Heuck, 12 W. L. Bull. (Ohio) 209.

2. Execution of Contract.—Where a manager offers an engagement to an actor, and sends him a contract duly executed, with a duplicate, which he requests to be returned signed, if the offer is accepted, the signing of the same and depositing thereof in the manager's letter box used for such and similar purposes, renders a contract complete, whether the duplicate ever reaches the manager or not. *Howard v. 4. Lumley v. Gye, 2 El. & B. 216; 75 E. C. L. 216. In this case, it was held that an action lies for maliciously procuring a breach of contract, to give exclusive personal services for a time certain, equally, whether the employment is commenced, or is only feri, provided the procurement is during the subsistence of the contract and produces damage; and that to sustain such an action, it is not necessary that the employer and the employed should stand in the strict relation of master and servant. See MASTER AND SERVANT—Enticing Servant Away, vol. 14, p. 800.

Where it was alleged that defendant promised to appear in any place under the direction of plaintiff in performances described, and to attend rehearsals, it was held to bind defendant to join an establishment of the plaintiff's for equestrian purposes in Scotland, and a failure to comply therewith, and a refusal to assist in such performances, was held to be sufficiently alleged by setting forth the terms of the contract and alleging a breach of it. Batty v. Melillo, 10 C. B. 282; 70 E. C. L. 282.

engages an actor for the season, usually may determine at what time the season shall close.¹ As in cases of contracts generally, week's business, and Coughlan to receive $100 "for each performance in which he shall appear." Coughlan acted in the theater for five weeks, when Stetson refused to allow him to act for three weeks, and refused to pay him his salary, $2,100, for that time. Afterwards Coughlan acted for Stetson and was paid under the agreement. In a suit for the three weeks' salary, it was held that Stetson was required by the contract to permit Coughlan to act, who was entitled to his salary, although he did not appear; that he did not lose any right by afterwards acting for Stetson and being paid therefor; and that Coughlan should be allowed to amend his complaint so as to recover the $2,100 as damages instead of wages. Coughlan v. Stetson, 22 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 88; 19 Fed. Rep. 727.

Condition as to Rehearsals.—In Bettini v. Gye, 1 Q. B. Div. 183, the plaintiff entered into a contract with defendant, by which he undertook the part of first tenor in the "theaters, halls, and drawing-rooms" in the United Kingdom during his engagement, to begin on the 30th of March, 1875 and terminate on the 13th of July, 1875. The contract also contained a stipulation that the plaintiff should sing in concerts as well as operas, but should not sing anywhere out of the theater in the United Kingdom from the 1st of January to the 1st of December 1875 without the written permission of defendant, except at more than fifty miles from London, and out of the season of the theater, and also that he would be in London without fail "at least six days before the commencement of his engagement for the purpose of rehearsals." The plaintiff was prevented by a temporary illness from being in London before the 28th of March, on which day he arrived, but the defendant then refused to receive him into his company, alleging as a ground for the refusal, his failure to be on hand "six days before the commencement of his engagement for the purpose of rehearsals." In an action by the plaintiff for damages, it was held that the stipulation as to rehearsals was not a condition precedent, for it did not go to the root of the matter, as plaintiff was to sing in concerts at halls and drawing-rooms as well as at the theater, and was also to abstain from singing within fifty miles from London from the 1st of January, previous to the commencement of his engagement on the 30th of March.

Breach by Employer—Evidence.—In an action brought by an actress to recover damages claimed to have been sustained by her, by reason of an alleged breach by the defendant, of a contract, by the terms of which he agreed to employ plaintiff for a given period, it is improper to admit evidence as to receipts by plaintiff, under an agreement made with a third party four or five years prior to the one with the defendant, which required the rendition by her of services similar to those to be rendered under the contract in question, on the question of damages for the breach of his contract with plaintiff; and the fact that plaintiff purchased certain costumes to be used by her in the business to be carried on under the contract between her and the defendant, it not appearing that she was under any obligation to make the purchase, or that she suffered any loss thereby, is not an element of damage. Ellsler v. Brooks, 54 N. Y. Super. Ct. 73.

A party contracting to furnish a troupe for a given occasion under the name of the "Redpath Lyceum Bureau," may sue in case of a breach thereof by the other party, it appearing that he did business under that name individually, and not as a corporation or copartnership. Hathaway v. Sabin, 61 Vt. 608.

1. "The term 'until the close of the season,' in a contract of employment of an actor, leaves much to be determined by future events, such as financial success or failure, illness, or other circumstances affecting the continuance of the enterprise. Some one has to determine when the exigencies of the situation require a limit to be put to the performances, and this person, in the nature of things, is the proprietor and responsible leader of the troupe. The serious illness of the star of a company, in the middle of the usual season, would seem to afford a sufficient reason for terminating the season when the contract contains a clause that it should be terminated and canceled in case of illness." Wandell's Law of where the words employed have by usage or custom a peculiar meaning, such meaning may be shown by parol evidence.¹

c. EMPLOYMENT OF CHILDREN.—A statute prohibiting the employment of children of immature years in theatrical exhibitions is held to be constitutional,² and to make out the offense it is only necessary to show that the exhibition was a theatrical performance, that the children were employed by the defendant for that purpose, and that they were under the age in question. It is not necessary to show that the exhibition endangered the health or injured the morals of the children, nor need any specific act of physical cruelty be shown.³

d. ILLNESS OF ACTOR.—Contracts for personal services, whether of the contracting party or of a third person, requiring skill, and which can be performed only by the particular person named, are not, in their nature, of absolute obligation under all circumstances; but, unless otherwise specified in the contract, are subject to the implied condition that the person named shall be able to perform at the time specified; and if he dies, or becomes unable to perform, the obligation to perform is extinguished.⁴

the Theater 131, citing Strakosch v. Strakosch, 3 N. Y. Law J. 645, June 25th, 1890.

1. Grant v. Maddox, 15 M. & W. 737. In this case parol evidence was admitted to show that a contract to employ an actor for three years at so much per week, meant, by the usage of the profession, that he was to be paid for the theatrical season only.

2. People v. Ewer (N. Y. Ct. of Appeals), 36 N. E. Rep. 4, affirming 24 N. E. Rep. 500. In this case it was held that, though the inalienable right of a child or adult to pursue a trade is indisputable, it must be not only one which is lawful, but which, as to the child of immature years, the state, as parens patriæ, recognizes as proper and safe. And section 202 of the New York Penal Code was held to apply, not only to exhibitions offending against morals and decency, or endangering life or limb, or to what is required of the child actor, but to be applicable to all public exhibitions or shows.

3. People v. Meade, 24 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 357.

Under the New York Penal Code, section 202, "relative to the licensing of children in theatrical exhibitions," as amended by Laws 1892, ch. 309, prohibiting the exhibition of a child under sixteen years of age "in singing or dancing; or playing upon musical instruments; or in a theatrical exhibition;" but allowing the child to be employed "as a musician in any concert, or in a theatrical exhibition, with written consent of the mayor of the city," the mayor cannot consent to her appearing in a theatrical exhibition which includes singing or dancing by her, and mandamus will not lie to compel him. People v. Grant, 70 Hun (N. Y.) 233. And a consent given for a child to perform in a theatrical exhibition does not have the effect of permitting her to sing or dance in such exhibition. In re Stevens, 70 Hun (N. Y.) 243.

Contract with Parent for Services of Child.—If a parent signs a paper setting forth that "I agree that my daughter shall perform, etc., this season, and I consent that she shall enter into articles for three following seasons," an action lies—such daughter refusing to carry out the agreement—on the first part for the bare non-performance, but the latter part is a mere consent, and not an agreement. Morris v. Paton, 1 C. & F. 189; 11 E. C. L. 362.

4. Hall v. Wright, E. B. & E. 746; 96 E. C. L. 745; 29 L. J. Q. B. 43; Taylor v. Caldwell, 3 B. & S. 826; 32 L. J. Q. B. 164; Robinson v. Davison, L. R., 6 Exch. 269; Spalding v. Rosa, 71 N. Y. 40; 27 Am. Rep. 7. The action in this last case was brought by plaintiffs, who were the owners and managers of the Olympic Theater in St. Louis, Mo. to recover damages for an alleged breach of contract by defendants. By

c. DAMAGES—PROSPECTIVE PROFITS.—Where a lecturer, or public performer of any sort, contracts to appear for a certain price at a given place and fails to do so, prospective profits, as shown by the evidence, may be recovered as damages for the breach.¹

the contract, defendants agreed to furnish the "Wachtel Opera Troupe" to give four performances per week at plaintiffs' theater for two weeks, commencing the 26th or 27th of February, 1872, plaintiffs to receive twenty per cent. of the gross receipts up to $1,800 per week, and defendants the balance. Prior to the time specified in the contract, Wachtel, who was the chief singer and attraction, and who gave the name to the troupe, was taken sick, and at the time was unable to sing. Defendants, in consequence, did not furnish the troupe at the time specified. It was held in action to recover damages for breach of contract, that such sickness occurring without the fault of the defendants, constituted a valid excuse for the non-performance of the contract.

Where the plaintiff had agreed to play in a new piece about to be produced, but before the time of performance became ill and was unable to appear in many of the rehearsals, or on the opening night, or for several nights thereafter, it was held, in an action by her to recover damages for wrongful dismissal, that her inability to perform on the opening and early performances went to the root of the matter, and justified the defendants in rescinding the contract. Poussard v. Spiers, 1 Q. B. Div. 410.

Notice of Illness.—Where an actor agrees in his contract to conform strictly to the regulations "commonly in use," he is bound, with reference to his right to his salary, to give notice to the manager, in case of anticipated illness, by a certain hour on the day of performance, the existence of a general regulation to this effect being shown by the evidence. Corsi v. Maretzek, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 1.

Where a musician under contract to perform at B. on the 14th day of the month, was taken ill on the 13th, and instead of telegraphing the manager notice of that fact, which would have reached him on the same day, wrote by the afternoon post, whereby the notice was not received until midday of the 14th, and the manager consequently put to extra expense in notifying his patrons of the postponement of the concert, it was held not to be notice within a reasonable time, and the manager was allowed to recover the extra expense thus entailed. Robinson v. Davison, L. R., 6 Exch. 269.

Doctor's Certificate.—Where it is agreed that an actor is to be excused only for sickness, when certified to by a doctor, to be appointed by the manager, the provision is binding upon the actor regardless of the school to which the doctor appointed belongs. Corsi v. Maretzek, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 1.

Damages for Injury to Actor.—A manager cannot recover damages from a person so injuring one of his players as to prevent his appearing. Taylor v. Neri, 1 Esp. 386. In this case the plaintiff, the manager of an opera house, had engaged one Breda, as a public singer during the season, at a given salary; the defendant had assaulted and beat the said Breda, whereby the plaintiff lost his service as a public performer, and it was held that an action would not lie on the part of the manager to recover damages.

1. Savery v. Ingersoll, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 176. In this case the defendant had agreed to visit the city of A., where the plaintiff resided, and deliver a lecture for the sum of $250, the plaintiff to have the sale of, and money received for, the admission tickets. The defendant failed to appear and the plaintiff recovered damages. In Wakeman v. Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co., 101 N. Y. 205; 54 Am. Rep. 676, Earl, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "When it is certain that damages have been caused by a breach of contract, and the only uncertainty is as to their amount, there can rarely be good reason for refusing, on account of such uncertainty, any damages whatever for the breach. A person violating his contract should not be permitted entirely to escape liability, because the amount of the damages which he has caused is uncertain. . . . Losses sustained and gains prevented are proper elements of damage. Most contracts are entered into with the view to future profits. . . . As they are prospective, they must, to some extent, be

2. Characters and Parts.—While the manager may use his own discretion in assigning the parts of a play to the different actors, provided there is nothing in their contracts prohibiting it, he cannot compel an actor to take a lower part than the one for which he was engaged,¹ nor can an actor employed for a given rôle be required to appear in another altogether different.² If the manager attempts this, the actor may consider the contract broken, and sue for whatever loss he may have sustained. A manager must give an actor reasonable notice of a change in his part.³

3. Stage Costumes.—It is the duty of an actor who undertakes a part, to dress for it properly⁴ and in accordance with decency, and a failure in this respect will be a valid ground for discharge.⁵

4. Discharge of Actor.—The manager may discharge an actor uncertain and problematical, and yet on that account a person complaining of breach of contract is not to be deprived of all remedy." And see Alfaro v. Davidson, 40 N. Y. Super. Ct. 87; Wood's Mayne on Damages (1st Am. ed.) 82; 1 Sedgwick on Damages, § 192; DAMAGES, vol. 5, p. 32.

1. Roserie v. Kiralfy Bros., 12 Phila. (Pa.) 209; Warner v. Rector, etc., of Holy Church, 1 City Ct. (N. Y.) 419; Baron v. Placide, 7 La. Ann. 229.

2. In Baron v. Placide, 7 La. Ann. 229, it was held that a ballet dancer employed as "seconde premiere danseuse" could not be compelled to dance a parlor dance, in parlor dress, with the figurantes of the theater, and that her refusal to do so constituted no just ground for dismissal, and that for such dismissal she could recover a penalty equal to the amount of salary she would have received during the unexpired term of her contract.

3. And where a performer is called on to resume, in consequence of the illness of another, a part in which, by previous performances, she has acquired celebrity, she is entitled to reasonable notice previous to the time of performance, and such notice must be proportioned to the reputation at stake. Graddon v. Price, 2 C. & P. 610; 12 E. C. L. 286. This was an action by Miss Graddon, the singer, to recover from the lessee of Drury Lane Theater a balance of salary withheld for a fine incurred under the following circumstances: The singer advertised to take the part of Catherine in the Siege of Belgrade, on a particular night, was taken ill the day before. Miss Graddon, who had previously played it, was requested to undertake the part, but refused to do so, alleging that the notice was not sufficient, and that by undertaking it at such short notice she would injure the reputation previously acquired in the part, and it was held that the notice was not given in a reasonable time and that she could recover.

4. An actress who has agreed to appear in tights, cannot refuse to do so in cold weather and put the manager to the expense of changing the costumes of the entire company; and where, under such circumstances, an actress set up as a reason for the breach of a contract by her, that the manager refused to substitute some other costume for tights worn by her in a certain part, she claiming that the wearing of tights endangered her health, but declining to wear anything under them on the ground that to do so would "destroy her outline," it was held that she was not justified in leaving his employment. Duff v. Russell, 14 N. Y. Supp. 134.

5. Wandell's Law of the Theater 119. It is here said: "A preliminary injunction was recently granted, but afterwards dissolved, in England, restraining the lessee and manager of the Gaiety Theater, from preventing the plaintiff, Miss Fay Templeton, from performing the part of Fernand in the play of Monte Christo, in accordance with her contract; and also restraining him from employing any one else to perform the part. The affidavits disclosed that the defendant justified his dismissal of the plaintiff on the ground that she wore her dress improperly. This the plaintiff denied, and stated that the dress was supplied by the management."

for good cause, as, for example, for failure to attend rehearsals,¹ immoral conduct,² or incompetency.³ But an actor is entitled to actual notice of discharge, and notice posted on the door of the green-room does not operate to terminate the contract, unless brought home to him.⁴

1. Failure to Attend Rehearsals.—In the absence of a sufficient excuse for failing to attend a rehearsal, a person discharged for such reason cannot recover in an action for damages for wrongful dismissal. Fisher v. Monroe, 12 N. Y. Supp. 273; 16 Daly (N. Y.) 461. Plaintiff in this case sought to excuse her failure to attend a rehearsal, on the ground that, when directed to do so, on the day preceding the rehearsal, she was physically exhausted; but it did not appear that, at the time of the rehearsal, she was physically unable to attend, and it was held that no sufficient excuse for non-attendance was shown.

2. Immoral Conduct.—Where an actress is guilty of indecent and immoral conduct, so gross as to cause the other members of the company to refuse to associate with her, and so open as to become matter of public scandal, even though she fully performs all her theatrical duties, she may be lawfully discharged. Drayton v. Reid, 5 Daly (N. Y.) 442.

3. Under a contract for plaintiff's services as chorister in a spectacular play, providing that in case his services should not, "in the estimation of the" defendants, "be satisfactorily rendered, it should then be lawful for" the defendants to end the agreement, after first, however, giving "the plaintiff" two weeks' "notice," it was held that plaintiff might be lawfully discharged at any time, without the defendants giving any reason therefor, and it could not be left to the jury to say whether his services were satisfactorily rendered. Peverly v. Poole, 19 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 271.

Where in a contract it was provided that, "In the event either of incompetency, or of such continued illness or decrease of physical or vocal faculties as to prevent one from doing service for a period of more than two weeks, the company may, in its discretion, cancel or annul the contract," the word "incompetency" was held to mean physical inability. Brandt v. Godwin, 3 N. Y. Supp. 807; Wandell's Law of the Theater 137, citing Young v.

American Opera Co., N. Y. Daily Reg. May 27th, 1887.

An actor has no right to insist on taking part in the first public presentation of a play, but may be discharged during the preliminary rehearsals if he shows himself unfit for the part and unsatisfactory. Wandell's Law of the Theater 128, citing White v. Henderson, 5 Gibson's Law Notes 5. But an actor cannot be discharged upon a pretense of dissatisfaction which is neither genuine nor honest. Grinnell v. Kiralfy, 55 Hun (N. Y.) 422; 18 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 48.

Two Weeks' Notice.—A theatrical custom of dismissing on two weeks' notice cannot prevail over a specific agreement, and where an actor contracts for a certain specified period, he cannot be discharged on two weeks' notice, unless there is a provision to that effect in the contract. Wandell's Law of the Theater 125, citing Hall v. Aronson, 4 N. Y. Law J. 1499, March 16th, 1891.

If an actor entitled to two weeks' notice of discharge, is discharged without notice, he may recover as damages the amount of his salary for the two weeks, which he would have earned if the stipulated notice had been given. Peverly v. Poole, 19 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 271.

4. DeGellert v. Poole, 2 N. Y. Supp. 651. The court, in rendering the opinion in this case, said: "Notifying a lady of confessed talent that she is discharged, by posting the fact in the green-room, would hardly be an agreeable form of notification to an artist of ordinary feelings, nor do we believe that the plaintiff ever contemplated that such a form of notice should be given to her under the contract. It would be unreasonable to expect every chorister or member of the ballet to be daily scanning the walls of the green-room for notices of their discharge, when the more agreeable and easy method of personal communication was at all times present. The plaintiff was a member of the defendants' company, under their constant command and direction, and personal

For a wrongful discharge, an actor may recover damages, but he can have but one recovery,¹ and the manager may reduce the amount by showing that he might have obtained other employment of the same general character.²

5. Injunctions Restraining Actors.—A court of equity cannot enforce directly the performance of an actor's contract, by compelling him to act with a certain manager, but may enforce it indirectly by prohibiting him from acting with any one else.³ But notice was so easy of communication, that we are satisfied that both parties contemplated it. Under our construction of the contract, the notice, not having been brought home to the plaintiff, was insufficient to effect her discharge."

1. Where the action is brought before the expiration of the term of service, but the trial does not come off until after the term has expired, he may recover the same damages as if the action had not been brought until after expiration of the term. If the trial takes place before the expiration of the term, he will be entitled to such damages as the evidence shows he has actually sustained up to the time of the trial, and if at that time his loss is only probable and not actual, the recovery should be for nominal damages only. But a former recovery of part of the damages will bar a subsequent suit. Everson v. Powers, 89 N. Y. 527; Parry v. American Opera Co., 19 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 269. In this last case, where an actor was hired for twenty-five weeks and discharged after eight weeks' service, it was held that a recovery of judgment for the damages sustained for the two weeks following his discharge, barred any further action for damages for the remaining fifteen weeks for which he was hired, although his services, had they been rendered, were to be paid for in weekly installments.

Filing—Declaration.—A performer at a theater, who is to be paid for nights of performance on which he does not perform, as well as those on which he does perform, should not declare for work and labor, but "for arrears of salary as a hired performer." Frazer v. Bunn, 8 C. & P. 704; 34 E. C. L. 592.

Arrears of Salary—Application of Payments.—Where a performer at a theater has arrears of salary due him, and money is paid to him without its being stated that it is paid on any particular account, he may appropriate the payment to any part of the arrear he chooses; but if the person paying had, at the time of the payment, made an entry in a book stating it to be for a specific portion of the arrear, and had at the time shown that entry to the performer, that would have been evidence of such an appropriation by the debtor as would be binding on the other party. Frazer v. Bunn, 8 C. & P. 704; 34 E. C. L. 592. See also PAYMENT, vol. 18, p. 234.

Singer Employed by Corporation—Laws of New York.—The contract obligation to pay a singer employed by a corporation for a specified time, at a salary named, is a "debt" of the corporation from the time the contract goes into effect, within the meaning of the statute. Brandt v. Godwin, 3 N. Y. Supp. 807.

2. In an action for damages brought by an actor for not being allowed to go to work, or for wrongful discharge, it may be shown, by way of mitigation of damages, that he had opportunities to make a theatrical engagement elsewhere, which he did not accept. Howard v. Daly, 61 N. Y. 377; 19 Am. Rep. 285; Everson v. Powers, 89 N. Y. 527; 42 Am. Rep. 319.

3. Duff v. Russell, 14 N. Y. Supp. 134; Fredricks v. Mayer, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 566; Daly v. Smith, 38 N. Y. Super. Ct. 158; Cort v. Lassard, 18 Oregon 221; 17 Am. St. Rep. 726; Montague v. Flockton, L. R., 16 Eq. 189; Webster v. Dillon, 3 Jur. N. S. 432. And see 2 High on Injunc., § 1164; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur., § 1343; INJUNCTIONS, vol. 10, p. 948.

In the earlier cases the courts held that as they could not enforce the positive part of the contract, they would not enjoin the breach of the negative part. Kemble v. Kean, 6 Sim. 334; Clark v. Price, 2 Wils. Ch. 157; Kimberly v. Jennings, 6 Sim. 340; Sanquirico v. Benedetti, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 315; Hamblin v. Dinneford, 2 Edw.

as the granting or refusing of an injunction rests in the sound discretion of the court, it will not be granted where it would operate oppressively,¹ or when it is not the fit or proper mode of redress in the circumstances,² and it will be refused, unless it Afterwards, an injunction was allowed where there was a negative clause in the contract prohibiting the actor from performing under any other management, but it was still refused in the absence of such negative clause. 2 High on Injunc., §§ 1163, 1164; Lumley v. Wagner, 1 DeG. M. & G. 604; Caldwell v. Cline, 8 Martin N. S. (La.) 684; Butler v. Galletti, 21 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 465; Hayes v. Willio, 11 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 167. For a summary of the modern doctrine on the subject, see Reporter's Note to 16 Fed. Rep. 42, 43.

Writ of Ne Exeat.—A theatrical manager is not entitled to a writ of ne exeat, on a bill for the specific performance of a contract, previous to the time at which the contract is to be performed, and before any right of action has accrued thereon, either at law or in equity, against the defendant; and further, a bill quia timet, upon a contract for personal services to be performed at a future time, cannot be filed for the purpose of obtaining equitable bail, although there is danger that the defendant may leave the state before the time for the performance of the contract arrives. DeRivaflinoli v. Corsetti, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 264; 25 Am. Dec. 532. In this case it was sought to restrain an opera singer under contract to sing in New York, from departing for a foreign country. But where an injunction is granted, a writ of ne exeat, if necessary to carry out the injunction, will issue. Hayes v. Willio, 11 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 167.

1. Actor Cannot Be Compelled to Remain Idle.—An actor cannot be compared to a mere clerk, for his success depends on his being continually before the public, and a manager will not be entitled to an interlocutory injunction to prevent an actor employed by him, from appearing at a rival house, when after months have passed, he is not allowed to appear upon his employer's stage, although his salary is paid. Fechter v. Montgomery, 33 Beav. 22. In this case, the defendant, a provincial actor, was desirous of appearing on the London stage, and accepted an engagement to do so at a salary much less than he received in the provinces. Though there was nothing expressed on the subject, the court inferred an engagement on the part of the plaintiff to employ the defendant for a reasonable time, and on the part of the defendant not to perform elsewhere; but the appearance of the defendant having been delayed until five months had elapsed, it was held that he had a right to seek employment elsewhere.

2. To obtain an injunction, it must be shown that the actor's artistic abilities are extraordinary and of special merit, and that the plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law. Carter v. Ferguson, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 569; Bronk v. Riley (Supreme Ct.), 3 N. Y. Supp. 446; Metropolitan Exhibition Co. v. Ewing, 24 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 419; Cort v. Lassard, 18 Oregon 221; 17 Am. St. Rep. 726; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur., § 1343. Where a manager makes a contract for a dramatic season, with an actor of distinction, who is a great artistic acquisition, and it was understood at the time of the making of the contract, that the same was entered into because such manager desired to secure his dramatic service, his name, and to prevent his acting elsewhere in the same place without his permission, and such manager has publicly announced such person as a member of the company, the engagement of such actor with a rival manager, and the public announcement of his appearance at another theater, presents a case of irreparable damage, although such actor may be pecuniarily able to respond to any damages that might be recovered by law. Daly v. Smith, 38 N. Y. Super. Ct. 58.

The person by whom the principal defendant is employed, may have himself made a party to the injunction. Strobridge Lithographing Co. v. Crane (Supreme Ct.), 12 N. Y. Supp. 834.

An injunction will be refused where there is a restrictive clause, without any substantial benefit therefrom to the plaintiff, as where the complainant has no theater in active operation nor is likely to have for some time to come. No custom can be withdrawn from him appears that the contract is fair, just, and equitable to the actor as well as to the manager.¹

XII. CRITICISMS OF THE PRESS.—The editor of a public newspaper may comment candidly on any place or species of public entertainment, but it must be done fairly, and without malice or a view to injure or prejudice the proprietor in the eyes of the public. If so done, however severe the censure, the justice of it screens the editor from legal proceedings; but if it can be and no damage result. De Pol v. Sohlke, 7 Robt. (N. Y.) 280.

In Metropolitan Exhibition Co. v. Ward (Supreme Ct.), 9 N. Y. Supp. 779, the defendant agreed to render his services as base-ball player, during the season of 1889, the contract providing "to reserve" the defendant for the year 1890, at a salary not less than a sum named. No salary, terms, or conditions were provided for 1890. It was provided, that the contract might be terminated by the plaintiff, by giving ten days' notice. The court held, that the contract as regarded the year 1890, was not definite enough to entitle plaintiff to a preliminary injunction, pending suit to restrain the defendant from making a contract with another party for that year.

Preliminary Injunction.—A preliminary injunction will not be granted except in cases where there is the strongest probability that the court will ultimately decide that the plaintiff is entitled to the relief demanded. Metropolitan Exhibition Co. v. Ward, 24 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 393; Hamilton Accessory v. Transit Co., 3 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 255.

Agreement for Liquidated Damages.—

Where the parties have agreed upon liquidated damages for the violation of a covenant, it seems an injunction will not be allowed; but a mere penalty designed solely to secure the observance of a contract, will not be construed as liquidated damages, nor prevent an injunction. McCaull v. Braham, 16 Fed. Rep. 37; Mapleson v. Del Puente, 13 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 144. Where the contract provided for "the forfeiture of a week's salary, or termination of the engagement, at the manager's option, without debarring him from enforcing the contract as he might see fit," it was held that this clause was not an agreement for liquidated damages, and that an injunction would issue to restrain the threatened violation of the contract. McCaull v.

Braham, 16 Fed. Rep. 37. But where the contract provided that, in case of a breach, the defendant should forfeit and pay to the plaintiff two hundred dollars, which should be deemed forfeited by breach without any legal proceedings, it was held to be an agreement for liquidated damages, and an injunction was refused. Hahn v. Concordia Soc., 42 Md. 460.

1. 2 Story's Eq., § 950; Mapleson v. Del Puente, 13 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 144; Metropolitan Exhibition Co. v. Ewing, 24 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 419; Kimberly v. Jennings, 6 Sim. 340; Baldwin v. Society for Diffusion, etc., 9 Sim. 393.

An actress having no business experience, made a contract to act with a certain manager for six years, she to have half the net profits after the first year, but no voice in the management of the business. Shortly before that contract expired, she entered into a new contract for a like period, in which the manager had inserted a clause that she was satisfied with the outcome of the expired contract and with his business ability and management. In an action by the manager to enjoin the actress from acting under the management of a third person during the period covered by the second contract, the court held that it was error, in view of the trust relation which existed between the parties, to exclude defendant's evidence tending to show the plaintiff's breach of the first contract, as his conduct in that respect would affect his right to equitable relief. Hill v. Haberkorn (Supreme Ct.), 6 N. Y. Supp. 474.

An opera singer, by agreement dated only as to the year 1870, agreed to sing at a certain theater for the whole London season, and nowhere else in the kingdom of Great Britain during the year 1871, without the written consent of the employer. The singer's salary did not extend beyond the season which ended on the 5th of August, 1871. On proved that the comment is unjust, malevolent or exceeds the bounds of fair opinion, it is a libel and therefore actionable.¹

XIII. Hissing.—The audience have a right to express their free and unbiased opinions of the merits of a play and of the performers who appear upon the stage, or to give expression to the feelings excited at the moment by the performance, and in this manner may applaud or hiss; but if parties, by a preconcerted plan, attend a theater to hiss an actor or the play, they will be liable to an action of conspiracy,² and if the disturbance is such as to render the actor entirely inaudible, though no personal violence be motion for injunction to restrain him singing elsewhere after the season was over, but during the year 1871, it was held that the court would not, under the circumstances of the case, grant an injunction on an interlocutory application. Mapleson v. Bentham, 20 W. R. 176.

Closing the season, for which an actress was engaged, four weeks earlier than the time specified in the contract, whereby an actress did not receive a benefit from which she expected to realize $500, but for which she subsequently accepted $150, and her inability to obtain compensation for said four weeks, constitutes no defense to an application for an injunction in such a case. Nor the not permitting her, during the previous season, to appear on the stage on a sufficient number of occasions, and the casting her, when she was permitted to appear, in parts entirely subordinate to the line of business to which she was entitled, and an allegation in general terms that the manager's intentions in inducing the contract (of which the actress was not aware at the time), were not to produce the actress, but to prevent her appearance on the stage, and thus to injure her professional standing and reputation, without stating any particulars, facts, or circumstances tending to establish a motive for such a course, is wholly insufficient to raise a defense, especially when other facts in the case tend to prove the allegations. Daly v. Smith, 38 N. Y. Super. Ct. 158.

Where Husband Contracts for Wife.—

Upon a contract made by a husband for himself and wife, that his wife should perform at the theater of the manager named therein, during a certain period for a certain salary, a court of equity will not enjoin the wife from performing in any other theater during the same period; nor the husband from permitting her to change her residence;

nor another manager from giving her employment within the term as an actress; neither can specific execution of such a contract, as against the husband or wife, be decreed. Burton v. Marshall, 4 Gill (Md.) 487; 45 Am. Dec. 171.

1. Dibdin v. Swan, 1 Esp. 28; 5 Revised Reports, 717; LIBEL AND SLANDER, vol. 13, p. 331. In an action by the manager of an opera for libel, he need not aver or prove that he had a license, the legal presumption being that he has not violated the law. Fry v. Bennett, 28 N. Y. 324.

2. Gregory v. Brunswick, 1 C. & K. 24; 47 E. C. L. 23; King v. Mawbey, 6 T. R. 628; 4 Bl. Com. 136; Wright on Criminal Conspiracies 32; CRIMINAL CONSPIRACY, vol. 4, p. 582.

Tindal, C. J., in Gregory v. Brunswick, 1 C. & K. 24; 47 E. C. L. 23, said: "The law on this subject lies in a narrow compass. There is no doubt that the public who go to a theater have the right to express their free and unbiased opinions of the merits of the performers who appear upon the stage. At the same time, parties have no right to go to a theater by a preconcerted plan, to make such a noise that an actor, without any judgment being formed on his performance, should be driven from the stage by such a scheme, probably concocted for an unworthy purpose." And in 2 Bishop's Crim. Law, § 308, note, the language of Bushe, C. J., in Rex v. Forbes, 1 Craw. & D. 157, is thus quoted: "They (the audience) may cry down a play or other performance, which they dislike, or they may hiss or hoot the actors who depend upon their approbation or caprice. Even that privilege, however, is confined within its limits. They must not break the peace, or act in such a manner as has a tendency to excite terror or disturbance. Their censure or approbation, although it may be noisy, must not be riotous. That offered to any individual nor any injury done to the house, they are, in point of law, guilty of riot.¹

XIV. CARRIAGE, TRANSPORTATION, BAGGAGE, ETC.—The damage resulting to a theatrical troupe through the delay of a train, resulting from the particular character of their business which was unknown to the railroad company, has been held too remote to be recovered.²

Stage properties, costumes, paraphernalia, advertising matter, etc., do not fall under the denomination of baggage, and in the absence of negligence, no liability can arise against a carrier for their loss or destruction, unless knowingly accepted by him as baggage.³

censure or approbation must be the expression of the feelings of the moment, for, if it be premeditated by a number of persons confederated beforehand to cry down even a performance of an actor, it becomes criminal. Such are the limits and privileges of an audience, even as to actors and authors."

1. Rex v. Forbes, 1 Craw. & D. 157.

The spectators have no right to create a disturbance, because the prices of admission are exorbitant. Clifford v. Braddon, 2 Camp. 358. Lord Mansfield, in this case, said: "Theaters are not absolute necessities of life, and any person may stay away who does not approve of the manner in which they are managed. If the prices of admission are unreasonable, the evil will cure itself. People will not go, and the proprietors will be ruined, unless they lower their demands. But the proprietors of a theater have a right to manage their property in their own way, and to fix what prices of admission they think most for their own advantage."

2. Georgia R. Co. v. Hayden, 71 Ga. 518; 26 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 262. In this case, a theatrical manager purchased tickets for himself and troupe, from a railroad, at the terminus of which they were to take a connecting train and proceed to a point at which a performance was to be given. Tickets had been sold to this performance to the amount of $280. There had been a collision of other trains on the first railroad and the train taken by plaintiff was delayed so as to miss connection with the next train. Plaintiff failed to reach his destination, and the money was refunded to the purchasers of seats. At the point of delay, late at night, plaintiff first notified the company by telegraph of his arrangements, but it did not appear that the telegram was received in time to remedy the difficulty, and it was held that he could not recover damages. And see Weed v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., a case decided in 1886 in the district court of Parish of Orleans, not reported, but cited in 26 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 262. Here, Tisot, J., is reported to have said: "This is a damage suit against the defendant company for failing to bring a theatrical company into this city on schedule time. The law governing in such actions may be taken to be stated in the case of Gordon v. R. Co., 52 N. H. 596, on the general question of liability for delays," viz., that the publication of a time-table imposes upon the company an obligation to use due care to have trains arrive and leave in accordance with the table, but not an absolute and unconditional engagement.

Theatrical Rates.—The interstate commerce commission held that it would not undertake to say in advance what rates railroad companies shall or shall not make to any class or organization of persons. In re Theatrical Rates, 1 Int. Com. Rep. 18.

3. They are not articles required for the pleasure, convenience, or necessity of the passenger during his journey, but are plainly intended for the larger or ulterior purpose of carrying on the theatrical business. *Oakes v. In Sloman v. Great Western R. Co., 6 Hun (N. Y.) 546, it is said that the railroad will be liable in such case, unless the agent who receives the baggage violates a regulation of the company in doing so, and the passenger has notice of the regulation. But the passenger must be aware of the regulation, for otherwise the act of the agent done within the usual scope of his employment, will bind the carrier, regardless of any private instructions. *Minter v. The performance of a play in public with the consent of an author, does not constitute evidence of a dedication to the public, or an abandonment of his rights, Boucicault v. Fox, 5 Blatchf. (U. S.) 87; but it seems that a spectator, in the absence of an understanding with the proprietor limiting the use he may make of the knowledge derived, may publish what he can remember; but he cannot make use of notes or a phonographic copy. *Keene v. 2. Bouv. L. Dict. Blackstone uses the words "theft" and "larceny" as descriptive of one and the same offense. Bl. Com., vol. 4, p. 229. See People v. Donohue, 84 N. Y. 441.

In American Ins. Co. v. Bryan, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 563; 37 Am. Dec. 278, where the discussion of the meaning of the word "theft," as used in an insurance policy, arose, it was said that its "primary meaning, which is now the ordinary one, is that of secret stealing or simple larceny." But in Taylor v. Liverpool, etc., Steam Co., L. R., 9 Q. B. 546, it is held that "thieves," as used in an insurance policy, must be applied to thieves external to the ship. In Spinetti v. Atlas Steamship Co., 80 N. Y. 71; 36 Am. Rep. 579; Taylor v. Liverpool, etc., Steam Co., L. R., 9 Q. B. 546, is disapproved, and the difference in the views of the courts of England, from those of the State of New York, as to the meaning of the words "theft" and "thieves" in policies of insurance, pointed out. insurance to describe the property insured, do not necessarily import an absolute legal title in the building itself. The words "his" or "their" in a policy, as descriptive of the property of the assured, do not render the policy void if the insured has an insurable interest, although the interest may be qualified or defeasible, or even an equitable interest. Fowle v. Springfield Ins. Co., 122 Mass. 194.

In a Will.—In Boreham v. Bignall, 8 Hare 131, a substitutional gift to "their children," was held conclusively to show that one wife only of the first beneficiary was in the contemplation of the testator, and that that wife must have been the one living at the date of the will.

Read Distributively.—In a covenant by two or more for themselves, "their exs., ads., and ass's," the word "their" is necessarily read distributively, because the parties do not anticipate that they will have the same exs., etc.; but the word will not convert a covenant otherwise joint into a separate covenant. White v. Tyndall, 13 App. Cas. 263.

1. As an adverb of time, "then" means "at that time," referring to a time specified, either past or future. It has no power in itself to fix a time, but simply refers to a time already fixed. Mangum v. Piester, 16 S. Car. 329; Dove v. Torr, 128 Mass. 38; Wood v. Bullard (Mass. 1890), 7 L. R. A. 304; Cresson's Appeal, 76 Pa. St. 19; Laird's Appeal, 85 Pa. St. 343; Newberry v. Hinman, 49 Conn. 130; Farnam v. Farnam, 53 Conn. 279; Gibson v. Hardaway, 68 Ga. 378; Heasman v. Pearce, L. R., 7 Ch. App. 660.

The word "then," although in a strictly grammatical sense an adverb of time, is nevertheless often used for the purpose of denoting an event or contingency, and is equivalent to the words "in that event" or "in that case." Hall v. Priest, 6 Gray (Mass.) 24; Pintard v. Irwin, 20 N. J. L. 505. And see Thompson v. Ludington, 104 Mass. 193; Ash v. Coleman, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 647; Barker v. Southerland, 6 Dem. (N. Pickett, 1 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 35; Wightman v. Carlisle, 14 Vt. 296.

Thesiger, L. J., in Mortimore v. Slater, 7 Ch. Div. 322; aff'd in H. L. nom. Mortimore v. Mortimore, 48 L. J. Ch. 470; 4 App. Cas. 448, in discussing the meaning of "then," where property is given upon certain events to such persons as shall "then" be next of kin or relations of the testator, said: "The cases seem to me to divide themselves into three classes. The first of those classes is the one where the word 'then,' as an adverb of time, is attached to the description of the class; and in that case, as in Wharton v. Barker, 4 K. & J. 483, and Long v. Blackall, 3 Ves. 486, it was decided that the word 'then' imported the time at which the class so described is to be ascertained. Wheeler v. Addams, 17 Beav. 417, is to a certain extent an exception to that rule; but I think that may be explained, because we find that in that case there is a reference in the limitation to one of the persons, who had been a tenant for life before the limitation came into force.

"The second class of cases consists of those where words of futurity, but without the adverb of time, are attached to the description of the class, and in that class of cases we find no distinction drawn, but in every one of them we find that it was held that the words must speak from the time of the testator's death. The cases cited on that point have been Holloway v. Holloway, 5 Ves. 399, and Doe v. Lawson, 3 East 292.

"The third class of cases is that where the word 'then,' the adverb of time, is used, but where you find it used not in connection with the description of the class, but in connection with the time at which the estate is to come into being. In that class of cases, also, without any exception, we find it decided that you are to look at the class at the time of the testator's death. That is to be found in Cable v. Cable, 16 Beav. 507, in Bullock v. Downes, 9 H. L. Cas. 1, and in Day v. Day, 4 Ir. Rep. Eq. 385; and it is to be observed that in all these cases we do not find that any distinction is drawn from the use of the additional words, 'as if he had died intestate,' but the point which has been looked at by the learned judges who decided those cases, has been whether the word 'then' is attached to the description of the class, or to the time when the estate is to come into possession."

"Then," used twice in the same sentence, construed in the first instance as pointing to the event, and in the second as an adverb of time. Gill v. Barrett, 29 Beav. 372.

"Then," construed as an adverb of time, not of contingency. Baker v. Lucas, 1 Molloy 481.

But "then" may be used as equivalent to "further," e. g., where there is a testamentary direction for payment of debts, and "then" a demise of lands. Willan v. Lancaster, 3 Russ. 108.

Then and There.—(See also HOMICIDE, vol. 9, p. 637; INDICTMENT, vol. 10, pp. 483, 587, 592).—"Then and there" used in an indictment, refers to the time when, and place where, a thing is alleged to have been done. Com. v. Butterick, 100 Mass. 16; 97 Am. Dec. 65; Baker v. State, 25 Tex. App. 1.

They are relative and refer to some foregone averment, and their effect must be determined by the allegation to which they refer. If that is a single act done, and it is then averred that "then and there" another fact occurred, it necessarily imports that the two were precisely co-existent and the word "then" refers to a precise time. But where the antecedent averment fixes no precise time and alleges no precise single definite act, the word "then" used afterwards fixes no one definite time. Edwards v. Com., 19 Pick. (Mass.) 126. See Jeffries v. Com., 12 Allen (Mass.) 152.

The words "then and there" need not be repeated to an averment which merely declares a legal conclusion. State v. Willis, 78 Me. 74.

They are words of reference, and when the time and place have once been named with certainty, it is sufficient to refer to them afterwards by these words. State v. Cotton, 24 N. H. 146.

The words "then and there" in an indictment for perjury, setting forth, "County of Lackawanna—ss.," that defendant "at the county, aforesaid, and within the jurisdiction of this court," did unlawfully and falsely swear before a certain person, judge of the courts of Susquehanna county, "then and there" presiding, etc., do not refer to the county of Susquehanna, but to Lackawanna county, and sufficiently show the offense to have been committed in that county. Com. v. Williams, 149 Pa. St. 54. And see State v. Brown, 12 Minn. 490.

Where an information stated that the defendant defiled a girl placed under his care, by criminally knowing her, she "being then and there a female under the age of eighteen years, confided to the care and protection of said" defendant, the words "then and there" were held to refer to the female as being under the age of eighteen at her defilement; and also that she was at that time under the care and protection of defendant. State v. Sipe, 38 Kan. 201.

Then in Being.—Where, by a settlement made on his marriage, the settler granted freehold lands to trustees upon trust for himself for life, and after his death to convey the lands and pay the rents and profits "unto or for the benefit of all and every of any one or more child or children, or any grandchild or grandchildren, or issue then in being of the said intended marriage," it was held that the words "then in being" governed only the words "grandchild or grandchildren or other issue," and not the words "child or children." Leader v. Duffy, L. R., 13 App. Cas. 294.

Then Living.—"Where life interests are bequeathed to several persons in succession, terminating with a gift to a class of objects 'then living,' the word 'then' is held to point to the period of the death of the person last named (whether he is or is not the survivor of the several legatees for life), and is not considered as referring to the period of the determination of the several prior interests." 1 Jarman on Wills, 809, n; Archer v. Jegon, 8 Sim. 446; Wollaston's Settlement, 27 Beav. 642; Britnell v. Walton, W. N. (69) 238; Cooper v. Macdonald, 42 L. J. Ch. 539; L. R., 16 Eq. 258; Cobden v. Bagwell, 19 L. R. Ir. 168.

1. In Flagg v. Mason, 141 Mass. 66, it was held that the word "thence," in a description of the boundaries of land, preceding each course given, imports that the following course is continuous with the one before it.

lands" of a party, by no means indicates that the whole of the line is along those lands. If it runs partially so only, the line would answer the description. Rieglesville Delaware Bridge Co. v. Bloom, 48 N. J. L. 369.

"Thence" or "from," when used in policies of insurance, in reference to the intermediate ports of a voyage, are not terms of exclusion, and the policy covers the vessel while stopping at any of the intermediate ports described therein. Bradley v. Nashville Ins. Co., 3 La. Ann. 708; 48 Am. Dec. 465.

1. An act provided that if the sheriff of a county should, within a prescribed time, fail to give bond with sureties, as required, his office should immediately expire and be deemed and taken to be vacant, and "if such sheriff shall thereafter presume to execute the office of sheriff, then all such acts and proceedings done under color of office" should be absolutely void. It was held that his failure to give the bond within the prescribed time, did not per se vacate the office, but that he was an officer with a defeasible title until judgment of forfeiture was pronounced in due form; and that the word "thereafter" should be interpreted to mean that all acts done under color of office, after the office was adjudged forfeited, by reason of the alleged default in giving the bond, should be void. Clark v. Ennis, 45 N. J. L. 69.

2. Originally, no plaintiff was permitted to state his complaint to the court, until he could produce responsible persons to vouch for him, that his character was such as to render it probable that his complaint was well founded, or at least not frivolous or vexatious. 4 Minor's Inst., p. 654. Such persons were usually denominated his secta, or following, or suite. The use of the word "suit" is, therefore, a corruption of the original phrase, and does not mean that the plaintiff therefore brings his action. Bract. 214 b; Com. v. Jolliffe, 7 Watts (Pa.) 585; 3 Bl. Com. 295.

The actual production of the suit has long been antiquated, though the form continues. 1 Chitty Pl. 437; Steph. on Pl. (5th ed.), p. 474.

3. A statute enacted that if any member of certain societies should think himself aggrieved by anything done by any such society, two justices might, on complaint of such member, hear and determine the matter of such complaint and make such orders therein as should seem just to them. It was held that the jurisdiction of the magistrate was confined strictly to the subject-matter of the complaint; and, therefore, where the party complained that he had been deprived of certain relief to which he was entitled, and the justices awarded not only such relief, but also that such party should be continued a member of the society, it was held that the latter part of the order was illegal, inasmuch as the expulsion of the party was no part of the complaint. Rex v. Soper, 3 B. & C. 857; 40 E. C. L. 253.

In Cummings v. Tabor, 61 Wis. 185, notice of a motion "for an order vacating and setting aside the judgment in said action and all proceedings therein," was construed to refer to all proceedings in the action, not merely to proceedings in or subsequent to the judgment.

either of dower or of inheritance, and that the last quoted clause was added simply in the nature of a "sweeping clause," to be restricted in its meaning by the subject-matter and with no intent to limit the widow's rights further than was already done by the specific language preceding it in the contract, and that the word "therein," used in said last clause, refers to "dower and inheritance," and not to "estate." Mahaffy v. Mahaffy, 63 Iowa 55. Compare Mahaffy v. Mahaffy, 61 Iowa 679.

Acknowledgments.—Herein equivalent to "therein." Davis v. Bogle, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 317.

1. Thereon.—Under an act providing that for failure to fence its tracks a railroad shall be liable for all damage done "to any cattle and other stock thereon," it was held that the animal must be injured on the track. Pennsylvania Co. v. Dunlap (Ind. 1887), 13 N. E. Rep. 408.

In a policy insuring a ship "to a port on the north side of Cuba, with the liberty of a second port thereon," it was held that if a second port was used, it must be used on the same side of the island; "thereon," in that connection, having the same meaning as "on the same." Nicholson v. Mercantile Marine Ins. Co., 106 Mass. 400.

For the construction, of the word "thereon" in an act regulating the rates to be charged on a railroad, and whether it means the whole line of communication between the cities, water as well as rail, or whether it applies to the railroad alone, see Camden, etc., R. Co. v. Briggs, 22 N. J. L. 641 and 661.

Where a bequest of six thousand dollars of the money due on a bond from a legatee directed that on payment of the balance of said bond, and whatever interest might be due "thereon," the bond should be assigned to the legatee, "thereon" was held to refer to the balance of the principal due, and upon payment of such balance and interest thereon, the bond was ordered assigned. Leddel v. Starr, 20 N. J. Eq. 285.

2. Putnam v. Langley, 133 Mass. 204; Hill v. Wand, 47 Kan. 340. And see Krumeick v. Krumeick, 14 N. J. L. 44.

In Bean v. Ayers, 67 Me. 482, the word was said to be equivalent to "in consideration thereof," where the connection seemed to require such an interpretation.

3. Where an advertisement recited the destruction of sundry buildings by fire, and offered a reward for information, resulting in the conviction of "the perpetrator of these outrages," the offer was held to apply only to offenses previously committed. Freeman v. Boston, 5 Met. (Mass.) 56.

5. Things in action, in the statutory definition of personal property (Subd. 14, § 1, ch. 5, R. S. Wis.), comprise only such rights of action as may be the subject of sale and transfer, and not mere rights of action ex delicto, for personal wrongs; and the latter are not included in the personal property owned by a woman at the time of her marriage, which continues to be her sole and separate property after marriage. Gibson v. Gibson, 43 Wis. 23; 28 Am. Rep. 527.

An affidavit made by an appellant, setting forth that he "thinks he has sufficient cause for an appeal," and that the same is not intended for delay or vexation, has been held insufficient in New Jersey. Schenck v. Ayers, 14 N. J. L. 311. See generally, MERITS (AFFIDAVIT OF), vol. 15, p. 376.

Where executors were directed to sell the testator's real estate "at such time and in such manner as they shall think most advisable," this was held not to vest a personal discretion in them, and that, therefore, an executor de bonis non might exercise the power. Giberson v. Giberson, 43 N. J. Eq. 116.

Think Best.—See BEST, vol. 2, p. 184.

1. Where a will directed that the widow, in case of a second marriage, should be "thirded," it was held that upon her second marriage, she was entitled to one-third of the estate as if there had been no will, and that the remainder should go to the heirs and distributees. Baker v. Red, 4 Dana (Ky.) 158. And see Horsey v. Horsey, 1 Houst. (Del.) 438; O'Hara v. Dever, 2 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 418; 2 Keyes (N. Y.) 558, aff'g 46 Barb. 609; O'Hara v. Sullivan, 30 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 278; Yeomans v. Stevens, 2 Allen (Mass.) 349.

By a settlement, a provision out of real and personal estate, was made for the wife "in lieu of dower or thirds;" held, the husband having died intestate, that the provision was in satisfaction of dower out of realty and of thirds of personalty, and that the wife could claim nothing under the Statute of Distributions. Thompson v. Watts, 31 L. J. Ch. 445.

2. Third Person.—The State of California is not a "third person," within the meaning of section 15 of the Act of March 3d, 1851, providing that any patent issued under the act, shall be conclusive between the United States and claimants only, and "shall not affect the interests of third persons." People v. San Francisco County, 75 Cal. 388.

3. When "this" and "that" refer to different things before expressed, "this" refers to that last mentioned, and "that" to the thing first mentioned. Russell v. Kennedy, 66 Pa. St. 251.

"This," is a simple word of relation, and its ordinary grammatical meaning will not be extended so as to include something else than that to which it relates. Bryson v. Russell, 14 Q. B. Div. 720.

4. Black's L. Dict.

For whether or not a place which is not a thoroughfare is a highway, see HIGHWAYS, vol. 9, p. 364.

A navigable arm of the sea was held to be a public "thoroughfare" in Coulbert v. Troke, 1 Q. B. Div. 1. In this case the appellant was convicted of supplying refreshment at prohibited hours to persons not being bona fide travelers; the statute providing that a person shall not be deemed a bona fide traveler unless the place he lodged the preceding night is at least three miles from the place where he demands to be supplied with liquor, such distance to be calculated by the nearest public "thoroughfare." The appellant's licensed house was on the opposite shore of the Southampton Water from the town, and distant from it by water over a mile, and by the nearest road eight miles. The persons supplied with refreshment had lodged the night before in the town and crossed the water in their own boats.

L. 169, where a lessee covenanted that at the expiration of the lease he would leave on the warren "ten thousand rabbits," parol evidence was admitted to show that by custom of the country where the lease was made, the word "thousand," as applied to rabbits, denoted one hundred dozen. In the same case, evidence was admitted to show that "hundred-weight" meant one hundred and twelve pounds.

THREATS AND THREATENING LETTERS.

I. THREATS—1. Definition.—A threat is a menace of destruction or injury to one's life, reputation, or property.¹

2. Considered as Private Injuries—a. THREATS WHICH INTERFERE WITH ONE'S BUSINESS.—A mere menace, or threat, unattended by actual damages, is not sufficient to sustain a civil action for damages;² but threats and menaces, through fear of which one's business is interrupted, are actionable. The remedy is an action of trespass vi et armis for pecuniary damages.³ And in certain cases where the damage would be irremediable, a court of equity may restrain acts of violence and intimidation.⁴

1. Anderson's L. Dict.

"A threat is a menace of destruction or injury to the lives, character, or property of those against whom it is made." Bouvier's L. Dict.

"A menace; a declaration of one's purpose or intention to work injury to the person, property, or rights of another." Black's L. Dict.

"A menace or threat is a malicious declaration of an intention to do an injury unlawfully to another." Bouvier's Inst., § 2234.

2. 3 Bl. Com. 120.

3. 3 Bl. Com. 120; Bouvier's L. Dict., tit. "Menace," citing Comyn's Dig. "Battery" (D.); Viner. Abr. "Assault;" Co. Litt. 161a, 162b, 253b.

To warrant an action against one for writing a letter giving information willfully false, and with the malicious design of annoying the plaintiff, and frightening him out of town, the loss or inconvenience sustained must be the direct and reasonable result of the letter, and of a reliance upon it, and must consist of something more than mental suffering or annoyance. Taft v. Taft, 40 Vt. 229; 94 Am. Dec. 389. See 4 Cruise Dig. 406; and Sedg. on Dam. (8th ed.), §§ 43, 44, wherein the following is criticised: "Mental pain or anxiety, the law cannot value and does not pretend to redress, when the unlawful act complained of causes that alone; though where a material damage occurs, and is connected with it, it is impossible that a jury, in estimating it, should altogether overlook the feelings of the party interested." Lord Wensleydale in Lynch v. Knight, 9 H. L. Cas. 577, 598.

Preventing persons by threats from trading with one, is a tort. Gilbert v. Mickle, 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 357.

So also, to drive one's tenants away from their holdings by threats. 1 Roll. Abr. 108, pl. 21.

Damages may be recovered for preventing people, by means of threats, from trading with one's vessel in a foreign port. Tarlton v. McGawley, Peake 205.

To keep workmen and purchasers away from one's stone quarry, by means of threats, is a tort for which damages may be recovered. Garrett v. Taylor, Cro. Jac. 567.

Trades' unionists may be enjoined from posting threatening placards to keep workmen from one's premises. Springhead Spinning Co. v. Riley, L. R., 6 Eq. Cas. 551.

4. Railway employes accept their places under the implied condition that they will not quit their employer's service under circumstances rendering such conduct a peril to the lives and property committed to its care, or in such a manner as to subject it to legal penalties or forfeitures; and although, in ordinary circumstances, the employer must rely upon his action at law for a breach of the condition, a court of equity has power to restrain employes from acts of violence and intimidation, and from enforcing rules of labor unions which result in irremediable injuries to their employers and the public, such as those requiring an arbitrary strike without cause, merely to enforce a boycott against a connecting line. Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co., 54 Fed. Rep. 746.

An injunction may be awarded to restrain the members of a labor union from preventing by force, threats, or intimidation the complainants' employes from working in a mine, where it appears that the defendants are not financially able to respond in damages for their wrongful acts. Cœur d'Alene Min., etc., Co. v. Miners' Union, 51 Fed. Rep. 260.

A court of equity will restrain by injunction discharged employes, members of a union, from gathering around their former employer's place of business, and from following the workmen whom he has employed in their places; from gathering about the boarding-houses of such workmen, and from interfering with them by threats, menaces, intimidations, ridicule, and annoyances, on account of their working for the plaintiff. Murdock v. Walker, 152 Pa. St. 595.

THREATS AND THREATENING LETTERS.

b. THREATS WHICH INTERFERE WITH ONE'S FREEDOM OF WILL—(See also DURESS, vol. 6, p. 57).—Where one is induced, through fear of loss of life or limb, or of his liberty, by unlawful imprisonment, to pay money, make a contract, or do other acts lawful in themselves, he is said to have acted under duress per minas, and may, by appropriate steps, avoid the consequences of his act thus performed. The older authorities confine this species of duress within very narrow limits,¹ excluding threats to commit battery, to destroy property, etc., because, it is said, such threats are not sufficient to overcome the will of a firm and prudent man, and because the law affords adequate redress, if such threats are actually executed; but the tendency of modern authority in this country is to extend the doctrine so as to give relief to the victims of force and fraud in many cases wherein no relief could formerly be had.²

1. Duress per minas is either for fear of loss of life, or else for fear of mayhem or loss of limb. And this fear must be upon sufficient reason. 1 Bl. Com. 131.

A fear of battery, or being beaten, though ever so well grounded, is no duress. Neither is fear of destruction of goods. 1 Bl. Com. 131; Bac. Abr. "Duress," A; Sumner v. Ferryman, 11 Mod. 203; 1 Chitty on Cont. (11th Am. ed.) 271.

So, it was said that a threat to burn one's house, or to commit a trespass to lands or goods, does not amount to duress. 1 Bl. Com. 131; Bac. Abr. "Duress," A; Edwards v. Handley, Hard. (Ky.) 615; Maisonnaire v. Keating, 2 Gall. (U. S.) 337.

Blackstone's definition would seem to have been too narrow, even at the time it was written. Lord Coke says that fear of imprisonment is enough to constitute duress. 2 Inst. 483; Co. Litt. 253b.

2. In Foshay v. Ferguson, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 154, Bronson, J., says: "As civilization has advanced, the law has tended much more strongly than it formerly did to overthrow everything which is built upon violence or fraud. In the time of Coke, it was said that a man could not avoid his act on the ground that it was procured by the fear of battery, burning his house, taking away or destroying his goods, or the like; for there he may have satisfaction by the recovery of damages. 2 Inst. 483. But Mr. Chitty very justly doubts whether such be the rule at the present day, especially in regard to so serious an injury as a threat to burn a man's house. Chitty on Cont. 169 (ed. of 1839). In Sumner v. Ferryman, 11 Mod. 201, Powell, J., said: 'A man cannot avoid his bond by duress to his goods, but only to his person.' And see Astley v. Reynolds, 2 Str. 915. But in South Carolina, it has been held that duress of goods will, under some circumstances, avoid a man's contract. Sasportas v. Jennings, 1 Bay (S. Car.) 470; Collins v. Westbury, 2 Bay (S. Car.) 211; 1 Am. Dec. 643. And see Nelson v. Suddarth, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 350. I do not intend to say that a man can avoid his bond on the ground that it was procured by an illegal distress of goods; but I entertain no doubt that a contract procured by threats and the fear of battery, or the destruction of property, may be avoided on the ground of duress. There is nothing but the form of a contract in such a case, without the substance. It wants the voluntary assent of the party to be bound by it. And why should the wrongdoer derive an advantage from his tortious act? No good reason can be assigned for upholding such a transaction."

In U. S. v. Huckabee, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 414, Clifford, J., said: "Duress, it must be admitted, is a good defense to a deed or any other written obligation, if it be proved that the instrument was

It is well settled that money paid under duress may be recovered back.¹

C. THREATS WHICH INTERFERE WITH ONE'S FREEDOM OF PERSON—(See also FALSE IMPRISONMENT, vol. 7, p. 661).—False imprisonment is a wrong, akin to the wrongs of assault and battery, and consists in imposing by force or threats an unlawful procured by such means; nor is it necessary to show, in order to establish such a defense, that actual violence was used, because consent is the very essence of a contract, and if there be compulsion, there is no binding consent, and it is well settled that moral compulsion, such as that produced by threats to take life or to inflict great bodily harm, as well as that produced by imprisonment, is sufficient, in legal contemplation, to destroy free agency, without which there can be no contract, because in that state of the case there is no consent. Brown v. Pierce, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 214. Unlawful duress is a good defense to a contract if it includes such degree of constraint or danger, either actually inflicted or threatened and impending, as is sufficient in severity or apprehension to overcome the mind and will of a person of ordinary firmness. Chitty on Cont. 217; 2 Greenl. on Ev. 283. Decided cases may be found which deny that contracts procured by menace of a mere battery to the person, or of trespass to lands, or loss of goods, can be avoided on that account, as such threats, it is said, are not of a nature to overcome the will of a firm and prudent man; but many other decisions of high authority adopt a more liberal rule, and hold that contracts procured by threats of battery to the person, or of destruction of property, may be avoided by proof of such facts, because, in such a case, there is nothing but the form of a contract without the substance. Foshay v. Ferguson, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 158; Central Bank v. Copeland, 18 Md. 317; 81 Am. Dec. 597; Eadie v. Slimmon, 26 N. Y. 12; 82 Am. Dec. 395; 1 Story Eq. Jur. (9th ed.) 239. Positive menace of battery to the person, or of trespass to lands, or of destruction of goods, may undoubtedly be, in many cases, sufficient to overcome the mind and will of a person entirely competent, in all other respects, to contract, and it is clear that a contract made under such circumstances is as utterly without the voluntary consent of the party menaced as if he were induced to sign it by actual violence; nor is the reason assigned for the more stringent rule, that he should rely upon the law for redress, satisfactory, as the law may not afford him anything like a sufficient and adequate compensation for the injury. Baker v. Morton, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 158."

Where the action was by a married woman to avoid her deed of real estate alleged to have been executed by her under the influence of threats by her husband, a charge to the jury "that to constitute duress which would avoid the deed, it is not necessary that the threats be of physical injury alone, but if the plaintiff, the wife of Tapley, was induced to execute the deed by the threats of Tapley, her husband, that he would separate from her as her husband and not support her, it is duress, and would avoid the deed," was held correct. Tapley v. Tapley, 10 Minn. 448; 88 Am. Dec. 76. See also Waller v. Parker, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 476; Mann v. Lewis, 3 W. Va. 223; 100 Am. Dec. 147; Mann v. McVey, 3 W. Va. 238; *Sasportas v. A payment is not to be considered compulsory, unless made to emancipate restraint upon a man's freedom of locomotion.¹ It is not necessary that actual force or violence should be employed in order to complete the wrong. It is sufficient if the injured party has yielded to unlawful restraint through fear of threatened and impending force or violence.²

3. Considered as Public Wrongs—a. THE OFFENSE OF MAKING THREATS.—Anyone who threatens to take the life of another, or to do him great bodily harm, or to destroy his property, may be required to give a bond to keep the peace. This requirement may be enforced by a justice of the peace when he is cognizant of the facts himself, or when the person threatened makes complaint under oath supported by a sufficient showing that he has just ground for fear.³

It seems to be well settled that the making of threats, in words not written, followed by no result more serious than the terror of the person threatened, is not an indictable offense at common law.⁴ It is, however, an offense punishable at common law, by fine and imprisonment, to use threatening or abusive language to any judge sitting in court, or to threaten those who are under the immediate protection of the court; as to threaten one's adversary for suing, a counsellor or attorney for being employed against the person or property from an actual or existing duress imposed upon it by the party to whom the money is paid. Radick v. Hutchings, 95 U. S. 210; Baltimore v. Lefferman, 4 Gill (Md.) 425; 45 Am. Dec. 145; Awalt v. Eutaw Building Assoc., 34 Md. 435; Elston v. Chicago, 40 Ill. 514; 89 Am. Dec. 361; Harmon v. Harmon, 61 Me. 227; 14 Am. Rep. 556.

1. Cooley on Torts, p. 169, citing Bird v. Jones, 7 Q. B. 742, 752; Crowell v. Gleason, 10 Me. 325.

2. It is the fact of compulsory submission which brings a person into imprisonment; and impending and threatened physical violence, which to all appearance, can only be avoided by submission, operates as effectually, if submitted to, as if the arrest had been forcibly accomplished without such submission. There are cases in which a party who does not submit, cannot be regarded as arrested until his person is touched; but when he does submit, no such necessity exists. Brushaber v. Stegeman, 22 Mich. 267; Pike v. Hanson, 9 N. H. 491; Grainger v. Hill, 4 Bing. N. Cas. 212.

The submission to the threatened and reasonably to be apprehended force, is no consent to the arrest, detention, or restraint of the freedom of his motions; he is as much imprisoned as if his person was touched, or force actually used. The imprisonment continues until he is left at his own will to go where he pleases, and must be considered as involuntary till all efforts at coercion or restraint cease, and the means of effecting it are removed. Johnson v. Tompkins, Baldw. (U. S.) 601; Wood v. Lane, 6 C. & P. 774; 25 E. C. L. 645; Warner v. Riddiford, 4 C. B. N. S. 180.

3. 4 Bl. Com. 254, 255; Bouvier's Inst., § 2234, citing Hawkin's P. C. B. 1, ch. 53, § 1; 2 Russell on Crimes 575; 2 Chit. Cr. Law, 841.

4. Whatever was once thought upon the subject, it is now well settled, that mere threats, in words not written, is not an indictable offense at common law. Redfield, J., in State v. Benedict, 11 Vt. 236; 34 Am. Dec. 688.

In the above case (State v. Benedict, 11 Vt. 236; 34 Am. Dec. 688), it was held, however, under the Vermont statute, that threats of great bodily harm, accompanied by acts showing a formed intention to put them in execution, if intended to put the person threatened in fear of their execution, and if they have that effect, and are calculated to produce that effect upon a person of ordinary firmness, constitute a breach of the public peace, which is punishable by indictment.

one, a juror for his verdict, or a ministerial officer of the court for properly doing his duty.¹

Forcing a person, by means of threats, to do an act which is likely to produce his death, and which does produce it, is murder,² but the act done by the deceased which occasions his death must be done in order to avoid the immediate violence of the prisoner, and the apprehension of such violence must be well grounded from the circumstances by which the deceased was surrounded.³

b. EXTORTION BY MEANS OF THREATS.—This offense consists in maliciously threatening to accuse one of an offense, or to injure his person or property, with intent to extort money or pecuniary advantage, or with intent to compel him to do an act against his will;⁴ but the offense does not include cases where the person threatened owes the person making the threat, the amount demanded.⁵ In some jurisdictions, however, it appears that extortion and pecuniary advantage are not necessary ingredients of the crime.⁶

Threats to accuse of crime for the purpose of extorting money, are offenses for which indictment will lie at common law;⁷ and the extortion of money by threatening to accuse one of the infamous crime against nature, is held to be robbery.⁸

EVIDENCE OF THREATS IN TRIALS FOR HOMICIDE AND ASSAULT*—(1) Former Threats by the Accused—(See also HOMICIDE, vol. 9, p. 529).—In trials for murder, threats made by both the accused and the deceased are admissible in evidence where they are part of the res gestæ.

Former threats by the accused, are admissible to show malice and deliberation in cases of homicide; and are also admissible in trials for minor offenses, such as assault, when the intent is a material element in the offense.³

(2) Former Threats by the Deceased—(See also HOMICIDE, vol. 9, p. 529).—Former threats by the deceased against the accused may generally be given in evidence, as tending to show defendant's motive, when they were communicated to him before the killing;⁴ and evidence of former threats by the deceased against

b. CONSTRUCTIVE VIOLENCE IN BURGLARY AND ROBBERY.—(See also BURGLARY, vol. 2, p. 659; ROBBERY, vol. 21, p. 414).—On trial for burglary, if it appears that the offender has compelled a person, by threats, to open his door, or has induced him to do so to repel attempted or threatened violence on his premises, it will amount to a burglarious breaking, if the offender then enters the house with burglarious intent.²

Robbery may be committed without actual violence, by exciting fear or terror, which is constructive violence. This may be done by threatening injury to one's person, property, or reputation. The fear of injury to the person is that which is commonly excited on the commission of this offense; and where property is obtained by this means, it will amount to robbery, though there be no great degree of terror or affright in the party robbed.¹

The cases in which the offense of robbery has been committed by means of a fear of injury to the property of the party, are principally those in which the terror excited was of the probable outrages of a mob;² and where the circumstances were such as to induce a man to part with his property against his will, actual fear will be presumed.³ Robbery may also be committed by obtaining property by threats of injury to one's character.

The cases of robbery in which the property has been obtained by means of a fear being excited of injury to the character of the party robbed, appear to be all of one description, namely, where property was obtained by threats to accuse the owner of the crime against nature.⁴

c. CONFESSIONS FORCED BY THREATS.—In criminal prosecutions, all confessions forced by threats of violence are inadmissible in evidence. Hence, a confession forced from the mind by the flattery of hope or by the torture of fear, comes in so questionable a shape when it is to be considered as the evidence of guilt, that no credit ought to be given to it, and therefore it is rejected.⁵

II. THREATENING LETTERS—1. A threatening letter is a letter sent to a person threatening to accuse him of a crime, with a view to extort

THREATS AND THREATENING LETTERS.

2. The Offense of Sending Threatening Letters.—It is said, that the dispersing of bills of menace threatening destruction to the lives or properties of those to whom they are addressed, for the purpose of extorting money, is, at common law, a high misdemeanor, punishable by fine and imprisonment.¹ But it is held that a person is not indictable at common law for sending a threatening letter for the purpose of extorting money, unless the threat is of such a nature as is calculated to overcome a firm and prudent man.²

The offense is now defined and punishable by statute in England; and in most, if not all, of the United States. Whether or not the offense includes cases where an attempt has been made to force the payment of money actually due the person sending the letter, has been variously decided in different jurisdictions.³

money, or other property. Such letters may also threaten to libel or to kill the person addressed. Anderson's L. Dict.

Sending threatening letters, is the name of the offense of sending letters containing threats of the kind recognized by statute as criminal. Black's L. Dict.

The offense of sending letters, threatening to accuse any person of a crime punishable with death, transportation, pillory, or other infamous punishment, with a view to extort from him any money or other valuable chattels. 4 Bl. Com. 137.

1. 1 Hawk. P. C., ch. 53, § 1.

There is a precedent of an indictment at common law, against the attorney of a plaintiff in a case for writing a letter to the attorney of the defendant, who had obtained a verdict on the evidence of his son, threatening to indict the son for perjury, unless the defendant gave up the benefit of the verdict. 2 Chit. Cr. L. 149.

2. "To obtain money under a threat of any kind, or to attempt to do it, is, no doubt, an immoral action; but to make it indictable, the threat must be of such a nature as is calculated to overcome a firm and prudent man. Now, the threat used by the defendant, at its utmost extent, was no more than that he would charge the party with certain penalties for selling medicines without a stamp. That is not such a threat as a firm and prudent man might not, and ought not, to have resisted. . . . Then what authority is there for considering these as offenses at common law? The principal case relied on is that of Reg. v. Woodward, 11 Mod. 137, which was where the defendants, having another man in their actual custody at the time, threatened to carry him to goal, upon a charge of perjury, and obtained money from him under that threat, in order to permit his release. Was not that an actual duress, such as would have avoided a bond given under the same circumstances? But that is very unlike the present case, which is that of a mere threat to put process in a penal action in force against the party. The law distinguishes between threats of actual violence against the person, or such other threats as a man of common firmness cannot stand against, and other sorts of threats. Money obtained in the former cases, under the influence of such threats, may amount to robbery; but not so in cases of threats of other kinds. . . . But this is a case of threatening and not of deceit; and it must be a threat of such a kind as will sustain an indictment at common law, either according to one case, attended with duress, or, according to others, such as may overcome the ordinary free will of a firm man, and induce him from fear to part with his money." Lord Ellenborough, C. J., in Rex v. Southerton, 6 East 126.

Even to request one to post up a threatening notice, is an indictable misdemeanor. Reg. v. Darcy, 1 Crawf. & Dix C. C. 33.

3. An instruction to the jury that to maintain the indictment, it was not essential that the defendant was endeavoring to obtain money that was not due him, and that, if he endeavored to obtain money that was justly his due in this way, he would be guilty, was held correct in Com. v. Coolidge, 128 Mass. 55.

THREATS AND THREATENING LETTERS.

It has been held that it is not a crime to send a threatening letter demanding just compensation for property maliciously destroyed.¹

Whether or not, in letters threatening to accuse of crime, the threatened accusation must be in a judicial tribunal, does not seem to be well settled, but the weight of authority appears to be in the affirmative.² It is not necessary that the writer of the letter shall be the one threatening to do the wrongful act, or that the threat shall be aimed at the person to whom the letter is addressed,³ but it is necessary that the threat be so made as to operate on the mind of the party whom it is expected to influence, in such a manner as will tend to take away the voluntary character of his acts.⁴

mailing (Rev. St. 1881, § 1926) does not embrace the case of a threat to accuse of crime, made by letter, for the purpose of inducing the payment of money justly due; and where the letter claims that it is a just debt which is demanded, the indictment will be bad, unless it traverse that fact. State v. Hammond, 80 Ind. 80; 41 Am. Rep. 791.

The statute against sending threatening letters, with a view of extorting money, etc., is intended to embrace only cases where the intent is to obtain that which, in justice and equity, the writer of the letter is not entitled to receive. It does not extend to cases where the person threatened actually owes the writer of the letter the sum claimed by him. To support an indictment under that statute, the end, as well as the means employed to obtain it, must be wrongful and unlawful. People v. Griffin, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 427.

1. It is not a crime to demand reasonable compensation for property maliciously destroyed, and at the same time, to threaten to accuse the offender of the crime of destroying it. Mann v. State, 47 Ohio St. 556.

2. In People v. Braman, 30 Mich. 459, the judges were equally divided on this question. Graves, C. J., and Campbell, J., held, that it must not be an accusing by way of railing or slander, or by way of bearing witness under a separate and distinct accusation made wholly by others, but the institution, or participation in the institution, of a criminal charge before some one held out as competent to entertain such a charge in lawful course; citing State v. South, 5 Rich. (S. Car.) 489; State v. Nates, 3 Hill (S. Car.) 200; Stephenson v. Higginson, 3 H. L. 638; U. S. v. Freeman, 3 How. (U. S.) 556; Ex p. Prideaux, 3 Myl. & C. 327, 332;

Cooley, J. (Christiancy, J., concurring with him), said: "I have not been able to concur in the view that the threat of an accusation otherwise than in court, would not be within the statute. If such be the case, the statute needs amendment, for a threat of any public accusation of crime is as much within the reason of the statute, as a threat of a formal complaint." Citing Robinson's Case, 2 My. & Rob. 14; 2 Lew. C. C. 273; Rosc. Cr. Ev. 910.

3. To make out the crime of blackmailing, under the provision of the Penal Code, defining that offense (section 558), it is not necessary to show that the threat was against the person to whom the letter was directed, or that the writer was the one threatening to do the wrongful act. The offense may be committed by sending a letter conveying a threat of some other person, providing it is sent for the unlawful purpose mentioned in said provision. Nor is it necessary to constitute the crime, that the threat did, or should be calculated to inspire fear, and no precise form of words is required to convey the threat. It may be done by innuendo or suggestion. People v. Thompson, 97 N. Y. 313.

4. "It may be conceded that a threat, whether it be verbal, written, or printed, to be within the statute, need not be made personally to the one threatened. In order to be a 'threat,' it must be so made, and under such circumstances, as to operate, to some extent at least, on the mind of the one whom it is expected to influence. If it does not do this, how can it be said to take away the voluntary character of his acts?" State v. Brownlee, 84 Iowa 473.

THREATS AND THREATENING LETTERS.

It is an offense to send a letter threatening to tar and feather one unless he quits the city.¹ The right to take and prosecute an appeal, is property within the meaning of a statute aimed at the extortion of property by means of threats.² But credit and reputation are not property within the meaning of such a statute.³

Threatening to keep the members of a labor union from returning to work, is a threat to do injury to one's property, and obtaining money from the employer under such threat, is extortion.⁴ So also, it is a criminal offense for a number of men, banded together for the purpose, having their persons covered with threatening placards containing the word "boycott," to parade up and down in front of one's door, distributing printed circulars and employing threats and intimidations for the purpose of keeping the public away from the alleged wrongdoer, and thus injuring his business.⁵

It is an offense for one who knows the contents thereof, to assist in forwarding a letter threatening to accuse one of crime for the purpose of extorting money from him.⁶

If it is doubtful whether or not the letter contains the threat alleged, the intent is a question for the jury.⁷

It is a violation of the postal laws of the United States, to send through the mails a postal card upon which, or any other mailable matter upon the outside cover or wrapper of which, there is written or printed any threatening language.⁸

1. State v. Compton, 77 Wis. 460.

2. The right to take and prosecute an appeal, is property within the meaning of section 519 of the Penal Code; and a threat made for the purpose of inducing an appellant to dismiss an appeal, is a threat made with intent to extort property from another. It is a crime to send or deliver a letter containing such threats with intent to extort property from another, whether such letter be subscribed or not. People v. Cadman, 57 Cal. 562.

3. The sending of a letter threatening to publish a person's name in a "deadbeat" book, the effect of which will be ruinous to his credit, etc., is not an offense under section 1526, of the Revised Statutes. Credit and reputation are not property within the meaning of this statute. State v. Barr, 28 Mo. App. 84.

4. People v. Barondess, 133 N. Y. 649. 5. People v. Wilzig, 4 N. Y. Cr. Rep. 403.

"If the attitude, conduct, and method of these men is such as to deter any of complainant's customers, even the most weak and timid, from entering his place of business, or to inspire any part of the general public with the sense of danger in ignoring their appeals, there is intimidation within the meaning of the law. The procuring of money from another, with his consent, obtained by fear induced by a threat to do or continue an unlawful injury to his property, e. g., to continue a 'boycott,' constitutes the crime of extortion under sections 552, 553, Penal Code." *People v. THREATS AND THREATENING LETTERS.

3. The Indictment—Necessary Averments.—The indictment must aver the sending of the letter and the person to whom it was sent;¹ who was the person threatened, and from whom the money or other property was demanded;² must properly describe the property demanded or obtained;³ must aver the guilty knowledge of the sender of the letter;⁴ the malicious intent of the sender to extort money or other property, or to do an unlawful act;⁵ and the nature of the threat contained in the letter;⁶ and the letter itself should be set out in hæc verba in the indictment, except in jurisdictions where that necessity has been removed by statute.⁷

4. Venue.—In an indictment for sending a threatening letter, the venue may be laid in the county where the letter was received, or in the county from which it was sent.⁸

5. Evidence—a. PROOF OF THE SENDING.—There must be some evidence of the sending of the letter, in order to sustain an indictment for sending a threatening letter. Proof that it is in the prisoner's handwriting, is insufficient.⁹ Proof that he dropped a letter, directed to the prosecutor, into the prosecutor's premises, is sufficient.¹⁰ So, proof that the accused left a letter at a gate, in the road near the prosecutor's house, where it was found and handed to the prosecutor, was held sufficient to go to on which was written the following: "You owe us $1.80, long past due. We have called several times for the amount. If it is not paid at once, we shall place the same with our lawyer for collection." U. S. v. Bayle, 40 Fed. Rep. 664.

4. Girdwood's Case, 1 Leach 142; 2 East P. C., ch. 23, § 4, p. 1120.

Under a statute defining the offense of knowingly sending or delivering a threatening letter, it was held that an information charging that the defendant knowingly threatened, etc., by sending a threatening letter, did not charge the offense defined by the statute. Castle v. State, 23 Tex. App. 286.

5. Landa v. State, 26 Tex. App. 580.

An indictment for threatening to accuse another of a crime, "with a view and with the intent to extort money" from him, sufficiently avers that the intent was to extort money by the threat. Com. v. Moulton, 108 Mass. 307; Com. v. Dorus, 108 Mass. 488.

Where the letter is set out in the indictment, and it appears by necessary implication that the defendant threatened to indict the prosecutor with intent to extort money from him, the criminal offense is sufficiently charged. State v. Harper, 94 N. Car. 936.

6. The character of the threat contained in the letter, should be set out in the indictment, that it may be seen whether a substantial threat was made. People v. Jones, 62 Mich. 304.

But the indictment need not set out the exact words used by the defendant. Com. v. Philpot, 130 Mass. 59.

7. Lloyd's Case, 2 East P. C., ch. 23, § 5, p. 1112; Hunter's Case, 2 Leach 631; Tynes v. State, 17 Tex. App. 123.

See State v. Stewart, 90 Mo. 507, wherein the common law, as laid down in the above cases, is recognized; but it is held that the statutes of Mis-souri have made it unnecessary to set out the letter in hæc verba.

8. Girdwood's Case, 1 Leach 142; 2 East P. C. 1120; Esser's Case, 2 East P. C. 1125; People v. Griffin, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 427; Com. v. Blanding, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 304; 15 Am. Dec. 214; People v. Rathbun, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 533.

But in Landa v. State, 26 Tex. App. 580, it was held that the venue of the offense of sending a threatening letter for the purpose of extorting money, should be in the county from which the letter was sent, and not in the county to which it was sent.

the jury on the question of sending.¹ So, proof that the prisoner sent the letter to another person, with the intent that such person should deliver it to the prosecutor, is sufficient.²

b. EVIDENCE EXPLANATORY OF THE LETTER.—The sending of the letter being proved, other letters, written by the prisoner to the prosecutor, are admissible in evidence to explain the letter upon which the indictment is found.³ So, too, parol evidence is admissible to explain any obscurity or ambiguity in the letter.⁴

c. OF THE INTENT.—The intent to extort, or to do some other unlawful act, where the statute covers ground broader than that of mere extortion, must be proved. This generally appears upon the face of the letter itself; but if not, such facts as will justify the jury in finding such unlawful intent must be proved. Evidence of the truth of the threatened accusation is not admissible in behalf of the defendant,⁵ but evidence tending to show that the letter was sent as a practical joke is admissible in defense.⁶

the offense had been committed by cutting the "throat" of the victim, it was held that the word "throat" was not to be confined to that portion of the neck scientifically so called.

"Throat Disease."—See DISEASE, vol. 5, p. 683.

10. The word "through," in an act providing that no road, street, etc., shall be laid out "through" certain grounds, was held to mean over. Hyde Park v. Oakwoods Cemetery Assoc., 119 Ill. 147. See also Roderick v. Aston Local Board, 5 Ch. Div. 328.

Through the Elevators.—In Gill v. Cacy, 49 Md. 243, it was held that when grain had been removed from vessels and taken up into elevators, and thence let down into the hoppers, and after being weighed, put into the bins of the purchasers, it had been carried "through" the elevators in the contemplation of an act exempting grain carried to the city "through" elevators from being weighed by the grain weighers of the state.

I. NATURE OF TICKET.—1. Voucher and not Contract—Journey to be Pursued.—The settled opinion is that a passage ticket, in the ordinary form, is merely a voucher, token or receipt, adopted for

Through Grain.—The words "through grain," in a contract between a railroad and an elevator company, providing that the elevator company should receive and discharge for the railroad "all through grain" at one cent a bushel, and that the elevator should have the handling of all "through grain" at that price per bushel, were held to mean all grain consigned through the place of terminus of the road to some point beyond by the terms of shipment, and was not to be confined to grain shipped through to the end of line of said company. Richmond v. Dubuque, etc., R. Co., 26 Iowa 191.

Through His Intervention.—In Mansell v. Clements, L. R., 9 C. P. 139, plaintiffs, house agents, were instructed by defendant to offer a leasehold house for sale, for which they were to receive a certain commission if they found a purchaser, but one guinea only for their trouble if the house were sold "without their intervention." A purchaser called at plaintiff's office and obtained a card to view the house, but thinking the price too high, declined to purchase. He afterwards resumed negotiations through a friend of defendant and purchased for a much less sum. It was held, however, that the purchase had been sold "through the intervention" of the agent, and that he was entitled to the commission.

1. State v. Lowery, 33 La. Ann. 1224. In this case it was held that under section 790 of the Rev. Sts. of Louisiana, "thrusting" a person may well include "thrusting" with an iron bolt, rod, or pin, whether the point be sharp or not.

2. In Allaire v. Howell Works Co., 14 N. J. L. 21, it was held that the word "ticket" has no legal or other fixed and determinate meaning, and that where the legislature passed an act to prohibit the circulation or passing of "tickets," the meaning of the word, or what kind of tickets was meant, must be gathered from the terms employed in the act.

convenience, to show that the passenger has paid his fare from one place to another, and does not constitute the contract of carriage, although it may and often does, have upon it some condition or limitation which enters into and forms a part of the contract; accordingly it is admissible to prove by parol evidence, the terms of the contract in fact entered into between the carrier and the passenger.¹

A passenger holding a through ticket, indicating no particular route, is bound to pursue the usual and direct route from the place of starting to the place of destination, and is not entitled to go by a circuitous route from one point to another between those places.²

And a ticket calling for passage in one direction is not good for a reverse trip; and the fact that the holder has been permitted upon former occasions, to make such reverse trip upon such tickets, and a conductor on another train at another time gave

Co. v. Pocock*, 28 Wkly. Rep. 49; Burke v. South Eastern R. Co., 5 C. P. Div. 1. In Richmond, etc., R. Co. v. Ashby, 79 Va. 130; 52 Am. Rep. 620, a passenger's ticket is held to be both a receipt and a contract—the acknowledged ment of the receipt of the passenger's fare, and of the obligation to carry him for the purpose and upon the terms specified.

Passenger Ticket and Bill of Lading Distinguished.—A distinction is taken between the case of a shipper receiving a bill of lading, on account of his shipment, and a traveler receiving a passage ticket for the carriage of himself and baggage over the carrier's road. In the one case the shipper is supposed to understand and know that, according to commercial usage, a bill of lading is essential to the regular and safe transportation of property, which is shipped and carried as freight, and that of necessity, it must constitute the contract of shipment and carriage. In the other case, the ticket is ordinarily regarded as a mere voucher for the money paid for it; a token or evidence of the purchaser's right to be carried, or have his baggage carried, a certain distance. Mauritz v. New York, etc., R. Co., 23 Fed. Rep. 765; 21 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 286.

Not Negotiable—Antecedent Equities.—A railroad ticket is not negotiable so as to be freed of antecedent equities. Hence, when a ticket has been fraudulently obtained from a company, a person purchasing from the holder thereof, although for value and without notice of equities, acquires no title thereto. Frank v. Ingalls, 41 Ohio St. 560; 21 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 277.

his opinion to the holder that the ticket would be good for passage either way, does not alter the rule.¹

2. As Evidence of the Passenger's Rights.—It may be stated as a general rule that the ticket is the only evidence, as between the conductor and passenger, of the latter's right to transportation, and he must exhibit it when demanded; if he fails to do this, and refuses to pay fare, he may be expelled from the train;² and the rule is not altered by the fact that the passenger had a ticket, but lost it.³

There is much conflict upon the question of the rights and duties of the conductor and passenger respectively, when an authorized agent sells the passenger a ticket different from what he asks and pays for, and one which does not entitle him to the passage desired. According to some authorities, the conductor cannot be expected to listen to the passenger's account of the transaction, and the latter should either pay his fare, or walk quietly off the train, and then resort to an action against the company for breach of contract; but should he attempt to retain his place without paying fare, and is expelled by the conductor, he can recover no damages for the expulsion.⁴ Others hold that

1. Ticket from "Portland to Boston" not Good for Reverse Trip.—Keeley v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 67 Me. 163. In this case the ticket had printed upon it the words "Portland to Boston;" it was purchased in the former place; the holder attempted to go from Boston to Portland. It was held that such a ticket purchased under no contract other than what was inferable from the ticket itself, does not entitle the holder to passage in a direction opposite to that indicated on the ticket.

2. Willets v. Buffalo, etc., R. Co., 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 585; Woods v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 48 Mo. Abb. 125. See infra, this title, Exhibition and Surrender of Ticket.

In Homiston v. Long Island R. Co. (Super. Ct.), 22 N. Y. Supp. 738, it was held that where a passenger, whose destination makes a change of trains necessary, is unable to obtain a ticket at the station, and pays his fare to the conductor, who neglects to give him a ticket, the rule that a passenger must show a ticket or pay his fare, will not authorize an expulsion from the second train, if the conductor thereof has actual knowledge of the payment of the fare to the first conductor.

3. Lost Ticket.—Duke v. Great Western R. Co., 14 U. C. Q. B. 377; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Fleming, 14 Lea (Tenn.) 128; 18 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 347; Crawford v. Cincinnati, etc., R.

Co., 26 Ohio St. 580; Jerome v. Smith, 48 Vt. 231; 21 Am. Rep. 125.

And with greater reason is this true, if the ticket contains an express condition that it should be shown to the conductor on every passage, and if not shown when called for, the regular fare should be paid. Downs v. New York, etc., R. Co., 36 Conn. 287; 4 Am. Rep. 77. Compare with the above, Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Reed, 75 Ill. 175; 20 Am. Rep. 232. Here a passenger in a sleeping car had lost his ticket, but produced a written certificate from the agent selling it to him, to the effect that he was entitled to a berth. The conductor removed him, and he was allowed to recover the price of his ticket, and reasonable compensation for the trouble and inconvenience suffered by being deprived of his berth in the sleeping car.

the conductor has no right to expel the passenger, and if he does so, the company is liable in damages therefor.¹ The latter would seem to be the better doctrine—it certainly has the support of the more recent cases.

Milwaukee, etc., R. Co., 54 Wis. 234; 6 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 322; 41 Am. Rep. 23; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Connell, 112 Ill. 295; 18 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 339; 54 Am. Rep. 238; Mahoney v. Detroit City R. Bannerman, 15 Ill. App. 100; Rose v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 106 N. Car. 168.

The opinion of the court in Frederick v. Marquette, etc., R. Co., 37 Mich. 342; 26 Am. Rep. 531, explains the reason of the rule as follows: "How, then, is the conductor to ascertain the contract entered into between the passenger and the railroad company where a ticket is purchased and presented to him? Practically there are but two ways—one, the evidence afforded by the ticket; the other, the statement of the passenger contradicted by the ticket. Which should govern? In judicial investigations we appreciate the necessity of an obligation of some kind and the benefit of a cross-examination. At common law parties interested were not competent witnesses, and even under our statute the witness is not permitted, in certain cases, to testify as to facts which, if true, were equally within the knowledge of the opposite party, and he cannot be procured. Yet here would be an investigation as to the terms of the contract, where no such safeguards could be thrown around it, and where the conductor, at his peril, would have to accept of the mere statement of the interested party. I seriously doubt the practical workings of such a method, except for the purpose of encouraging and developing fraud and falsehood, and I doubt if any system could be devised that would so much tend to the disturbance and annoyance of the traveling public generally. . . . As between the conductor and passenger, and the right of the latter to travel, the ticket produced must be conclusive evidence, and he must produce it when called upon, as the evidence of his right to the seat he claims. Where a passenger has purchased a ticket and the conductor does not carry him according to its terms, or, if the company through the mistake of its agent, has given him the wrong ticket, so that he has been compelled to relinquish his seat, or pay his fare a second time in order to retain it, he would have a remedy against the company for a breach of the contract, but he would have to adopt a declaration differing essentially from the one resorted to in this case." (The action was trespass on the case for damages for unlawful expulsion.)

This case is followed in Hufford v. Grand Rapids, etc., R. Co., 53 Mich. 121. But upon a second trial of that case, the rule of conclusiveness of the ticket, as between conductor and passenger, was so far abandoned, that the court held, that if the passenger had bought a ticket of a duly authorized agent, believing in good faith that it was genuine, and that the agent had a right to sell it, and states such facts to the conductor, the latter is bound to accept the statement until the contrary is shown, regardless of any words, figures, or other marks upon the ticket. And where, upon such passenger's refusal to pay fare, the conductor lays hands upon him to eject him, he is guilty of assault and battery, for which the company must respond in damages. Hufford v. Grand Rapids, etc., R. Co., 64 Mich. 631.

If the passenger's ticket is defective, and this is due solely to himself, he has no cause of action against the carrier for refusing to honor it.¹

II. RATES OF FARE—POWER TO REGULATE.—The legislature of a state has the power to regulate and limit, within its own jurisdiction, railroad charges for the transportation of passengers, in the absence of any provision in the charter of the company whereby it relinquishes authority over the subject.² And this power is not restricted by the fact that the income of the company has been pledged to the payment of obligations incurred on the faith of

In Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Rice, 64 Md. 63; 26 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 264, the conductor canceled the ticket by mistake, and afterwards tried to correct it, but did so in an improper way, and the passenger was expelled by a subsequent conductor. It was held that he had a right of action against the company for the expulsion.

But if a person receives from a ticket agent a ticket different from what he asked for, and keeps it four months, with full knowledge of its purport, without making complaint, he will be considered as having ratified the contract according to its terms, and waived such claims as he might have had, growing out of the mistake. Godfrey v. Ohio, etc., R. Co., 116 Ind. 30; 37 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 8.

1. Thus, if the passenger engages to have his ticket stamped by the agent of the company, upon his return trip, and has ample opportunity to do so, but fails, the conductor is justified in declining to accept the unstamped ticket, and to eject the passenger, if he refuses to pay fare. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Wellman, 143 U. S. 339; Parker v. Metropolitan R. Co., 109 Mass. 506. As applied to fares for transportation not extending beyond the limits of the state by which the railroad is incorporated, the authority of the legislature is not affected by the decision in Wabash, etc., R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557; 26 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 1.

In Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, after affirming the doctrine that, by the common law, carriers or other persons exercising a public employment, could not charge more than a reasonable compensation for their services, and that it is within the power of the legislature "to declare what shall be a reasonable compensation for such services, or, perhaps more properly speaking, to fix a maximum, beyond which any charge made would be unreasonable," the Chief Justice said: "To limit the rate of charges for services rendered in a public employment, or for the use of property in which the public has an interest, is only changing a regulation which existed before. It establishes no new principle in the law, but only gives a new effect to an old one."

The charter of a railroad company granting it "the exclusive right" of transportation of passengers, with the proviso that the charges for such purpose shall not exceed certain named rates, cannot be considered a contract between the state and the company that the latter may charge such rates as it pleases, within the limits named, but has the effect of a provision that if the company should go beyond such limits, it might operate a forfeiture of "the exclusive right." And the company is subject to the provisions of subsequent acts establishing a commission to regulate railroad rates. Georgia R., etc., Co. v. Smith, 128 U. S. 174; 35 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 511.

its charter.¹ An express grant of power in the charter to fix the rates of fare, and to alter and change the same, does not confer unlimited power, but merely the right to charge reasonable rates, and what is a reasonable maximum rate may be fixed by statute.² But this power of limitation or regulation is not without bounds; the power to regulate is not a power to destroy; a limitation is not the equivalent of confiscation; accordingly, under pretense of regulating fares, the state may not require a railroad to carry persons without reward; nor can it do that which in law amounts to a taking of private property for public use without just compensation, or without due process of law.³ A statute dividing railroad companies into classes according to the length of the roads operated, or the amount of business done, and fixing a limit for passenger fares for each class, does not deny a corporation the equal protection of the laws within the meaning of the prohibition in the federal constitution.⁴ What the legislature may do

West Virginia Act 1872-73, ch. 227, fixing a reasonable maximum rate of passenger charges, is within the power of the legislature under the constitution, and applicable alike to roads whose charters were granted before and after its passage, although such charters contain provisions empowering the companies to charge a fixed rate, declared to be not reducible by the legislature. Laurel Fork, etc., R. Co. v. West Virginia Transp. Co., 25 W. Va. 324; West Virginia Transp. Co. v. Sweetzer, 25 W. Va. 434; 22 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 469. See Johnson v. Hudson River R. Co., 2 Sweeney (N. Y.) 298, where the power of a railroad corporation to demand fare of a passenger, is held to be not an implied or incidental power, but one derived solely from statute.

The New York Statute (Laws 1875, ch. 600), reducing the rate of fare for carrying passengers on street railways in the city of Buffalo, is a valid exercise of the police power of the state, and is not rendered unconstitutional by the fact that a contract existed between two companies for the interchange of traffic at the rates of fare which existed prior to its enactment. Buffalo East Side R. Co. v. Buffalo St. R. Co., 111 N. Y. 132; 37 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 200.

Street Railways — Municipal Control Over Rates of Fare.—In Sternberg v. State (Neb. 1893), 56 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 424, it was held that the street railway of the city of Lincoln is so far under the control of the municipality that the latter may fix the rate of fare for passage over said railway, and may require tickets, six for twenty-five cents, to be kept for sale by each conductor of a street car. It was said: "A street railway has no depot. Its stopping places are on each street corner, and it transacts its business with the public in its cars, and its tickets should be kept for sale where it transacts its business with the public." Massachusetts Statute 1892, ch. 389, requiring railroad companies to sell thousand-mile tickets for $20, to redeem such tickets on presentation by any other company, and to honor all such tickets issued by any company operating within the state, is unconstitutional, in that it authorizes one company to determine the conditions on which another must carry passengers, and compels one company to carry passengers on the credit of another, thus appropriating individual property to the public use without the owner's consent. Knowlton and Holmes, JJ., dissenting. *Atty. directly in the matter of regulating passenger rates may be lawfully effected through the medium of a commission.¹ In the absence of statutory regulation upon the subject, it is necessarily implied from the character of the employment that the rates shall be just and reasonable, and the courts must decide, as they do in the case of private persons, when controversies arise, what is just and reasonable.²

In Ruggles v. Illinois, 108 U. S. 526; 11 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 49, and Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Illinois, 108 U. S. 541; 11 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 55, the statute of Illinois of April 15th, 1871 (Illinois Laws of 1871, p. 640), which classified the railroads in the state according to their gross annual earnings per mile, and put different limits on the compensation of the different classes per mile for passenger carriage, was adjudged, in opinions delivered by the Chief Justice, to be constitutional and valid, in restricting to the limit of three cents per mile existing corporations, whose charters gave them power to make all by-laws, rules, and regulations, not repugnant to law, and gave their directors power to establish such rates of fare as they should by their by-laws determine. And two justices who did not assent to those opinions, concurred in the judgments, because it was not shown that the rate prescribed by legislature was unreasonable.

A similar question was presented and decided in Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S. 155. It was there objected that a statute regulating the rate for the carriage of passengers, by different classes of railroads, according to their gross earnings per mile, was in conflict with art. 1, § 4 of the constitution of Iowa, which provides that "all laws of a general nature, shall have a uniform operation," and "the general assembly shall not grant to any citizen or class of citizens, privileges or immunities which, upon the same terms, shall not equally belong to all citizens." In answering that objection, the Chief Justice said: "The statute divides the railroads of the state into classes, according to business, and establishes a maximum of rates for each of the classes. It operates uniformly on each class, and this is all the constitution requires. . . . It is very clear that a uniform rate of charges for all railroad companies in the state might operate unjustly upon some. It was proper, therefore, to provide in some way for an adaptation of the rates to the circumstances of the different roads; and the general assembly, in the exercise of its legislative discretion, has seen fit to do this by a system of classification. Whether this was the best that could have been done is not for us to decide. Our province is only to determine whether it could be done at all, and under any circumstances. If it could, the legislature must decide for itself, subject to no control from us, whether the common good requires that it should be done."

III. WHO ARE PASSENGERS.—A passenger, in the legal sense of the term, is one who travels in some public conveyance by virtue of a contract, express or implied, with the carrier, as to the payment of fare, or that which is accepted as an equivalent therefor.¹ Every person traveling in a railroad car, or other public conveyance used for passenger carriage, and not connected with the railroad company or carrier, is presumed to be there lawfully as a passenger, and the burden is on the carrier to prove that he is a trespasser.² The purchase of a ticket by a person entitling him to travel between two stations, creates the relation of carrier and passenger, with all the duties imposed by law upon each;³ it is not necessary that the ticket should have been purchased from the carrier himself.⁴ The actual purchase of a ticket before entering the train is not always necessary to constitute the relation;⁵

miles, will not, as a matter of law, be declared unreasonable. It will be observed in this case that, while the statute limits the fare which may be demanded when the distance is more than eight miles, it imposes no limit when the distance is not more than that. In that case the railroad company is allowed to exercise its own discretion in fixing the rate, subject always to the implied condition that it must not prescribe a rate which the law would pronounce unreasonable.

But if a person by his own solicitation or consent is carried on a vehicle or conveyance which is not used for passenger carriage, there can be no presumption that he is a passenger, although the owner be a common carrier of passengers, by other and different means of conveyance. Snyder v. Natchez, etc., R. Co., 42 La. Ann. 302; 44 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 278.

And when a steamboat stops at one of its usual stopping places for taking on passengers and freight, it is not a presumption of law that every person who goes on board does so as a passenger, unless he notifies an officer to the contrary, so as to relieve the latter from giving to such as do not go aboard as passengers, proper time and facilities for getting ashore. Keokuk Packet Co. v. Henry, 50 Ill. 264.

Passenger on Steamboat.—One who, after boarding a steamer, ascertains that a certain landing where he intends to stop, is off the regular route, and that she would go there only under a special arrangement whereby the additional cost to her would be paid, and he declines to pay the extra charge, but does not change his purpose of taking passage, is a passenger from the time he goes on board, and, as such, may hold the steamer responsible for negligence whereby he is injured, although he does not prepay his way or purchase his ticket; it being the custom for the purser to collect fares on the boat. Passenger in Car Switched on Connecting Line.—A passenger who has been carried by a railway company in a passenger car which the company switches off on the track of a connecting road, sustains the relation of passenger to such connecting road while the car is stationary, and he remains in it where, according to the usual course of business, the latter company is accustomed to receive cars so delivered to it, to couple them onto its own train and carry them over its own road. And such connecting company is liable for injuries sustained by him through its negligence, whether at the time of the injury he has obtained a ticket or paid his fare over the connecting line or not. When a traveler has been invited to enter a car, or enters it in obedience to the announcement that it is ready to receive passengers, the relation of carrier and passenger is created. Hannibal, etc., R. Co. v. Martin, 11 Ill. App. 386.

In Dewire v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 148 Mass. 343; 37 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 57, it was held that if a railroad company permits passengers to take trains at a place which is not a station, a person taking a train at such place is not a trespasser, and when he has reached in safety the inside of a passenger car, he then, if not before, becomes a passenger. Compare Georgia Pac. R. Co. v. Robinson, 68 Miss. 643.

A person who enters a passenger coach as a passenger, and on demand of the conductor refuses to pay his fare, is considered a trespasser ab initio, as though his entry had been unlawful, and, for his ejection, force may be used in proportion to his resistance. Moore v. Columbia, etc., R. Co. (S. Car. 1892), 16 S. E. Rep. 781.

But the mere fact that one rides on the platform of the train to avoid paying fare, does not deprive him of the right to become a passenger, if he pays the regular fare demanded and commits no breach of the peace. And where, in such case, the conductor, before making the demand for his fare, assaults and expels him from the train, the company will be liable for any injuries he may sustain. Fordyce v. Beecher, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 29.

Persons Assisting Passengers.—A person entering a train for the purpose of assisting a passenger, is not himself a passenger. Lucas v. New Bedford, etc., R. Co., 6 Gray (Mass.) 64; 66 Am. Dec. 406; Griswold v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 64 Wis. 652; 23 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 463.

In Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Crunk, 119 Ind. 542; 41 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 158; 12 Am. St. Rep. 443, it was held that where a passenger is so sick and enfeebled as to make it necessary for assistants to carry him from the station on, is, nevertheless, a passenger upon the train he is on.¹ But one who gets upon the train after it has started, cannot be deemed to be a passenger until he reaches a place of safety inside the car.² If a person is suffered to remain on the train after a refusal to pay his fare, because of threats to resist removal by force, he is not a passenger;³ if, however, the refusal is justifiable, the person does not forfeit his rights as a passenger.⁴ A person may become a passenger before entering the car, thus, one is to be considered a passenger while going from the ticket office to take a seat in the car;⁵ and a person waiting in the waiting-room to take the train is a passenger;⁶ but one who enters a railway to a seat in the train upon which he has secured passage, the company, having contracted to carry him with knowledge of his condition, is bound to allow him the required assistants, and is under an obligation to stop the train long enough to afford the persons aiding such passenger, although their services are voluntarily offered, a reasonable opportunity to leave the train, the same as if they were passengers.

But this case is disapproved in Little Rock, etc., R. Co. v. Lawton, 55 Ark. 428, and it is there held that a person who enters a railway coach, to assist a woman to a seat, cannot recover damages for injury sustained in leaving the train, by reason of the failure of the trainmen to hold the train a reasonable time for him to get off, unless they had notice of his intention to do so.

A party having a ticket for transportation on a railroad, who boards a freight train which does not carry passengers, believing the ticket good on that train, is not a trespasser, but must be treated as a passenger. Bogges v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., 37 W. Va. 297.

But where a person who has purchased a railroad ticket for a designated station, without making any inquiries or ascertaining what trains stop at the station to which he desires to go, subsequently takes his seat in a train which does not stop at the station for which he has a ticket, and such person refuses to pay his fare on the demand of the conductor, to the next station at which the train is to stop, and also refuses to leave the train when requested to do so by the conductor, after he has stopped it at a suitable place for that purpose, is a trespasser. *Atchison, etc., R. A person who has purchased a railroad ticket and is present at the ordi-station intending to take a certain train, and finding it gone, waits in the station for a horse car, is not a passenger.¹ Travelers are ordinarily, whilst in the act of leaving the train, deemed to be passengers;² but one who leaves the train while in motion, at a nary point of departure to take a train, is a passenger. Central R., etc., Co. v. Perry, 58 Ga. 461; Carpenter v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 97 N. Y. 494; 21 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 331; 49 Am. Rep. 540.

Where the plaintiff entered the office or waiting-room at a depot and informed the depot agent of her desire to become a passenger, and he directed her as to the manner in which she should get on a caboose car, there is sufficient evidence to justify a finding that the relation of carrier and passenger existed. Allender v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 37 Iowa 264.

But in Indiana Cent. R. Co. v. Hurdson, 13 Ind. 325; 74 Am. Dec. 254, a contrary view seems to have been adopted, and it was held that where plaintiff, without having procured a ticket, was crossing a side track of a railroad to get upon a passenger train at its usual place of stopping on the main track, but by the negligence of the employés of the company a switch had been left open, and the train was thrown upon the side track, and plaintiff run over, he was not a passenger at the time of the injury, and his right to cross the side track was only the right that persons have to cross a railroad at a public street or highway.

Where, by the contract in a drover's pass, it was stipulated that its acceptance should be considered "a waiver of all claims against the company for personal injury when received on the above train," and the plaintiff was injured before entering the train, but after it had been formed and was about to start, it was held that the plaintiff was a passenger and bound by the stipulation, although not actually upon the train. *Poucher v. But a passenger who had reached his destination, alighted from the train, taken a position upon the sidewalk of the highway, and had started across the track, but not upon his way to the station, and was injured while so crossing, was held to have ceased to be a passenger before the accident. *Allerton v. Plaintiff, a passenger on a street car, left it by the front platform after it had stopped. The plaintiff, a passenger on a railroad train, tendered in payment of the usual fare of five cents, a five-dollar bill. The conductor told him that he was unable to change it, but that he would get it changed at the depot. Plaintiff allowed the conductor to retain the bill. On the arrival of the train at the depot the plaintiff alighted and waited in the depot, expecting the conductor to return him the change. He waited about twenty or thirty minutes, and, when seeing that the train was about to start, jumped aboard and asked for his change. The conductor handed him back the bill, and told him to get time and place when and where the corporation could not anticipate that he would leave it, ceases to be a passenger.¹ When by law, railroad companies are prohibited from issuing free passes, a person who travels upon a pass unlawfully issued to him, does not thereby become a trespasser; if the pass is unlawful, the conductor should demand the regular fare, and his failure to do so will not make the traveler a trespasser, nor destroy his rights as a passenger.² But if one travels upon a free pass issued to another and non-transferable, and passes himself as the person named in the pass, he is not a passenger.³

IV. KINDS OF TICKETS—1. Through (Over Connecting Lines)—a.

EXTENT OF LIABILITY.—The conclusions as to the liability of a carrier selling a through ticket over several connecting roads, to a point beyond its own line, are by no means harmonious. The off the train as quickly as he could. Plaintiff jumped from the train while it was in motion, and was injured. It was held that when plaintiff got upon the train, after it had moved from the station, for the exclusive purpose of receiving from the conductor the money due him, and when he jumped off at a point beyond not suitable for, nor intended for, passengers to alight, the relation of carrier and passenger did not exist between him and the railroad company. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Krouse, 30 Ohio St. 222.

Person Leaving Cars at Intermediate Stations.—A passenger on a boat still remains a passenger while he is leaving it temporarily at a place where the boat is to remain for a period of about two hours. Keokuk Packet Co. v. True, 88 Ill. 608. See also Dodge v. Boston, etc., Steamship Co., 148 Mass. 207; 37 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 67; 12 Am. St. Rep. 541.

It is not necessary that a person should be on the train of a railroad in order to be regarded as a passenger. As a passenger, he has the right to stand or walk on the platforms provided at stations for the convenience of passengers while the train is stopping for refreshments, and in a street alongside of the track and platforms. Jeffersonville, etc., R. Co. v. Riley, 39 Ind. 568. See also Snow v. Fitchburg R. Co., 136 Mass. 552; 18 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 161; 49 Am. Rep. 40. But in State v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 58 Me. 176, it was held that when a train turns out upon a side track at an intermediate station, and there stops to await the crossing of another train out of time, and a passenger, not destined to that station, without objection made or notice given, leaves the car, he thereby does no illegal act, but for the time surrenders his place as a passenger, and takes upon himself the direction and responsibility of his own motions during his absence.

2. Buffalo, etc., R. Co. v. O'Hara (Pa. 1882), 9 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 317.

And if a ticket is procured by fraud, the fraud will vitiate the contract, and the person using it will not be entitled to the rights of a passenger. Brown v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., 64 Mo. 536. But if the traveler is in good faith using a pass or a ticket which he believes to be available, or if his right to travel upon it is recognized, the duty which the carrier owes to him is that which a carrier owes a passenger. Accordingly, where a person was induced to believe by the conduct and language of the carrier's employés that he had a contract for a round trip, it was held that he was a passenger. Russ v. The War Eagle, 14 Iowa 363. See also Great Northern R. Co. v. Harrison, 10 Exch. 376. And where a person in good faith presented a commutation ticket which was issued to another and was not transferable, and his claim to be carried was recognized, it was held that he was entitled to the rights of a passenger. Robostelli v. New York, etc., R. Co., 33 Fed. Rep. 796; 34 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 515.

English doctrine,¹ and that of some of the states² is, that the carrier is liable for the performance of the contract of transportation through to the point of destination, and must therefore respond in damages, in the event of the injury or delay of a passenger before reaching that point. But the doctrine founded in reason, and best supported by authority in this country is, that, in the absence of contract making it responsible, the carrier in selling the ticket acts merely as the agent of the other lines, and there is no extra-terminal liability, the rights of the passenger, and the duty and responsibility of the several companies over whose roads he is entitled to passage, being the same as if he had purchased a ticket at the office of each company constituting the through line.³

In Hartan v. Eastern R. Co., 114 Mass. 44, the court, by Wells, J., said: "Arrangements between connecting roads, forming a continuous line, by which passengers are enabled to procure 'through tickets' at the point of starting, and to proceed to their destination, beyond the line of the first road, without changing cars, are required for the accommodation of the public, as well as the convenience of the roads themselves. Such arrangements do not imply joint interests or joint responsibility. . . . The obvious import of such a transaction is that the tickets, for passage upon roads beyond its own line, are sold by the first road as agent for the others. The obligations and responsibilities of a carrier of persons, over other roads than its own, are not thereby assumed, unless its relation to those roads, by contract or otherwise, is such as to confer, or at least to consist with, that character."

Mr. Redfield states the law thus: "As the general duty of common carriers of passengers is different from that of common carriers of goods, so the implied contract resulting from the sale of through tickets for passengers, is different. In the case of the carriers of goods and the baggage of passengers, we have seen that taking the pay and giving tickets or checks

b. PARTNERSHIP ARRANGEMENT.—Divided as opinion may be upon the question discussed in the foregoing section, it is universally agreed that if the arrangement existing between the associated lines of carriers amounts to a partnership, each will be liable to the passenger for losses or injuries occurring anywhere along the line of transportation. But the arrangement must be in reality a partnership, with the incident of community of profit and loss;¹ the fact that each sells through tickets, deducting its own share of the price paid for the same, and accounting to the other companies for their shares, the price being fixed according to a tariff established by each company as to its own road, will through, binds the first company ordinarily for the entire route. But in regard to carrying passengers, the rule is different, we apprehend. These through tickets in the form of coupons, which are purchased of the first company, and which entitle the person holding them to pass over successive roads, with ordinary passenger baggage, sometimes for thousands of miles in this country, import, commonly, no contract with the first company to carry such person beyond the line of their own road. They are to be regarded as distinct tickets for each road, sold by the first company as agent for the others, so far as the passenger is concerned." 2 Redf. on Law of Railways (6th ed.), § 201. See also 2 Woods Railway Law 1418; Hutchinson on Carriers, § 578; 2 Beech's Law of Railways, § 1006.

In Nashville, etc., R. Co. v. Sprayberry, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 852, McFarland, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The theory that the company selling the ticket shall be held, from this alone, to have actually contracted to carry the passenger over roads besides its own, and that the owners of the other roads are but the agents of the first to carry out the contract, seems to us to be an arbitrary assumption, a sort of legal fiction, and contrary, in some cases, at least, to the truth of the case. Assuming that in fact the different lines of road are separate and distinct, and owned and controlled by different companies, with different agents and officers, and that there is no contract or privity between them in regard to carrying passengers, except the arrangement to sell through tickets, and that these facts appear in proof, shall the fact that the first company, with the authority of the others, issues and sells the tickets, be held of itself to establish exactly what may be contrary to the truth; i. e., that the other companies are but the agents and servants of the first?"

In Quimby v. Vanderbilt, 17 N. Y. 306; 72 Am. Dec. 469, it was held that while one of several connecting lines may lawfully contract as principal for the carriage of passengers over the entire route, whether it does so contract is a matter to be determined by evidence.

The leading case upon this subject in this country, is that of Bostwick v. Champion, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 571; 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 175; 31 Am. Dec. 376, the facts of which were as follows: Three persons ran a line of stage coaches from Utica to Rochester, the route being divided between them into three sections, the occupant of each section furnishing his own carriages and horses, hiring drivers and paying the expenses of his own section; but the money received as fare of passengers, deducting therefrom only the tolls paid at turnpike gates, was divided among the parties in proportion to the number of miles of the route ran by each; this was held to be such a division of the profits among the proprietors of the several sections as to make them partners as to third persons.

But Chancellor Walworth, who gave the only written opinion in the Court of Errors (Champion v. Bostwick, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 175, 31 Am. Dec. 376), said that, "The case would be entirely different, if each stage owner was to receive and retain the passage money earned on his part of the line, and to sustain all the expenses thereof, and not constitute them partners;¹ nor will the mere appointment of a common agent at each end of the route to receive fares and issue through tickets, have such an effect.²

c. ULTRA VIRES.—It has been frequently urged that a contract by a carrier for transportation of passengers beyond its own line, is ultra vires. But this view has not been favorably received; the established doctrine being that a carrier may lawfully make such a contract,³ and thus become liable for the acts and neglects of other carriers in no wise under its control.⁴ And the validity of the contract is not affected by the fact that it is to be, in part, performed beyond the territorial limits of the state within which the company is incorporated.⁵

2. Commutation.—A railroad company is under no obligation to establish commutation rates for a particular locality, yet when it has done so, and commutation tickets are sold thereat to the public, the refusal of such a ticket to a particular individual under the same circumstances, and on the same conditions as such tickets are sold to the rest of the public, is an unjust discrimination against him, and a violation of the principle of equality which the company is bound to observe in the conduct of its business.⁶

was only to act as agent of the others in receiving the passage money for them for the transportation of passengers over their parts of the line. In that case, there would be no joint interest, and no liability to third persons as partners."

So, where R. owned and was running one steamboat, and D. owned and was running another, and it was agreed between them that at the end of the season, if the earnings of either boat, less running expenses, should exceed those of the other, less running expenses, the excess should be divided among them, it was held that this did not constitute them partners as to third parties. Fay v. Davidson, 13 Minn. 523.

In Howe v. Gibson, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 263, it was held that where two connecting roads are operated as one continuous line under one management, with the same employes, and are, so far as the public can observe, one line, and use coupon tickets compelling a continuous passage from stations on one road to stations on the other, both are liable in damages to a passenger who purchases such a ticket and is wrongfully compelled to alight from the train at a point distant from the station to which he has paid his passage.

6. State v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., 48 N. J. L. 55; 23 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 470; 57 Am. Rep. 543. The facts of this case were as follows: The plaintiff was the holder of a monthly commutation ticket. On one occasion during the month for which his ticket was issued, he left it at home by inadvertence, and when on the train, being asked for his ticket and not finding it, offered to the conductor a regular trip ticket, provided it should not be punched and should be returned to him the next morning on presentation of his commutation ticket, and refused otherwise to pay his fare. This the conductor refused to do, for the reason that he had no right to permit the plaintiff to ride on a ticket which should not be punched; and the plaintiff remained on the train without paying fare or surrendering the trip ticket, and without any disturbance being made. It was held that the plaintiff by such conduct rendered himself liable to be expelled from the train, and it may be to the forfeiture of the commutation ticket he then held; but that such misconduct did not justify the company in refusing to sell him commutation tickets thereafter, and that for such refusal he might have remedy by mandamus.

A person traveling on a commutation ticket must produce the same when required by the conductor, although known by the latter to be the holder of such a ticket; and refusing or failing to do so and to pay fare, may be ejected from the train.¹ Such a ticket, good for a specified number of miles, but by its conditions to be used within a certain time, ceases to be valid at the expiration of that time, although the number of miles has not been traveled out.²

In Downs v. New York, etc., R. Co., 36 Conn. 287; 4 Am. Rep. 77, the passenger had by mistake left his commutation ticket at home and consequently was unable to show it when called for, and it was held that in conformity with an express stipulation in his contract with the company, the latter had the right to demand ordinary fare for the passage, and that upon his refusal to pay, the conductor lawfully expelled him from the cars at the next regular station. Maples v. New York, etc., R. Co., 38 Conn. 557; 9 Am. Rep. 434, differs from this case in that the plaintiff Maples had his commutation ticket on his person, but for the moment was unable to find it, and simply requested a reasonable time to find it, which was denied by the conductor; and he was ejected from the train at a place other than a regular station. The court also notes the circumstance that there was no express stipulation in his contract with the company that he should pay his fare for the trip if his ticket was not shown to the conductor. And furthermore, that he was well known to the conductor as a commuter. In this case the ejection was held to be unlawful.

Commutation Ticket Over Two Roads.

—A person bought a commutation ticket good for one thousand miles travel upon two roads, forming one continuous line, from a company owning one road, and leasing the other—seven hundred miles to be traveled upon one road, and three hundred miles to be traveled on the other, as indicated by figures of different colors on the ticket. It was held that after the specified number of miles on one division had been exhausted, and punched out of the ticket, the holder was not entitled to travel on that division, although there yet remained on the ticket figures for the other division, representing the number of miles for which the ticket was offered. Terre Haute, etc., R. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 47 Ind. 79.

Quarterly Commutation Ticket—Refunding of Purchase Price.—The complainant purchased on the 13th day of June what the respondent termed a quarterly commutation ticket, specifying the number of trips that might be taken thereon as one hundred and eighty, but it provided that the term should expire on the 31st day of the following August, and this was known to the complainant when he made the purchase. It was similarly stated on each one of such quarterly tickets when it was to expire; namely, at the end of the third calendar month after it was issued. It was held that the complainant was not entitled to recover any portion of the purchase price for the thirteen days less than a full quarter. Sidman v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., Interstate Commerce Com.

A family commutation ticket, which on its face purports to be for the exclusive use of a man and family, authorizes a son who is residing with the father as a member of his family, to travel thereon, notwithstanding he may have attained his majority.¹

A stipulation in a commutation ticket in coupon form that the coupons shall be void unless detached by the conductor, is reasonable and valid, and the holder violates the contract by detaching them himself.² If while detaching the coupons the conductor calls his attention to the fact that it is his duty to detach them, the passenger should desist and hand the ticket and coupons to the conductor, and it will then be the duty of the latter, if he saw the coupons detached, or could readily ascertain that they had been detached from the ticket, to accept them, but the conductor will not be bound to receive the detached coupons without seeing the ticket.³ If the passenger refuses to allow the conductor to detach them, and insists upon doing it himself, he may be expelled from the train.⁴

Monthly Commutation Ticket—Rescission of Contract.—In Smith v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 11 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 555, it was held that where a person holding a monthly commutation ticket does not use the whole of it, and seeks to recover for the portion unused, the special contract evidenced thereby is rescinded, and the usual fare for the number of times that the holder used the ticket having exceeded the price of the ticket, he was entitled to recover nothing, whether the Pennsylvania Act of May 6th, 1863 (P. L. 582), requiring railroad companies to redeem unused tickets, applied to the case or not.

1. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Chisholm, 79 Ill. 584. But it was held further, that if at the time of purchase, the purchaser was informed that a son over twenty-one years of age would not, under the regulations of the company, be allowed to ride on it, such regulations would constitute a part of the contract of purchase, and would be obligatory upon the holder of the ticket and any person attempting to travel on the same.

A passenger offered detached coupons for his fare, and was arrested for fraudulently evading payment. In an action for false imprisonment, it was held that evidence that plaintiff had frequently seen the conductor accept similar coupons under similar circumstances, was inadmissible, except to prove a custom. Marshall v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 145 Mass. 164; 31 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 18.

"Not Good for Passage if Detached."—In Wightman v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 73 Wis. 169; 9 Am. St. Rep. 778, it was held that a round trip railroad ticket punctured for separation into two parts and having on the "going" part the words "not good for passage," and on a line therewith on the "returning" part, the words "if detached," is, nevertheless good for passage where the parts have become separated by accident, if both parts are in good faith presented to the conductor on the outward trip. The words were regarded by the court as not having the effect of a stipulation that the ticket should be deemed forfeited if such parts should be separated by any other person than the conductor, but as having been so placed upon the ticket to prevent imposition by a separation of the parts and the use of each as a single-trip ticket. Such being the case, the presentation to the conductor of the two parts, under the circumstances found, was the same in legal effect as though the parts had not been detached when so presented.

3. Non-transferable.—A carrier may restrict the use of a ticket to the original purchaser. The words "not transferable," or words of like import, printed on the ticket, will have that effect, and a third party can acquire no rights by virtue of such a ticket.¹ But it is held that if one, without attempting to conceal his identity, presents for his passage a non-transferable ticket issued to another, and his claim is recognized by the conductor, he is entitled to the rights of a passenger.² If a ticket, on its face not transferable, is issued in the name of the wrong party, the conductor may refuse to receive it when tendered by the person for whom it was in fact purchased.³ It has been held that a stipulation in the ticket that it is not transferable and will be forfeited if found in the hands of any but the party in whose name it is issued, will render the ticket liable to forfeiture, even in the hands of the original purchaser, if he has, either intentionally or through negligence, permitted it to be used by another.⁴ But a non-transferable ticket containing a condition that if the purchaser fails to comply with the terms of the ticket the company may refuse to accept it, does not give the conductor the right to take it up when found in the hands of a third party, but merely to refuse to honor it.⁵ If no restriction is put upon a ticket by the carrier, before or at the time of the original purchase, it is transferable, being regarded as evidencing a contract to carry bearer.⁶

4. Excursion.—The holder of an excursion ticket, which contains a stipulation that it shall be good only on a certain day, or on a specified train, cannot, by virtue of such ticket, lawfully claim passage at any other time,⁷ than upon the day named in the ticket,

Especially when he also refuses to exhibit the book to enable the conductor to ascertain whether the coupons had been recently detached and the passenger had the right to travel on them. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Harris, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 180; 16 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 374; 42 Am. Rep. 668.

In Drummond v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 7 Utah 118, it was held that the fact that the ticket was not signed by the original purchaser, made no difference, since in accepting a ticket where the contract was set out in full, he accepted the terms of the contract and was bound thereby.

a non-transferable thousand-mile ticket, and told the agent to issue it to E. Bannerman, and the agent, thinking it was intended for a man, inserted "Mr." before the name, and the ticket was presented by the husband to pay his wife's fare, he stating at the time to the conductor that it was bought for his wife, Elsa Bannerman, and the conductor refused to receive such ticket in payment of the wife's fare, and upon a refusal to pay her fare, put her off at the next station, using no unnecessary force; it was held that the appellee could not recover damages from the railroad company for such expulsion. or by any other train.¹ And it has been held that if the ticket calls for a "continuous trip only," between two points, it is not valid for passage to an intermediate point on a train which does not make the whole trip.² A round-trip excursion ticket, not limited by its terms, is good until used, unless the purchaser was notified to the contrary at the time of purchase.³ And the company has no right to expel a passenger traveling on such a ticket after the original date of limitation where the time has been extended by a duly authorized agent.⁴ If a railroad company

A railroad excursion ticket which contains a special contract, is conclusive, and advertisements of the tour are inadmissible in evidence to vary its terms. If such ticket provides that it is exchangeable for another, good for the day and train designated in the latter, the holder of the exchange ticket cannot travel on a later train and day. Howard v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 61 Miss. 194; 18 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 313.

A regulation that the holder of the ticket must present himself for identification at the office of the company at the terminal station, and that the ticket shall be valid only for a certain time after such identification, is valid. Rawitzky v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 40 La. Ann. 47.

In State v. Campbell, 32 N. J. L. 309, a passenger purchased an excursion ticket on the face of which it was declared that it was good for one passage on the day sold, only. A passenger returning upon a subsequent day bought an ordinary ticket, and entered the train; being called on by the conductor for his ticket he tendered the return coupon of the spent excursion ticket, keeping the one he had just bought out of view. The coupon was refused and his fare demanded, and not complying with the demand, nor intimating that he had a better ticket, he was put off at a regular station after considerable resistance, which occasioned delay and inconvenience to the train and passengers. After his expulsion and before the train started, he exhibited his valid ticket to the conductor and attempted to re-enter the train, but was prevented by force. It was held that the conductor had the right to exclude him.

See infra, this title, Kinds of Tickets—Limited.

1. In Nolan v. New York, etc., R. Co., 41 N. Y. Super. Ct. 541, the plaintiff bought an excursion ticket containing the stipulation "good this day on all trains except the Boston express train," and with it attempted to ride on the Boston express, from which he was ejected for non-payment of fare after the refusal of the conductor to honor the ticket. It was held that the expulsion was justifiable.

The manager of an excursion from Wilmington to Washington, contracted with the defendant company for a train of cars at a certain sum, and after advertising the time, etc., sold card tickets for the round trip. After the departure of the train, and when it had proceeded a few miles, the defendant's conductor passed through the cars and took up the card tickets, and in lieu thereof gave coupon tickets, in order that the connecting roads might hold vouchers to obtain their pro rata share of excursion money, in settling with the defendant. There was a regulation of the company that excursion passengers were entitled to ride in the excursion train only. The coupon tickets contained nothing about the right to use them on a regular train—on the contrary, they bore internal evidence that they were to be used on the excursion train, and no other. It was held that the plaintiff excursionist could not return on a regular train even at an earlier day than that advertised for the excursion train. McRae v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 88 N. Car. 526; 18 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 316; 43 Am. Rep. 745.

And in this case it was held that evidence was not admissible to show that by the regulations of the company such tickets were not good after a certain date, and that public notice thereof was given by posters, circulars, etc.

advertises to run an excursion train on a certain day, giving the rate of fare for the round trip, etc., and a person duly presents himself at the ticket office to purchase a ticket therefor, but is unable to do so through the fault of the company, he may take passage on such train, and will be entitled to the special excursion rate of fare.¹

5. Limited.—A passenger carrier has the right to impose limitations as to the time within which its tickets may be used, but in all cases such limitations must be reasonable or they will have no validity.² Subject to this qualification of reasonableness, when upon its face the ticket is issued available for a limited time only, the holder thereof will not be entitled to passage by virtue of it after the expiration of the time specified.³ A ticket containing a condition that it will not be good unless "used" on or before a certain day, requires the holder to enter upon the journey before

1. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Graham, 3 Ind. App. 28. In this case complainant alleged that the defendant railroad company advertised to run an excursion train on a certain day to a certain place, giving the time of its arrival and departure at the various stations and the fare for the round trip; that plaintiff went to one of the small stations and sought to procure a round-trip excursion ticket, but there were no such tickets for sale at that station; that plaintiff paid more than the fare for the round trip at the excursion rate to conductor and took his receipt, and demanded that he be carried the round trip; that returning on the same train the same conductor demanded a return fare, and on his refusal to pay, expelled the plaintiff from the train. It was held that the complaint showed sufficient compliance on the part of the plaintiff with the defendant company's regulation, to entitle him to the excursion rate, and further, that it was no defense that the ticket office had been discontinued at this station, as the plaintiff had a right to expect the company to furnish reasonable facilities for procuring tickets.

2. Thus, if a ticket is issued from A to B and return, "good for this day only," and there is no train which leaves B on the return trip to A after the arrival of the train, the condition is unreasonable, and the holder will be entitled to a return passage to A on the first train leaving B for A on the next day. 2 Wood's Ry. The reasonableness of a regulation of this character is obvious. It enables the carrier to provide requisite car-room for all holders of tickets who are entitled to ride within a particular period or upon a particular train. Such limitations are generally printed upon the ticket, and may then be said to constitute a part of the contract rather than a rule governing the rights of the parties. State v. Campbell, 32 N. J. L. 309. It is said, however, that the ignorance of a passenger that his ticket midnight of the last day, yet having done so, he will be entitled to passage to his destination, though the time expires while en route.¹

If a railroad company sells a limited ticket over its own and connecting roads, and such ticket is the joint contract of the several carriers, a passenger who is delayed by the fault of one of the roads, is entitled to complete his journey upon such ticket, although the time expires before he reaches the last of the connecting lines; but if the ticket is in coupon form, and expressly provides that the carrier selling it is merely the agent of the connecting roads, and is not responsible beyond its own line, the passenger is not entitled to be carried over the last road after the time has expired, although he is delayed by the fault of one of the other companies.² When, however, the last day of the limitation falls on Sunday, and the last line runs no train on that day, the passenger will be entitled to transportation if he presents himself for the first train of the next day.³ It has been held that the words, "good this trip only," upon a ticket, will not have the effect of limiting the undertaking of the company to any particular day, as they do not relate to time but to a journey, and if the ticket has not been previously used, it entitles the holder to a passage on a subsequent day, as well as on the day it bears date.⁴ The fact that the passenger has on other occasions been permitted to ride on an expired ticket, or even on the particular ticket in question, does not establish a custom of the company to that effect, and so entitle the passenger to transportation; ¹ nor will the checking of baggage on such ticket have that effect.² A mere verbal declaration by an agent of the company that a ticket, expressed to be good only for a limited time, is good after that time, is of no force or effect against the company, unless the agent is vested with express authority to make such a statement.³

In Rawitzky v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 40 La. Ann. 47; 31 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 129, a return ticket from New Orleans to Toronto, good for thirty days, was issued. The ticket contained a condition that on leaving Toronto the purchaser would call at the company's office there, and for the purpose of identification, sign the ticket in the presence of the agent; and return to New Orleans within fifteen days from the date of the signing. On July 14th, the purchaser signed the condition at Toronto. The limit of the ticket, the end of the thirty days, was August 8th. On August 3d the purchaser, while on his return journey, was expelled from the train, the conductor alleging that the fifteen days having expired, the ticket was not available. The purchaser alleged that until the conductor refused to take the ticket he did not know of the condition. It was held that the passenger was bound by the condition, and the fifteen days having expired, could not travel on the ticket.

A statute making all railway tickets available for a specified time from date, has no force beyond the territorial limits of the state; hence, it would not apply to the case of a ticket calling for passage from a point within, to a point without the state, while being used beyond the limits of the state.⁴

6. Scalpers.—In some of the states statutes have been enacted making the business of ticket brokerage or ticket scalping unlawful, and requiring railroad companies to redeem unused tickets.⁵ A person who buys a ticket from an unauthorized agent of a railroad in a state where such sale is lawful, is entitled to transportation into another state over the railroad by which the ticket was issued, although a statute of the latter state makes the sale unlawful.⁶ The regular fare may be collected of a person who attempts to travel on a scalper's ticket containing a stipulation that it shall be void in the hands of any other than the original purchaser, notwithstanding he bought it on the assurance of an unauthorized agent of the company that it would be accepted.⁷ A statute making it unlawful for any person other than a duly authorized agent of the company "to sell or deal in" tickets, has no application to the sale of a single ticket by a person not a dealer therein.⁸

V. PASSES—1. Generally.—One who receives and uses a pass to procure free transportation, is held to have consented to the conditions indorsed thereon as fully as though he had signed the same.¹ A pass for life, given without valid consideration, may be revoked, notwithstanding it was issued in pursuance of a vote of the stockholders of the company;² and it has been held that the leasing of the railroad operates the revocation of a pass issued without consideration.³ But a contract based upon a good consideration to grant a life pass, is valid and binding upon the company, and for its refusal to perform the same, may be held liable in damages.⁴ Receivers of a railroad cannot make an agreement for a free life pass which will bind subsequent owners of the road.⁵ When the company makes it a rule to issue no free passes, it is its duty to inform the conductors of the rights of parties who are entitled to be carried free of charge, and to instruct them to allow the same.⁶ The holder of a free pass is entitled to the State v. Ray, 109 N. Car. 736. In this latter case the court, by Merrimon, C. J., said: "These words (to 'sell or deal,' etc.), imply not simply the sale of a single such ticket as a person may have or obtain, not of purpose to sell the same, but the practice or business of selling such tickets for others, or buying and selling them as is ordinarily done by 'ticket dealers or ticket brokers.' If the purpose had been to forbid the sale of a single ticket that a person might have and could not use himself, the appropriate terms used would have been 'No person shall sell any ticket issued by a railroad company,' or 'It shall be unlawful for any person to sell any ticket issued,' etc., or the like broad and sweeping terms. The phrases 'to sell tickets,' 'to deal in tickets,' imply, in business parlance, the business of selling, or buying and selling such tickets; they imply not particulars—simply a sale—but a multiplicity of such sales in the sense of a business. The buying and selling of tickets issued by railroad companies to persons traveling over their roads, by 'ticket dealers,' is a common and serious grievance to such companies, and the purpose of the statute is to remedy that evil. It does not extend to the simple sale of a ticket an individual may happen to have that he cannot use. Such sale does not come within the mischief to be remedied."

Indiana Statute.—In State v. Fry, 81 Ind. 7; 6 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 340, it was held that by virtue of section 8 of the act of March 9th, 1875 (1 Rev. Stat. Indiana, 1876, p. 259), regulating the issuing of railroad tickets and coupons, all special tickets are exempted from the operation of said act, whether they are half fare, excursion ticket, or tickets special in any other respect.

Renewal.—An agreement made by a railroad company to furnish to a firm "a ticket entitling either one" of the partners of the firm, "but only one on any train, to occupy one seat and travel on the passenger trains" of the railroad company, confers a right of passage on only one member of the firm at a time, and the evidence of that right is a ticket which must be presented to the conductor of any train upon which a partner of the firm should take passage, and under such a contract it is a question for the jury to decide whether upon the practical construction of the contract adopted by the parties themselves, it was the duty of the firm to apply to the company for the renewal of an annual pass issued by the company, or whether it was the duty of the company to furnish such renewal without any application therefor. Knopf v.

same measure of care from the company as a passenger paying full fare.¹

2. Condition Exempting Carrier from Liability.—There is a great contrariety of opinion in this country as to the validity of a stipulation in a free pass exempting the carrier from liability for injury occasioned by the negligence of himself or servants, the question having been much confused and embarrassed by imperfect and unsuccessful attempts to maintain the theory of degrees of negligence, and to distinguish between the different grades of officers and servants of the corporation.²

2. Reasoning of the Courts That Favor the Validity of the Exemption.—As there is so much conflict of opinion upon the question under consideration, it may be interesting to note the course of reasoning adopted by the courts in arriving at the conclusions set out in the text. Those upholding the validity of the exemption from liability for negligence contend, that the arrangement between the parties should not be regarded as a contract with the railroad company in its character as common carrier; that it drops such character and becomes a mere private carrier, whose liabilities are to be determined by the same rules which are applicable to the ordinary class of gratuitous bailments, or of persons rendering an unbought service; that the definition of a common carrier, which is that of a person or corporation pursuing the public employment of conveying passengers for hire, does not apply under such circumstances, and therefore the stipulated exemption is no abdication of that rigid responsibility which the law imposes upon common carriers; that the service which he undertakes to render is one which he is under no obligation to perform, and is outside of his regular duties, and such being the case, there is no sound reason to prevent the carrier from prescribing as a condition, that he shall not be compelled, in addition to carrying the passenger gratuitously, to be responsible to him in damages for the negligence of his servants. They maintain that the gratuitous accommodation concerns only the immediate parties, except, perhaps, in a very indirect way, by making the fare of other passengers higher; that if fares are unreasonable, however, they may be subject to governmental regulation, but that the remote and indirect effect alluded to cannot make the exemption void on the ground of public policy; that many other gratuities and charities might be named, which, though conceded to be commendable, would have a similar effect. Furthermore, it is well known that with all the care that can be exercised in the selection of servants for the management of the various appliances of a railroad train, accidents will sometimes occur from momentary carelessness or inattention. It is hardly reasonable that, besides the gift of free transportation, the carrier should be held responsible for these, when he has made it the condition of his gift that he should not be. Nor in holding that he need not be under these circumstances, is any countenance given to the idea that the carrier may contract with a passenger to convey him for a less price, on being exonerated from responsibility for the negligence of his servants. In such a case the carrier would still be acting in the public employment exercised by him, and should not escape its responsibilities or limit the obligations which it imposes upon him. See cases cited in succeeding notes to this section.

Reasoning of the Courts That Deny the Validity of the Exemption.—The following is substantially the line of argument of the courts opposed to the validity of such contracts, and it would seem to be well-nigh unanswerable. While the relation of passenger and carrier is created by contract, it does not follow that the duty and responsibility of the carrier is dependent upon the contract.

In England, it is well established that the carrier has full power thus to provide against liability, and a condition in the pass that the passenger travels "at his own risk" will exclude everything for which the company would otherwise have been responsible.¹

The essential and imperative duty inherent in the very nature of the employment of a common carrier, is that of care, vigilance, and skill in providing suitable and safe means for the carriage of those who intrust themselves to him for transportation, and of safely carrying them to their destination. A stipulation that the carrier shall not be bound to the exercise of care and diligence, is in effect an agreement to absolve him from one of the essential duties of his employment.

While with reference to matters indifferent to the public, parties may contract according to their own pleasure, they cannot do so where the public has an interest; that as certain duties are attached by law to certain employments, these cannot be waived or dispensed with by individual contracts.

The general laws, and the charters of such corporations, make their employment that of common or public carriers of passengers, etc. This employment they voluntarily assume, and in recognition of the public nature of their business, the law bestows upon them many privileges and benefits which it does not confer upon private persons or strictly private corporations, which often operate as a burden on individuals and communities, and could not be lawfully conferred on a mere private carrier. And the law will not permit a railroad company thus to abandon its obligation to the public, and to lay down its public character as a passenger carrier which the law, as well as the nature of the employment in which it engages, fixes upon it, and become a mere private carrier.

The rules governing gratuitous bailments, in reference to the degree of care incumbent on the bailee, can have but little, if any, application in cases in which, in any manner, the relation of carrier and passenger is established, for behind any contract by which this may be created, stands a public policy which even the parties may not be permitted to thwart—no stipulation of the parties in disregard of it, or involving its sacrifice in any degree, can be permitted to stand.

The interest of the state in the safety of the citizens is obviously the same, whether the case be one of a passenger for hire or a merely gratuitous passenger. The more stringent the rule as to the duty and liability of the carrier, and the more rigidly it is enforced, the greater will be the care exercised and the more approximately perfect the safety of the passenger. Any relaxation of the rule as to duty or liability, naturally, and it may be said, inevitably, tends to bring about a corresponding relaxation of care and diligence on the part of the carrier. It is said, however, that "It is unreasonable to suppose that the managers of a railroad train will lessen their vigilance and care for the safety of the train and its passengers, because there may be a few on board for whom they are not responsible." To this it may be answered that while it might not ordinarily occur that the presence of a free passenger upon a train, for injury to whom the carrier would not be liable, would tend to lessen the carrier's sense of responsibility and vigilance, it still remains true that the greater the sense of responsibility, the greater the care; and that any relaxation of responsibility is dangerous. Besides these considerations, it is to be remembered that the care and vigilance which a carrier exercises, do not depend alone upon a mere sense of responsibility, or upon the existence of an abstract rule, imposing stringent obligations upon him. It is the enforcement of the rule and of the liability imposed thereby—the mulcting of the carrier for his negligence—which brings home to him in the most practical, forcible, and effectual way, the necessity of strictly fulfilling his obligations. See cases cited in succeeding notes to this section.

And this view is sanctioned by the courts of some of the states.¹ Others, while conceding the right to make such exemption in cases of ordinary negligence, refuse to apply the principle in cases of gross negligence.² Still others hold that such a stipulation will protect the carrier against the negligence of any of its servants and agents other than its managing officers or directors, the latter being regarded as identical with the corporation itself.³

But, by the prevailing doctrine, all fine discriminations in regard to degrees of negligence⁴ and grades of agents⁵ are

4. Steamboat New World v. King, 16 How. (U. S.) 474. See NEGLIGENCE, vol. 16, p. 426.

The rule, its application and foundation, are thus clearly stated by an elementary writer: "We have already seen that an agreement that a carrier shall not be liable for negligence, is void as against the policy of the law. There is no reason why this principle should not apply to cases of free, as well as of paid, carriage. If 'confidence,' as has just been stated, is a sufficient consideration, then no passage voluntarily tendered and accepted, is gratuitous. But, independently of this, it is against public policy that a person using the high and dangerous agency of steam, in any case on which human life depends, should act with a diligence less than a good and capable expert should employ in wielding such an agency. If diligence be proportioned to remuneration, steam service would be graded in diligence according to the degree of pay: first-class diligence for first-class cars; second-class diligence for second-class cars; minimum diligence to those who pay but little, or who do not pay at all. But the law knows no such gradations; when the work is undertaken, then, so far as safety is concerned, the same precautions must be taken for all who are permitted to take passage." Wharton on Negligence, 641.

5. In regard to the distinction attempted to be drawn in the New York and New Jersey cases, between the negligence of the corporation acting through its managing officers, and the negligence of other servants of the company, the court in Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. McGown, 65 Tex. 640; 26 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 274, says: "In the nature of things, every corporation must act solely through agents, and that their powers and duties may differ in degree, it seems to us, should make no difference, in so far as duties and liabilities to passengers, whether free or paying full fare, are concerned. The true inquiry, at last, is, did the injury result from the negligence of any agent of the corporation, while acting within the scope of his employment? If a corporation may relieve itself from liability to a passenger for the negligence of one or more classes of agents, why may it not for the negligence of another class? All of a corporation's employes, from the highest official to the humblest laborer, are but agents. Some of them are necessarily clothed discarded, and such stipulations held to be contrary to public policy and therefore void.¹ And this rule is wholesome, demanded by the nature of the carrier's employment, embraces a policy which no state having a due regard for the safety of the lives of its

with extensive powers, to make contracts which will bind the corporation in reference to many matters, and to control its operations, while others have but simple labors to perform; yet, none of them are the corporation, clothed with its full power, or responsible for all its acts. We are of the opinion, that the distinction sought to be made in the New York and New Jersey cases, to which we have referred, has no solid foundation in reason or in public policy, when considered with reference to the right of a corporation pursuing the business of a common or public carrier, to limit, by contract, its liability to a passenger for injury resulting from the negligence of any class of its agents. That, in the nature of things, the negligence of the agent, of whatsoever grade, as to matters within the scope of his employment, with reference to passengers, is the negligence of the corporation itself, which, all the American cases agree, fixes a liability which the carrier cannot be permitted to avoid by contract." The distinction is also denied in Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Read, 37 Ill. 484; 87 Am. Dec. 260. And in New York Cent. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 357, Mr. Justice Bradley made the following observation upon the same point: "In regulating the public establishment of common carriers, the great object of the law was to secure the utmost care and diligence in the performance of their important duties, an object essential to the welfare of every civilized community. Hence the common-law rule which charged the common carrier as an insurer. Why charge him as such? Plainly for the purpose of raising the most stringent motive for the exercise of carefulness and fidelity in his trust. In regard to passengers, the highest degree of carefulness and diligence is expressly exacted. In the one case the securing of the most exact diligence and fidelity underlies the law, and is the reason for it; in the other it is directly and absolutely prescribed by the law. It is obvious, therefore, that if a carrier stipulate not to be bound to the exercise of care and diligence, but to be at liberty to indulge in the contrary, he seeks to put off the essential duties of his employment. And to assert that he may do so seems almost a contradiction in terms. Now, to what avail does the law attach these essential duties to the employment of the common carrier, if they may be waived in respect to his agents and servants, especially where the carrier is an artificial being, incapable of acting except by agents and servants? It is carefulness and diligence in performing the service which the law demands, not an abstract carefulness and diligence in proprietors and stockholders who take no active part in the business. To admit such a distinction in the law of common carriers, as the business is now carried on, would be subversive of the very object of the law."

And in Welsh v. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co., 10 Ohio St. 75; 75 Am. Dec. 490, the court says: "This doctrine, when applied to a corporation, which can only act through its agents and servants, would secure complete immunity for the neglect of every duty."

See also New York Cent. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 357. This was a case of a drover's pass, but supports the principle contended for. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Derby, 14 How. (U. people can abandon, for it discourages negligence by holding the carrier to strict accountability, and yet imposes upon him no responsibility that he does not voluntarily assume when he engages in the employment.¹

3. Interstate Commerce Act.—The Interstate Commerce act in effect prohibits carriers of passengers subject thereto, from giving free passes to particular persons; and the exception allowed in favor of the officers and employés of the company, does not extend to the families of such persons.² Free transportation issued in the form of an annual pass to a person not in the regular and stated service of the carrier, nor receiving any pay under a contract of employment, but requested by him as a return "for throwing in its way what business he conveniently could," is illegal.³ But where a free pass was given to a discharged employé of the company, upon the assumption that he might still be regarded as an employé, and it affirmatively appeared that it was never used, and that it expired in the hands of the party by a limitation contained on its face, there was held to be no violation of the law.⁴ The issuing of passes to persons on account of their high social, business or official position is in contravention of the act, it being adjudged that the language of the act, "under substantially similar circumstances and conditions," has no reference to the relative standing of individuals in the community, but to the nature of the service performed by the carrier.⁵

King, 16 How. (U. S.) 469; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Stevens, 95 U. S. 655. In this case it was held that the carrier could not lawfully stipulate against liability for negligence where the transportation, although not paid for in money, was not a mere matter of gratuity, and the court strongly intimated that it would not have come to a different conclusion had the passage been a mere gratuity.

And in Indiana Cent. R. Co. v. Mundy, 21 Ind. 48; 83 Am. Dec. 339, the pass contained the following: "It is agreed that the person accepting this ticket assumes all risk of personal injury and loss or damage to property, while using the same on the trains of the company." It was held that such a stipulation does not cast upon the passenger any risks arising from the gross negligence of the servants of the railroad company in running the train, and it would seem that it does not cast upon the passenger any risks arising from any negligence of the servants of the railroad company in running the train. The court, while intimating that the weight of American authorities is opposed to allowing the carrier to exempt himself from liability for the consequence of his negligence, refrained from expressing any opinion on the question either way.

1. The following is the testimony of an authoritative witness, as to the operation and effect of the decisions upholding the validity of the stipulations under consideration: "The fruits of this rule," says Judge Davis, "are already being gathered in increasing accidents, through the decreasing care and vigilance on the part of these corporations, and they will continue to be reaped until a just sense of public policy shall lead to legislative restriction, upon the power to make this kind of contracts." *Stimson v. 4. Drovers' Passes.—When stock is transported upon a railroad it is usual for the company to give the shipper a ticket termed a "drover's pass," entitling him to accompany the stock to their destination and return. The pass ordinarily stipulates that the drover assumes all risk of accident, and releases the carrier from liability for all injuries, whether occasioned by the negligence of the company or its servants or otherwise. There is some conflict of authority as to the status of such a passenger and consequently the effect of such a stipulation. The English courts,¹ and those of New York,² regard the drover as a gratuitous passenger, and bound by the release. But the prevailing doctrine in this country is, that the contract of shipment and the pass are to be construed

New Orleans and its clerk on its interstate lines, on account of their official positions, and it was held to be a violation of the act. So where a railroad company issues passes to persons occupying high positions under the United States, and state, government, and to persons whose good will was claimed to be of consequence to it, entitling them to transportation over the road, which extended into several states, it was held that giving passes under such circumstances was illegal. In re Boston, etc., R. Co., 3 Interstate Commerce Com. Rep. 717.

Section 2 of the Interstate Commerce act provides: "That if any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall directly or indirectly, by any special rate, rebate, drawback, or other device, charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons, a greater or less compensation for any service rendered or to be rendered in the transportation of passengers or property, subject to the provisions of this act, than it charges, demands, collects, or receives from any other person or persons for doing for him or them a like and contemporaneous service in the transportation of a like kind of traffic, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, such common carrier shall be deemed guilty of unjust discrimination, which is hereby prohibited and declared to be unlawful."

2. Boswell v. Hudson River R. Co., 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 699; Bissell v. New York Cent. R. Co., 25 N. Y. 442; 82 Am. Dec. 369, reversing 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 602. In this case the pass expressly stipulated that the company should not be liable, under any circumstances, "whether of negligence by their agents or otherwise," for injury to the person or stock of the passenger. The latter was killed by the express train running into the stock train, and the jury found that his death was caused by the gross negligence of the agents and servants of the defendants. The supreme court held that gross negligence, whether of servants or principals, cannot be excused by contract in reference to carriage of passengers for hire, and such a contract is against policy of the law, and void. This judgment, however, was reversed by the court of appeals by a vote of four judges against three, Judge Smith, who concurred in the judgment below, having in the meantime changed his views as to the materiality of the fact that the negligence stipulated against was that of the servants of the company, and not of the company itself. The majority now held that the pass was a free pass, as it purported to be, and therefore that the case was governed by Welles v. New York Cent. R. Co., 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 641; 24 N. Y. 181; but whether so or not, the contract was founded on a valid consideration, and the passenger was bound by it, even to the assumption of the risk rising from the gross negligence of the company's servants.

The late case of Poucher v. New York Cent. R. Co., 49 N. Y. 263; 10 Am. Rep. 364, is in all essential respects similar to this, and a similar result was reached.

Though it may now be considered as settled law in this state that a person riding on such a pass, is not to be considered as a passenger for hire, yet in the first case of the kind that arose, as a single contract, the consideration of which is the charges made for the transportation of the stock, and that the drover is a passenger for hire and the exemption is void.¹

Smith v. New York Cent. R. Co., 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 132; 24 N. Y. 222, a contrary view was held. In this case the drover's pass contained a stipulation that "the persons riding free to take charge of the stock, do so at their own risk of personal injury from whatever cause." The damage arose from a flattened wheel in the car, which caused it to jump the track. The supreme court, by Hogeboom, J., held that the railroad company was liable for any injury happening to the passenger, not only by the gross negligence of the company's servants, but by ordinary negligence on their part. "For my part," says the judge, "I think not only gross negligence is not protected by the terms of the contract, but what is termed ordinary negligence or the withholding of ordinary care, is not so protected. I think, notwithstanding the contract, the carrier is responsible for what, independent of any peculiar responsibility attached to his calling or employment, would be regarded as fault or misconduct on his part." The judge added that he thought the carrier might, by positive stipulation, relieve himself to a limited degree, from the consequences of his own negligence, or that of his servants. But to accomplish that object, the contract must be clear and specific in its terms, and plainly covering such case. Of course this remark was extra-judicial. The judgment was affirmed by the court of appeals by a vote of five judges to three. Judge Wright strenuously contended that it is against public policy for a carrier of passengers, where human life is at stake, to stipulate for immunity for any want of care. "Contracts in restraint of trade are void," he says, "because they interfere with the welfare and convenience of the state; yet the state has a deep interest in protecting the lives of its citizens." He argued that it was a question affecting the public, and not only the party who is carried. Judge Sutherland agreed in substance with this view. Two other judges held that if the party injured had been a gratuitous passenger, the company would have been discharged, but in their view, he was not a gratuitous passenger. One judge was for affirmance, on the ground that the negligence was that of the company itself. The remaining three judges held the contract valid to the utmost extent of exonerating the company, notwithstanding the grossest neglect on the part of its servants.

1. The leading case upon this subject in this country is New York Cent. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 357, in which it was held, first, that a common carrier cannot lawfully stipulate for exemption from responsibility, when such exemption is not just and reasonable in the eye of the law. Second, that it is not just and reasonable in the eye of the law for a common carrier to stipulate for exemption from responsibility for the negligence of himself or his servants. Third, that these rules apply both to carriers of goods and carriers of passengers for hire, and with special force to the latter. Fourth, that a drover traveling on a pass such as was given in this case, for the purpose of taking care of his stock on the train, is a passenger for hire.

In Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Curran, 16 Ohio St. 1; 2 Am. Rep. 362, the carrier in making a contract for the shipment of live stock at a specified rate, delivered to the shipper, without any additional consideration, a "drover's pass," entitling him to go with the stock and to return on a passenger train. In the written agreement for transporting the stock, the holder of the ticket was referred to as "riding free to take charge of the stock." On the pass was an indorsement that it was a "free ticket," and that the holder assumed all risk of accident, and agreed that the company should not be liable under any circumstances, whether of negligence by the company's servants or otherwise, for any injury to his person or property, and that he would not consider the company as common carriers, or liable as such. It was held that the pass and the agreement for transporting the stock, constituted together a single contract, and that the holder, both while going with his stock and returning, was not a gratuitous passenger, but a passenger for hire. The stipulation exempting the company from liability for negligence, was

VI. FARE PAID ON TRAIN.—A railroad company may establish a rate of fare for passengers failing to provide themselves with tickets before entering the train, higher than the ticket rate, the extra charge being regarded as a compensation to the company for the additional inconvenience to which it is subjected by being compelled to receive the fare by the hands of the conductor.¹ In some states such extra charge is expressly authorized by statute.² But the car rate can, in no case, exceed the maximum held to constitute no defense to an action brought by the shipper for personal injury, caused by negligence of servants of the company in the management of the trains. The court regarded the expressions "riding free," and "free ticket," as meaning only that the holder was to be subjected to no additional charge, and that he was to pass free of the usual fare exacted of passengers.

In South Carolina, where there is a ticket office, and it is kept open for the sale of tickets to passengers for thirty minutes before the train leaves, if the passenger neglects to purchase a ticket, he is liable to pay the ordinary fare and 25 cents additional; and if he refuses to do this, he is not entitled to transportation for any distance. If his neglect to purchase was intended as a fraud upon the rights of the corporation, he is also liable to a forfeiture.

allowed the company by its charter,¹ or a statute fixing rates,² and in the absence of such limitation the rate must be reasonable.³ It is held that if a passenger pays only from one station to another, without a ticket, he may be compelled to pay an extra charge at each station, as a new contract between him and the company is thus made at each station.⁴

To justify this discrimination, every reasonable and proper facility and accommodation must be afforded the passenger to procure a ticket. The duty of the company in this respect may be stated thus: It must furnish a convenient and accessible place for the sale of tickets, with a competent person in attendance ready to sell them, which place should be open and accessible to all passengers for a reasonable time before the departure of each train, so that the passenger's failure to obtain a ticket shall really be a case of neglect on his part and not the fault of the company.⁵ Reasonable time, in this connection, is held to mean up to the time fixed by the published rules of the company for

If a railroad company fixes two rates of passenger fare, namely, a ticket rate and a car rate, the former within and the latter beyond the limits of its authority, and the conductor of a train, under the direction of the company, refuses to accept from the passenger less than the illegal and unauthorized rate, it is not necessary, to entitle the passenger to remain on the train, to tender more than the ticket rate, although the company might have fixed such ticket rate at a higher sum. Smith v. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co., 23 Ohio St. 10.

But an extra charge required of passengers not providing themselves with tickets before taking passage, to be refunded upon presentation of a drawback coupon, is not a charge for transportation within the meaning of a statute limiting the rate of fare for passenger transportation. If the company has provided a station at which its passenger trains stop, but at which there is no ticket office, it is not affording a passenger a reasonable opportunity to obtain a ticket. Poole v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 16 Oregon 261; 8 Am. St. Rep. 289.

Kansas Gen. Stats. 1889, par. 1325, authorizes railroad companies to collect fares in excess of the ticket rate, from passengers who have no tickets, but provides that the act shall not apply to any passenger taking passage from a station where the office was not kept open thirty minutes before the starting of the train. It was held that the company could not charge fare in excess of the ticket rate, where a passenger, deciding to continue his journey, got off at a station to buy a ticket and waited at the window until the conductor shouted all aboard; the agent, in the meanwhile, being busy on the platform handling baggage. Atchison, etc., R. Co., v. Hogue, 50 Kan. 40, following Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Dwelle, 44 Kan. 394.

In Central R., etc., Co. v. Strickland, 90 Ga. 562, it was held that the company need not keep a ticket office open each and every minute up to the time it may lawfully close the same, provided a reasonable opportunity to purchase tickets is given to all persons desiring to do so; nor, on the other hand, is a passenger bound to wait at the office an unreasonable time for the appearance of the ticket agent, or to call again and again at the office to obtain a ticket, provided in the exercise of good faith and due diligence he endeavors to do so before the time for closing the office; and in each case, it is a question for the jury whether the parties have respectively performed the corresponding duties devolving upon them.

In Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Fox (Tex. 1887), 33 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 543, it was held that the failure of the company to give a reasonable time after the opening of the office, for a passenger to purchase a ticket and board the train in safety, is negligence.

A Contrary View—Comments Thereon.—In Crocker v. New London, etc., R. Co., 24 Conn. 249, it was held that a regulation making a discrimination in fares, was a mere proposal, and could be withdrawn by the company at any time before being actually accepted by the passenger, and that the closing of the ticket office for the night, before the passenger applies for a ticket, is a withdrawal of the offer to discriminate in favor of those purchasing tickets. But upon this point the court were divided in opinion. This view was sanctioned in a recent case before the supreme court of New York. Bordeaux v. Erie

R. Co., 8 Hun (N. Y.) 579. But to the contrary is the language of the court of appeals, in an earlier case, where the train left at an hour in the night at which the company was not required to keep its ticket office open. "To compel a passenger to pay a penalty because the company had deprived him of the power to travel for the regular fare, would be so oppressive and unjust that it would require a positive provision of a legislative act to induce any tribunal to sanction it. The statute is open to no such construction. The extra fare can only be demanded when the passenger fails to purchase his ticket at an established ticket office that is open. If it is not open, no ticket can be procured, and no right exists to demand the extra fare." Nellis v. New York Cent. R. Co., 30 N. Y. 505. And the Connecticut case has also been considered by other tribunals, but failed to receive their approval. DuLaurans v. St. Paul, etc., R. Co., 15 Minn. 49; 2 Am. Rep. 102; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Dalby, 19 Ill. 352; Jeffersonville, etc., R. Co. v. Rogers, 28 Ind. 1; 92 Am. Dec. 276; Swan v. Manchester, etc., R. Co., 132 Mass. 116; 6 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 327; 42 Am. Rep. 432. In 1 Redf. on Railways (6th ed.) 99, it is stated that the more reasonable view in regard to the mode of enforcing a discrimination between fares paid in the cars and at the stations, is that such a regulation, however proper in itself, cannot legally be enforced by the company, unless it has afforded every proper and reasonable facility to the passenger for procuring his ticket at the station.

Sufficiency of Effort to Procure Ticket.—A passenger does not make a sufficient effort to obtain a ticket if he merely goes to the window of the ticket office, and not finding the agent there, immediately enters the cars without making any effort to see if the agent was within the office, and without making any effort to attract his notice. Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Kennedy, 77 Ind. 507; 3 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 467.

Passenger Late at Station.—The fact that a passenger reaches a station too late to buy a ticket before taking the train, will not relieve him of the liability to pay the extra charge required by the company's regulations of those failing to provide themselves with tickets. Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. Mays, 4 Ind. App. 413.

the departure of the train, and not up to the time of actual departure.¹ But under a statutory provision that the ticket office shall be kept open "at least one hour prior to the departure" of each passenger train, the actual departure of the train is meant.²

1. In Swan v. Manchester, etc., R. Co., 132 Mass. 116; 6 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 327; 42 Am. Rep. 432, the ticket seller was in his office until the time advertised for the departure of the train. He left it after that time and while the train was approaching, in order to aid the station agent, as he was accustomed to do, in loading the baggage upon the train. The plaintiff did not approach the ticket office to find it vacant until after the time had expired for the departure of the train as advertised. There was sufficient time for him to have procured his ticket before the train actually started from the station, if the ticket seller had then been in the office. The court held that the company was not liable for expelling the passenger, for refusing to pay the extra fare demanded of passengers not provided with tickets, and said: "Delays must necessarily from time to time arise in the progress of a train from a variety of incidental circumstances, but at the station everything must be definitely arranged with reference to the time when, by the schedule, the train is to depart. . . . The delay of the train did not enlarge his (the plaintiff's) rights, nor could it entitle him to insist that at the station whence he was to start, the office of the ticket seller should not be closed until its arrival."

In Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Parks, 18 Ill. 460, and St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Dalby, 19 Ill. 353, it was held to be the duty of the company to keep the ticket office open "for a reasonable time before the departure of each train, and up to the time of its actual departure." But in St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. South, 43 Ill. 176; 92 Am. Dec. 103, Mr. Justice Breese, in commenting upon these cases, said: "In speaking, then, of the time of the actual departure of a train, up to which the ticket office must be kept open, the court, unquestionably, meant to be understood as referring to the published fixed time, which everybody knew. The presumption being that trains will arrive and depart on their schedule time, which time is notorious, no rule should be established that should apply, without much hardship and great inconvenience, to the departure of trains not on time. We do not recognize any right in any person to apply at a railroad ticket office, after the time fixed and published for the departure of a train, and demand the same rights and privileges accorded to those who come at the proper time for their tickets. It is well known that trains are sometimes delayed for hours, and that it is unavoidable. Would it not be going too far to require the companies controlling them to keep an agent at his post during all this delayed time? Tickets are not usually applied for by passengers after the time fixed for the departure of a train. The companies have a right to presume that they will not be applied for after that time, and therefore their agents can close the ticket office and go about their other business."

In Everett v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 69 Iowa 15; 27 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 98, it was held that the requirement of a reasonable time before the departure of the train does not mean that the office shall remain open up to the very instant the train moves off; and it was held that what is a reasonable time depends principally upon the requirements, convenience, and demands of the public at each particular station.

Nor does it mean that the office shall be kept open within such time, before the departure of a train, that a person cannot procure a ticket and get upon the train before it begins to move. Indeed, a railroad company should not sell tickets within that time. As a matter of public policy, no one except those operating a railroad train ought to be permitted to get upon it while in motion. State v. Hungerford, 39 Minn. 6; 34 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 265.

In Du Laurants v. St. Paul, etc., R. Co., 15 Minn. 49; 2 Am. Rep. 102, it was held that the matter of a reasonable time was a question for the jury.

2. Porter v. New York Cent. R. Co., 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 353; Chase v. New York Cent. R. Co., 26 N. Y. 523; Nellis v. New York Cent. R. Co., 30 N. Y. 505. These cases are not at variance with the proposition of the text numbered 7, as they depend upon a statute of the State of New York applicable to the New York Central

A passenger who properly applies for a ticket, and is unable to obtain one from any cause attributable to the company or its agents, is entitled to transportation at the ticket rate; he may pay under protest the excess demanded, and recover the same by suit; but he is not obliged to do this—he has the alternative of insisting upon his right to be carried at the ticket rate, and holding the company responsible in damages for a refusal to carry him.¹

Circumstances may arise under which the tender by the passenger of the ticket fare, as full fare to his place of destination, and the receipt and retention of the same by the conductor, will amount to a waiver by the latter (assuming that he has the right to waive), of the right to require the passenger to still pay the difference between the ticket rate and the car rate. Thus, if the conductor should receive and retain it without demanding more, till the train had passed the place at which he must exercise or abandon the right to eject the passenger for non-payment, the latter would have the right to assume that the amount paid was satisfactory.² But if the sum is received through mistake, the conductor has a reasonable time in which to demand the proper fare, and a refusal to pay the same will justify the passenger's expulsion from the train.³ And while the conductor may retain out of the money in his hands the proper fare for the distance traveled,⁴ yet he must return the residue to the passenger before

Railroad Company alone, which requires it to keep its ticket offices open "at least one hour prior to the departure of each passenger train from each station." This is held to mean its actual departure, and that road is necessarily governed by this positive provision of law.

And in Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. McClanahan, 66 Tex. 530; 27 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 82, the same construction was given to a similar statute. And it was further held that if the company failed to observe the statute, it could not demand the higher rate, even though the passenger did not apply at the office for a ticket within the time specified; the court regarding the provision of the statute as an absolute rule, the operation of which was in no wise dependent upon the attempt or intent of the passenger to buy a ticket.

So the language "immediately prior to the starting of the train," in a statute, means the actual departure, and not the advertised time of departure. Atchison R. Co. v. Dwell, 44 Kan. 394; 44 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 402.

If there is no one in attendance to sell tickets, the office is not open within the meaning of the statute. Fordyce

v. Manuel, 82 Tex. 527; Porter v. New York Cent. R. Co., 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 353.

Indictment of Agent for Failure to Keep Office Open.—It is a good defense to an indictment of a ticket agent, under the new Code of Tennessee, section 2359, for failing to keep open his office for one hour before the departure of a particular passenger train, that the company, with notice to the public, had, by its rules, dispensed with the sale and purchase of tickets for that train, and required the passengers to pay the regular ticket fare on that train. Brady v. State, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 628.

expelling him.¹ He cannot retain a greater sum than the proper fare for the distance traveled and still eject the passenger.

VII. STOP-OVER PRIVILEGES.—It may be stated, as a general rule, that in the absence of a statute² or agreement³ to the contrary, the obligation created by the sale of an ordinary passage ticket is for one continuous trip, neither the passenger nor the carrier having the right to compel the other to split it up in parts and perform it piecemeal; and if the passenger voluntarily leaves the train at an intermediate station, while the company is engaged in performing its part of the contract in a reasonable manner, he thereby releases it from further performance by another train or at another time.⁴ Should the passenger attempt to resume his journey by virtue of the same ticket, the conductor may demand the regular fare, but before doing this, or expelling him for refusing to

2. In Maine, there is a statute (Pub. Laws 1871, ch. 223) prohibiting railroad companies from denying to passengers stop-over privileges. But the statute has no extra territorial operation. Carpenter v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 72 Me. 388; 3 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 432; 39 Am. Rep. 340; Boston, etc., R. Co. v. Trafton, 151 Mass. 229. Though it applies to a foreign corporation while acting as a carrier in that state. Dryden v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 60 Me. 512.

3. The agreement, of course, must be made by competent authority, otherwise it will not avail the passenger. On some roads it seems that the train agent alone is authorized to bind the company by such an agreement, the conductor not having power to do so. In Petrie v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 42 N. J. L. 449; 1 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 258, the facts were as follows: The plaintiff, having a ticket good for a continuous passage, stopped over at an intermediate station. Upon boarding a subsequent train, he presented his ticket, which was refused; he stated to the train agent that the conductor of the former train had allowed him the stop-over privilege, and in token thereof had written his initials upon the ticket. He was, however, expelled from the train and thereupon brought suit. On the trial, he testified that the stop-over privilege was really given him by the train agent. The court held that he must stand or fall by his statement to the train agent, and that failing to show sufficient authority to stop over, judgment was entered for the plaintiff.

But in Tarbell v. Northern Cent. R. Co., 24 Hun (N. Y.) 51, the company was held bound by the grant of the stop-over privilege by a conductor. It will not avail the passenger that he stopped over on the faith of representations made by an agent at a way station, the presumption being that such an agent has no authority to vary the regulations of the company, and the onus of rebutting this presumption is on the passenger. McClure v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 34 Md. 532; 6 Am. Rep. 345.

Nor has a freight agent authority to bind the company by assurances that one traveling on a drover's ticket may stop over at an intermediate station—he having nothing to do with the selling of the tickets. Dietrich v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 71 Pa. St. 432; 10 Am. Rep. 711. But it is held that a passenger on a steamboat may go ashore at points where the steamboat stops, and resume travel on the same boat and trip without forfeiting his right to use his ticket. Dice v. Willamette Transp. Co., 8 Oregon 60; 34 Am. Rep. 575.

A ticket marked "good for one seat from Philadelphia to Pittsburg," means "one seat" in the same train on which the holder takes passage, and that he is to be carried by that train only, and not by train after train, and by broken stages day after day. Dietrich v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 71 Pa. St. 432; 10 Am. Rep. 711. Of course, if the ticket expressly provides that the trip shall be continuous, the stipulation is binding, and the passenger, having stopped over, cannot resume the journey by a subsequent train—such a stipulation simply expresses the general rule of law on this subject. Barker v. Coffin, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 556.

The Words "Continuous Passage" on a ticket, mean the continuous passage of the person to whom the ticket was issued, and not that of the train. If the latter were the meaning, as many men could station themselves along the company's line as there are stopping places between the point where such ticket is issued to the passenger, and the point for which the ticket has been purchased. The first holder of the ticket might get off at the first stopping place with his baggage and hand the ticket to the man there in waiting, who may repeat the operation, and so on from man to man until the whole transit is completed, in the course of which fifty different persons may be carried over fifty segments of the route and the company's baggagemen may be obliged to handle baggage a hundred times. Walker v. Wabash, etc., R.

Co., 15 Mo. App. 341; 16 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 380.

The law on this subject, with the reasons therefor, is clearly stated in the following extracts from leading cases:

In McClure v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 34 Md. 532; 6 Am. Rep. 345, the court, by Grason, J., said: "The contract between the parties is that upon the payment of the fare the company undertakes to carry the passenger to the point named, and he is furnished with a ticket as evidence that he has paid the required fare, and is entitled to be carried to the place named. When the passenger has once elected the train on which he is to be transported, and entered upon his journey, he has no right, unless the contract has been modified by competent authority, to leave a train at a way station and then take another train on which to complete his journey, but is bound by the contract to proceed directly to the place to which the contract entitled him to be taken. Having once made his election of the train and entered upon the journey, he cannot leave that train while it is in a reasonable manner in the undertaking of the carrier, and enter another train without violating the contract he has entered into with the company."

"A contrary doctrine," says the court in Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Bartram, 11 Ohio St. 457, "would necessarily impose upon the carrier additional duties, the removal of baggage, as well as the passenger, from one train to another, and the consequent additional attention on the part of the company; also an increased risk of accidents and a hindrance and delay not contemplated by a reasonable interpretation of their undertaking."

"Time in these contracts is usually an important element, because inasmuch as the carrier is required to furnish accommodation for all persons who apply for passage on any day, it is of importance to know how many are to be carried, and this cannot be known if there are persons holding tickets who have the right to apply for passage along the route in numbers entirely unknown." Dykman, J., in Terry v. Flushing, etc., R. Co., 13 Hun (N. Y.) 359.

And in Stone v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 47 Iowa 82; 29 Am. Rep. 458, the court said: "When plaintiff left the train . . . he voluntarily and without the defendant's consent violated pay the same, must return to him the ticket which he has declined to honor.¹ The above rule has no application when the continuity of the journey is interrupted by misfortune or accident, without fault on the part of the passenger; in such a case he would undoubtedly be entitled to continue his journey by another train.² Some railroads grant stop-over privileges, but annex thereto certain conditions precedent; for instance, requiring the passenger to obtain from the conductor, or other train officer, his indorsement of the ticket,³ or a check,⁴ evidencing the right; and if such condition is not observed, the company may refuse to honor the ticket for the remainder of the trip. The privilege is exhausted by the expiration of the time for which it was granted,⁵ or by one exercise thereof;⁶ and when the passenger again takes the train, he resumes his original status, with all its rights and obligations, and subject to the existing rules of the company. Although it has been customary for the company to permit passengers to stop over at intermediate stations without forfeiting their right to resume travel on the same ticket, yet it may, at any time, make a regulation to the contrary, and it is held that passengers will be bound thereby, whether they have actual notice of it or not.⁷

Tickets in coupon form, calling for transportation over connecting lines, are not within the operation of the foregoing principles.

the contract, and he had no right to be carried on any of the defendant's trains until a new contract had been entered into. The old contract was at an end through his fault, and he could claim nothing thereunder."

In this case the passenger requested of the conductor, a lay-over check but was given by mistake a trip check; upon presentation of this to the conductor of a subsequent train, it was refused, and the passenger ejected. The ejection was held lawful, but the company liable for the error of the first conductor.

But in Palmer v. Charlotte, etc., R. Co., 3 S. Car. 580, under somewhat similar circumstances, the railroad was held liable for the expulsion. See also New York, etc., R. Co. v. Winter, 143 U. S. 60.

The conductor's check will not avail the passenger, unless it contains a clause expressly authorizing the privilege, such check, in the ordinary form, being regarded as a mere certificate of the fact of payment of fare or surrender of the regular ticket. McClure v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 34 Md. 532; 6 Am. Rep. 345; State v. Overton, 24 N. J. L. 435; 61 Am. Dec. 671; Stone v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 47 Iowa 82; 29 Am. Rep. 458; *Cheney v. Each coupon is held to constitute a separate contract on the part of the company named therein, and entitles the holder to stop over at terminal points between the connecting lines, but he has no right to stop over at stations intermediate such terminal points.¹

VIII. CARRYING BEYOND DESTINATION—1. Duty of Carrier.—It is the duty of a railroad company to stop its train at the passenger's point of destination a sufficient length of time to allow him to leave it with safety to his life and person; and if he is carried beyond by no fault of his own, but by failure of the company's agent to do his duty in this respect, the company is liable in damages.² But it is not the conductor's duty to arouse a

It seems that an express provision in such a ticket, that passage must be continuous to the point of destination, would be binding on the passenger, and it would take away his right to stop over at terminal points. Hutchinson on Carriers, § 578. But provisions on this subject must be clear, and where they are of doubtful import, will be construed against the company, and the passenger will be held to have the right to stop over at terminal points. Auerbach v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 89 N. Y. 281; 6 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 334; 42 Am. Rep. 290. In this case the passenger bought a ticket for passage from St. Louis, over the several roads mentioned in coupons annexed to the ticket, to the city of New York. It was specified on the ticket that it was "good for one continuous passage to point named in the coupon attached." The court said: "The language printed upon the ticket must be regarded as the language of the defendant, and if it is of doubtful import, the doubt should not be solved to the detriment of the passenger. If it had been intended by the defendant that the passage should be continuous, from St. Louis to New York, such intention should have been plainly expressed, and not left in such doubt as might, and naturally would, mislead the passenger."

Rep. 1134.

Where a passenger on defendant's train left his seat, as the train approached his station, with a view to getting off, and went to the rear platform, whereupon the conductor, looking into the car, failed to see him, and supposing that he had got off, omitted to call the name of the station and ordered the train, which had not stopped, to move on, whereby the passenger was compelled to alight some five or six hundred yards beyond his station and in consequence incurred injuries from which he died, it was held that the company was liable in more than nominal damages. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Mask, 64 Miss. 738; 30 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 564.

It is not sufficient that the speed of a train is slackened. And if, after passing a station, the speed of the car is sleeping passenger when he reaches his station,¹ and a failure to comply with an agreement made by the conductor to that effect, whereby the passenger is carried beyond, imposes no liability upon the company.²

again slackened that the passenger may get off, and under the direction of the company he does get off and in so doing is injured, the company is liable. Georgia R., etc., Co. v. McCurdy, 45 Ga. 288; 12 Am. Rep. 577.

It is culpable negligence on the part of a railroad corporation not to stop a train entirely at a regular station to which it has sold a ticket, and give a passenger time and opportunity to alight. It is also negligence for its officers to induce a passenger to leave a train while in motion. Bucher v. New York Cent. R. Co., 98 N. Y. 128; 21 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 361.

Thus in St. Louis R. Co. v. Cantrell, 37 Ark. 519; 40 Am. Rep. 105, a passenger was aroused at ten o'clock at night by the conductor, and informed that his station was reached, and told by the brakeman to hurry and get off. The train was moving very slowly and he stepped off, and as it had gone past the platform he fell and was injured. It was held that an action was maintainable therefor.

But where the air-brakes were in good condition when the train started, but became unmanageable from a cause which could not have been prevented, and on this account the train ran past the station, it was held that this did not constitute negligence on the part of the company. Porter v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 80 Mich. 156; 20 Am. St. Rep. 511. Nor is it per se negligence for a railroad company to run a passenger train beyond the usual stopping place at a station, and then to pause a sufficient length of time and reverse the motion, so as to back the train to the proper place; but whether the pause was so long that it indicated an invitation to passengers to alight, and whether the backward movement was made without warning while they were alighting, are questions of fact for the jury. Sherwood v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 82 Mich. 374; 44 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 337.

Where the arrival of the train was announced by the servants of the company, but, at the time, it had passed beyond the platform, and the plaintiff, who was well acquainted with the station, alighted at night and was injured, and the train, only a brief interval having elapsed, backed up to the platform, it was held that the company was not liable nor guilty of negligence. Lewis v. London, etc., R. Co., L. R., 9 Q. B. 66. In a like case where the train was not backed up, it was held that there was evidence from which the jury might infer negligence on the part of the company. Weller v. London, etc., R. Co., L. R., 9 C. P. 126; Bridges v. North London R. Co., L. R., 6 Q. B. 377.

Under South Carolina Gen. Stat., § 1486, providing that railroad companies shall cause all their passenger trains to entirely stop at all stations advertised as stations for receiving passengers, for a time sufficient to receive and let off passengers, a company, receiving a passenger on board a mixed train and collecting his fare, is obliged to carry him safely, and stop the train at the station to which he has paid fare. Thomas v. Charlotte, etc., R. Co. (S. Car. 1893), 17 S. E. Rep. 226.

Duty to Back Train.—When the train over-shoots the station, it is the duty of the conductor to back the train to the usual stopping place, when requested to do so by a passenger. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Doane, 115 Ind. 435; 37 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 87; 7 Am. St. Rep. 451; Memphis, etc., R. Co. v. Whitfield, 44 Miss. 466; 7 Am. Rep. 699; Foy v. London, etc., R. Co., 18 C. B., N. S. 225. And in Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Head (Tex. 1891), 15 S. W. Rep. 504, it was held to be error to refuse to charge that if the plaintiff got off the train without protest or objection, and without requesting the conductor or other agent of the company to back the train to the station, she could recover no damages by reason of having had to walk back to the station.

If the train does not regularly or ordinarily stop at the passenger's place of destination, the company is not, in the absence of a special contract, bound to stop at that station;¹ its duty towards a passenger in such a case is fully satisfied by notifying him in due time that the train will not stop, and giving him an opportunity to alight at some other station on the road, from which he may take passage on the first train of the company which regularly stops at the station named in his ticket.² And a railroad company does not waive its rights, under certain regulations by which certain trains do not stop at certain stations, by the conductor punching and taking up the ticket, after having told the holder that the train does not stop at his place of destination;³ and this is the rule, even though the conductor agrees with the passenger when he punches his ticket, that he will stop.⁴ A refusal by the agent to sell an intending passenger a ticket because the train which he proposes to take, is not, under the regulations of the company, allowed to stop at his point of destina-pany, to assist unattended females, or children, or infirm persons, would modify this rule, as there was nothing in the case falling within such a principle.

Rep. 243.

In Humphries v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 70 Miss. 453, under the circumstances of the case, it was held to be a question for the jury, whether the plaintiff had a special contract with the defendant company that he should be allowed to get off at a certain station, which, by the custom of the company, was not a regular stopping place for that particular train.

In Sira v. Wabash R. Co., 115 Mo. 127, the plaintiff sued the company for compelling him to leave the train before reaching his destination, on the ground that the train did not stop there. It was held that proof that the train sometimes stopped at plaintiff's station was sufficient to show a wrongful expulsion, and to cast upon the company the burden of showing that such stops were exceptional and in pursuance of special instructions only.

It has been held that if the conductor accepts a passenger's fare after having been told at what station he desires to stop, it is his duty to stop the train there and permit him to alight. Caldwell v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 89 Ga. 550.

4. Ohio, etc., R. Co. v. Hatton, 60 Ind. 12. And it was further held that where, in such case, the passenger has a ticket containing a stipulation that it is "good only on trains stopping at station named," and he is informed by the conductor that the train does not stop at that station, he cannot infer any right on the part of the conductor to agree to stop at such station.

But where a passenger after getting upon a train told the conductor that he wished to be put off at a point on the road which was not a regular station, but at which the conductors of the company's trains, to the company's knowledge, were frequently in the habit of stopping and putting off passengers, and he paid the fare claimed for transporting him to that place, and the conductor refused to put him off there, but carried him to the next station, it was held that this was a violation of the contract of carriage, for which the plaintiff could recover. Hull v. East Line, etc., R. Co., 66 Tex. 619; 28 Am. &

tion, is sufficient notice to him that any agreement the conductor may make to stop at such station is beyond his authority, and not binding on the company.¹ The words "good on passenger trains only," contained in a ticket, do not amount to an agreement on the part of the company that all of its passenger trains will stop at the stations designated on the ticket.²

2. Duty of Passenger.—It is the duty of the passenger to inform himself whether the train on which he intends taking passage stops at the station for which he holds a ticket, and if he fails to take this precaution, and boards a train which does not, under regulations of the company, stop at his point of destination, the company will not be liable for not stopping thereat, provided the passenger's mistake was not induced by the company or its agents.³ The passenger may rely upon the representations of the ticket agent,⁴ unless indeed he is subsequently afforded such additional information as no prudent or reasonable man would fail to regard.⁵ When the passenger holds a ticket for a flag

Co.*, 66 Md. 120; 27 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 84. In both of these cases it was held that the sale of a ticket to a particular station, just before the departure of a train, did not constitute a representation that that train would stop at that station.

And so, where a passenger takes a train which he knows does not, according to the rules and regulations of the company, stop at his station. Thus, in Texas, etc., R. Co. v. White (Tex. 1891), 17 S. W. Rep. 419, the plaintiff brought suit against a railroad company for carrying him beyond the station for which he purchased a ticket. The day before, a new schedule went into effect, by which the night train each way was no longer advertised to stop at the said station as formerly, but the two day trains, however, were unchanged, and these latter afforded sufficient accommodation for the business at that and other small stations along the road. The plaintiff was told by the agent when he purchased the ticket that the train he was about to take would not stop at his station. The conductor told him the same thing before the train started, and requested him to alight, which he declined to do; the conductor remarked to him at the time that he was "hunting a law suit." He was carried past his destination to the station beyond, at which place he boarded the train returning, notwithstanding the fact that he was informed that it made no stop, and so was a second time carried past to the place from which he started. Notice of the change was published at the station. It was held that under the Rev. Stats. of Texas, art. 4226, the regulation that one train each way should not stop at all stations was reasonable, and that as it had been advertised, and the plaintiff was informed of it, he could not recover.

station, and knows it to be such, and that the trains do not stop there "unless some request is made upon the conductor to do so," it is held to be his duty to seasonably make the request, and failing to do so, he cannot recover from the company for carrying him beyond his destination.¹

3. Measure of Recovery—Contributory Negligence, etc.—When the passenger is carried beyond his destination by the negligence of the carrier, but without any circumstances of aggravation, the true measure of damages is compensation for any injury or inconvenience naturally resulting from the wrong and traceable to it as the proximate cause;² but behind such cause the law will not go, as it would involve an investigation endless as well as useless.³ In order that the aggrieved passenger may recover

Where the train ran two miles beyond the plaintiff's station to a water-tank, when he demanded of the conductor that the train return, and the conductor said he could either leave the train then or ride to the next station, and the plaintiff then left the train, it was held that this was a compulsory choice; but no insult having been offered the plaintiff by the company's officers, he was entitled to recover pecuniary damages, but not punitive damages. Thompson v. New Orleans, etc., R. Co., 50 Miss. 315; 19 Am. Rep. 12. If the plaintiff was at the time suffering with a disease, testimony thereof may be given on the trial. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. McArthur, 43 Miss. 180.

Excessive Damages.—Where a female passenger was taken beyond her destination, and in consequence thereof lost two hours' time and incurred an expense of $1.50, a verdict for $750 damages was held to be excessive, and the judgment reversed. Marshall v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 78 Mo. 610; 18 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 248.

And a verdict of $300 is excessive for carrying a passenger less than 300 yards past his station and putting him off the train in the night at a muddy place, where the exposure did not affect his health, and about the only inconvenience experienced was the walk. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Florence (Tex. 1889), 14 S. W. Rep. 1070.

Burden of Proof.—In an action to recover damages for carrying plaintiff beyond her destination, it appeared that she was seventy years of age, and was only carried a few hundred yards beyond the station where she intended to alight. It was between eight and nine o'clock at night, the ground was wet, and it was raining slightly. At the time of the trial the plaintiff was shown to be suffering from a bronchial trouble, which was serious and probably permanent. It was held that to enable plaintiff to recover for her sickness, she was bound to show affirmatively that it resulted from the exposure, and that the burden of proof to establish that fact rested upon her throughout the trial and did not shift upon the defendant. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Burns, 71 Tex. 479. To the same effect is Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Head (Tex. 1891), 15 S. W. Rep. 504.

exemplary damages the carrier's wrong must be attended with circumstances of fraud, malice, oppression, insult or other willful misconduct.¹ If the passenger is negligent in not leaving the

L. R., 10 Q. B. 111, the plaintiff and his wife took a train from London at midnight, which they were told went to Hampton Court, where they resided. The train landed plaintiff and his wife, at one o'clock in the morning, at a station about six miles from their destination. They could find no public house open and were forced to walk home, in consequence of which the wife was made sick. It was held that damages could be recovered for the long walk the plaintiff was compelled to take, but that the damages arising from the wife's sickness were too remote and were not recoverable.

But where a passenger was, through no fault of his own, carried some distance beyond his station and there put off the train, and in going back to the station fell through a cattle-guard or trestle and was injured, it was held, that he was entitled to recover damages from the company. In such a case, the injury received is not the remote consequence of the wrong done by the company, in carrying him beyond the station and putting him off at a point beyond where he was entitled to get off, but is the natural and proximate consequence of the wrong done in carrying him to the point beyond the station. Winkler v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 21 Mo. App. 99. The court, by Thompson, J., said: "If a railway carrier, instead of discharging his passenger at the place of destination called for by the contract of carriage, lands him at another place from which he cannot reach the place of destination by any practicable route without encountering a serious danger, and the passenger immediately thereafter, proceeding by the only practicable route to the place of destination, without fault or negligence on his part, encounters such danger and is hurt, we have no difficulty in saying that the hurt is a proximate consequence of the wrong done by the carrier. A prudent carrier would foresee such danger to the passenger, and should, we think, be held bound to foresee it, and to answer the consequences of it."

Eng. R. Cas. 134. See also Heirn v. McCaughan, 32 Miss. 17; 66 Am. Dec. 588.

In an action against a railroad company by a passenger, for damages, it appeared that she purchased a ticket to a certain station; that she was carried beyond the station without an opportunity to alight; that on the discovery of such fact, she requested the conductor to return to the station, but he refused to do so and expelled her from the train. It was held that in absence of proof by the defendant, of some controlling exigency, the refusal to return to the station, and the ejection, were willful and malicious, and entitled the plaintiff to exemplary damages. In such a case a request to charge the jury that "there is no proof to show willfulness or oppressiveness or cruelty on the part of the conductor, without which a jury can only find a verdict for actual damages sustained by the plaintiff, and that in the absence of such proof a verdict for exemplary damages cannot be sustained," was properly refused as too narrow. Samuels v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 35 S. Car. 493.

And where a woman was carried beyond her station, at which the servants of the company refused to put her off, and to whom they were "indecorous or insulting, either in words, tone, or manner," it was held that punitive damages were recoverable. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Ballard, 2 L. R. A. 694.

But punitive damages cannot be recovered on proof of mental anxiety occasioned by the separation of the plaintiff from his family, it not appearing that the failure to stop at his station was willful or attended with circumstances of malice, insult, or oppression. Dorrah v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 65 Miss. 14; 30 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 576. And in Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Scurr, 59 Miss. 456; 6 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 341, where the plaintiff was carried 8 miles beyond his destination, and was given a pass to return to his station by a train due in a few hours, and the conductor's demeanor was courteous throughout, the only claim of suffering being that while at the place at which he left the train "he suffered train at his station,¹ or voluntarily jumps from the train while in motion in order to avoid being carried beyond,² or is otherwise some from cold," it was held that the circumstances did not justify the imposition of punitive damages. The court, by Chalmers, C. J., said: "Did the proof warrant the rendering of exemplary damages? By a long train of decisions in this state, which simply announce the rule everywhere recognized, such damages are permissible only where there has been some element of intentional wrong, or, in the absence of intention, a negligence so gross as to evince a reckless disregard of consequences. The idea is variously expressed by different text writers and judges, and sometimes with a multitude of words; but if to the words 'negligence' and 'intention' we add the word 'insult,' we will perhaps sufficiently embrace all the states of case in which such damages should be awarded by a jury or sanctioned by a court. Where the negligence of which a defendant has been guilty bears no aspect of recklessness or willfulness, and is wholly free from any element of insult or rudeness, there is no justification for the imposition of any damages beyond such as will fully compensate for all injuries actually sustained. Full compensation for all actual damage may, in the case of severe injuries, or the disappointment of important engagements, embrace amounts as large as if given by way of punishment; but if the injuries have sprung from that sort of negligence, carelessness, or forgetfulness to which mankind generally are prone, the essential idea of punishment must be discarded. In the case at bar defendant's conductor was clearly remiss in duty, but it is quite as apparent that he was neither willfully, recklessly, nor rudely so. His negligence was inexcusable as to one who demanded compensation for all losses thereby sustained, but it affords no ground whatever for the imposition upon his superior of that kind of punishment which would stamp his act as criminal. It sprang from that temporary thoughtlessness and inattention of which we are all more or less guilty in the discharge of our daily duties. For it we must respond in full compensation to those who have a right to demand fidelity and care at our hands; but to punish us beyond this would be to inflict a wrong more grievous than that of which we have ourselves been guilty."

1. A passenger at night was asleep when the train stopped at his destination, and he failed to get off. He was awakened by the conductor, who stated that he was still near the station. Rather than go a long distance to the next stopping place, the train was stopped at his request and he got off; he then discovered that he was in a swamp a mile from the depot and would have to walk over a long bridge in returning. While on the bridge carrying his child, he saw an approaching freight train, and hurrying back barely escaped being run over; he was feeble, and the exertion and excitement caused injury to his health, and he sued the railroad company for damages. It was held that he could not recover, though probably misled by what the conductor said as to where the train was; he was negligent in not getting off at the station, and the conductor was serving him and not the company in subsequently stopping. Wilson v. New Orleans, etc., R. Co., 68 Miss. 9. See also Tillery v. Bond, 38 Fed. Rep. 825.

Just before the station which was the passenger's destination, was reached, the conductor called out its name. The train moved on about 165 yards past the platform, and the passenger thereupon jumped off while the train was still in motion, and was injured thereby. After he jumped, the train proceeded a little further, and then backed down on a side track. It was held that the passenger's negligence in jumping from the train while in motion was the cause of the accident, and that a non-suit should have been granted. Savannah, etc., R. Co. v. Watts, 82 Ga. 229.

Child Jumping From Train.—The foregoing rule seems to be relaxed in guilty of contributory negligence,¹ it will constitute a bar to his recovery. In actions of this kind the complaint should aver, the case of children thus: The plaintiff, an infant ten years old, was sent by his mother on an errand to a town a few miles distant, and was warned by her generally not to leave the train while in motion. He boarded a freight train; the conductor took his fare and asked him where he was going, but failed to inform him that the train ran past the station for which he was bound to a switch, then backed into the station. The plaintiff did not know these facts, and on the train passing the station, becoming alarmed, and fearing that he would be carried beyond his destination, he jumped from the train and was injured, the conductor using no precaution to prevent him from jumping. It was held that the plaintiff acted in the emergency as a boy of his age would be likely to act, and could not be held guilty of contributory negligence. Hemmingway v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 72 Wis. 42; 33 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 511; 7 Am. St. Rep. 823.

Again, in an action against a railroad company for injury to a boy ten years of age, the petition alleged that the boy made an agreement with the company to carry him to a certain flag station where he resided; that on the train approaching the said station, it was signalled to stop; that the company negligently disregarded such signal and failed to stop the train; that the boy, being confused and frightened by being so carried past his destination, jumped from the train and was injured. It was held that the petition did not show on its face that the boy was guilty of contributory negligence, since whether the mind of a boy ten years of age is mature enough to make him responsible, is a question for the jury. Avey v. Galveston, etc., R. Co., 81 Tex. 243.

Jumping by Direction of the Conductor.—But it is held not to be negligence per se for the passenger to leave the train while in motion; if he is told by the conductor to get off, or given by him to understand that he can do so in safety, and the surrounding circumstances are such as to give him reason to believe he may, he is justified in making the attempt. Bucher v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 98 N. Y. 128; 21 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 361; Filer v. New York Cent. R. Co., 49 N. Y. 47; 10 Am. Rep. 327; Lambeth v. North Carolina R. Co., 66 N. Car. 494; 8 Am. Rep. 508; Georgia R., etc., Co. v. McCurdy, 45 Ga. 288; 12 Am. Rep. 577. It is otherwise, however, if he is induced to jump by being told by some one on the train that it will not stop at his station, and it does not appear that his informant is connected with the company. Herman v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 79 Iowa 161.

1. In Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Cole, 66 Tex. 562; 27 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 144, a ticket agent of the company negligently sold a ticket to a point on its line at which the train did not stop. Upon the train reaching the point, the conductor refused to stop, and carried the passenger to the next station, at which she left the train. She failed to make any inquiry for a place to find shelter, when she might have found it upon inquiry. There were no houses or lights in sight known to her and the agent closed the depot almost immediately upon her arrival. It was held that by walking back to her destination, instead of trying to find shelter, she contributed to her own injury and was not entitled to recover.

In International, etc., R. Co. v. Willard (Tex. 1886), 27 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 280, the plaintiff was carried beyond his destination and put off at one end of a trestle, and his gun at the other. In re-crossing the trestle after getting his gun, he got his feet wet and muddy, which caused him to slip and fall, thereby sustaining an injury, for which he sought a recovery. It was held that he was guilty of contributory negligence and not entitled to recover.

Where the plaintiff was carried 500 yards beyond her destination, from which point she walked back to the depot, and then, refusing the assistance of friends to take her home safely, walked there, a greater distance, it was held error to refuse a charge that if walking back to the depot did not cause her sickness, and if her friends offered to take her home from the depot, and she refused and then walked a greater distance to her home, and this last walk caused or contributed to her sickness, then she could not recover. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Head (Tex. 1891), 15 S. W. Rep. 504. See generally CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE, vol. 4, p. 15.

either that the train upon which the plaintiff took passage should, under the rules and regulations of the company, have stopped at his station, or that by a special contract the company bound itself to stop there; if either of these allegations be true, the company has no excuse for its failure to stop.¹

IX. EXHIBITION AND SURRENDER OF TICKET.²—A railroad company has the right to make regulations requiring passengers to exhibit and surrender their tickets to the proper train officials, at suitable and reasonable times,³ and such regulations should not

2. For an exhaustive treatment of the right of the carrier generally to expel passengers from his vehicles for non-compliance with the regulations here mentioned; what time should be allowed the passenger to produce his ticket; the manner of expulsion, and related subjects, the reader is referred to the article RAILROADS, vol. 19, p. 903 et seq.

3. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Fleming, 14 Lea (Tenn.) 128; 18 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 347; Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Blocher, 27 Md. 277; Loring v. Aborn, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 608; State v. Campbell, 32 N. J. L. 309; People v. Caryl, 3 Park. Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 326; Cresson v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 11 Phila. (Pa.) 597; Woodard v. Eastern Counties R. Co., 30 L. J. M. C. 126; Havens v. Hartford, etc., R. Co., 28 Conn. 69; Frederick v. Marquette, etc., R. Co., 37 Mich. 342; 26 Am. Rep. 531.

In Hibbard v. New York Cent. R. Co., 15 N. Y. 455, it was held that by refusing to exhibit his ticket, the passenger forfeits his right to proceed further on the train, and does not regain such right by offering to show his ticket after the train has been stopped for the purpose of putting him off.

And the fact that the conductor knows that the passenger is in the habit of using a commutation ticket regularly, which has not expired, will not prevent the enforcement of such a regulation. Bennett v. Railroad Co., 7 Phila. (Pa.) 11; Ripley v. New Jersey R., etc., Co., 31 N. J. L. 388; Downs v. New York, etc., R. Co., 36 Conn. 287; 4 Am. Rep. 77. But see Maples v. New York, etc., R. Co., 38 Conn. 57; 9 Am. Rep. 434. See supra, this title, Kinds of Tickets—Commutation.

In Butler v. Manchester, etc., R. Co.,

21 Q. B. Div. 207; 33 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 551, the English court of appeals declined to pass upon the validity of such a regulation, but upon the whole were inclined to doubt it. (See especially judgment of Lopes, J.) But this case is in conflict with a long line of American decisions.

Reason of the Rule.—The reasons for upholding the validity of such a rule as this are clearly stated by Denio, C. J., in Hibbard v. New York Cent. R. Co., 15 N. Y. 455. He said: "It was proved that the defendant's company had established a regulation by which passengers were required to exhibit their tickets, when requested to do so, by the conductor, and that in case of refusal they might be removed from the cars. If this was a reasonable regulation, the plaintiff was bound to submit to it, or he forfeited his right to be carried any further on the road. In my opinion, the rule was reasonable and proper, and in no way oppressive or vexatious. In the first place, it was easy to be complied with. The railroad ticket is a small slip of paper or pasteboard, which may be conveniently carried about the person; and it involves no conceivable trouble to the passenger, when called upon at his seat by the conductor, to exhibit it to him. Then, no one can question but that this or some similar arrangement is absolutely necessary for the company, unless they are willing to transport passengers free. A train of railroad cars frequently contains several hundred passengers, a portion of them constantly changing as the train passes a station where persons are received and discharged. The tickets, which are given as evidence of the payment of fare, are of as many different kinds as there are stopping places on the road; each being for the distance or to the place for which the passenger has paid his fare. The conductor must necessarily be a stranger to all or a large portion of his passengers.

be condemned unless they are palpably unjust and oppressive.¹ A passenger may be lawfully required to produce his ticket

Unless he is allowed a sight of these evidences of the payment of fare, whenever he may require it, he is exposed to the chance of carrying the holder of them beyond the place to which he is paid, or of carrying persons who have not paid at all. If the conductor is not allowed to ascertain whether a passenger who has obtained a ticket still keeps it, there is nothing to prevent its being given to another passenger who has not procured one, and thus serving as a passport for several passengers. But it is argued that if the ticket has been once shown to a conductor, the passenger cannot reasonably be required to exhibit it a second time. If the duty of showing it were at all difficult and arduous, it might be a question whether the company would not be bound to devise some easier arrangement; or, if it were possible that the memory and other faculties of persons employed as conductors could be so cultivated that they could know and remember the persons of several hundred people, upon seeing them for the first time, and could, moreover, retain the recollection of the terms of the several tickets held by them upon their being once shown, it might be considered unreasonable to require a second exhibition of a ticket in any case. As this degree of perfection is unattainable in the present condition of mankind, I am of opinion that it was lawful, for this railroad company to require that persons engaging passage in its cars should show their tickets whenever required by the company's, servants intrusted with that duty, upon pain of being left to travel the remaining distance in some other way in case of refusal."

Right to Demand Seat Before Surrendering Ticket.—It is held that a passenger who exhibits his ticket and demands a seat, need not surrender his ticket until a seat is furnished. Davis v. Kansas, etc., R. Co., 53 Mo. 317; 14 Am. Rep. 457. But he may not dictate where he will sit or in what car he will ride. Memphis, etc., R. Co. v. Benson, 85 Tenn. 627; 31 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 112; 4 Am. St. Rep. 776; Chesapeake, etc., R. Co. v. Wells, 85 Tenn. 613; 31 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 111; Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Van Houten, 48 Ind. 90. In this last case it was held that where all the seats in one of two passenger cars are already filled with passengers, another passenger has no right to demand a seat in that particular car and to refuse to deliver his ticket unless furnished a seat therein; and if he refuses under such circumstances, the persons in charge of the car may eject him.

Nor can the passenger avail himself of the benefit of the transportation, and at the same time withhold from the carrier his ticket. The right and duty of the passenger in the premises are well stated by Cockrill, C. J., in St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Leigh, 45 Ark. 368. He said: "When the carrier proffers transportation without a seat, and the passenger refuses to surrender his ticket, what is then the attitude of the parties under the contract? It is simply this: The carrier has offered the passenger less than his contract calls for, and the passenger has refused it in satisfaction. This he has the unquestioned right to do. If he is not accommodated in a manner which may be deemed a fair compliance with the duty of the carrier, he may decline any compromise and resort to his action against the company for refusing to carry him as their contract or their duty requires. But he cannot accept the part that is offered him in lieu of the whole—that is, the transportation without the seat—and at the same time refuse to comply with his own undertakings, in this any more than in another contract. Upon the carrier's neglect or refusal to comply with the terms of the contract of carriage, without a just excuse, the passenger is at liberty to treat the contract as violated by the company, and he may leave the train and sue for a breach of the contract."

1. Vedder v. Fellows, 20 N. Y. 126. Where it is the custom of the company to open the gate through which passengers must pass in order to reach the cars, only a few minutes before the departure of the train, a regulation that renders it necessary for a passenger, who in good faith presents his ticket to the gateman in the same condition as when it was purchased from the ticket agent, to go to the receiver's office and get his indorsement of the ticket when its genuineness is questioned by the gateman, is unreasonable.

before entering the train,¹ and to render it up at any time in the course of his journey, provided a conductor's check is given him in exchange.² And he is in like manner bound to deliver it up without receiving such a check, provided the next station at which the train stops is his point of destination.³ But he ought not to be required to part with his ticket without receiving a check or other adequate token of payment of fare at a considerable distance from his point of destination, when there are intervening stations at which the train stops.⁴ A carrier may not detain or imprison a passenger who, after the trip is completed, is unable to produce his ticket, as the charge for carriage is a debt which must be enforced by the same remedies that any creditor has against his debtor.⁵

In some states, statutes have been enacted making a fraudulent evasion of, or attempt to evade, the payment of fare by a passenger, either by giving a false answer to the collector, or by traveling beyond the point to which he has in fact paid, or by leaving the train without having paid, or otherwise, punishable by the forfeiture of a specified sum of money; and, also, in case of a refusal to pay fare authorizing the carrier's police officer, without a warrant to arrest the passenger and remove him to the baggage, or other suitable, car of the train, and confine him there until the arrival of the train at some station where he can be placed in charge of an officer who shall take him to a place of lawful detention.⁶

But it has been held that if it is the custom of carriers by steamboat, to collect the tickets as passengers are leaving the boat, and a passenger attempts to land without producing a ticket, alleging that it has been lost, the carriers have a right to detain him a reasonable time to inquire on the spot into the circumstances of the case.
